malfuction theory. Products-liability law. A principle permitting a products-liability plaintiff to prove that a product was defective by proving that the product malfunctioned, instead of requiring the plaintiff to prove a specific defect. • A plaintiff relying on the malfunction theory usu. must also prove that the product was not misused, and must disprove all reasonable explanations for the occurrence other than a defect.

mal gree (mal grii). [Law French “against the will”] Hist. Against the will; without consent.

malice, n. 1. The intent, without justification or excuse, to commit a wrongful act. 2. Reckless disregard of the law or of a person’s legal rights. 3. Ill will; wickedness of heart. • This sense is most typical in nonlegal contexts. — malicious, adj.

“Malice means in law wrongful intention. It includes any intent which the law deems wrongful, and which therefore serves as a ground of liability. Any act done with such an intent is, in the language of the law, malicious, and this legal usage has etymology in its favour. The Latin malitia means badness, physical or moral — wickedness in disposition or in conduct — not specifically or exclusively ill-will or malevolence; hence the malice of English law, including all forms of evil purpose, design, intent, or motive. [But] intent is of two kinds, being either immediate or ulterior, the ulterior intent being commonly distinguished as the motive. The term malice is applied in law to both these forms of intent, and the result is a somewhat puzzling ambiguity which requires careful notice. When we say that an act is done maliciously, we mean one of two distinct things. We mean either that it is done intentionally, or that it is done with some wrongful motive.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 384 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“[M]alice in the legal sense imports (1) the absence of all elements of justification, excuse or recognized mitigation, and (2) the presence of either (a) an actual intent to cause the particular harm which is produced or harm of the same general nature, or (b) the wanton and wilful doing of an act with awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm may result . . . . The Model Penal Code does not use ‘malice’ because those who formulated the Code had a blind prejudice against the word. This is very regrettable because it represents a useful concept despite some unfortunate language employed at times in the effort to express it.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 860 (3d ed. 1992).

actual malice. 1. The deliberate intent to commit an injury, as evidenced by external circumstances. — Also termed express malice; malice in fact. Cf. implied malice. 2. Defama-tion. Knowledge (by the person who utters or publishes a defamatory statement) that a statement is false, or reckless disregard about whether the statement is true. • To recover for defamation, a plaintiff who is a public official or public figure must overcome the defendant’s qualified privilege by proving the defendant’s actual malice. And for certain other types of claims, a plaintiff must prove actual malice to recover presumed or punitive damages. — Also termed New York Times malice; constitutional malice.

constructive malice. See implied malice.

express malice. 1. Criminal law. The intent to kill or seriously injure arising from a deliberate, rational mind. 2. See actual malice (1). 3. Defamation. The bad-faith publication of defamatory material.

implied malice. Malice inferred from a person's conduct. — Also termed constructive malice; legal malice; malice in law. Cf. actual malice (1).

malice in fact. See actual malice.

particular malice. Malice that is directed at a particular person. — Also termed special malice.

transferred malice. Malice directed to one person or object but instead harming another in the way intended for the first.

"[I]f A shoots at B intending to kill him, but the shot actually kills C, this is held to be murder of C. So also if A throws a stone at one window and breaks another, it is held to be malicious damage to the window actually broken. This doctrine, which is known as the doctrine of transferred malice, applies only where the harm intended and the harm done are of the same kind. If A throws a stone at a human being and unintentionally breaks a window, he cannot be convicted of malicious damage to the window." John Salmon, Jurisprudence 382 (Glunville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

universal malice. The state of mind of a person who determines to take a life on slight provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

malice aforethought. The requisite mental state for common-law murder, encompassing any one of the following: (1) the intent to kill, (2) the intent to inflict grievous bodily harm, (3) extremely reckless indifference to the value of human life (the so-called “abandoned and malignant heart”), or (4) the intent to commit a felony (which leads to culpability under the felony-murder rule). — Also termed premeditated malice; preconceived malice; malice prepense; malitia prae cogitata.

"Malice aforethought is the term which came into use during medieval times to indicate the mental element necessary in the felony of murder. It has been the subject of voluminous jurisprudential enquiry . . . ." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 27 (16th ed. 1982).

"Every intentional killing is with malice aforethought unless under circumstances sufficient to constitute (1) justification, (2) excuse, or (3) mitigation." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 58 (3d ed. 1982).

malice exception. A limitation on a public official's qualified immunity, by which the official can face civil liability for willfully exercising discretion in a way that violates a known or well-established right. See qualified immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

malice in fact. See actual malice (1) under MALICE.

malice in law. See implied malice under MALICE.

malice prepense. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

malicious, adj. 1. Substantially certain to cause injury. 2. Without just cause or excuse.

malicious abandonment. See ABANDONMENT.

malicious abuse of legal process. See ABUSE OF PROCESS.

malicious abuse of process. See ABUSE OF PROCESS.

malicious accusation. See ACCUSATION.

malicious act. An intentional, wrongful act performed against another without legal justification or excuse.

malicious arrest. See ARREST.

malicious assault with a deadly weapon. See ASSAULT.

malicious bankruptcy. An abuse of process by which a person wrongfully petitions to have another person adjudicated a bankrupt or to have a company wound up as insolvent.

malicious damage. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

malicious execution. See EXECUTION.

malicious injury. See INJURY.

malicious killing. An intentional killing without legal justification or excuse.

maliciously damaging the property of another. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

malicious mischief. The common-law misdemeanor of intentionally destroying or damaging another's property. • Although modern statutes predominantly make this offense a misdemeanor, a few make it a felony (depending on the nature of the property or its value). — Also termed malicious mischief and trespass; malicious injury; malicious trespass; malicious damage; maliciously damaging the property of another; (in the Model Penal Code) criminal mischief.

"Such phrases as 'malicious mischief and trespass,' 'malicious injury,' and 'maliciously damaging the property of another,' are merely additional labels used at times to indicate the same offense. It was a misdemeanor according to the common law of England, although some confusion has resulted from Blackstone's statement that it was 'only a trespass at common law.' Before the word 'misdemeanor' became well established the old writers tended to use the word 'trespass' to indicate an offense below the grade of felony. And it was used at times by Blackstone for this purpose, as in the phrase 'treason, felony, or trespass.'" — Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 405 (3d ed. 1982).

malicious prosecution. 1. The institution of a criminal or civil proceeding for an improper purpose and without probable cause. 2. The cause of action resulting from the institution of such a proceeding. • Once a wrongful prosecution has ended in the defendant's favor, he or she may sue for tort damages. — Also termed (in the context of civil proceedings) malicious use of process. Cf. ABUSE OF PROCESS; VEXATIOUS SUTT.

"The distinction between an action for malicious prosecution and an action for abuse of process is that a malicious prosecution consists in maliciously causing process to be issued, whereas an abuse of process is the employment of legal process for some purpose other than that which it was intended by the law to effect — the improper use of a regularly issued process. For instance, the initiation of vexatious civil proceedings known to be groundless is not abuse of process, but is governed by substantially the same rules as the malicious prosecution of criminal proceedings." 52 Am. Jur. 2d Malicious Prosecution § 2, at 187 (1970).

malicious trespass. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

malicious use of process. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

malignare (mal-og-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. 1. To malice; to slander. 2. To maim.

maligner, vb. To feign illness or disability, esp. in an attempt to avoid an obligation or to continue receiving disability benefits.

malsion (mal-og-sion or -sion), [fr. Latin malum "evil" + sonus "a sound"] Hist. A curse. — Also spelled maleson.

malitia (ma-lish-ee-a). [Latin "malice"] Hist. An actual evil design; express malice. • Malitia originally signified general wrongdoing, and did not describe a wrongdoer's state of mind; malitia praecogitata, for example, indicated only the seriousness of the offense, though it was eventually rendered malice aforethought.

malitia praecogitata (pree-koj-o-tay-ta). See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. — Also termed malitia excogitata (eks-koj-o-tay-ta).

"[T]he word felony is often coupled with what will in the future be another troublesome term of art, to wit, malice aforethought or malice prepense (malitia excogitata, praecogitata). . . . When it first came into use, it hardly signified a state of mind; some qualifying adjective such as praemeditata or excogitata was needed if much note was to be taken of intention or of any other psychical fact. When we first meet with malice prepense it seems to mean little more than intentional wrong-doing; but the somewhat weighty adjectives which are coupled with malitia in its commonest context — adjectives such as excogitata — are, if we mistake not, traces of the time when forsteal, guetapens, waylaying, the setting of ambush, was (what few crimes were) a specially reserved plea of the crown to be emended, if indeed it was emendable, by a heavy wite." — 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 468-69 (2d ed. 1899).

malleable, adj. 1. (Of an object) capable of extension by hammering <the metal was malleable>. 2. (Of a person) capable of being influenced <the young student was malleable>.

Malleus Maleficarum (mal-ee-as mal-oh-fi-kair-um). [Latin "Hammer of Witches"] Hist. An encyclopedic work of demonology and witchcraft, prepared in 1486 by two Dominican friars (Heinrich Kraemer and Johann Sprenger) as part of their efforts to eradicate witchcraft in Germany. • The Malleus Maleficarum was based largely on folk-beliefs, but it was relied on as an authoritative source on how to detect, extract confessions from, and prosecute witches for several centuries after it first appeared.

Mallory rule. See MCNABB-MALLORY RULE.

malo animo (mal-oh an-oh-moh), adv. [Latin] With evil intent; with malice.

malpractice (mal-prak-tis). An instance of negligence or incompetence on the part of a professional. • To succeed in a malpractice claim, a plaintiff must also prove proximate cause and damages. — Also termed professional negligence.

legal malpractice. A lawyer's failure to render professional services with the skill, prudence, and diligence that an ordinary and reasonable lawyer would use under similar circumstances. — Also termed attorney malpractice.

medical malpractice. A doctor's failure to exercise the degree of care and skill that a physician or surgeon of the same medical specialty would use under similar circumstances. — Often shortened to med. mal.

malpractice insurance. See INSURANCE.

maltreatment. Bad treatment (esp. improper treatment by a surgeon) resulting from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness. See MALPRACTICE.

malum (mal-am also may-lam), n. [Latin] Something bad or evil. Pl. mala.

malum in se (mal-am in say or see), n. [Latin "evil in itself"] A crime or an act that is inherently immoral, such as murder, arson, or rape. — Also termed malum per se. Pl. mala in se. — malum in se, adj. Cf. MALUM PROHIBITUM.

"The basis for the distinction between mala in se and mala prohibita, between what one might call a crime and an offence — or between what one might call a felony and a misdemeanor, if one could modernize those terms so that the latter was given its natural meaning — is that crime means to the ordinary man something that is sinful or immoral, and an offence at worst a piece of misbehaviour." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 33 (1968).

"The distinction between offenses mala in se and offenses mala prohibita was recognized at least as early as the fifteenth century. It has been criticized repeatedly. About a century and a half ago the distinction was said to be one 'not founded upon any sound principle' and which had 'long since been exploded.' [Quoting Bensley v. Bigbold, 5 B. & A. 335, 341, 106 Eng. Rep. 1214, 1216 (1822); other citations omitted.] The Supreme Court, however, has shown that it is just as firmly entrenched today as it was in 1495." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 880 (3d ed. 1982).

malum prohibitum (mal-am pro-hib-i-tam), n. [Latin "prohibited evil"] An act that is a crime merely because it is prohibited by statute, although the act itself is not necessarily immoral. • Misdemeanors such as jaywalking and running a stoplight are mala prohibit, as are many regulatory violations. Pl. mala prohibita. — malum prohibitum, adj. Cf. MALUM IN SE.

"Much of the criminal law that is regulatory in character — the part of it that deals with malum prohibitum rather than malum in se — is based upon the ... principle ... that the choice of the individual must give way to the convenience of the many." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 16 (1968).

"As customarily used these phrases are mutually exclusive. An offense malum prohibitum is not a wrong which is prohibited, but something which is wrong only in the sense that it is against the law. This is emphasized at times by such phrases as 'malum prohibitum only' or 'but malum prohibitum,' although it is understood without any such qualification. A failure to understand this usage of the terms has led some to assume that all statutory additions to the common law of crimes are mala prohibitita. One writer emphasized his confusion by speaking of embezzlement as malum prohibitum. This assumption is utterly without foundation. An act may be malum in se although no punishment is provided by law. If this defect is corrected by appropriate legislation, what previously was malum in se does not cease to be so by reason of having been defined and made punishable by law." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 884-85 (3d ed. 1982).

malveilles (mal-vay also mal-vayls), n. [French "misdemeanors"] Hist. 1. Ill will. 2. Crimes; misdemeanors; malicious acts.

Manahan-type carried interest. Oil & gas. A transaction in which the owner of a lease assigns all the working interest to someone else — who takes on specified costs of drilling and development — and the assignor retains a reversionary interest in part of the working interest, which reverts to the assignor once the assignee has recovered the specified costs during the payout period. Manahan Oil Co. v. Commissioner, 8 T.C. 1159 (1947).

manceps (man-seps), n. [Latin "an agent"]. 1. Roman law. A purchaser of something at a state auction, esp. a right or advantage, as in the right to farm taxes. 2. Roman law. A state postmaster.

"Manceps. One who at a public auction, conducted by a magistrate, through the highest bid obtained the right to collect taxes (a tax farmer) or custom duties, the lease of public land (ager publicus) or other advantages (a monopoly). — In postal organization manceps was a post-station master." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedia Dictionary of Roman Law 573 (1953).

3. A person who undertakes to perform a task and gives security for the performance.

mancipare (man-sa-pair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin manus "hand" + capere "to take"] Roman law. 1. To alienate (a thing) by real or fictitious sale. 2. To sell (a person), esp. fictitiously as part of the emancipation process. See MANCIPATION.

mancipatio (man-sa-pay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] See MANCIPATION.

mancipation. [fr. Latin mancipatio "hand-grasp"] 1. Roman law. A legal formality for acquiring property by either an actual or a simulated purchase. • The formality consisted in laying hold of a thing and asserting title to it before five witnesses, followed by weighing the real or pretended purchase money on scales. This form of sale was abolished by Justinian.

"Mancipation is the solemn sale per aes et libram. In the presence of five witnesses (gives Romani puberes) a skilled weighmaster (libripens) weighs out to the vendor a certain amount of uncoined copper (aes, raudus, raudusculum) which is the purchase-money, and the purchaser, with solemn words, takes possession with his hand — hence the description of the act as 'hand-grasp' — of the thing purchased as being his property." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 48 (James Crawford Leslie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

2. A similar form used for making a will, adoption, emancipation of slaves, etc. — Also termed mancipatio. Cf. EMANCIPATION.

mancipium (man-sip-ea-am), n. [Latin "a slave"] Roman law. 1. A slave, esp. by virtue of being captured by an enemy in war. 2. A temporary quasi-slave status often occurring in an emancipation, as when a son is emancipated from his father. See MANCIPATION.
mandamus (man-day-mas), n. [Latin “we com-mmand”] A writ issued by a superior court to compel a lower court or a government officer to perform mandatory or purely ministerial duties correctly. — Also termed writ of mandamus.
Pl. mandamuses. — mandamus, vb. — mandato-yry, adj.

M & A. abbr. Mergers and acquisitions. See MERGER.

mandamus rule. The doctrine that, after an appeal court has remanded a case to a lower court, the lower court must follow the decision that the appellate court has made in the case, unless new evidence or an intervening change in the law dictates a different result.

mandator (man-day-tar or man-day-tar). 1.
A person who delegates the performance of a mandate to another. 2. Civil law. The person who employs another (called a mandatory or mandatarius) in a gratuitous agency. — Also termed mandant. 3. BAILOR (1).

mandator, adj. Of, relating to, or constituting a command; required; preemptory.

mandatory subject of bargaining

Civil law. A written command given by a principal to an agent. 5. Civil law. A commission or contract by which one person (the mandator) requests someone (the mandatory) to perform some service gratuitously, the commission becoming effective when the mandatory agrees. • In this type of contract, no liability is created until the service requested has begun. The mandatory is bound to use reasonable care in performance, while the mandator is bound to indemnify against loss incurred in performing the service. — Also termed mandate. 6. Int’l law. An authority given by the League of Nations and, later, the United Nations to certain governments to take over the administration and development of certain territories. Cf.

Relations Act to be discussed in good faith by the parties during labor negotiations; an essential employment matter, including wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, about which management and the union are required to negotiate in good faith, and that can lawfully form the basis of a collective-bargaining impasse. 29 USCA § 158(d). — Often shortened to mandatory subject. Cf. PERMISSIVE SUBJECT OF BARGAINING.

mandatum (man-day-tam). A bailment in which the bailee will, without recompense, perform some service relating to the goods; MANDATE (5). This type of bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailor.

mandavi ballivo (man-day-vi baa-l-voh). [Law Latin "I have commanded the bailiff"] Hist. A sheriff's return stating that the sheriff ordered a bailiff to execute a writ.

man-endangering state of mind. See PERSON-ENDANGERING STATE OF MIND.

"The term manerium seems to have come in with the Conqueror, though other derivatives from the Latin verb manere, in particular mansa, mansio, mansiuncula had been freely employed by the scribes of the land-books. But these had as a rule been used as representatives of the English hide, and just for this reason they were incapable of expressing the notion that the Normans desired to express by the word manerium. In its origin that word is but one more name for a house. Throughout the Exeter Domesday the word mansio is used instead of the manerium of the Exchequer record, and even in the Exchequer record we may find these two terms used interchangeably ...." Frederic W. Maitland, Domesday Book and Beyond 108–09 (1921).

magonare (mang-go-nair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin mango "a dealer"] To buy in a market; to deal.

manhood. 1. A male person's majority. 2. Hist. A ceremony of a vassal paying homage to the vassal's lord. — Also termed homagium.

"Besides an oath of fealty, or profession of faith to the lord, which was the parent of our oath of allegiance, the vassal or tenant upon investiture usually homage to his lord; openly and humbly kneeling, being ungirt, uncovered, and holding up his hands both together between those of the lord, who sate before him; and there professing that 'he did become his man, from that day forth, of life and limb and earthly honour;' and then he received a kiss from his lord. Which ceremony was denominated homagium, or manhood, by the feudists." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 53 (1766).

manifest, n. A document listing the cargo or passengers carried on a ship, airplane, or other vehicle.

manifestation of intention. Wills & estates. The external expression of the testator's intention, as distinguished from an undisclosed intention. — Also termed manifestation of intent.

manifestation theory. Insurance. The doctrine that coverage for an injury or disease falls to the policy in effect when the symptoms of the covered injury or disease first appear. Cf. EXPOSURE THEORY; ACTUAL-INJURY TRIGGER; TRIPLE TRIGGER.

"Some injuries do not manifest themselves until a period of time has elapsed between the occurrence of the event that produces the harm and the time when it becomes apparent. Particularly when these claims result from what often were not recognized as dangerous products or chemicals when the exposure occurred, such as asbestos or dioxin, the consequences are referred to as 'delayed manifestation' injuries .... [Under the] 'manifestation' theory .... [some] courts have concluded that coverage is provided by the insurance policy in place at the time the injury becomes apparent, that is, when the injury is manifested." Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law: A Guide to Fundamental Principles, Legal Doctrines, and Commercial Practices § 5.10(d)(3), at 598 (1988).

manifest-disregard doctrine. The principle that an arbitration award will be vacated if the arbitrator knows the applicable law and deliberately chooses to disregard it, but will not be vacated for a mere error or misunderstanding of the law.

manifest-error-or-clearly-wrong rule. In some jurisdictions, the doctrine that an appellate court cannot set aside a trial court's finding of fact unless a review of the entire record reveals that the finding has no reasonable basis.

manifest injustice. An error in the trial court that is direct, obvious, and observable, such as a defendant's guilty plea that is involuntary or that is based on a plea agreement that the prosecution rescinds.

manifest intent. See INTENT (1).

manifest necessity. Criminal procedure. A sudden and overwhelming emergency, beyond the court’s and parties’ control, that makes conducting a trial or reaching a fair result impossible and that therefore authorizes the granting of a mistrial. ● The standard of manifest necessity must be met to preclude a defendant from successfully raising a plea of former jeopardy after a mistrial.

manifesto. A written statement publicly declaring the issuer’s principles, policies, or intentions; esp., a formal document explaining why a state or nation declared war or took some other significant international action.

manifest weight of the evidence. A deferential standard of review under which a verdict will be reversed or disregarded only if another outcome is obviously correct and the verdict is clearly unsupported by the evidence. Cf. WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE.

manipulation. Securities. The illegal practice of raising or lowering a security’s price by creating the appearance of active trading. ● Manipulation is prohibited by section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. 15 USCA § 78j(b). — Also termed market manipulation; stock manipulation.

mannire (ma-ni-re), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To summon (an adverse party) to court; to prosecute (a case).

manor. 1. A feudal estate, usu. granted by the king to a lord or other high person and cultivated as a unit. ● In more ancient times, the lord’s manor included a village community, usu. comprised of serfs.

“[T]o ask for a definition of a manor is to ask for what can not be given. We may however draw a picture of a typical manor, and, this done, we may discuss the deviations from this type . . . . [W]e may regard the typical manor (1) as being, qua vill, a unit of public law, of police and fiscal law, (2) as being a unit in the system of agriculture, (3) as being a unit in the management of property, (4) as being a jurisdictional unit. But we . . . see that hardly one of these traits can be considered as absolutely essential. The most important is the connection between the manor and the vill . . . .” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 596–97 (2d ed. 1898).

“The term [manor] applied, after the Norman conquest, to estates organized under kings, ecclesiastical corporations, or otherwise, and managed and cultivated as units. By the end of the 11th century, the main element was the feudal lord, and soon he came to be regarded as the owner of the manor, and to have authority over the tenants, and the right to hold a court for them . . . . In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, a manor also implied a right of jurisdiction exercised through a court baron, attended by both freeholders and villein tenants . . . . In the eighteenth century the manorial court decayed rapidly, cases being generally brought in the King’s courts, the only surviving business being copyhold conveyancing.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 803 (1980).

reputed manor. A manor in which the desmesne lands and services become absolutely separated. ● The manor is no longer a manor in actuality, only in reputation. — Also termed seigniory in gross.

2. A jurisdictional right over tenants of an estate, usu. exercised through a court baron. 3. Hist. In the United States, a tract of land occupied by tenants who pay rent to a proprietor. 4. A mansion on an estate.

manorial extent. Hist. A survey of a manor by a jury of tenants, giving the numbers and names of tenants, the size of their holdings, the kind of tenure, and the kind and amount of the tenants’ services.

manorial system. The medieval system of land ownership in which serfs and some freemen cultivated the soil of a manor in return for a lord’s protection. See MANOR.

manse (mans), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A portion of land large enough to maintain one family; a sufficient amount of land to be worked by a yoke of oxen for a year. 2. A house without land; MESSUAGE. 3. In Scotland, a clergyman’s dwelling. — Also termed mansus.

Mansfield rule. The doctrine that a juror’s testimony or affidavit about juror misconduct may not be used to challenge the verdict. ● This Mansfield rule is intended to ensure that mansion-house rule. The doctrine that a tract of land lying in two counties will be assessed, for property-tax purposes, in the county in which the house is located.

manslaughter, n. The unlawful killing of a human being without malice aforethought. — manslaughter, vb. Cf. MURDER.

involuntary manslaughter. Homicide in which there is no intention to kill or do grievous bodily harm, but that is committed with criminal negligence or during the commission of a crime not included within the felony-murder rule. — Also termed negligent manslaughter. Cf. ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

"Involuntary manslaughter is a 'catch-all' concept. It includes all manslaughter not characterized as voluntary." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 104 (3d ed. 1982).

"The only differences between the legal use and the everyday use of 'voluntary,' 'not voluntary,' and 'involuntary' seem to be (a) a more frequent use of 'involuntary' as a synonym of 'not voluntary' and (b) a technical use of 'involuntary' in the crime of 'involuntary manslaughter,' where it seems to have the meaning of 'unintentional.' Thus, as contrasted with 'voluntary manslaughter,' there is no suggestion that death, as contrasted with harm, was intended or foreseen. Though it is often confined to cases of assault and battery where death results, for example either from the withholding of food or from excessive chastisement of a child, some jurists say that it can be due to any unlawful and dangerous action causing death." Alan R. White, Grounds of Liability 61–62 (1985).

voluntary manslaughter. An act of murder reduced to manslaughter because of extenuating circumstances such as adequate provocation (arousing the "heat of passion") or diminished capacity. — Also termed intentional manslaughter.

manstealing. See KIDNAPPING.

mansuetæ naturæ (man-swee-tee no-tyoor-ee). [Latin "of a tamable nature"] Civil law. 1. adj. (Of animals) tame or tamable. 2. n. Tame animals; animals accustomed to come to the hand.

mansuetus (man-swee-toes), adj. [Latin] Roman law. Tame; tamed.

mansus. See MANSE.

manticulate (man-tik-yə-lait), vb. To pick pockets.

mantle children. Hist. Children born out of wedlock and later legitimated when their parents married, by standing under a cloak with the parents during the marriage ceremony.

"Our law . . . has no need to distinguish between various sorts of illegitimate children. A child is either a legitimate child or a bastard . . . . In the sharp controversy over this principle . . . the champion of what we may call the high-church party alleged that old English custom was in accord with the law of the church as defined by Alexander III. Probably there was some truth in this assertion. It is not unlikely that old custom, though it would not have held that the marriage in itself had any retroactive effect, allowed the parents on the occasion of their marriage to legitimate the already existing offspring of their union. The children were placed under the cloak which was spread over their parents during the marriage ceremony, and became 'mantle children.' We hear of this practice in Germany and France and Normandy; but we have here rather an act of adoption than a true legitimation . . . and it would not have fully satisfied the church." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 397–98 (2d ed. 1899).

manual, adj. Used or performed by hand <manual labor>.

manual delivery. Delivery of personal property by actual and corporeal change in possession.

manual labor. Work performed chiefly through muscular exertion, with or without tools or machinery.
Manual of the Judge Advocate General. The Secretary of the Navy’s directive on military justice, with minor variations between rules applicable to the Navy and those applicable to the Marine Corps. — Also termed JAG Manual.

manual-rating insurance. See INSURANCE.

manu brevi (man-yoo bree-vi). [Latin “with a short hand”] Roman & civil law. Directly; by the shortest route. • This described the transfer of ownership to a person already in physical possession. Cf. MANU LONGA.

manuceptio (man-yap-kap-shoo-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. Surety; security; bail. 2. A writ allowing a person to be admitted to bail, when the person had been arrested for a felony but could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff. See MAINPRISE.

manucaption. See MAINPRISE.

manuceptor. See MAINPERNOR.

manufacture, n. Patents. A thing that is made or built by a human being (or by a machine), as distinguished from something that is a product of nature. • Manufactures are one of the statutory categories of inventions that can be patented. Examples of manufactures are chairs and tires. — Also termed article of manufacture. Cf. MACHINE; PROCESS (3).

“A manufacture must have a definable structure that is claimed as its patentable characteristic. Manufactures are, after all, a category of product patents, and therefore must be ‘things,’ as opposed to ways or means. In summary, a patentable manufacture is any human-made structure that has inventive characteristics.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 30 (2d ed. 1990).

manufactured home. Secured transactions. A structure, transportable in one or more sections, that when traveling is 8 body feet or more in width or 40 body feet or more in length, or, when erected on site, is 320 or more square feet, and that is built on a permanent chassis and designed to be used as a dwelling with or without a permanent foundation when connected to the required utilities, and that has within it plumbing, heating, air-conditioning, and electrical systems. UCC § 9–102(a)(36).

manufacturer. A person or entity engaged in producing or assembling new products. • A federal law has broadened the definition to include those who act for (or are controlled by) any such person or entity in the distribution of new products, as well as those who import new products for resale. 42 USCA § 4902(6).

manufacturer’s liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

manufacturing cost. See COST (1).

manufacturing defect. See DEFECT.

manu forti (man-yoo for-ti). [Latin] With strong hand. • This term was used in old writs of trespass to allege forcible entry, as in manu forti et cum multitudine gentium (“with strong hand and multitude of people”).

manu longa (man-yoo long-ga). [Latin “with a long hand”] Roman & civil law. Indirectly; by the longest route. • This described the transfer of ownership by pointing out the limits of the land transferred. Cf. MANU BREVI.

manumission (man-yap-mish-on). [Latin manumissio “I send out of hand”] Roman law. The granting of liberty to a slave or bondman; the freeing of one from the power of another; emancipation. • Manumission was so called because the slaves were sent out of the hand of their masters.

“Manumission is a kind of new birth. The master (patronus) therefore stands to his freedman in a relation analogous to the relation between father and son. The patron, as such, is entitled, as against his libertus, to a father’s rights of succession and guardianship. He has the right of moderate chastisement (levia coercitio). He has the same claim to be treated with respect as he has against his son. He can claim to be supported by the libertus, if he falls into poverty. He is, lastly, entitled to certain services on the part of the freedman, which he can, if necessary, enforce by action, provided only the freedman had promised them after his manumission and in a manner not derogatory to his liberty.” Rudolph Sohn, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 170 (James Crawford Leslie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

manumit (man-yap/mit), vb. To free (a slave).

manung (man-ung). Hist. An official’s jurisdictional district. — Also spelled monung.

manuopus (man-yoo-oh-pos). See MAINOUR.

manupretium (man-ya-pree-shee-am). [Latin] Roman law. Compensation for performed labor or services.

manurable (ma-nil-yoor-ə-bal), adj. [Law French fr. Old French main “hand”] Hist. (Of a thing) capable of being held in hand; capable of being touched.

manure (ma-nyoor), vb. [Law French fr. Old French main “hand”] Hist. To use (something) manurally; to perform manual labor on (something).

manus (man-əs also may-nəs). [Latin “hand”] 1. Roman law. The power exercised by the head of a family over all its members and slaves; esp., a husband's power over his wife. 2. Hist. A compurgator, or the oath taken. • This usage of manus may stem from the affiant's placing a hand on the Bible while taking the oath. See COMPUGRATOR.

manuscript. An unpublished writing; an author's typescript or written work product that is proposed for publication.

manus mortua (man-əs mor-choo-ə). [Latin “dead hand”] See MORTMAIN.

manworth. Hist. The value of a person's life.

Mapp hearing. Criminal procedure. A hearing held to determine whether evidence implicating the accused was obtained as the result of an illegal search and seizure, and should therefore be suppressed. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684 (1961).

mara (mair-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A lake; a pool; a body of water that cannot be drained.

maraud (ma-rəwud), vb. To rove about to pillage or plunder; to loot.

Marchers. Hist. Lords who lived on the borders of Scotland and Wales, and operated, with the permission of the English sovereigns, under their own private laws. • The laws were eventually abolished by the statute 27 Hen. 8, ch. 26. — Also termed Lords Marchers.

"Thus the Lords Marchers were practically independent potentates of a kind very unusual in England. From this two consequences flowed. In the first place there grew up in their jurisdictions a mixture of Welsh custom and English law known as the custom of the Marches. In the second place, although they held of the king, their allegiance sat so lightly upon them that it was necessary to declare in 1354 that 'all the Lords of the Marches of Wales shall be perpetually attending and annexed to the crown of England, and not to the principality of Wales, in whose hands so ever the same principality be.'" 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 121 (7th ed. 1956).

marches (mahr-chəz). Hist. Boundaries between countries or territories, esp. the borders between England and Wales, and England and Scotland.

marchet (mahr-chet). Hist. A fee paid by a feudal tenant to the lord so that the tenant's daughter could marry someone outside the lord's jurisdiction or so that the lord would waive the droit du seigneur. — Also termed marcheta; marchetum; merchet; mercheta; merchetum; maiden rent. See DROIT DU SEIGNEUR.

"'Any service which stamps the tenant as an unfree man, stamps his tenure as unfree; and in common opinion such services there are, notably the mercetum. Now among the thousands of entries in English documents relating to this payment, it would we believe be utterly impossible to find one which gave any sanction to the tales of a ius primae noctis. The context in which this duty is usually mentioned explains at least one of the reasons which underlie it. The tenant may not give his daughter (in some cases his son or daughter) in marriage — at least not outside the manor . . . . No doubt a subjection to this restraint was regarded as very base, and sometimes it is described in vulgar words which express a free man’s loathing for servility: — ‘he must buy, he must make ransom for, his flesh and blood.’" 1 Frederic Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 372 (2d ed. 1898).

march-in rights. Patents. The government's right to step in and grant a new license or revoke an existing license if the owner of a federally funded invention (or the owner's licensee) has not adequately developed or applied the invention within a reasonable time. 35 USCA § 203.

marchioness (mahr-shə-nis or mahr-shə-nəs), n. [fr. Law Latin marchionissa, the feminine counterpart to marchio “marquess”] A female dignity, equivalent to a marquis, conferred by creation or by marriage with a marquis. See MARQUISS.
Marcus model. Labor law. A method for determining whether a union member’s state-law claim against the employer is preempted by federal law, by focusing on whether the state-law claim can be maintained independently of an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. • In Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 U.S. 399, 108 S.Ct. 1877 (1988), the Supreme Court held that a union member’s state-law retaliatory-discharge claim was not preempted by the Labor-Management Relations Act because the claim could be resolved without interpreting the collective-bargaining agreement. There are at least two models for applying the Lingle test: the White model, which focuses on whether the claim is negotiable or nonnegotiable (that is, whether state law allows the claim to be waived by a private contract), and the Marcus model, which focuses on the independence of the claim in relation to the collective-bargaining agreement. Under the Marcus model, if the claim can be maintained separately from an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement, it is not preempted regardless of whether the claim is generally waivable in contract. The Marcus model is named for the author of the law-review note in which it was proposed. Stephanie R. Marcus, Note, The Need for a New Approach to Federal Preemption of Union Members’ State Law Claims, 99 Yale L.J. 209 (1989). Cf. WHITE MODEL. See LINGLE TEST.

mare (mayr’-ee or mahr’-ee), n. Hist. [Latin] The sea. See SEA.

mare clausum (mayr’-ee or mahr’-ee klaaw’-zam). [Latin “closed sea”] A sea or other body of navigable water that is under the jurisdiction of a particular nation and is closed to other nations.

mare liberum (mayr’-ee or mahr’-ee lib’-ar-um or li-bar-um). [Latin “free sea”] 1. A sea or other body of navigable water that is open to all nations. 2. FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.

marescallus (mar-a-skal’-as), n. [Law Latin] 1. A marshal; a high royal officer. — Also termed mareschal. 2. A master of the stables. 3. A military officer, similar to a constable, who acted as quartermaster. 4. An officer of the Court of Exchequer. 5. A state officer. 6. An officer of a manor.

marettum (ma-ret’-um), n. [fr. Latin mare “the sea” + tegere “to cover”] Hist. Marshy ground flooded by the sea.

margin, n. 1. A boundary or edge. 2. A measure or degree of difference. 3. PROFIT MARGIN. 4. The difference between a loan’s face value and the market value of the collateral that secures the loan. 5. Cash or collateral required to be paid to a securities broker by an investor to protect the broker against losses from securities bought on credit. 6. The amount of an investor’s equity in securities bought on credit through the broker. — margin, vb. — marginable security. See SECURITY.

margin account. See ACCOUNT.

marginal cost. See COST (1).

marginal note. A brief notation, in the nature of a subheading, placed in the margin of a printed statute for ease of reference. • Many jurisdictions hold that notes of this kind cannot be used as the basis for an argument about the interpretation of a statute. — Also termed side-note.

marginal revenue. See REVENUE.

marginal tax rate. See TAX RATE.

margin call. See CALL.

margin deficiency. Securities. The extent to which the amount of the required margin exceeds the equity in a margin account.

margined security. See SECURITY.

margin list. A Federal Reserve Board list limiting the loan value of a particular bank’s stock to a certain percentage (e.g., 50%) of its market value. • When a bank is not on the list, no limit is placed on the loan value of stock used as collateral.

margin requirement. Securities. The percentage of the purchase price that a buyer must deposit with a broker to buy a security on margin. • This percentage of the purchase price is set and adjusted by the Federal Reserve Board.

"Margin requirements are the statutory and administrative restrictions placed upon the percentage of the value

of securities that may be borrowed for the purpose of the purchase of such securities, the term 'margin' referring to the percentage of the value that must be paid in cash by the purchaser. Such requirements have been implemented for the purposes of preventing the excessive use of credit for the purchase or carrying of securities, and of reducing the aggregate amount of the national credit resources, which are directed by speculation into the stock market, and of achieving a more balanced use of such resources.” — 69 Am. Jur. 2d Securities Regulation — Federal § 481 (1995).

initial margin requirement. The minimum percentage of the purchase price that a buyer must deposit with a broker. ✪ The Federal Reserve Board establishes minimum margin requirements to prevent excessive speculation and price volatility.

maintenance margin requirement. The minimum equity that a buyer must keep in a margin account, expressed as a percentage of the account value.

margin transaction. A securities or commodities transaction made through a broker on a margin account. — Also termed buying on margin. See MARGIN (§).

mariage de convenience. See marriage of convenience under MARRIAGE (§).

marinarius (mar-a-nair-ee-as), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A seaman; a mariner. ✪ Marinarius capitaneus (kap-a-tay-nee-as) was the admiral or warden of the ports.

marine, adj. 1. Of or relating to the sea <marine life>. 2. Of or relating to sea navigation or commerce <marine insurance> <marine interest>.

marine belt. See territorial waters under WATER.

marine contract. See CONTRACT.

Marine Court in the City of New York. The New York City court, originally created to resolve seamen’s disputes, that was the predecessor of the City Court of New York.

marine insurance. See INSURANCE.

marine interest. See MARITIME INTEREST.

marine league. A geographical measure of distance equal to one-twentieth part of a degree of latitude, or three nautical miles.

marine protest. A writing attested by a justice of the peace, a notary public, or a consul, made or verified by the master of a vessel, stating that the vessel has suffered a severe voyage and that the master has engaged in neither misconduct nor negligence. See PROTEST.

marine-rescue doctrine. The rule that when a person on a ship goes overboard, the ship must use all reasonable means to retrieve the person from the water if the person can be seen, and, if the person cannot be seen, must search for the person as long as it is reasonably possible that the person is still alive.

marine risk. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

mariner’s will. See soldier’s will under WILL.

marine rule. The doctrine that if the cost of restoring damaged property would exceed one-half the value of the property before the damage, then the property is deemed to be totally destroyed. ✪ The marine rule developed in the context of applying marine insurance to damaged ships, but it has also been applied to other property, including buildings.

maritagium (mar-a-tay-jee-am), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A lord’s right to arrange a marriage for his infant ward. 2. DOWER. 3. Dowry; a marriage gift. See DOS.

“...While to the common lawyer dos meant dower, in other systems it meant dowry: a gift to the wife, or to husband and wife, by the bride’s parents or other relatives. In England this was called the ‘marriage-gift’ or maritagium. Marriage-gifts were commonly made either to establish a cadet branch of a family or to assist a daughter who was not an heiress to make a good match.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 510 (3d ed. 1990).

maritagium habitare (mar-a-tay-jee-am ha-beer-e). [Law Latin] To have the right of arranging a woman’s marriage. ✪ This was a privilege granted by the Crown to favored subjects. See MARITAGIUM.

marital, adj. Of or relating to the marriage relationship <marital property>.
marital agreement. Any agreement between spouses concerning the division and ownership of marital property; esp., a premarital contract or separation agreement that is primarily concerned with dividing marital property in the event of divorce. — Also termed marriage settlement; property settlement. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT; POSTNUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

marital-communications privilege. See marital privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

marital deduction. See DEDUCTION.

marital-deduction trust. See TRUST.

marital immunity. See husband-wife immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

marital portion. Civil law. The portion of a deceased spouse's estate to which the surviving spouse is entitled.

marital privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

marital property. See PROPERTY.

marital rape. See RAPE.

marital rights. Rights and incidents (such as property or cohabitation rights) arising from the marriage contract.

maritare (mar-ə-tair-ee), vb. Hist. To marry.

maritima Angliae (ma-rī-tə-ma ang-glee-e). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The seacoast. 2. The Crown's sea revenue, as from wreck and from whales or sturgeons cast ashore. • The revenue was formerly collected by sheriffs and later by the Lord High Admiral.

maritime (mar-i-tim), adj. 1. Connected with or situated near the ocean. 2. Of or relating to sea navigation or commerce.

“The word ‘maritime’ has in the Constitution its appropriate meaning, i.e., relating to the sea, and ‘sea’ is a word of wide extension and application .... Its classical and scriptural equivalents are applied to all sorts of navigable waters. It is not restricted, even in common speech, to waters where the tide ebbs and flows, for the Baltic Sea, the Black Sea, the Sea of Azof, the Sea of Marmora, the Mediterranean Sea, the great scenes of early maritime enterprise, have no visible tide.” 1 Steven P. Friedell, Benedict on Admiralty § 103, at 7-5 (7th ed. 1996).

Maritime Administration. A federal agency that promotes and regulates the activities of the U.S. merchant marine, esp. by directing emergency operations, establishing specifications for shipbuilding and design, and determining navigation routes. • The Maritime Act of 1981 transferred the Maritime Administration from the Department of Commerce to the Department of Transportation.

maritime belt. See territorial waters under WATER.

Maritime Commission. A federal agency that regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic commerce of the United States by: (1) ensuring that U.S. international trade is open to all countries on fair and equitable terms, (2) guarding against unauthorized monopolies in U.S. waterborne commerce, and (3) ensuring that financial responsibility is maintained to clean up oil spills and indemnify injured passengers.

maritime-connection doctrine. See LOCALITY-PLUS TEST.

maritime contract. See CONTRACT.

maritime employment. Under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, a job that is related to the loading, unloading, construction, or repair of a vessel. 33 USCA § 902(3).

maritime flavor. The relation of a given case to shipping concerns. • This is a factor used in determining federal admiralty jurisdiction over a particular matter by analyzing whether the matter sufficiently relates to marine and shipping concerns and whether there is need for a federal response.

“There is perhaps no more elusive concept in the law of admiralty than ‘maritime flavor.’ ... While ‘maritime flavor’ is incapable of precise definition, certain observations may be helpful. Generally, courts find ‘maritime flavor’ in those events and transactions which are major concerns of the shipping industry. This is tempered by the realization that exercise of federal control will not necessarily promote maritime shipping with the same vigor as control by a coastal or predominantly maritime state. Since federal law will not necessarily be more favorable, courts may find ‘maritime flavor’ only when there is a perceived need for a uniform national rule, which can only be provided by the federal sovereign.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 23 (2d ed. 1988).

maritime interest. Interest charged on a loan secured by a sea vessel or its cargo, or both. • Because of the lender’s considerable risk, the interest rate may be extraordinarily high. — Also termed marine interest.

maritime jurisdiction. The exercise of authority over maritime cases by the U.S. district courts sitting in admiralty. See 28 USCA § 1333. • Cases falling within this jurisdiction are governed by the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims — a supplement to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See ADMIRALTY (1).

maritime law. The body of law governing marine commerce and navigation, the transportation at sea of persons and property, and marine affairs in general; the rules governing contract, tort, and workers’-compensation claims arising out of commerce on or over water. — Also termed admiralty; admiralty law. Cf. LAW OF THE SEA.

maritime loan. See LOAN.

maritime service. Maritime law. Work performed in connection with a ship or commerce on navigable waters, such as service to preserve a ship’s crew, cargo, or equipment.

maritime state. Historically. The collective officers and mariners of the British navy.

maritus (ma-ri-tas), n. [Latin] A husband; a married man.

mark, n. 1. A symbol, impression, or feature on something, usu. to identify it or distinguish it from something else. 2. TRADEMARK (1). 3. SERVICE MARK.

- benchmark. See BENCHMARK.
- certification mark. See CERTIFICATION MARK.
- collective mark. See COLLECTIVE MARK.
- demimark. See DEMIMARK.

markdown. A reduction in a selling price.

marked money. Money that bears a telltale mark so that the money can be traced, usu. to a perpetrator of a crime, as when marked money is given to a kidnapper as ransom.

market, n. 1. A place of commercial activity in which goods or services are bought and sold. • <the farmers’ market>. — Also termed mart. 2. A geographic area or demographic segment considered as a place of demand for particular goods or services. • <the foreign market for microchips>. 3. The opportunity for buying and selling goods or services; the extent of economic demand. • . 4. A securities or commodities exchange. • <the stock market closed early because of the blizzard>. 5. The business of such an exchange; the enterprise of buying and selling securities or commodities. • <the stock market is approaching an all-time high>. 6. The price at which the buyer and seller of a security or commodity agree. • <the market for oil is $16 per barrel>.

- advancing market. See bull market.
- aftermarket. See secondary market.
- auction market. A market (such as the New York Stock Exchange) in which securities are bought and sold by competitive bidding through brokers. Cf. negotiated market.
- bear market. A securities market characterized by falling prices over a prolonged period. — Also termed down market; receding market.
- black market. An illegal market for goods that are controlled or prohibited by the government, such as the underground market for prescription drugs.
- bull market. A securities market characterized by rising prices over a prolonged period. — Also termed advancing market; strong market.
- buyer’s market. A market in which supply significantly exceeds demand, resulting in lower prices.
- capital market. A securities market in which stocks and bonds with long-term maturities are traded.
- common market. An economic association formed by several nations to reduce trade barriers among them; esp. (usu. cap.), EUROPEAN UNION.
- discount market. The portion of the money market in which banks and other financial institutions trade commercial paper.
down market. See bear market. forward market. See futures market.
free market. See open market.
Friday market. The normal tendency for stock-prices to decline on Fridays. • The tendency occurs because many investors balance their accounts before the weekend to avoid any adverse changes in market prices over the weekend.
futures market. A commodity exchange in which futures contracts are traded; a market for a trade (e.g., commodities futures contracts and stock options) that is negotiated at the current price but calls for delivery at a future time. — Also termed forward market. See futures contract.
geographic market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that identifies the regions in which a firm might compete. • If a firm can raise prices or cut production without causing a quick influx of supply to the area from outside sources, that firm is operating in a distinct geographic market.

“For purposes of [the Sherman Act], the relevant geographic market comprises the area in which the defendant effectively competes with other individuals or businesses for distribution of the relevant product. Stated differently, the relevant geographic market consists of the area from which the sellers of a particular product derive their customers, and the area within which the purchasers of the product can practically seek the product.” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 57, at 119-20 (1996).
gray market. A market in which legal but perhaps unethical methods are used to avoid a manufacturer’s distribution chain and thereby sell goods (esp. imported goods) at prices lower than those envisioned by the manufacturer. See parallel imports.

“One of the most controversial areas of customs law concerns ‘gray market goods,’ goods produced abroad with authorization and payment but which are imported into unauthorized markets. Trade in gray market goods has increased dramatically in recent years, in part because fluctuating currency exchange rates create opportunities to import and sell such goods at a discount rate from local price levels.” Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 20.8 (1995).
institutional market. The demand among large investors and corporations for short-term funds and commercial paper. market overt. An open, legally regulated public market where buyers, with some exceptions, acquire good title to products regardless of any defects in the seller's title. Cf. fair.

money market. The financial market for dealing in short-term negotiable instruments such as commercial paper, certificates of deposit, banker’s acceptances, and U.S. Treasury securities. negotiated market. A market (such as an over-the-counter securities market) in which buyers and sellers seek each other out and negotiate prices. Cf. auction market.
open market. A market in which any buyer or seller may trade and in which prices and product availability are determined by free competition. — Also termed free market.
original market. See primary market.
over-the-counter market. See over-the-counter market.
primary market. The market for goods or services that are newly available for buying and selling; esp., the securities market in which new securities are issued by corporations to raise capital. — Also termed original market.
product market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that applies to a firm’s particular product by identifying all reasonable substitutes for the product and by determining whether these substitutes limit the firm’s ability to affect prices.

“For purposes of an antitrust claim under ... the Sherman Act, the relevant product market includes those services or commodities which are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. In order to establish the relevant product market, therefore, a plaintiff must sufficiently identify what types of products are reasonably interchangeable substitutes for the defendant’s product within the appropriate area of competition.” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 58, at 121 (1996).
public market. A market open to both purchasers and sellers.
receding market. See bear market. recognized market. A market where the items bought and sold are numerous and similar, where competitive bidding and bartering are not prevalent, and where prices paid in sales of comparable items are publicly quoted. • Examples of recognized markets include stock and commodities exchanges. Under the UCC, a secured creditor may, upon the debtor's default, sell the collateral in a recognized market without notifying the debtor. Such a sale is presumed to be commercially reasonable.
relevant market. Antitrust. A market that is capable of being monopolized—that is, a market in which a firm can raise prices above the competitive level without losing so many sales that the price increase would be unprofitable. • The relevant market includes both the product market and the geographic market.

secondary market. The market for goods or services that have previously been available for buying and selling; esp., the securities market in which previously issued securities are traded among investors. — Also termed aftermarket.

seller’s market. A market in which demand exceeds (or approaches) supply, resulting in raised prices.

soft market. A market (esp. a stock market) characterized by falling or drifting prices and low volume.

spot market. A market (esp. in commodities) in which payment or delivery is immediate <the spot market in oil>.

strong market. See bull market.

thin market. A market in which the number of bids or offers is relatively low.

marketability. Salability; the probability of selling property, goods, securities, or services at specified times, prices, and terms.

marketability test. Mining law. The principle that, for someone to obtain a patent on a mining claim on federal land, there must be a showing that a reasonably prudent person could extract and market the claimed mineral at a profit, and that at the time of discovery, a large enough market for the mineral existed to attract the efforts of a reasonably prudent person.

marketable, adj. Of commercially acceptable quality; fit for sale and in demand by buyers. — Also termed merchantable.

marketable-title act. A state statute providing that a person can establish good title to land by searching the public records only back to a specified time (such as 40 years ago). See marketable title under TITLE (2).

market approach. A method of appraising real property, by surveying the market and comparing the property to similar pieces of property that have been recently sold, and making appropriate adjustments for differences between the properties, including location, size of the property, and the dates of sale. — Also termed comparative-sales approach; market-comparison approach; market-data approach. Cf. COST APPROACH; INCOME APPROACH.

market average. A price level for a specific group of stocks.

market-comparison approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

market correction. See DOWN REVERSAL.

market-data approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

market equity. The percentage of the total market value that a particular company’s securities account for, represented by each class of security. Cf. BOOK EQUITY.

marketing, n. 1. The act or process of promoting and selling products or services. 2. The part of a business concerned with meeting customers’ needs. 3. The area of study concerned with the promotion and selling of products or services.

market intermediary. Securities. A person whose business is to enter into transactions on both sides of the market. Investment Company Act, 15 USCA § 80a–3(c)(2)(B)(i).

market-maker. Securities. One who helps establish a market for securities by reporting bid-and-asked quotations. • A market-maker is typically a specialist permitted to act as a dealer, a dealer acting in the capacity of block positioner, or a dealer who, with respect to a security, routinely enters quotations in an interdealer communication system or otherwise and is willing to buy and sell securities for the dealer’s own account.

market-making, n. The practice of establishing prices for over-the-counter securities by reporting bid-and-asked quotations. • A broker-dealer engaged in this practice, which is regulated by both the NASD and the SEC, buys and sells securities as a principal for its own account, and thus accepts two-way bids (both to buy and to sell). See BID AND ASKED. market manipulation. See manipulation.

market order. See order (4).

market-out clause. Oil & gas. A contract provision permitting a pipeline-purchaser of natural gas to lower the purchase price if market conditions make it uneconomical to continue buying at the contract price, and permitting the well owner to respond by accepting the lower price or by rejecting it and canceling the contract.

market overt. See market.

market-participant doctrine. The principle that, under the Commerce Clause, a state does not discriminate against interstate commerce by acting as a buyer or seller in the market, by operating a proprietary enterprise, or by subsidizing private business. Under the Dormant Commerce Clause principle, the Commerce Clause — art. I, § 8, cl. 3 of the U.S. Constitution — disallows most state regulation of, or discrimination against, interstate commerce. But if the state is participating in the market instead of regulating it, the Dormant Commerce Clause analysis does not apply, and the state activity will generally stand. See Dormant Commerce Clause under commerce clause.

marketplace of ideas. A forum in which expressions of opinion can freely compete for acceptance without governmental restraint. Although Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes was the first jurist to discuss the concept as a metaphor for explaining freedom of speech, the phrase marketplace of ideas dates in American caselaw only from 1954.

market portfolio. See portfolio.

market power. The ability to reduce output and raise prices above the competitive level — specifically, above marginal cost — for a sustained period, and to make a profit by doing so. In antitrust law, a large amount of market power may constitute monopoly power. See monopolization. Cf. market share.

"In economic terms, market power is the ability to raise prices without a total loss of sales; without market power, consumers shop around to find a rival offering a better deal." 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 49, at 110 n.87 (1996).

market price. See price.

market quotation. The most current price at which a security or commodity trades.

market-recovery program. See job-targeting program.

market share. The percentage of the market for a product that a firm supplies, usu. calculated by dividing the firm’s output by the total market output. In antitrust law, market share is used to measure a firm’s market power, and if the share is high enough — generally 70% or more — then the firm may be guilty of monopolization. See monopolization. Cf. market power.

market-share liability. See liability.

market-share theory. Antitrust. A method of determining damages for lost profits by calculating the impact of the defendant’s violation on the plaintiff’s output or market share. Cf. before-and-after theory; yardstick theory.

market structure. The broad organizational characteristics of a particular market, including seller concentration, product differentiation, and barriers to entry.

market trend. See trend.

market value. See fair market value under value.

market value at the well. Oil & gas. The value of oil or gas at the place where it is sold, minus the reasonable cost of transporting it and processing it to make it marketable.

market volume. 1. The total number of shares traded on one day on a stock exchange. 2. The total number of shares of one stock traded on one day. Also termed market activity.

Mark Hopkins doctrine. The principle that when an employee leaves a job because of a labor dispute, any later employment the employee has must be bona fide and intended as permanent for the employee to avoid a labor-dispute disqualification from unemployment benefits if the employee leaves the later job. Mark Hopkins, Inc. v. Employment Comm’r, 151 P.2d 229 (Cal. 1944).

marking estoppel. See estoppel.

markon. An amount (usu. expressed as a percentage) initially added to a product’s cost to obtain the list price. Further increases or decreases in price are called markups or markdowns, respectively. marksman. 1. A person who, not being able to write, signs documents with some kind of character or symbol. 2. A highly skilled shooter.

Marks rule. The doctrine that, when the U.S. Supreme Court issues a fractured, plurality opinion, the opinion of the Justices concurring in the judgment on the narrowest grounds—that is, the legal standard with which a majority of the Court would agree—is considered the Court’s holding. Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 97 S.Ct. 990 (1977).

mark up, vb. 1. To increase (the price of goods, etc.) 2. To revise or amend (a legislative bill, a rule, etc.). 3. To place (a case) on the trial calendar.

mark up, n. 1. An amount added to an item’s cost to determine its selling price. See PROFIT MARGIN. 2. A session of a congressional committee during which a bill is revised and put into final form before it is reported to the appropriate house.

Markush doctrine (mahr-kash). Patents. An exception to the policy against use of alternative language in claims, by which in certain claims (esp. those involving chemical components) a claimant can use an alternative, subgeneric phrase when there is no applicable, commonly accepted generic expression. Ex parte Markush, 1925 Dec. Comm’t Pat. 126.

"The Patent Office early adopted a policy against use of alternative language in claims. Thus, a claimant could not use the specific alternative phrase ‘glass or plastic’ but could use a generic phrase (such as ‘impervious transparent material’) that would cover effectively the desired alternatives. The Markush doctrine developed as an exception . . . . With chemical compounds there may be no suitable phrase to cover the alternatives. Under limited circumstances a claimant could use an artificial or coined subgeneric group in the form of ‘material selected from the group consisting of X, Y, and Z.’ “ 2 Donald S. Chisum, Patents § 8.08(2), at 8–119 to 8–120 (1992).

marque, law of. Archaic. A reprisal entitling one who has been wronged and is unable to receive ordinary justice to take the goods of the wrongdoer (if they can be found within one’s own precinct) in satisfaction for the wrong. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

marquis (mahr-kwís or mahr-kee). An English nobleman below and next in order to a duke. — Also termed marquess.

marquisate (mahr-kwi-sit or -zit), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The seigniory of a marquis.

marriage, n. 1. The legal union of a man and woman as husband and wife. • Although the common law regarded marriage as a civil contract, it is more properly the civil status or relationship existing between a man and a woman who agree to and do live together as spouses. The essentials of a valid marriage are (1) parties legally capable of contracting marriage, (2) mutual consent or agreement, and (3) an actual contracting in the form prescribed by law.

“It has frequently been said by courts, and even by Legislatures, that marriage is a ‘civil contract.’ But to conclude from these statements that marriage . . . has all, or even many, of the incidents of an ordinary private contract, would be a grave error. In fact, these statements to the effect that marriage is a ‘civil contract’ will be found, upon examination, to have been used only for the purpose of expressing the idea that marriage, in the American states, is a civil, and not a religious institution, or that . . . in some states mutual consent alone without formal celebration is sufficient to constitute a valid marriage known as a common law marriage, or that, as is true in all states, the mutual consent of the parties is essential, even in the case of a ceremonial marriage.” • Joseph W. Madden, Handbook of the Law of Persons and Domestic Relations § 1–3, at 2–3 (1931).

clandestine marriage (kla-n-des-tin). 1. A marriage that rests merely on the agreement of the parties. 2. A marriage entered into in a secret way, as one solemnized by an unauthorized person or without all required formalities. See Fleet marriage.

common-law marriage. A marriage that takes legal effect, without license or ceremony, when a couple live together as husband and wife, intend to be married, and hold themselves out to others as a married couple. • Common-law marriages are permitted in 14 states and in the District of Columbia. — Also termed informal marriage.

consensual marriage. Marriage by consent alone, without any formal process. See common-law marriage.

consular marriage. A marriage solemnized in a foreign country by a consul or diplomatic official of the United States. • Consular marriages are recognized in some jurisdictions.

covenant marriage. A marriage that is entered into under a law establishing certain requirements for marriage and divorce in a state that otherwise allows for no-fault divorce. • In the late 1990s, several states (beginning with Louisiana) passed laws providing for covenant marriages. The requirements vary, but most of these laws require couples who opt for a covenant marriage to undergo premarital counseling. A divorce will be granted only after the couple has undergone marital counseling and has been separated for a specified period (usu. at least 18 months). The divorce prerequisites typically can be waived with proof that a spouse has committed adultery, been convicted of a felony, abandoned the family for at least one year, or physically or sexually abused the other spouse or a child. — Also termed high-test marriage.

cross-marriage. A marriage by a brother and sister to two people who are also brother and sister.

de facto marriage (di fak-toh). A marriage that, despite the parties’ living under color of law as man and wife, is defective for some reason.

Fleet marriage. Hist. A clandestine marriage performed in the 17th or 18th century in the Fleet prison in London by a chaplain who had been imprisoned for debt. • Parliament attempted to stop the practice, but it was not until the statute of 26 George 2, ch. 33, declaring marriages performed outside public chapels or churches to be void and punishable as a felony, that the practice ceased.

green-card marriage. See sham marriage.

Gretna-Green marriage. A marriage entered into in a jurisdiction other than where the parties reside to avoid some legal impediment that exists where they live; a runaway marriage. • Gretna Green is a Scottish village close to the English border that served as a convenient place for eloping English couples to wed.

“A ‘Gretna—Green marriage’ was a marriage solemnized in Scotland by parties who went there to avoid the delay and formalities required in England…. In the United States, the term describes marriages celebrated between residents of a State who go to a place beyond and yet near to the boundary line of an adjoining State, on account of some advantage afforded by the law of that State.” William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 496 (1889).

high-test marriage. See covenant marriage.

informal marriage. See common-law marriage.

marriage of convenience. 1. A marriage contracted for social or financial advantages rather than out of mutual love. — Also termed mariage de convenience. 2. Loosely, an ill-considered marriage that, at the time, is convenient to the parties involved.

morganatic marriage (mor-go-nat-ik). Hist. A marriage between a man of superior status to a woman of inferior status, with the stipulation that the wife and her children cannot participate in the title or possessions of the husband. • By extension, the term later referred to the marriage of a woman of superior status to a man of inferior status. — Also termed left-handed marriage.

plural marriage. A marriage in which one spouse is already married to someone else; a bigamous or polygamous union.

putative marriage (pyoo-ta-tiv). A marriage in which the husband and wife believe in good faith that they are married, but for some technical reason are not formally married (as when the ceremonial official was not authorized to perform a marriage). • Putative marriages are usu. treated as valid and do not need to be formalized.

Scotch marriage. A marriage by consensual contract, without the necessity of a formal ceremony, so called because this kind of marriage was until 1940 recognized as valid under Scots law.

sham marriage. A marriage in which a U.S. citizen marries a foreign citizen for the sole purpose of allowing the foreign citizen to become a permanent U.S. resident. • Sham marriages are illegal if made with an intent to circumvent immigration law. — Also termed green-card marriage.

voidable marriage. A marriage that is initially invalid but that remains in effect unless terminated by court order. • For example, a marriage is voidable if either party is underage or otherwise legally incompetent, or if one party used fraud, duress, or force to induce the other party to enter the marriage. The legal imperfection in such a marriage can be inquired into only during the lives of both spouses, in a proceeding to obtain a judgment declaring it void.

void marriage. A marriage that is invalid from its inception, that cannot be made valid, and that can be terminated by either party without obtaining a divorce or annulment. • For example, a marriage is void if the parties are too closely related or if either party is already married.

2. The act or ceremony so uniting them; a wedding. — marital, adj.
ceremonial marriage. A wedding that follows all the statutory requirements and that has been solemnized before a religious or civil official.

civil marriage. A wedding ceremony conducted by an official, such as a judge, or by some other authorized person — as distinguished from one solemnized by a member of the clergy.

proxy marriage. A wedding in which someone stands in for an absent bride or groom, as when one party is stationed overseas in the military. • Proxy marriages are prohibited in most states.

marriage article. A prenuptial stipulation between spouses who intend to incorporate the stipulation in a postnuptial agreement.

marriage broker. One who arranges a marriage in exchange for consideration. • A marriage broker may be subject to criminal liability for public-policy reasons.

marriage ceremony. The religious or civil proceeding that solemnizes a marriage. • Also termed wedding.

marriage certificate. A document that is executed by the religious or civil official presiding at a marriage ceremony and filed with a public authority (usu. the county clerk) as evidence of the marriage.

marriage in jest. See MARRIAGE (1).

marriage license. A document, issued by a public authority, that grants a couple permission to marry. • Most states require the couple to take blood tests before obtaining the license.

marte suo decurrentre (mahr-tee suh deh-koo-reeh-try). [Latin] Hist. To run its course by its own force. • In the civil law, this term was applied to a suit that ran its course without obstruction.

martial law (mahr-shal). 1. The law by which during wartime the army, instead of civil authority, governs the country because of a perceived need for military security or public safety. • The military assumes control purportedly until civil authority can be restored. 2. A body of firm, strictly enforced rules that are imposed because of a perception by the country’s rulers that civil government has failed, or might fail, to function. ● Martial law is usu. imposed when the rulers foresee an invasion, insurrection, economic collapse, or other breakdown of the rulers’ desired social order.

"Martial law is the public law of necessity. Necessity calls it forth, necessity justifies its exercise, and necessity measures the extent and degree to which it may be employed. That necessity is no formal, artificial, legalistic concept but an actual and factual one: it is the necessity of taking action to safeguard the state against insurrection, riot, disorder, or public calamity. What constitutes necessity is a question of fact in each case.” Frederick B. Wiener, A Practical Manual of Martial Law 16 (1940).

"[Martial law is nothing more and nothing less than an application of the common law doctrine that force, to whatever degree necessary, may be used to repress illegal force. Martial law is the public right of self-defense against a danger threatening the order or the existence of the state. Where the ordinary civil authorities — the police — are unable to resist or subdue a disturbance, additional force, military in nature, may be applied. The extent of military force used depends in each instance upon the extent of the disturbance.” Id. at 16-17.

absolute martial law. The carrying on of government functions entirely by military agencies, as a result of which the authority of civil agencies is superseded.

qualified martial law. The carrying on of government functions partly by military agencies, as a result of which the authority of some civil agencies is superseded.

A list of the parties to a lawsuit, including the addresses at which pleadings and notices can be served. • A matrix is commonly used to list the names and addresses of creditors and other parties in a bankruptcy case. Many bankruptcy courts have specific rules on how to prepare the matrix.

matter, n. 1. A subject under consideration, esp. involving a dispute or litigation; case (1) <this is the only matter on the court’s docket today>. 2. Something that is to be tried or proved; an allegation forming the basis of a claim or defense <the matters raised in the plaintiff’s complaint are not actionable under state law>. • matter in deed. 1. A matter that can be proved by a writing under seal. 2. See matter of fact.

matter in pais (in pay). A matter of fact that has not been recorded in writing and that must therefore be proved by parol evidence.

matter of fact. A matter involving a judicial inquiry into the truth of alleged facts. — Also termed matter in deed. matter of form. A matter concerned only with formalities or noncritical characteristics <the objection that the motion was incorrectly titled related to a matter of form>. Cf. matter of substance.

matter of law. A matter involving a judicial inquiry into the applicable law.

matter of record. A matter that has been entered on a judicial or other public record and therefore can be proved by producing that record.

matter of substance. A matter concerning the merits or critical elements, rather than mere formalities <the party objected because the motion was based on a repealed statute that related to a matter of substance>. Cf. matter of form.

new matter. A matter not previously raised by either party in the pleadings, usu. involving new issues with new facts to be proved.

special matter. Common-law pleading. Out-of-the-ordinary evidence that a defendant is allowed to enter; after notice to the plaintiff, under a plea of the general issue.

maturity value. The amount that is due and payable on an obligation's maturity date.

maugre (ma-w-gor), prep. Archaic. Despite <the witness may testify maugre counsel's objection>.

maxim (mak-sim). A traditional legal principle that has been frozen into a concise expression. • Examples are "possession is nine-tenths of the law" and caveat emptor ("let the buyer beware"). — Also termed legal maxim.

maximalist retributivism. See RETRIBUTIVISM.

maximum cure. Maritime law. The point at which a seaman who is injured or sick has stabilized, and no additional medical treatment will improve the seaman's condition. • A shipowner’s obligation to provide maintenance and cure to a sick or injured seaman usu. continues until the seaman has reached maximum cure. See MAINTENANCE AND CURE.

maximum medical improvement. The point at which an injured person's condition stabilizes, and no further recovery or improvement is expected, even with additional medical intervention. • This term is most often used in the context of a workers'-compensation claim. An injured employee usu. receives temporary benefits until reaching maximum medical improvement, at which time a determination can be made about any permanent disability the employee has suffered and any corresponding benefits the employee should receive. — Abbr. MMI.

may, vb. 1. Is permitted to <the plaintiff may close>. • This is the primary legal sense — usu. termed the "permissive" or "discretionary" sense. 2. Has a possibility (to); might <the defendant may win on appeal>. Cf. CAN. 3. Loosely, is required to; shall; must <if two or more defendants are jointly indicted, any defendant who so requests may be tried separately>. • In dozens of cases, courts have held may to be synonymous with shall or must, usu. in an effort to effectuate legislative intent.

mayhem (may-hem), n. 1. The crime of maliciously injuring a person's body, esp. to impair or destroy the victim's capacity for self-defense. • Modern statutes usu. treat this as a form of aggravated battery. — Also termed grievous bodily harm. See BATTERY.

"Mayhem, according to the English common law, is maliciously depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or to annoy his adversary. It is a felony." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239 (3d ed. 1982).

2. Violent destruction. 3. Rowdy confusion or disruption. — main (for sense 1), vb.

MC. abbr. MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

McCarran Act. A federal law requiring, among other things, members of the Communist party to register with the Attorney General and requiring. Communist organizations to provide the government with a list of its members. ● The Act was passed during the Cold War but was later repealed in response to a U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring portions of the Act unconstitutional. — Also termed McCarran Internal Security Act; Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950.

McCarran-Ferguson Act. A federal law allowing a state to regulate insurance companies doing business in that state, and also to levy a tax on them. 15 USCA §§ 1011–1015.

McCarran Internal Security Act. See McCARRAN ACT.

McClanahan presumption. The presumption that the states do not have jurisdiction to tax members of a Native American tribe who live or work on tribal land. ● The presumption is not limited to tribal members who live or work on a formal reservation. Instead, it includes those who live or work on informal reservations, in dependent tribal communities, and on tribal allotments. McClanahan v. Arizona Tax Comm'n, 411 U.S. 164, 93 S.Ct. 1257 (1973).

McDonnell Douglas test. Employment law. The principle for applying a shifting burden of proof in employment-discrimination cases, essentially requiring the plaintiff to come forward with evidence of discrimination and the defendant to come forward with evidence showing that the employment action complained of was taken for nondiscriminatory reasons. ● Under this test, the plaintiff is first required to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, as by showing that the plaintiff is a member of a protected group and suffered an adverse employment action. If the plaintiff satisfies that burden, then the defendant must articulate a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employment action complained of. If the defendant satisfies that burden, then the plaintiff must prove that the defendant's stated reason is just a pretext for discrimination and that discrimination was the real reason for the employment action. McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S.Ct. 1817 (1973).

McNaghten rules (mik-nawt-an). Criminal law. The doctrine that a person is not criminally responsible for an act when a mental disability prevented the person from knowing either (1) the nature and quality of the act, or (2) whether the act was right or wrong. ● The federal courts and most states have adopted this test in some form. McNaghten's Case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (H.L. 1843). — Also spelled McNaughten rules; M'Naghten rules; M'Naughten rules. — Also termed right-and-wrong test; right-wrong test. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

"Four points stand out and should be understood whenever reference to M'Naghten is made other than in regard to procedure. (1) It applies only in case of 'a defect of reason, from disease of the mind' and without this the following do not apply except that 'disease' as so used will be interpreted to include congenital defect or traumatic injury. (2) If, because of this 'defect of reason,' the defendant did not know what he was doing he is not guilty of crime. (3) Even if the defendant knew what he was doing he is not guilty of crime if, because of this 'defect of reason,' he did not know he was doing wrong. (4) If the defendant acted under an insane delusion, and was not otherwise insane, his accountability to the crimnal law is the same as if the facts were as they seemed to him to be." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 959–60 (3d ed. 1982).

McNary comity. The principle that a U.S. district court should not hear a taxpayer’s civil-rights challenge to the administration of a state’s tax system. Fair Assessment in Real Estate Ass’n v. McNary, 454 U.S. 100, 102 S.Ct. 177 (1981).

mediate powers (mee-dee-it). Subordinate powers incidental to primary powers, esp. as given by a principal to an agent; powers necessary to accomplish the principal task <adjusting debt> is a mediate power to collecting debt>. Cf. PRIMARY POWERS.

mediate testimony. See secondary evidence under EVIDENCE.

mediation (mee-dee-ay-shan), n. 1. A method of nonbinding dispute resolution involving a neutral third party who tries to help the disputing parties reach a mutually agreeable solution. — Also termed conciliation. Cf. ARBITRATION. 2. Int'l law. A neutral country's interference in the controversies of other countries to maintain international stability. — mediate (mee-dee-aht), vb. — mediatory (mee-dee-a-tor-ee), adj. — mediator (mee-dee-ay-tar), n.

"The distinction between mediation and conciliation is widely debated among those interested in ADR, arbitration, and international diplomacy. Some suggest that conciliation is 'a nonbinding arbitration,' whereas mediation is merely 'assisted negotiation.' Others put it this way: conciliation involves a third party's trying to bring together disputing parties to help them reconcile their differences, whereas mediation goes further by allowing the third party to suggest terms on which the dispute might be resolved. Still others reject these attempts at differentiation and contend that there is no consensus about what the two words mean — that they are generally interchangeable. Though a distinction would be convenient, those who argue that usage indicates a broad synonymy are most accurate." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 554 (2d ed. 1995).

Mediation and Conciliation Service. A federal agency that tries to prevent the interruption of commerce resulting from labor disputes, by assisting parties in settling their disputes through mediation and conciliation. • The agency can intervene on its own motion or on the motion of a party to the dispute. — Also termed Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. 29 USC §§ 172, 173.

mediators of questions. Hist. Six persons authorized by 27 Edw. 3, St. 2, ch. 24 to settle disputes between merchants.

meeting-competition defense. Antitrust. A defense to a charge of price discrimination whereby the defendant shows that the lower price was a good-faith attempt to match what it believed to be a competitor’s equally low offer.

meeting of creditors. — See creditors’ meeting under MEETING.

meeting of the minds. Contracts. Actual assent by both parties to the formation of a contract. ● This was required under the traditional subjective theory of assent, but modern contract doctrine requires only objective manifestations of assent. — Also termed mutuality of assent; aggregatio mentium. See MUTUAL ASSENT.

megalopolis (meg-a-lop-a-lis). A heavily populated, continuous urban area that includes many cities.

Megan’s law (meg-an or may-gan). A statute requiring local authorities to notify a community of any resident who is a convicted sex offender released from prison. ● Although many of these statutes were enacted in the late 1980s, they took their popular name from Megan Kanka of New Jersey, a seven-year-old who in 1994 was raped and murdered by a twice-convicted sex offender who lived across the street from her house. All states have these laws, but only some require community notification (as by publishing offenders’ pictures in local newspapers); in others, people must call a state hotline or submit names of persons they suspect.

mensa et thoró (men-sa et thor-oh), [Latin] From bed and board. See divorce a mensa et thoró under DIVORCE.

mensalia (men-say-lee-a), n. [fr. Latin mensa "a table"] Parsonages; spiritual livings. — Also termed mensal benefices.

mensis (men-sis), n. [Latin] Roman law. A month.

mens legis (menz lee-jis). [Latin "the mind of the law"] The spirit or purpose of a law.

mens legislatoris (menz Leigh-ee-sa-tee-or-is), [Latin "the intention of the lawmaker"] Legislative intent.

mensor (men-sor), n. [fr. Latin metiri "to measure"] Roman law. A measurer of land; a surveyor.

mens rea (menz ree-a), [Law Latin "guilty mind"] The state of mind that the prosecution, to secure a conviction, must prove that a defendant had when committing a crime; criminal intent or recklessness <the mens rea for theft is the intent to deprive the rightful owner of the property>. • Mens rea is the second of two essential elements of every crime at common law, the other being the actus reus. — Also termed mental element; criminal intent; guilty mind. Pl. mentes reae (men-teez ree-ee). Cf. ACTUS REUS.

"There are only two states of mind which constitute mens rea, and they are intention, and recklessness." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 29-30 (16th ed. 1952).

"Most English lawyers would however now agree with Sir James Fitzjames Stephen that the expression mens rea is unfortunate, though too firmly established to be expelled, just because it misleadingly suggests that, in general, moral culpability is essential to a crime, and they would assent to the criticism expressed by a later judge that the true translation of mens rea is 'an intention to do the act which is made penal by statute or by the common law.' [Allard v. Selfridge, (1925) 1 K.B. at 137 (per Shearman, J.)]." H.L.A. Hart, "Legal Responsibility and Excuses," in Punishment and Responsibility 28, 36 (1968).

"Some years ago the mens-rea doctrine was criticized on the ground that the Latin phrase is 'misleading.' If the words 'mens rea' were to be regarded as self-explanatory they would be open to this objection, but they are to be considered merely as a convenient label which may be attached to any psychical fact sufficient for criminal guilt (in connection with socially-harmful conduct). This includes a field too complex for any brief self-explanatory phrase, and since it is important to have some sort of dialectic shorthand to express the idea, this time-honored label will do as well as any." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 826-27 (3d ed. 1982).

mensularius (men-sa-lair-ee-as), n. [fr. Latin mensa "a table"] Roman law. A dealer in money; a moneychanger; a banker.

mensura domini regis (men-sjyoor-as dom-ri-ni ree-jis), [Law Latin "the measure of our lord the king"] Hist. The standard weights and measures established under Richard I, in his Parliament at Westminster in 1197.

"Thus, under king Richard I, in his parliament holden at Westminster, A.D. 1197, it was ordained that there shall be only one weight and one measure throughout the kingdom, and that the custody of the assise or standard of weights and measures shall be committed to certain persons in every city and borough . . . . In king John's time this ordinance of king Richard was frequently dispensed with for money which occasioned a provision to be made for enforcing it . . . . These original standards were called pondus regis, and mensura domini regis; and are directed by a variety of subsequent statutes to be kept in the exchequer, and all weights and measures to be made conformable thereto." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 265-66 (1765).

mercenary (mar-sa-ner-ee). Int’l law. A professional soldier hired by someone other than his or her own government to fight in a foreign country.

mercenlaise (mar-san-law). [fr. Saxon myrnela-] The law of the Mercians. • This was one of the three principal legal systems prevailing in England at the beginning of the 11th century. It was observed in many midland counties and those bordering on Wales. — Also spelled mercenlase (mar-shan-law). — Also termed lex merciorum (leks mar-shoo-or-an); Mercian law (mar-shoo-an or mar-shan). See DANELAW; WEST SAXON LAW.

“(About the beginning of the eleventh century there were three principal systems of laws prevailing in different districts . . . . The Mercen-Lage, or Mercian laws, which were observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales; the retreat of the ancient Britons; and therefore very probably intermixed with the British or Druidical customa.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 65 (1765).

merces (mar-seez), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. An agreed payment for services specifically contracted for.

“There must be consent, a thing let, and an agreed payment (merces) . . . . The merces must be certain and Justinian’s texts say that, as in sale, it must be money. But there is not the same difficulty here, and Gaius does not state such a rule. It is possible that it did not exist in classical law and, even under Justinian, some cases cannot be reconciled with the rule. The rent of land might be in produce and even a fraction of the crop. This last conflicts with the rule of Gaius that it must be certain: it is held by some writers that the text is interpolated, by others that the relation was not really locatio conductio, but societas (partnership). The merces was not usually a lump sum: more often it was a series of periodic payments.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 289–90 (2d ed. 1953).

2. A reward, esp. for a gratuitous service. Cf. HONORARIUM.

“A recompense paid for any kind of services, without a preceding agreement (e.g., for saving one’s life) is also called merces.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedia Dictionary of Roman Law 581 (1953).

merchandise (mar-chan-diz also -dis). Goods that are bought and sold in business; commercial wares.

merchandise broker. See BROKER.
Merchandise Marks Acts. Hist. An 1887 English statute (50 & 51 Vict., ch. 28) making it a misdemeanor to fraudulently mark merchandise for sale or to sell merchandise so marked. • The statute was repealed in 1968.

merchant. One whose business is buying and selling goods for profit; esp., a person or entity that holds itself out as having expertise peculiar to the goods in which it deals and is therefore held by the law to a higher standard of expertise than a nonmerchant is held. • Because the term relates solely to goods, a supplier of services is not considered a merchant.

"The definition of ‘merchant’ in [UCC] Section 2-104(1) identifies two separate but often interrelated criteria: Does the seller ‘deal in goods’ of that kind, or does the seller ‘otherwise by his occupation’ hold himself out as having special knowledge with respect to the goods? It should be emphasized that the drafters have placed these two criteria in the alternative by use of the word ‘or.’ Thus, the definition clearly catches all those who regularly sell inventory even though they may have no expertise regarding the particular product. This would include distributors, wholesalers, and retail dealers. Dealers who sell prepackaged goods containing a defect over which they have no control might be surprised to learn that they have given an implied warranty of merchantability with respect to the goods, but such is the law." Barkley Clark & Christopher Smith, The Law of Product Warranties § 5.02[1], at 5–25 (1984).

merchantable title. See marketable title under TITLE (2).

merchant exception. Contracts. An exemption from the statute of frauds making a contract between merchants enforceable if, within a reasonable time after they reach an oral agreement, a written confirmation of the terms is sent, to which the recipient does not object within ten days of receiving it. • The only effect of failing to object to the written confirmation is that the recipient will be precluded from relying on the statute of frauds — or the lack of a formal, written agreement — as a defense to a breach-of-contract claim. The party seeking to enforce an agreement must still prove that an agreement was reached. UCC § 2-201(2).

merchantman. Archaic. A vessel employed in foreign or interstate commerce or in the merchant service.

merchandize accounts. Current, mutual accounts between merchants showing debits and credits for merchandise.

merchant’s defense. The principle that a store owner will not be held liable for reasonably detaining a suspected shoplifter, to facilitate an investigation by a law-enforcement officer, if probable cause exists to suspect the detained person of wrongfully removing merchandise from the store.

merchant seaman. See SEAMAN.

merchant’s firm offer. See irrevocable offer under OFFER.

Merchant Shipping Acts. English statutes to improve shipping conditions by, among other things, vesting the superintendence of merchant shipping in the board of trade.

merchet (mar-chet). See MARCHET.

mercheta. See MARCHET.

merchetum. See MARCHET.

merciament (mar-see-a-mant). Archaic. See AMERCEMENT.

Mercian law. See MERCENLAGE.

mercy. Compassionate treatment, as of criminal offenders or of those in distress; esp., imprisonment, rather than death, imposed as punishment for capital murder. See CLEMENCY.

mercy killing. See EUTHANASIA.

mere (mair or mer), n. [Law French] Mother, as in the phrase en ventre sa mere (“in its mother’s womb”).

mere-continuation doctrine. A principle under which a successor corporation will be held liable for the acts of a predecessor corporation, if only one corporation remains after the transfer of assets, and both corporations share an identity of stock, shareholders, and directors. • Also termed continuity-of-entity doctrine. Cf. SUBSTANTIAL-CONTINUITY DOCTRINE.
mere-evidence rule. Criminal procedure. The former doctrine that a search warrant allows seizure of the instrumentalities of the crime (such as a murder weapon) or the fruits of the crime (such as stolen goods), but does not permit the seizure of items that have evidentiary value only (such as incriminating documents). • The Supreme Court has abolished this rule, and today warrants may be issued to search for and seize all evidence of a crime. Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642 (1967); Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(b).

mere license. See bare license under LICENSE.

mere licensee. See bare licensee under LICEN-SEE.

mere motu. See EX MERE MOTU.

mere right. An abstract right in property, without possession or even the right of possession. — Also termed j us merum; merum j us; meer dreit.

"The mere right of property, the j us proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently spoken of in our books under the name of the mere right, j us merum; and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally devested, and put to a right. A person in this situation may have the true ultimate property of the lands in himself: but by the intervention of certain circumstances, either by his own negligence, the solemn act of his ancestor, or the determination of a court of justice, the presumptive evidence of that right is strongly in favour of his antagonist; who has thereby obtained the absolute right of possession .... The heir therefore in this case has only a mere right, and must be strictly held to the proof of it, in order to recover the lands." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 197-98 (1766).

merestone (meer-stohn). Archaic. A stone that marks land boundaries. — Also spelled mearstone.

meretricious (mer-a-trish-əs), adj. 1. Involving prostitution; of an unlawful sexual nature . 2. (Of a romantic relationship) involving either unlawful sexual connection or lack of capacity on the part of one party . 3. Superficially attractive but fake nonetheless; alluring by false show <meretricious advertising claims>.

mergee (mar-jee). A participant in a corporate merger.

merger. 1. The act or an instance of combining or uniting. 2. Contracts. The substitution of a superior form of contract for an inferior form, as when a written contract supersedes all oral agreements and prior understandings.

"Where two parties have made a simple contract for any purpose, and afterwards have entered into an identical engagement by deed, the simple contract is merged in the deed and becomes extinct. This extinction of a lesser in a higher security, like the extinction of a lesser in a greater interest in lands, is called merger." William J. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 85 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Property. The absorption of a lesser estate into a greater estate when both become the same person's property. 4. Criminal law. The absorption of a lesser included offense into a more serious offense when a person is charged with both crimes, so that the person is not subject to double jeopardy. • For example, a defendant cannot be convicted of both attempt (or solicitation) and the completed crime — though merger does not apply to conspiracy and the completed crime. — Also termed merge-er of offenses. 5. Civil procedure. The effect of a judgment for the plaintiff, which absorbs any claim that was the subject of the lawsuit into the judgment, so that the plaintiff's rights are confined to enforcing the judgment. Cf. BAR (5).

6. The joining of the procedural aspects of law and equity. 7. The absorption of one company (esp. a corporation) that ceases to exist into another that retains its own name and identity and acquires the assets and liabilities of the former. • Corporate mergers must conform to statutory formalities and usu. must be approved by a majority of the outstanding shares. Cf. CONSOLIDATION (2); BUYOUT.

bust-up merger. A merger in which the acquiring corporation sells off lines of business owned by the target corporation to repay the loans used in the acquisition.

cash merger. A merger in which shareholders of the target company must accept cash for their shares. — Also termed cash-out merger; freeze-out merger.

conglomerate merger. A merger between unrelated businesses that are neither competitors nor customers or suppliers of each other.

"A merger which is neither vertical nor horizontal is a conglomerate merger. A pure conglomerate merger is one in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Mixed conglomerate mergers involve horizontal or vertical relationships, such as the acquisition of a firm producing the same product as the acquirer but selling it in a different geographical market, which is not a horizontal merger because the merging companies are not competitors ...." 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 169, at 226 (1996).
de facto merger (di fak-toh). A transaction that has the economic effect of a statutory merger but that is cast in the form of an acquisition or sale of assets or voting stock. • Although such a transaction does not meet the statutory requirements for a merger, a court will generally treat it as a statutory merger for purposes of the appraisal remedy.

downstream merger. A merger of a parent corporation into its subsidiary.

forward triangular merger. See triangular merger.

horizontal merger. A merger between two or more businesses that are on the same market level because they manufacture similar products in the same geographic region; a merger of direct competitors. — Also termed horizontal integration.

product-extension merger. A merger in which the products of the acquired company are complementary to those of the acquiring company and may be produced with similar facilities, marketed through the same channels, and advertised by the same media.

reverse triangular merger. A merger in which the acquiring corporation’s subsidiary is absorbed into the target corporation, which becomes a new subsidiary of the acquiring corporation. — Also termed reverse subsidiary merger.

short-form merger. A merger that is less expensive and time-consuming than an ordinary statutory merger, usu. permitted when a subsidiary merges into a parent that already owns most of the subsidiary’s shares. • Such a merger is generally accomplished when the parent adopts a merger resolution, mails a copy of the plan to the subsidiary’s record shareholders, and files the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state, who issues a certificate of merger.

statutory merger. A merger provided by and conducted according to statutory requirements.

stock merger. A merger involving one company’s purchase of another company’s capital stock.

triangular merger. A merger in which the target corporation is absorbed into the acquiring corporation’s subsidiary, with the target’s shareholders receiving stock in the parent corporation. — Also termed subsidiary merger; forward triangular merger.

upstream merger. A merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent.

vertical merger. A merger between businesses occupying different levels of operation for the same product, such as between a manufacturer and a retailer; a merger of buyer and seller.

8. The blending of the rights of a creditor and debtor, resulting in the extinguishment of the creditor’s right to collect the debt. • As originally developed in Roman law, a merger resulted from the marriage of a debtor and creditor, or when a debtor became the creditor’s heir. — Also termed confusion; confusion of debts; confusion of rights. Cf. confusion of titles.

meritorious (mer-a-tor-ee-as), adj. 1. (Of an act, etc.) meriting esteem or reward <meritorious trial performance>. 2. (Of a case, etc.) meriting a legal victory; having legal worth <meritorious claim>.

merit regulation. Under state blue-sky laws, the practice of requiring securities offerings not only to be accompanied by a full and adequate disclosure but also to be substantively fair, just, and equitable.

merits. 1. The elements or grounds of a claim or defense; the substantive considerations to be taken into account in deciding a case, as opposed to extraneous or technical points, esp. of procedure <trial on the merits>. 2. EQUITY (3) <on questions of euthanasia, the Supreme Court has begun to concern itself with the merits as well as the law>.

merit system. The practice of hiring and promoting employees, esp. government employees, based on their competence rather than political favoritism. Cf. spoils system.

Merit Systems Protection Board. A federal agency with jurisdiction to review civil-service-employee appeals and related matters, such as actions brought by the Office of Special Counsel. • The Board succeeded to certain functions of the Civil Service Commission.

Merrill doctrine. The principle that the government cannot be estopped from disavowing...

merum jus (meer-am jas). See MERE RIGHT.

mese (meez or mees), n. [Law French] Hist. A house. — Also spelled mees; meas.

mesnality (meen-al-tee), n. [fr. Law French and English mesne "middle"]) Hist. 1. The estate or manor held by a mesne lord. 2. The right of the mesne; the tenure of the mesne lord. — Also spelled mesnality. See MESNE LORD.

mesne (meen), adj. Occupying a middle position; intermediate or intervening <the mesne encumbrance has priority over the third mortgage, but is subordinate to the first mortgage>.

mesne, writ of. See DE MEDIO.

mesne conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

mesne encumbrance. See ENCUMBRANCE.

mesne lord. Hist. A feudal lord who stood between a tenant and the chief lord, and held land from a superior lord. See LORD (3).

mesne process. See PROCESS.

mesne profits. See PROFIT.

mesonomic (mes-ə-nom-ik also mee-zə-), adj. Of, relating to, or involving an act that, although it does not affect a person's physical freedom, has legal consequences in its evolution. • This term was coined by the philosopher Albert Kocurek in his book Jural Relations (1927). Cf. ZYGNOMIC.

message. A written or oral communication, often sent through a messenger or other agent, or electronically (e.g., through e-mail or voice-mail).

annual message. A message from the President or a governor given at the opening of an annual legislative session.

Presidential message. A communication from the President to the U.S. Congress on matters pertaining to the state of the union, esp. of matters requiring legislative consideration. U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. — Also termed State of the Union.

special message. A message from the President or a governor relating to a particular matter.

veto message. See VETO MESSAGE.

message from the Crown. An official communication from the sovereign to Parliament.

messarius (ma-sair-ee-əs), n. [fr. Latin messis] Hist. A chief servant; a bailiff; an overseer of the harvest.

messuage (mes-wij). A dwelling house together with the curtilage, including any outbuildings. See CURTILAGE.

meta (mee-tə). [Latin] 1. Roman law. The mark where a racecourse ends or around which chariots turn; by extension, a limit in space or time. 2. Hist. A boundary; a border.

metalaw (met-ə-law). A hypothetical set of legal principles based on the rules of existing legal systems and designed to provide a framework of agreement for these different systems.

“[T]he Constitution controls the deployment of governmental power and defines the rules for how such power may be structured and applied. The Constitution, therefore, is not a body of rules about ordinary private actions, but a collection of rules about the rules and uses of law: in a word, metalaw.” Laurence H. Tribe, Constitutional Choices 246 (1985).

metallum (ma-tal-am), n. Roman law. 1. Metal; a mine. 2. Labor in mines as punishment for a crime. • This was one of the most severe punishments short of death.

metatus (ma-tay-tas), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A dwelling; quarters; a seat.
metayer system (me-tay-yor or met-a-yay). An agricultural system in which land is divided into small farms among single families who pay a landlord a fixed portion — usu. half — of the produce and the landlord provides the stock. The system was formerly prevalent in parts of France and Italy, and in the southern part of the United States. — Also written métayer system.

metecorn (meet-korn). Archaic. A portion of corn a lord pays a tenant for labor.

metegavel (meet-gav-al). Archaic. A rent or tribute paid in supplies of food.

mete out, vb. To dispense or measure out (justice, punishment, etc.) <shortly after the jury returned its verdict, the judge meted out an appropriate punishment>.

meter. 1. A metric unit of length equal to 39.368 inches. 2. An instrument of measurement used to measure use or consumption, esp. used by a utility company to measure utility consumption   .

meter rate. A rate that a utility company applies to determine a charge for service <meter rate based on kilowatt-hours of electricity>.

metes and bounds (meets). The territorial limits of real property as measured by distances and angles from designated landmarks and in relation to adjoining properties. ● Metes and bounds are usu. described in deeds and surveys to establish the boundary lines of land. — Also termed butts and bounds; lines and corners.

meteyard (meet-yahrd). Archaic. A metewand that is one yard long.

method. A mode of organizing, operating, or performing something, esp. to achieve a goal <method of election> <method of performing a job>.

metric system. A decimal system for measuring length, weight, area, or volume, based on the meter as a unit length and the kilogram as a unit mass.

metropolitan, adj. Of or relating to a city or metropolis.

metropolitan, n. Eccles. law. An archbishop; the head of a province <the Archbishop of Canterbury is a metropolitan>.

metropolitan council. An official or quasi-official body appointed or elected by voters of a metropolitan area to provide for the unified administration of services (such as sewage disposal or public transportation) to the cities and towns within the metropolitan area.

metropolitan district. See district.

metteship (meet-shap). Hist. 1. An acknowledgment paid in a measure of corn. 2. A penalty imposed on a tenant for neglect of duty, such as failing to cut the lord’s corn. — Also spelled metschep.

metus (mee-tas). [Latin] Roman law. 1. Fear of imminent danger; apprehension of serious danger, esp. in the form of duress to force a person to do something.
   “Fear (metus) had the same effect as fraud as regards the avoidance of the contract. It might be set up by way of defence (exceptio metus) or be the ground of restitution in integrum, or give rise to an action (actio metus) …”

2. A threat by which damage is done to another’s property.

meubles (muu-bal or myoo-bla), n. [Law French] Movable, such as household utensils. See MOVABLES.

Mexican divorce. See DIVORCE.

MFN. abbr. MOST FAVORED NATION.

miche (mich), vb. Hist. To hide; to sneak; to play truant. — Also spelled mitch.

Midcal test. Antitrust. The doctrine that the anticompetitive acts of a private party will be considered state acts — and thereby protected from liability under the antitrust laws — if the acts are within a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy of the state, and if the conduct is actively supervised by the state. California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass’n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S.Ct. 937 (1980). See STATE-ACTION DOCTRINE; ACTIVE SUPERVISION.

mid-channel. See MIDDLE LINE OF MAIN CHANNEL.

middle burden of proof. A level of required persuasion, between the preponderance-of-the-evidence standard and the beyond-a-reason-doubt standard, by which a party is required to prove a fact by clear and convincing evidence. See CLEAR AND CONVINCING EVIDENCE UNDER EVIDENCE.

middle-level scrutiny. See INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

middle line of main channel. The equidistant point in the main channel of the river between the well-defined banks on either shore; the middle thread of a river’s current. — Also termed mid-channel; middle of the river.

middleman. An intermediary or agent between two parties; esp., a dealer (such as a wholesaler) who buys from producers and sells to retailers or consumers.

middle management. See MANAGEMENT.

middle thread. The center line of something; esp., an imaginary line drawn lengthwise through the middle of a stream’s current.

midnight deadline. A time limit for doing something, ending at midnight on a particular day. • For a bank, the midnight deadline is midnight on the next banking day following the day on which the bank receives the relevant item or from which the time for taking action begins to run, whichever is later. UCC § 4–104(a)(10).

midsummer-day. The summer solstice, usu. occurring about June 22. • It was formerly one of the four quarter-days for the payment of rents.

midway. See THALWEG.

Midwest Piping rule. Labor law. The doctrine that an employer may not recognize multiple unions during a period in which there are conflicting claims of representation. Midwest Piping & Supply Co., 63 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 1060 (1945).

migration. Movement (of people or animals) from one country or region to another.

migratory corporation. See CORPORATION.

migratory divorce. See DIVORCE.

Mike O’Connor rule. Labor law. The doctrine that unilateral changes that an employer makes after a union victory in an initial-representation election — but before the employer’s objections have been resolved — are automatic violations of the National Labor Relations Act if the employer’s objections are rejected. • If the employer’s objections are sustained, any failure-to-bargain charge will be dismissed because the employer had no duty to bargain. But if the employer’s objections are rejected, the employer is considered to have been under a duty to bargain as of the date of the election, which is why the unilateral changes are automatic violations of the Act. Mike O’Connor Chevrolet–Buick–GMC Co., 209 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 701 (1974).

mild exigency. A circumstance that justifies a law-enforcement officer’s departure from the knock-and-announce rule, such as the likelihood that the building’s occupants will try to escape, resist arrest, or destroy evidence. See KNOCK-AND-ANNOUNCE RULE.

mile. 1. A measure of distance equal to 5,280 feet. — Also termed statute mile. 2. NAUTICAL MILE. mileage. 1. The distance in miles between two points. 2. The distance a vehicle has traveled as reflected by an odometer. 3. An allowance paid for travel expenses, as of a witness or public employee.

militare (mil-o-tair-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. Roman law. To serve as a soldier. • This verb later referred to serving in public office, civil or military. 2. Hist. To be knighted.

military, adj. 1. Of or relating the armed forces <military base>. 2. Of or relating to war <military action>.

military, n. The armed forces.

military board. A group of persons appointed to act as a fact-finding agency or as an advisory body to the appointing military authority.

military bounty land. Land offered to members of the military as a reward for services. See donation land under LAND.

military commission. A court, usu. composed of both civilians and military officers, that is modeled after a court-martial and that tries and decides cases concerning martial-law violations. See COURT-MARTIAL.

military-contractor defense. The principle that a manufacturer who produces equipment for the military is immune from tort liability, to the same extent as the federal government, if the manufacturer did not design the equipment, participated minimally in the design, or received government authorization to proceed with a design after warning the government of the possible dangers of the design and of possible alternative designs.

military court. A court that has jurisdiction over members of the armed forces and that enforces the Code of Military Justice. See CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE.

military court of inquiry. A military court that has special and limited jurisdiction and that is convened to investigate specific matters and, traditionally, to determine whether further procedures are warranted. 10 USCA § 935.

military government. Int'l law. The control of all or most public functions within a country, or the assumption and exercise of governmental functions, by military forces or individual members of those forces; government exercised by a military commander under the direction of the executive or sovereign, either externally during a foreign war or internally during a civil war. • A military government's actions supersede all local law. See MARTIAL LAW.

military judge. A commissioned officer of the armed forces who is on active duty and is a member of a bar of a federal court or of the highest court of a state. • The Judge Advocate General of the particular service must certify a military judge as qualified for duty. A military judge of a general court-martial must also be a member of an independent judiciary. A military judge is detailed to every general court-martial and usu. to a special court-martial.

military jurisdiction. The three types of governmental power given the military by the U.S. Constitution — specific, jurisdiction under military law, jurisdiction under military government, and jurisdiction under martial law.

military justice. A structure of punitive measures designed to foster order, morale, and discipline within the military.

military law. The branch of public law governing military discipline and other rules regarding service in the armed forces. • It is exercised both in peacetime and in war, is recognized by civil courts, and includes rules far broader than for the punishment of offenders. — Also termed military justice. — Sometimes loosely termed martial law. Cf. MARTIAL LAW.

“Military Law . . . is largely, but not exclusively, statutory in character, and prescribes the rights of, and imposes duties and obligations upon, the several classes of persons composing its military establishment; it creates military tribunals, endows them with appropriate jurisdiction and regulates their procedure; it also defines military offenses and, by the imposition of adequate penalties, endeavors to prevent their occurrence.” —George B. Davis, A Treatise on the Military Law of the United States 1 (3d ed. 1915).

military leave. A policy contained in employment policies or collective-bargaining agreements allowing a long-term leave of absence — without an accompanying loss of benefits — for a person in active service in the U.S. armed forces.

military necessity. Int'l law. A principle of warfare that permits enough coercive force to achieve a desired end, as long as the force used is not more than is called for by the situation. • This principle dates from the Hague Convention on Laws and Customs of War on Land of October 18, 1907, which prohibits the destruction or seizure of enemy property "unless such destruction of seizure be imperatively demanded by the necessities of war."

military objective. Int'l law. An object that by its nature, location, or use contributes to military action, and is thus susceptible to attack. • Under Geneva Convention Protocol 1 (1977), only military — rather than civilian — objects are proper targets.

military offense. An offense, such as desertion, that lies within the jurisdiction of a military court. See COURT-MARTIAL.

military officer. A person who has command in the armed forces.

Military Rules of Evidence. The rules of evidence applicable to military law and courts-martial. — Abbr. MRE.

military tenure. See TENURE.

military testament. See soldier's will under WILL.

militate (mil-a-tayt), vb. To exert a strong influence <the evidence of police impropriety militates against a conviction>. Cf. MITIGATE.

milites (mil-a-teez), n. 1. Roman law. Members of the military. 2. Hist. Knights who are part of the royal army, by virtue of feudal tenure.

"[Knights] are also called in our law milites, because they formed a part of the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures; one condition of which was, that every one who held a knight's fee immediately under the crown ... was obliged to be knighted and attend the king in his wars, or fine for his non-compliance." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 404 (1765).

3. Scots law. Freeholders holding estates from barons.

militia (ma-lish-o). 1. A body of citizens armed and trained, esp. by a state, for military service apart from the regular armed forces. • The Constitution recognizes a state's right to form a "well-regulated militia" but also grants Congress the power to activate, organize, and govern a federal militia. U.S. Const. amend. II; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15–16. See NATIONAL GUARD. 2. Roman law. Military service.

Militia Clause. One of two clauses of the U.S. Constitution giving Congress the power to call forth, arm, and maintain a military force to enforce compliance with its laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15 and 16.

mill. 1. A machine that grinds corn, grain, or other substances, esp. using a wheel and circular motion. • The substance ground in a mill is sometimes called grist, esp. when it is a grain. Courts sometimes refer to the grinding process as a metaphor for the judicial process <suits to collect on promissory notes are grist for the summary-judgment mill because the material facts in such cases are often undisputed>. 2. The building in which the grinding is performed, along with the site, dam, or other items connected with the mill. 3. The tenth part of a cent.

Miller Act. A federal law requiring the posting of performance and payment bonds before an award is made for a contract for construction, alteration, or repair of a public work or building. 40 USCA §§ 270a–270d–1.

Miller–Tydings Act. A federal law, enacted in 1937 as an amendment to the Sherman Act, exempting fair-trade laws from the application of the Sherman Act and legalizing resale-price-maintenance agreements between producers and retailers of products. • The Act was repealed by the Consumer Goods Pricing Act of 1975.

Miller v. Shugart agreement. A settlement in which an insured consents to a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, on the condition that the plaintiff will satisfy the judgment only out of proceeds from the insured's policy, and will not seek recovery against the insured personally. • Although the phrase takes its name from a Minnesota case, it is used in other jurisdictions as well. Miller v. Shugart, 316 N.W.2d 729 (Minn. 1982).

milling in transit. An arrangement in which a shipment is temporarily detained at an intermediate point, usu. for the application of some manufacturing process, with or without an increase of a freight charge by the carrier.

mill power. A unit of water power used in defining quantities and weights of water available to a lessee.
mill privilege. The right of a mill-site owner to construct a mill and to use power from the stream to operate the mill, with due regard to the rights of other owners along the stream's path.

mill rate. A tax applied to real property whereby each mill represents $1 of tax assessment per $1,000 of the property's assessed value <the mill rate for taxes in this county is 10 mills, so for a home valued at $100,000, the owner will pay $1,000 in property taxes>. Also termed millage rate.

mill site. 1. A small tract of land on or contiguous to a watercourse, suitable for the erection and operation of a mill. 2. Mining law. A small parcel of nonmineral public land (not exceeding five acres) claimed and occupied by an owner of a mining claim because the extra space is needed for mining or ore-reduction operations. 30 USCA § 42.

Minms order. A police officer's command for a motorist to get out of the vehicle. • A Minms order need not be independently justified if the initial stop was lawful. Pennsylvania v. Minms, 434 U.S. 106, 98 S.Ct. 330 (1977).

mina (mi-na), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A measure of grain or corn.

minage (mi-nij), n. [Law French] Hist. A toll for selling grain or corn by the mina.

mind. 1. The source of thought and intellect; the seat of mental faculties. 2. The ability to will, direct, or assent. 3. Memory.

mind and memory. Archaic. A testator's mental capacity to make a will <she argued that her uncle was not of sound mind and memory when executing the will because he had Alzheimer's disease>. • This phrase was generally used as part of the phrase of sound mind and memory, referring to the capacity of a testator to make a will. See BONA MEMORIA; CAPACITY.

mine. 1. An underground excavation used to obtain minerals, ores, or other substances. 2. A mineral deposit; a place containing a mineral deposit.

mineral, n. Any natural inorganic matter that has a definite chemical composition and specific physical properties that give it value <most minerals are crystalline solids>.

mineral deed. See DEED.

mineral district. A particular region of the country where valuable minerals are typically found and mined.

mineral entry. The right of entry on public land to mine valuable mineral deposits.

"It is the policy of the United States, as expressed in Acts of Congress, to make public lands available to the people for the purpose of mining valuable mineral deposits, and to encourage exploration for, and development of, mineral resources on public lands. Accordingly, the United States has reserved all lands 'valuable for minerals' ... from disposition under the nonmineral statutes, and has made them open to entry for mining purposes, under regulations prescribed by law ... In other words ... where statute authorizes the Federal Government to acquire lands, without indicating that lands are to be acquired for a particular purpose, lands so acquired are public lands subject to mineral entry." 53A Am. Jur. 2d Mines and Minerals § 23, at 274 (1996).

mineral interest. See MINERAL RIGHT.

mineral land. See LAND.

mineral lease. See LEASE.

mineral lode. A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of a mountain; any belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries that clearly separate it from neighboring rock. • Also termed lode.

"Typically, a lode is a concentration of valuable mineral with boundaries sufficiently distinct to import such a definite trend, continuity, and apportionment to the formation that it can be traced through the enclosing mass of rock." 1 American Law of Mining § 32.02(2), at 32-7 (2d ed. 1998).

mineral right. The right to search for, develop, and remove minerals from land or to receive a royalty based on the production of minerals. • Such a right is usu. granted by a mineral lease. • Also termed mineral interest. See SUBSURFACE RIGHT. Cf. SURFACE RIGHT.

mineral royalty. See ROYALTY (2).

mineral servitude. See SERVITUDE (1).

miner's inch. A measurement of water discharge, equaling nine-gallons per minute from a one-inch square pipe. • The precise measurement of a miner's inch varies in different localities.

minimal contacts. See MINIMUM CONTACTS.

minimalist retributivism. See RETRIBUTIVISM.

minimal participant. Criminal law. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a defendant who is among the least culpable of a group of criminal actors, as when the defendant does not understand the scope or structure of the criminal enterprise or the actions of the other members of the group. • The offense level for a crime of a minimal participant can be decreased by four levels. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.2(a). Cf. MINOR PARTICIPANT.

minimal scrutiny. See RATIONAL-BASIS TEST.

mini-maxi, n. An underwriting arrangement for a securities transaction, whereby a broker is required to sell the minimum number of securities on an all-or-none basis and the balance on a best-efforts basis. See UNDERWRITING (2).

miniment (min-ə-mant). See MUNIMENT.

minimization requirement. Criminal law. The mandate that police officers acting under an eavesdropping warrant must use the wiretap in a way that will intercept the fewest possible conversations that are not subject to the warrant.

minimum, adj. Of, relating to, or constituting the smallest acceptable or possible quantity in a given case <minimum charge to a customer of a public utility>.

minimum contacts. A nonresident defendant’s forum-state connections, such as business activity or actions foreseeably leading to business activity, that are substantial enough to bring the defendant within the forum-state court’s personal jurisdiction without offending traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154 (1945). — Also termed minimal contacts.

minimum-fee schedule. Hist. A list of the lowest fees that a lawyer may charge, set by a state bar association. • The courts held that minimum-fee schedules, now defunct, violated anti-trust laws.

minimum lot. See LOT (1).

minimum-royalty clause. Patents. A royalty-agreement provision that prescribes a fixed payment by the licensee to the patent owner, regardless of whether the invention is used or not.

minimum sale. See EXHIBITION VALUE.

minimum scrutiny. See RATIONAL-BASIS TEST.

minimum sentence. See SENTENCE.

minimum tax. See alternative minimum tax under TAX.

minimum wage. See WAGE.

mining. The process of extracting ore or minerals from the ground; the working of a mine. • This term also encompasses oil and gas drilling.

mining claim. A parcel of land that contains precious metal in its soil or rock and that is appropriated by a person according to established rules and customs known as the process of location. See LOCATION (4).

lode claim. A mining claim (on public land) to a well-defined vein embedded in rock; a mining claim to a mineral lode.

placer claim. A mining claim that is not a lode claim; a claim where the minerals are not located in veins or lodes within rock, but are usu. in softer ground near the earth’s surface.

"It has long been recognized that the distinction between lode and placer claims must be tempered by scientific findings as to the nature of the mineral deposits under consideration, and the practicalities of modern mining methods, which may permit the use of surface mining methods to remove certain lodes or veins of minerals previously only reached by underground methods." 53A Am. Jur. 2d Mines and Minerals § 21, at 273 (1996).

mining partnership. An association of persons to jointly share a mining business, including the profits, expenses, and losses. • The partnership has features of both a tenancy in common and an ordinary commercial partnership.
"It has generally been held that the law governing ordinary commercial or trading partnerships applies, with a few exceptions, to mining partnerships. The principal exception and the main distinction between mining partnerships and commercial partnerships generally is based on the fact that the principle of delectus personae, meaning the right of a partner to exercise choice and preference as to the admission of any new members to the firm, and as to the persons to be so admitted, does not apply to mining partnerships . . . ." 58 C.J.S. Mines and Minerals § 387, at 380 (1998).

minister, n. 1. A person acting under another's authority; an agent. 2. A prominent government officer appointed to manage an executive or administrative department. 3. A diplomatic representative, esp. one ranking below an ambassador.

foreign minister. 1. A minister of foreign affairs, who in many countries is equivalent to the U.S. Secretary of State. 2. An ambassador, minister, or envoy from a foreign government.

minister plenipotentiary (plen-a-pa-ten-shee-er-e-e). A minister ranking below an ambassador but possessing full power and authority as a governmental representative, esp. as an envoy of a sovereign ruler. • This officer is often regarded as the personal representative of a head of state.

public minister. A high diplomatic representative such as an ambassador, envoy, or resident, but not including a commercial representative such as a consul.

4. A person authorized by a Christian church to perform religious functions.

ministerial, adj. Of or relating to an act that involves obedience to instructions or laws instead of discretion, judgment, or skill <the court clerk's ministerial duties include recording judgments on the docket>.

ministerial-function test. The principle that the First Amendment disallows judicial resolution of an employment-discrimination claim under Title VII, if the employee's responsibilities are religious in nature, as in acting as a liaison between a religion and its adherents, spreading faith, participating in church governance, supervising a religious order, and supervising participation in religious ritual and worship. 42 USCA § 2000e-1(a). See TITLE VII OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964.

ministerial trust. See passive trust under TRUST.

ministrant (min-a-strant). 1. One who ministers; a dispenser. 2. Hist. Eccles. law. A party who cross-examines a witness.

ministri regis (mi-nis-tri ree-jis). [Latin] Hist. Ministers of the king. • This term was applied to judges and ministerial officers.

minitrrial. A private, voluntary, and informal form of dispute resolution in which each party's attorney presents an abbreviated version of its case to a neutral third party and to the opponent's representatives, who have settlement authority. • The third party may render an advisory opinion on the anticipated outcome of litigation. Cf. summary jury trial under TRIAL.

minor, n. A person who has not reached full legal age; a child or juvenile. — Also termed infant.

emancipated minor. A minor who is self-supporting and independent of parental control, usu. as a result of a court order. See EMANCIPATION.

minora regalia (mi-nor-a ri-gay-lee-a). See reglia minora under REGALIA.

minor crime. See MISDEMEANOR.

minor dispute. See DISPUTE.

minor fact. See FACT.

minority. 1. The state or condition of being under legal age. — Also termed infancy; no-age. Cf. MAJORITY (1). 2. A group having fewer than a controlling number of votes. Cf. MAJOR-ITY (2). 3. A group that is different in some respect (such as race or religious belief) from the majority and that is sometimes treated differently as a result; a member of such a group. • Some courts have held that the term minority, in this sense, is not limited to a group that is outnumbered. It may also be applied to a group that has been traditionally discriminated against or socially suppressed, even if its members are in the numerical majority in an area.

minority discount. A reduction in the value of a closely held business's shares that are owned by someone who has only a minority interest in the business. The concept underlying a minority discount is recognition that controlling shares — those owned by someone who can control the business — are worth more in the market than noncontrolling shares. But when dissenting shareholders object to a corporate act, such as a merger, and become entitled to have their shares appraised and bought by the corporation, many courts hold that incorporating a minority discount into the valuation of the dissenters' shares is inequitable and is not permitted. See APPRAISAL REMEDY.

minority shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

minor participant. Criminal law. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a defendant who is less culpable for a crime than the other members of the group committing the crime, but who has more culpability than a minimal participant. A defendant who is a minor participant can have the offense level for the crime decreased by two levels. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.2(b). Cf. MINIMAL PARTICIPANT.

mint, n. 1. A government-authorized place for coining money. 2. A large supply, esp. of money.

mintage. 1. The mint's charge for coining money. 2. The product of minting; money.

mint-mark. An authorized mark on a coin showing where it was minted.

minus (mi-nas). [Latin] Roman law. Less; less than; not at all. A debt remaining wholly unpaid was called minus solutum.

minus Latium. See LATIUM MINUS.

minute book. 1. A book in which a court clerk enters minutes of court proceedings. 2. A record of the subjects discussed and actions taken at a corporate directors' or shareholders' meeting. Also termed minutes book.

minute entry. See minute order (1) under ORDER (2).

minutes. 1. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. 2. Scots law. Written forms for preserving evidence.

"When it is necessary to preserve evidence of any incidental judicial act or statement, this is done in the Court of Session, and also in the inferior courts, by a minute. Thus, where the pursuer restricts his libel, or makes a reference to the defender's oath... this is done by a minute. Strictly speaking, those minutes ought to be prepared by the clerk of court, as their form imports. They commence with the name of the counsel... and purport to be a statement made by him..." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 721 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

minutes book. See MINUTE BOOK.

minutio (mi-n(yoo)-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A lessening or reduction. See DEMINUTIO.

Miranda hearing (ma-ran-da). A pretrial proceeding held to determine whether the Miranda rule has been followed and thus whether the prosecutor may introduce into evidence the defendant's statements to the police made after arrest. See MIRANDA RULE.

Miranda rule. The doctrine that a criminal suspect in police custody must be informed of certain constitutional rights before being interrogated. The suspect must be advised of the right to remain silent, the right to have an attorney present during questioning, and the right to have an attorney appointed if the suspect cannot afford one. If the suspect is not advised of these rights or does not validly waive them, any evidence obtained during the interrogation cannot be used against the suspect at trial. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602 (1966).

Mirandize (ma-ran-diz), vb. Slang. To read (an arrestee) rights under the Miranda rule <the defendant was arrested, Mirandized, and interrogated>. See MIRANDA RULE.

mirror-image rule. Contracts. The doctrine that the acceptance of a contractual offer must be positive, unconditional, unequivocal, and unambiguous, and must not change, add to, or qualify the terms of the offer; the common-law principle that for a contract to be formed, the terms of an acceptance must correspond exactly with those of the offer. In modern commercial contexts, the mirror-image rule has been replaced by UCC § 2–207, which allows parties to enforce their agreement despite minor discrepancies between the offer and the acceptance. — Also termed ribbon-matching rule. See BATTLE OF THE FORMS.

"If an offeree purports to accept an offer but in doing so adds various conditions and qualifications of his own, is the acceptance binding on the offeror, at least in part? Generally speaking, the answer is no: the common law rule, reflected in Restatement Section 59, is that a statement of acceptance is effective only if it is a mirror image of the offer and expresses unconditional assent to all of the terms and conditions imposed by the offeror." Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 54 (1990).

misadministration. See MALADMINISTRATION.

misadventure. 1. A mishap or misfortune. 2. Homicide committed accidentally by a person doing a lawful act and having no intent to injure; ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

mallege, vb. To erroneously assert (a fact, a claim, etc.).

misapplication, n. The improper or illegal use of funds or property lawfully held. — misap- ply, vb.

misappropriation, n. The application of another’s property or money dishonestly to one’s own use. — misappropriate, vb. See EMBEZZLEMENT. Cf. APPROPRIATION; EXPROPRIATION.

misappropriation theory. Securities. The doctrine that a person who wrongfully uses confidential information to buy or sell securities in violation of a duty owed to the one who is the information source is guilty of securities fraud.

misbehavior in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

misbranding, n. The act or an instance of labeling one’s product falsely or in a misleading way. Misbranding is prohibited by federal and state law. — misbrand, vb.

miscarriage of justice. A grossly unfair outcome in a judicial proceeding, as when a defendant is convicted despite a lack of evidence on an essential element of the crime. — Also termed failure of justice.

miscegenation (mi-sej-ə-nay-shən). A marriage between persons of different races, formerly considered illegal in some jurisdictions. • In 1967, the U.S. Supreme Court held that laws banning interracial marriages are unconstitutional. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817 (1967). But for years, such laws technically remained on the books in some states. The last remaining state-law ban on interracial marriages was a provision in the state constitution of Alabama. The Alabama legislature voted to repeal the ban, subject to a vote of the state’s citizens, in 1999. — Also termed mixed marriage, interracial marriage.

miscellaneous itemized deduction. See DEDUCTION.

mischarge. An erroneous jury instruction that may be grounds for reversing a verdict. — Also termed misdirection.

mischief (mis-chəf). 1. A condition in which a person suffers a wrong or is under some hardship, esp. one that a statute seeks to remove or for which equity provides a remedy <this legislation seeks to eliminate the mischief of racially restrictive deed covenants>. 2. Injury or damage caused by a specific person or thing <the vandals were convicted of criminal mischief>. 3. The act causing such injury or damage <their mischief damaged the abbey>.

mischief rule. In statutory construction, the doctrine that a statute should be interpreted by first identifying the problem (or “mischief”) that the statute was designed to remedy and then adopting a construction that will suppress the problem and advance the remedy. — Also termed rule in Heydon’s Case; purpose approach. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; Plain-Meaning Rule; EQUITY-OF-THE-STATUTE RULE.

misconduct (mis-kon-dakt). 1. A dereliction of duty; unlawful or improper behavior. affirmative misconduct. 1. An affirmative act of misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; intentional wrongful behavior. • Some courts hold that there must be an ongoing pattern of misrepresentation or false promises, as opposed to an isolated act of providing misinformation. 2. With respect to a claim of estoppel against the federal government, a misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact by a government employee — beyond a merely innocent or negligent misrepresentation.

juror misconduct. A juror’s violation of the court’s charge or the law, committed either during trial or in deliberations after trial, such as (1) communicating with outsiders, witnesses, attorneys, bailiffs, or judges about the case, (2) bringing into the jury room information about the case but not in evidence, and (3) conducting experiments regarding theories of the case outside the court’s presence.

official misconduct. A public officer’s corrupt violation of assigned duties by malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance. — Also termed misconduct in office; misbehavior in office; malconduct in office; misdemeanor in office; corruption in office; official corruption.

wanton misconduct. An act, or a failure to act when there is a duty to do so, in reckless disregard of another’s rights, coupled with the knowledge that injury will probably result. — Also termed wanton and reckless misconduct.

willful misconduct. Misconduct committed voluntarily and intentionally.

“This term of art [willful misconduct] has defied definition, but it is clear that it means something more than negligence. Two classic examples of misconduct which will defeat the seaman’s claim are intoxication and venereal disease.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 185–86 (3d ed. 1996).

2. An attorney’s dishonesty or attempt to persuade a court or jury by using deceptive or reprehensible methods.

miscontinuance. A continuance erroneously ordered by a court.

miscreant (mis-kree-ant). An apostate; an unbeliever.

misdated. To erroneously date (a document, etc.).

misdelivery. Delivery not according to the contractual specifications.

misdemeanant (mis-do-mee-nant), n. A person who has been convicted of a misdemeanor.

misdemeanor (mis-di-mee-nar). 1. A crime that is less serious than a felony and is usu. punishable by fine, penalty, forfeiture, or confinement (usu. for a brief term) in a place other than prison (such as a county jail). — Also termed minor crime; summary offense. Cf. FELONY.

“‘Misdemeanor’ was the label ultimately adopted to apply to all offenses other than treason or felony. The term included a wide variety of wrongs and misprisions. Many of the substantive legal principles and procedures applicable to felonies were not applied in the case of misdemeanors. The difference in treatment between felonies and misdemeanors has carried over from common law to current practice, and today misdemeanors are often treated differently than felonies [in] the procedures employed in trying such cases as well as [in] the consequences of a conviction. The traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors has been abolished in England.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 15 (3d ed. 1982).

treasonable misdemeanor. See TREASONABLE MISDEMEANOR.

2. Archaic. Any crime, including a felony.

“A crime, or misdemeanor, is an act committed, or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition comprehends both crimes and misdemeanors; which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms: though, in common usage, the word, ‘crimes,’ is made to denote such offenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye; while smaller faults, and omissions of less consequence, are comprised under the gentler names of ‘misdemeanors’ only.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 5 (1769).

misdemeanor-manslaughter rule. The doctrine that a death occurring during the commission of a misdemeanor (or sometimes a non-dangerous felony) is involuntary manslaughter.

● Many states and the Model Penal Code have abolished this rule. Cf. FELONY-MURDER RULE.

“‘Companion to the felony-murder rule is the so-called misdemeanor-manslaughter rule[] ... Homicide resulting from the perpetration or attempted perpetration of an unlawful act, less than a dangerous felony, is manslaughter if the unlawful act is malum in se.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 108 (3d ed. 1982).

misdescription. 1. A contractual error or falsity that deceives, injures, or materially misleads one of the contracting parties. 2. A bailee’s inaccurate identification, in a document of title, of goods received from the bailor. 3. An inaccurate legal description of land in a deed.

mise (meez or miz), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. Expenses incurred in litigation. 2. The general issue in a writ of right. ● When a tenant pleads superior title to the plaintiff, the tenant is said to join the mise on the mere right. 3. A settlement; a compromise, as in the Mise of Lewes between Henry III and the rebelling barons. mise money. Hist. Money paid by contract to purchase a privilege.

miserable deposition (miz-ə-ray-bə-lee di-poz-ə-tam). [Law Latin “a pitiful deposit”] Civil law. A deposit or bailment made in an emergency, as in a shipwreck, fire, or insurrection.

miserere (mis-ə-reer-ee). [Latin] Hist. Have mercy. • This is the first phrase of the 51st psalm, used to test a person claiming benefit of clergy. See NECK VERSE.

misfeasance (mis-fee-zants), n. 1. A lawful act performed in a wrongful manner. 2. More broadly, a transgression or trespass; MALFEASANCE. • misfeasant, adj. • misfeasor, n. Cf. NONFEASANCE.

misfeasance in public office. The sort of excessive or malicious or negligent exercise of statutory powers by a public officer. • Also termed malfeasance.

mishering. See MISKERING.

misjoinder (mis-joyn-dar). 1. The improper union of parties in a civil case. See JOINDER. Cf. DISJOINDER; NONJOINDER. 2. The improper union of offenses in a criminal case.

"But every defeated plaintiff could be amerced ‘for a false claim.’ Incidentally too any falsehood . . . that is, any fraudulent misuse of the machinery of the law, would be punished by imprisonment. Then again every default in appearance brought an amercement on the default and his pledges. Every mistake in pleading, every miskening . . . brought an amercement on the pleader if the mistake was to be retrieved. A litigant who hoped to get to the end of his suit without an amercement must have been a sanguine man; for he was playing a game of forfeits.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 510 (2d ed. 1899).

misprision (mis-priz-an). 1. Concealment or nondisclosure of a serious crime by one who did not participate in the crime.

clerical misprision. A court clerk’s mistake or fraud that is apparent from the record.

misprision of felony. Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else’s felony.

"In fact, whatever the law may be, it is not the general custom to prosecute for misprision of felony, even where a person who knows of a felony is questioned by the police and refuses to make a statement. Indeed, Stephen, writing in the nineteenth century, regarded the offence as ‘practically obsolete’; and American courts have refused to recognise it as subsisting. But there have been four successful prosecutions in England during the last quarter-century . . . .” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 424 (2d ed. 1961).

misprision of treason. Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else’s treason.

negative misprision. The wrongful concealment of something that should be revealed <misprision of treason>.

positive misprision. The active commission of a wrongful act <seditionuous conduct against the government is positive misprision>.

2. Seditious conduct against the government. 3. An official’s failure to perform the duties of public office. 4. Misunderstanding; mistake.

“The word ‘misprision’ has been employed with different meanings. While Blackstone thought of it as referring to a grave misdemeanor, it seems to have been used earlier to indicate the entire field of crime below the grade of treason or felony before the word ‘misdemeanor’ became the generally accepted label for this purpose. More recently it has been said: ‘Misprision is nothing more than a word used to describe a misdemeanor which does not possess a specific name.’ [United States v. Perlstein, 126 F.2d 789, 798 (3d Cir. 1942)]. It has been associated with two specific offenses, and only these, from the earliest times. They are misprision of treason and misprision of felony, which consist of the criminal default of one in regard to the crime of another.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 572 (3d ed. 1982).

misprisor (mis-priz-er). One who commits misprision of felony.

misreading. An act of fraud in which a person incorrectly reads the contents of an instrument to an illiterate or blind person with the intent to deceitfully obtain that person’s signature.

misrepresentation, n. 1. The act of making a false or misleading statement about something, usu. with the intent to deceive. 2. The statement so made; an assertion that does not accord with the facts. — Also termed false representation; (redundantly) false misrepresentation. — misrepresent, vb. Cf. REPRESENTATION.

“A misrepresentation, being a false assertion of fact, commonly takes the form of spoken or written words. Whether a statement is false depends on the meaning of the words in all the circumstances, including what may fairly be inferred from them. An assertion may also be inferred from conduct other than words. Concealment or even non-disclosure may have the effect of a misrepresentation. . . . [A]n assertion need not be fraudulent to be a misrepresentation. Thus a statement intended to be truthful may be a misrepresentation because of ignorance or carelessness, as when the word ‘not’ is inadvertently omitted or when inaccurate language is used. But a misrepresentation that is not fraudulent has no consequences . . . unless it is material.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 159 cmt. a (1981).

fraudulent misrepresentation. A false statement that is known to be false or is made recklessly — without knowing or caring whether it is true or false — and that is intended to induce a party to detrimentally rely on it. — Also termed fraudulent representation; deceit.

“A misrepresentation is fraudulent if the maker intends his assertion to induce a party to manifest his assent and the maker (a) knows or believes that the assertion is not in accord with the facts, or (b) does not have the confidence that he states or implies in the truth of the assertion, or (c) knows that he does not have the basis that he states or implies for the assertion.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162 (1) (1981).

innocent misrepresentation. A false statement not known to be false; a misrepresentation that, though false, was not made fraudulently.

material misrepresentation. 1. Contracts. A false statement that is likely to induce a reasonable person to assent or that the maker knows is likely to induce the recipient to assent. 2. Torts. A false statement to which a reasonable person would attach importance in deciding how to act in the transaction in question or to which the maker knows or has reason to know that the recipient attaches some importance. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 538 (1979).

“The materiality of a misrepresentation is determined from the viewpoint of the maker, while the justification of reliance is determined from the viewpoint of the recipient . . . . The requirement of materiality may be met in either of two ways. First, a misrepresentation is material if it would be likely to induce a reasonable person to manifest his assent. Second, it is material if the maker knows that for some special reason it is likely to induce the particular recipient to manifest his assent. There may be personal considerations that the recipient regards as important even though they would not be expected to affect others in his situation, and if the maker is aware of this the misrepresentation may be material even though it would not be expected to induce a reasonable person to make the proposed contract. One who preys upon another’s known idiosyncrasies cannot complain if the contract is held voidable when he succeeds in what he is endeavoring to accomplish . . . . Although a nonfraudulent misrepresentation that is not material does not make the contract voidable under the rules stated in this Chapter, the recipient may have a claim to relief under other rules, such as those relating to breach of warranty.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162 cmt. c (1979).

negligent misrepresentation. A careless or inadvertent false statement in circumstances where care should have been taken.

misrepresentee. A person to whom a fact has been misrepresented.

misrepresenter. A person who misrepresents a fact to another. — Also spelled misrepresentor.

missilia (mi-st-lee-a). [fr. Latin mittere “to throw”] Roman law. Money that the praetors, consuls, or wealthy individuals throw as gifts to people on the street.
missing-evidence rule. The doctrine that, when a party fails to present evidence at trial that the party controls and that would have been proper to present, the jury is entitled to infer that the evidence would have been unfavorable to that party.

missing person. 1. Someone whose whereabouts are unknown and, after a reasonable time, seem to be unascertainable. 2. Someone whose continuous and unexplained absence entitles the heirs to petition a court to declare the person dead and to divide up the person’s property. See seven-years’-absence rule. Cf. disappeared person.

missing ship. Maritime law. A vessel that has been gone for an unreasonably long time, leading to the presumption that it is lost at sea; esp., a vessel that has been gone longer than the average time it takes a vessel to make a similar voyage in the same season.

missing-witness rule. The doctrine that, when a party fails to present a witness at trial who is available only to that party and whose testimony would have been admissible, the jury is entitled to infer that the witness’s testimony would have been unfavorable to that party.

mistake, n. 1. An error, misconception, or misunderstanding; an erroneous belief. 2. Contracts. The situation in which the parties to a contract did not mean the same thing — or when one or both, while meaning the same thing, formed untrue conclusions about the subject matter of the contract — as a result of which the contract may be rendered void. Cf. frustration.

"The word mistake is generally used in the law of contracts to refer to an erroneous belief — a belief that is not in accord with the facts.' To avoid confusion, it should not be used, as it sometimes is in common speech, to refer to an improvident act, such as the making of a contract, that results from such an erroneous belief. Nor should it be used, as it sometimes is by courts and writers, to refer to what is more properly called a misunderstanding, a situation in which two parties attach different meanings to their language.” E. Allen Farnsworth, Contracts § 9.2, at 649 (1982) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 (1981)).

"In this Restatement the word 'mistake' is used to refer to an erroneous belief. A party's erroneous belief is therefore said to be a 'mistake' of that party. The belief need not be an articulated one, and a party may have a belief as to a fact when he merely makes an assumption with respect to it, without being aware of alternatives. The word 'mistake' is not used here, as it is sometimes used in common speech, to refer to an improvident act, including the making of a contract, that is the result of such an erroneous belief. This usage is avoided here for the sake of clarity and consistency. Furthermore, the erroneous belief must relate to the facts as they exist at the time of the making of the contract. A party's prediction or judgment as to events to occur in the future, even if erroneous, is not a 'mistake' as that word is defined here. An erroneous belief as to the contents or effect of a writing that expresses the agreement is, however, a mistake. Mistake alone, in the sense in which the word is used here, has no legal consequences. The legal consequences of mistake in connection with the creation of contractual liability are determined by [substantive rules].” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 cmt. a (1981).

essential mistake. Contracts. A mistake serious enough that no real consent could have existed, so that there was no real agreement.

inessential mistake. See unessential mistake.

mistake of fact. A mistake about a fact that is material to a transaction. — Also termed error in fact; error of fact.

mistake of law. A mistake about the legal effect of a known fact or situation. — Also termed error in law; error of law.

mutual mistake. 1. A mistake in which each party misunderstands the other’s intent. — Also termed bilateral mistake. 2. A mistake that is shared and relied on by both parties to a contract. • A court will often revise or nullify a contract based on a mutual mistake about a material term. — Also termed (in sense 2) common mistake.

"The term ‘common mistake’ is more usually, but less grammatically, referred to as ‘mutual mistake’. Cheshire and Fifoot on Contract have made a heroic effort to introduce and establish the more correct term, and it does seem to be gaining ground. However, the beginner is warned that the term ‘mutual mistake’ is nearly always used by the Courts to mean what we here call ‘common mistake’." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 190 n.7 (3d ed. 1981).

unessential mistake. Contracts. A mistake that does not relate to the nature of the contents of an agreement, but only to some external circumstance, so that the mistake has no effect on the validity of the agreement. — Also termed inessential mistake; nonessential mistake; collateral mistake.

unilateral mistake. A mistake by only one party to a contract. • A unilateral mistake is usu. not grounds to rescind the contract.

mistery (mis-tar-ee). Hist. A business; a trade. — Also spelled mystery. mistrial. 1. A trial that the judge brings to an end, without a determination on the merits, because of a procedural error or serious misconduct occurring during the proceedings. 2. A trial that ends inconclusively because the jury cannot agree on a verdict.

misuse, n. 1. Products liability. A defense alleging that the plaintiff used the product in an improper, unintended, or unforeseeable manner. 2. Patents. The use of a patent either to improperly extend the granted monopoly to nonpatented goods or to violate antitrust laws.

misuser. An abuse of a right or office, as a result of which the person having the right might lose it (it is an act of misuser to accept a bribe). Cf. USER.

mitigate (mit-a-gayt), vb. To make less severe or intense (the fired employee mitigated her damages for wrongful termination by accepting a new job). — mitigation, n. — mitigatory (mit-a-ga-tor-ee), adj. Cf. MILITATE.

mitigating circumstance. See CIRCUMSTANCE.

mitigation-of-damages doctrine. The principle requiring a plaintiff, after an injury or breach of contract, to use ordinary care to alleviate the effects of the injury or breach. • If the defendant can show that the plaintiff failed to mitigate damages, the plaintiff’s recovery may be reduced. — Also termed avoidable-consequences doctrine.

mitigation of punishment. Criminal law. A reduction in punishment due to mitigating circumstances that reduce the criminal’s level of culpability, such as the existence of no prior convictions. See mitigating circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

mitiori sensu. See in MITIORI SENSU.

mitter avant (mit-ar a-vant), vb. [Law French] Hist. To present or produce (evidence, etc.) to a court.

mittimus (mit-a-mas). [Law Latin “we send”] Hist. 1. A court order or warrant directing a jailer to detain a person until ordered otherwise; COMMITMENT (4). 2. A certified transcript of a prisoner’s conviction or sentencing proceedings. 3. A writ directing the transfer of records from one court to another. Pl. mittimuses.

mixed insurance company. See INSURANCE COMPANY.

mixed jury. See JURY.

mixed larceny. See LARCENY.

mixed law. A law concerning both persons and property.

mixed-motive doctrine. Employment law. The principle that, when the evidence in an employment-discrimination case shows that the complained-of employment action was based in part on a nondiscriminatory reason and in part on a discriminatory reason, the plaintiff must show that discrimination was a motivating factor for the employment action and, if the plaintiff makes that showing, then the defendant must show that it would have taken the same action without regard to the discriminatory reason.

mixed nuisance. See NUISANCE.

mixed policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

mixed presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

mixed property. See PROPERTY.

mixed question. 1. MIXED QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT. 2. An issue involving conflicts of foreign and domestic law.

mixed question of law and fact. An issue that is neither a pure question of fact nor a pure question of law. • Mixed questions of law and fact are typically resolved by juries. — Also termed mixed question of fact and law. — Often shortened to mixed question.

M’Naghten rules. See MCNAUGHTEN RULES.

M.O. abbr. MODUS OPERANDI.

mobile goods. See GOODS.

Mobile-Sierra doctrine. The principle that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission may not grant a rate increase to a natural-gas producer unless the producer’s contract authorizes a rate increase, or unless the existing rate is so low that it may adversely affect the public interest (as by threatening the continued viability of the public utility to continue its service). United Gas Pipe Line Co. v. Mobile Gas Serv. Corp., 350 U.S. 332, 76 S.Ct. 373 (1956); Federal Power Comm’n v. Sierra Pac. Power Co., 350 U.S. 348, 76 S.Ct. 368 (1956). — Also termed Sierra-Mobile doctrine.

mobilia (moh-bil-ee-α), n. [Latin “movables”] Roman law. Movable things. • The term primarily refers to inanimate objects but sometimes also refers to animals.

"Many issues in a lawsuit involve elements of both law and fact. Whether these be referred to as mixed questions of law and fact, or legal inferences from the facts, or the application of law to the facts, there is substantial authority that they are not protected by the ‘clearly erroneous’ rule and are freely reviewable. This principle has been applied to antitrust violations, bankruptcy, contracts, copyright, taxation, and to other areas of the law.” 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2589, at 608-11 (2d ed. 1995).

mock trial. 1. A fictitious trial organized to allow law students, or sometimes lawyers, to practice the techniques of trial advocacy. 2. A fictitious trial, arranged by a litigant’s attorney, to assess trial strategy, to estimate the case’s value or risk, and to evaluate the case’s strengths and weaknesses. • In this procedure, people from the relevant jury pool are hired to sit as mock jurors who, after a condensed presentation of both sides, deliberate and reach a verdict (often while being observed by the participants behind a one-way glass). The jurors may later be asked specific questions about various arguments, techniques, and other issues. Because the mock jurors usu. do not know which side has hired them, their candid views are thought to be helpful in formulating trial strategies. Cf. MOOT COURT.

mode. A manner of doing something <mode of proceeding> <mode of process>.

model act. A statute drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and proposed as guideline legislation for the states to borrow from or adapt to suit their individual needs. • Examples of model acts include the Model Employment Termination Act and the Model Punitive Damages Act. Cf. UNIFORM ACT.

Model Code of Professional Responsibility. A set of ethical guidelines for lawyers, organized in the form of canons, disciplinary rules, and ethical considerations. • Published by the ABA in 1969, this code has been replaced in most states by the Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

model jury charge. See model jury instruction under JURY INSTRUCTION.

model jury instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

Model Penal Code. A proposed criminal code drafted by the American Law Institute and used as the basis for criminal-law revision by many states. — Abbr. MPC.

Model Penal Code test. See SUBSTANTIAL-CAPACITY TEST.

Model Rules of Professional Conduct. A set of ethical guidelines for lawyers, organized in the form of 52 rules — some mandatory, some discretionary — together with explanatory comments. • Published by the ABA in 1983, these rules have generally replaced the Model Code of Professional Responsibility and have been adopted as law by many states.

moderate castigavit (mod-a-ray-tee kas-ta-gay-vit). [Latin “he moderately chastised”] Hist. A plea justifying a trespass because it is really a chastisement that the defendant is legally entitled to inflict on the plaintiff because of their relationship.

modius (moh-dee-uus), n. [Latin “a measure”] Hist. 1. A bushel. 2. An uncertain measure, as of land.

modo et forma (moh-doh et for-ma). [Latin] In manner and form. • In common-law pleading, this phrase began the conclusion of a traverse. Its object was to put the burden on the party whose pleading was being traversed not only to prove the allegations of fact but also to establish as correct the manner and form of the pleading. — Also termed manner and form.

modus (moh-das). [Latin “mode”] 1. Criminal procedure. The part of a charging instrument describing the manner in which an offense was committed. 2. Roman & civil law. Mode; manner; consideration, esp. the manner in which a gift, bequest, servitude, etc. is to be employed. 3. Eccles. law. DE MODO DECIMANDI. See MODUS OPERANDI.

modus decimandi (moh-das des-a-man-di). See DE MODO DECIMANDI.

modus habilis (moh-das hab-a-lis). [Latin] A valid manner (in proving a debt, etc.).

modus operandi (moh-das op-a-ran-di or -dee). [Latin “a manner of operating”] A method of operating or a manner of procedure; esp., a pattern of criminal behavior so distinctive that investigators attribute it to the work of the same person <staging a fight at the train station was part of the pickpocket’s modus operandi>. — Abbr. M.O. Pl. modi operandi.

modus tenendi (moh-das ta-nen-di). [Latin] Hist. The manner of holding. • This phrase referred to the different types of tenures by which estates were held.

modus vacandi (moh-das va-kan-di). [Law Latin] Hist. The manner of vacating. • This term was often used in determining the circumstances under which a vassal surrendered an estate to a lord.

modus vivendi (moh-das vi-ven-di or -dee). [Latin “means of living (together)”] Int’l law. A temporary, provisional arrangement concluded between subjects of international law and giving rise to binding obligations on the parties. “Modus vivendi is an instrument of toleration looking towards a settlement, by preparing for or laying down the basis of a method of living together with a problem or by bridging over some difficulty pending a permanent settlement. Normally it is used for provisional and interim arrangements which ultimately are to be replaced by a formal agreement of a more permanent and detailed character. There is no clear distinction of a modus vivendi from other treaties. The most distinguishing feature is its provisional character; nevertheless a modus vivendi may be exercised for an indefinite period of time if it is prolonged sine die or if a definitive solution to the problem cannot be reached by treaty. Some ‘temporary’ arrangements have actually turned out to be quite durable.” Walter Rudolf, “Modus Vivendi,” in 3 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 443 (1997).

moiety (moy-a-tee). 1. A half of something (such as an estate). 2. A portion less than half; a small segment. 3. In customs law, a payment made to an informant who assists in the seizure of contraband.

moiety act. Criminal law. A law providing that half of an imposed fine will inure to the benefit of the informant.

mole. A person who uses a long affiliation with an organization to gain access to and betray confidential information.

molestation. 1. The persecution or harassment of someone, as in the molestation of a witness. 2. The act of making unwanted and indecent advances to or on someone, esp. for sexual gratification. — molest, vb. — molester, n.

child molestation. Any indecent or sexual activity on, involving, or surrounding a child, usu. under the age of 14. See Fed. R. Evid. 414(d).

molliter manus imposuit (mol-a-tar man-as im-poz-[yl-a-wit]). [Latin] Hist. He gently laid hands upon. • This phrase was used in actions of trespass and assault to justify a defendant’s use of force as reasonable, as when it was necessary to keep the peace.

monocracy (muh-nok-ra-sea). A government by one person.

monocrat (mon-or-krat). A monarch who governs alone.

monogamy (muh-nog-uh-me). n. 1. The custom prevalent in most modern cultures restricting a person to one spouse at a time. 2. The fact of being married to only one spouse. — monogamous, adj. — monogamist, n. Cf. Bigamy; polYGAMY.

monomania (mon-uh-may-nee-uh). Insanity about some particular subject or class of subjects, usu. manifested by a single insane delusion. • A will made by someone suffering from this condition is usu. held valid unless the evidence shows that particular provisions in the will were influenced by the insane delusion. — monomaniacal, adj. — monomaniac, n.

monopolization, n. The act or process of obtaining a monopoly. • In federal antitrust law, monopolization is an offense with two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power—that is, the power to fix prices and exclude competitors—within the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698 (1966). — monopolize, vb. — monopolistic, adj. — monopolist, n.

attempted monopolization. The effort to monopolize any part of interstate or foreign commerce, consisting in (1) a specific intent to control prices or destroy competition in the relevant market, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct, and (3) a “dangerous probability” of success in achieving monopoly in the relevant market.

monopoly, n. 1. Control or advantage obtained by one supplier or producer over the commercial market within a given region. 2. The market condition existing when only one economic entity produces a particular product or provides a particular service. • The term is now commonly applied also to situations that approach but do not strictly meet this definition.

"[Ninety per cent] is enough to constitute a monopoly; it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four per cent is enough; and certainly thirty-three per cent is not." United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945) (Hand, J.).

"In the modern sense, a monopoly exists when all, or so nearly all, of an article of trade or commerce within a community or district, is brought within the hands of one person or set of persons, as practically to bring the handling or production of the commodity or thing within such single control to the exclusion of competition or free traffic therein. A monopoly is created when, as the result of efforts to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or a few persons or corporations acting together, that they have power, for all practical purposes, to control the prices of a commodity and thus to suppress competition. In brief, a monopoly is the practical suppression of effective business competition which thereby creates a power to control prices to the public harm."

bilateral monopoly. A hypothetical market condition in which there is only one buyer and one seller, resulting in transactional delays because either party can hold out for a better deal without fearing that the other party will turn to a third party.

legal monopoly. The exclusive right granted by government to business to provide utility services that are, in turn, regulated by the government.

natural monopoly. A monopoly resulting from a circumstance over which the monopolist has no power, as when the market is so limited for a product that only one plant is needed to meet demand.

3. Patents. The exclusive right to make, use, and sell an invention.

monopoly leveraging. A theory of liability holding that a party violates the antitrust laws when it exploits its monopoly power in one market to gain a competitive advantage in another market.

monopoly power. The power to control prices or to exclude competition. • The size of the market share is a primary determinant of whether monopoly power exists.

monopsony (mə-nop-sə-nee), n. A market situation in which one buyer controls the market. — monopsonistic, adj.

Monroe Doctrine. The principle that the United States will allow no intervention or domination by any non-American nation in the Western Hemisphere. • This principle, which has some recognition in international law (though not as a formal doctrine), was first announced by President James Monroe in 1823.

"The Monroe doctrine is a policy which the United States has followed in her own interest more or less consistently for more than a century, and in itself is not contrary to international law, though possible applications of it might easily be so. But it certainly is not a rule of international law. It is comparable to policies such as the 'balance of power' in Europe, or the British policies of maintaining the independence of Belgium or the security of our sea-routes to the East, or the former Japanese claim to something like a paramount influence over developments in the Far East. Apart from other objections, it is impossible to regard as a rule of law a doctrine which the United States claims the sole right to interpret, which she interprets in different senses at different times, and which she applies only as and when she chooses. Nor is the doctrine, as Article 21 of the Covenant described it, a 'regional understanding', for the a method of obtaining restitution from the Crown. • It was replaced by the writ of right.

Currently, restitution is obtained by an ordi-Form policy action against the government.

monstrans de faits (mon-stranz da fay(ts)).
[Law French] Hist. A showing of deeds; a pro-fert.

monstraverunt (mon-strä-veer-ant). [Latin "they have showed"] Hist. A writ of relief for tenants of ancient demesne who were dis-strained by their lord to do more than the Tenure required.

"The little writ serves the turn of a man who claims land according to the custom of the manor; but the tenants of whom we are speaking are protected, and protected collectively, against any increase of their services. This is very plain when the manor is in the hands of a mesne lord. If he attempts to increase the customary services, some of the tenants, acting on behalf of all, will go to the royal chancery and obtain a writ against him. Such a writ begins with the word Monstraverunt. The king addresses the lord: — 'A.B and C, men of your manor of X, which is of the ancient demesne of the crown of England, have shown us that you exact from them other customs and services than those which they owe, and which their ancestors did in the time when that manor was in the hands of our predecessors, kings of England; therefore we command you to cease from such exactions, otherwise we shall order our sheriff to interfere.' " 1 of English Law Before the Time of Edward 1 388 (2d ed.

1898).

montes pietatis (mon-teez pi-a-tay-tis). [Latin "mountains of piety"] Hist. Institutions established to lend money upon pledges of goods.

month. 1. One of the twelve periods of time in which the calendar is divided <the month of March>. — Also termed calendar month; civil month. 2. Any time period approximating 30 days <due one month from today>. 3. At common law, a period of 28 days; the period of one revolution of the moon . — cy under TENANCY.

Montreal Agreement. A private agreement, signed by most international airlines, waiving both the Warsaw Convention's limitation on liability for death and personal-injury cases (currently about $20,000) and the airline's due-care defenses, raising the liability limit per passenger to $75,000, and providing for abso-ute liability on the part of the carrier (in the absence of passenger negligence) for all flights originating, stopping, or terminating in the United States. • The Montreal Agreement was the result of negotiations in 1965 and 1966 following the United States' denunciation of the Warsaw Convention, based primarily on its low liability limits. — Also termed Agreement Relating to Liability Limitation of the Warsaw monument, n. 1. A written document or record, esp. a legal one. 2. Any natural or artificial object that is fixed permanently in land and wharf. 2. A mooring charge.

moot, adj. 1. Archaic. Open to argument; debatable. 2. Having no practical significance; hypo-theslical or academic <the question on appeal became moot once the parties settled their case>. — mootness, n.

moot, vb. 1. Archaic. To raise or bring forward (a point or question) for discussion. 2. To render (a question) moot or of no practical significance.
moot court. 1. A fictitious court held usu. in law schools to argue moot or hypothetical cases, esp. at the appellate level. 2. A practice session for an appellate argument in which a lawyer presents the argument to other lawyers, who first act as judges by asking questions and who later provide criticism on the argument. — Also termed practice court. Cf. MOCK TRIAL.

moot man. Hist. A person who argued cases in the Inns of Court.

mootness doctrine. The principle that American courts will not decide moot cases — that is, cases in which there is no longer any actual controversy. Cf. RIPENESS.

mop. See STATUTE FAIR.

mora (mor-a), n. [Latin] Roman law. Willful delay or default in fulfilling a legal obligation.

"Mora. This was wrongful failure to discharge a legal obligation on demand made at a fitting time and place. It must be wilful: failure to appear, by mistake, or in a bona fide belief that there was no obligatio, or doubt about it, or by mishap, did not suffice to put a debtor in mora." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 338 (2d ed. 1933).

mora (mor-a), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A moor; unprofitable ground.

moral absolutism. The view that a person’s action can always properly be seen as right or wrong, regardless of the situation or the consequences. — Also termed ethical absolutism; objective ethics. Cf. MORAL RELATIVISM.

moral certainty. Absolute certainty. • Moral certainty is not required to sustain a criminal conviction. See REASONABLE DOUBT.

moral consideration. See good consideration under CONSIDERATION.

moral depravity. See MORAL TURPITUDE.

moral duty. See DUTY (1).

moral evidence. See EVIDENCE.

moral fraud. See actual fraud under FRAUD.

moral hazard. See HAZARD (2).

moral right. 1. Conformity with recognized rules of correct conduct. 2. The character of being virtuous, esp. in sexual matters.

"The terms ‘morality’ and ‘immorality’ ... are understood to have a sexual connotation. In fact, the terms ‘ethics’ and ‘morals’ are no longer interchangeable in everyday speech. A governmental officer arraigned on a ‘morals charge’ will be accused of something quite different from one accused of an ‘ethics violation.’" William P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 56 (1975).

3. A system of duties; ethics.

private morality. A person’s ideals, character, and private conduct, which are not valid governmental concerns if the individual is to be considered sovereign over body and mind and if the need to protect the individual’s physical or moral well-being is insufficient to justify governmental intrusion. • In his essay On Liberty (1859), John Stuart Mill distinguished between conduct or ideals that affect only the individual from conduct that may do harm to others. Mill argued that governmental intrusion is justified only to prevent harm to others, not to influence a person’s private morality.

public morality. 1. The ideals or general moral beliefs of a society. 2. The ideals or actions of an individual to the extent that they affect others.

moral law. A collection of principles defining right and wrong conduct; a standard to which an action must conform to be right or virtuous.

"It quite often happens that the moral law disapproves of something which the secular permits as a concession to human frailty." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 78 (1968).

moral necessity. See NECESSITY.

moral obligation. A duty that is based only on one’s conscience and that is not legally enforceable. • In contract law, moral obligation may support a promise in the absence of traditional consideration, but only if the promisor has previously received some actual benefit from the promisee.

moral person. See artificial person under PERSON.

moral relativism. The view that there are no absolute or constant standards of right and wrong. — Also termed ethical relativism; subjective ethics. Cf. MORAL ABSOLUTISM.

nary protections of copyright. • Moral rights include both integrity rights, which protect the work from changes that damage the artist’s or the work’s reputation, and attribution rights, which allow the artist to claim authorship of the work and to prevent the unlawful use of the author’s name in reference to a modified version of the work. Visual Artists Rights Act of 1990 (17 USCA §§ 106A, 113).

moral suasion. The act or effort of persuading by appeal to principles of morality.

moral turpitude. 1. Conduct that is contrary to justice, honesty, or morality. • In the area of legal ethics, offenses involving moral turpitude — such as fraud or breach of trust — traditionally make a person unfit to practice law. — Also termed moral depravity. 2. Military law. Any conduct for which the applicable punishment is a dishonorable discharge or confinement not less than one year.

“Moral turpitude means, in general, shameful wickedness — so extreme a departure from ordinary standards of honest, good morals, justice, or ethics as to be shocking to the moral sense of the community. It has also been defined as an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which one person owes to another, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between people.” 50 Am. Jur. 2d Libel and Slander § 165, at 454 (1995).

moratorium (mor-a-tor-ee-um). 1. An authorized postponement, usu. a lengthy one, in the deadline for paying a debt or performing an obligation. 2. The period of this delay. 3. The suspension of a specific activity. Pl. moratoria, moratoriums.

moratory (mor-a-tor-ee), adj. Of or relating to a delay; esp., of or relating to a moratorium.

moratory damages. See DAMAGES.

morganatic marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

morgangiva (mor-gan-jah-va), n. [Law Latin “moving gift”] Hist. A gift made to the bride on the morning after the wedding; a type of dowry. — Also spelled morgangina.

Morgan presumption. A presumption that shifts the burden of proof by requiring the person against whom it operates to produce sufficient evidence to outweigh the evidence that supports the presumed fact, as in requiring a criminal defendant who was arrested while in possession of an illegal substance — and is thereby presumed to have knowingly possessed it — to produce sufficient evidence to entitle the jury to find that the defendant’s evidence outweighs the evidence of knowing possession. See Edmund M. Morgan, Instructing the Jury Upon Presumptions and Burdens of Proof, 47 Harv. L. Rev. 59, 82–83 (1933). Cf. THAYER PREJUDICE.

mors (morz), n. [Latin] Death.

mors naturalis (morz nach-ah-ray-lee). See natural death under DEATH.

mortality factor. Insurance. In life-insurance ratemaking, an estimate of the average number of deaths that will occur each year at each specific age, calculated by using an actuarial table. • The mortality factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See ACTUARIAL TABLE; PREMIUM RATE. Cf. INTEREST FACTOR; RISK FACTOR.

mortality table. See ACTUARIAL TABLE.

“Another of the petty assizes was that of mort d’ancestor, founded on the Assize of Northampton 1176. The question in this assize was whether the plaintiff’s father (or other close ancestor) had been seized in fee — that is, of an inheritable estate — on the day he died, and whether the plaintiff was his next heir; if both questions were answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff was entitled to be put in seisin.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 267–68 (3d ed. 1990).

mortgage (mor-gij), n. 1. A conveyance of title to property that is given as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty and that will become void upon payment or performance according to the stipulated terms. 2. A lien against property that is granted to secure an obligation (such as a debt) and that is extinguished upon payment or performance according to stipulated terms. 3. An instrument (such as a deed or contract) specifying the terms of such a transaction. 4. Loosely, the loan on which such a transaction is based. 5. The mortgagee’s rights conferred by such a

"The chief distinction between a mortgage and a pledge is that by a mortgage the general title is transferred to the mortgagor, subject to be vested by performance of the condition; while by a pledge the pledgor retains the general title in himself, and parts with the possession for a special purpose. By a mortgage the title is transferred; by a pledge, the possession." — Leonard A. Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Mortgages § 4, at 5–6 (5th ed. 1908).

adjustable-rate mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender can periodically adjust the mortgage's interest rate in accordance with fluctuations in some external market index. — Abbr. ARM. — Also termed variable-rate mortgage; flexible-rate mortgage.

all-inclusive mortgage. See wraparound mortgage.

amortized mortgage. A mortgage in which the mortgagor pays the interest as well as a portion of the principal in the periodic payment. ● At maturity, the periodic payments will have completely repaid the loan. — Also termed self-liquidating mortgage. See AMORTIZATION. Cf. straight mortgage.

balloon-payment mortgage. A mortgage requiring periodic payments for a specified time and a lump-sum payment of the outstanding balance at maturity.

blanket mortgage. A mortgage covering two or more properties that are pledged to support a debt.

bulk mortgage. 1. A mortgage of personal property in bulk; a pledge of an aggregate of goods in one location. 2. A mortgage of more than one real-estate parcel.

chattel mortgage (chat-al). A mortgage on goods purchased on installment, whereby the seller transfers title to the buyer but retains a lien securing the unpaid balance. ● Chattel mortgages have generally been replaced by security agreements, which are governed by Article 9 of the UCC. Cf. retail installment contract under CONTRACT.

closed-end mortgage. A mortgage that does not permit either prepayment or additional borrowing against the collateral. Cf. open-end mortgage.

closed mortgage. A mortgage that cannot be paid in full before maturity without the lender's consent.

collateral mortgage. Civil law. A mortgage securing a promissory note pledged as collateral security for a principal obligation.

consolidated mortgage. A mortgage created by combining two or more mortgages.

construction mortgage. A mortgage used to finance a construction project.

contingent-interest mortgage. A mortgage whose interest rate is directly related to the economic performance of the pledged property.

conventional mortgage. A mortgage, not backed by government insurance, by which the borrower transfers a lien or title to the lending bank or other financial institution. ● These mortgages, which feature a fixed periodic payment of principal and interest throughout the mortgage term, are typically used for home financing. — Also termed conventional loan.

direct-reduction mortgage. An amortized mortgage in which the principal and interest payments are paid at the same time — usu. monthly in equal amounts — with interest being computed on the remaining balance. — Abbr. DRM.

dry mortgage. A mortgage that creates a lien on property but does not impose on the mortgagor any personal liability for any amount that exceeds the value of the premises.

equitable mortgage. A transaction that has the intent but not the form of a mortgage, and that a court of equity will treat as a mortgage. Cf. technical mortgage.

"Courts of equity are not governed by the same principles as courts of law in determining whether a mortgage has been created, and generally, whenever a transaction resolves itself into a security, or an offer or attempt to pledge land as security for a debtor liability, equity will treat it as a mortgage, without regard to the form it may assume, or the name the parties may choose to give it. The threshold issue in an action seeking imposition of an equitable mortgage is whether the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law. In applying the doctrine of equitable mortgages doubts are resolved in favor of the transaction being a mortgage." — 59 C.J.S. Mortgages § 12, at 62 (1998).

extended first mortgage. See wraparound mortgage.

FHA mortgage. A mortgage that is insured fully or partially by the Federal Housing Administration.

first mortgage. A mortgage that is senior to all other mortgages on the same property.

fixed-rate mortgage. A mortgage with an interest rate that remains the same over the life of the mortgage regardless of market conditions. — Abbr. FRM.

flexible-rate mortgage. 1. See adjustable-rate mortgage. 2. See renegotiable-rate mortgage.

flip mortgage. A graduated-payment mortgage allowing the borrower to place all or some of the down payment in a savings account and to use the principal and interest to supplement lower mortgage payments in the loan’s early years.

future-advances mortgage. A mortgage in which part of the loan proceeds will not be paid until a future date.

graduated-payment adjustable-rate mortgage. A mortgage combining features of the graduated-payment mortgage and the adjustable-rate mortgage. — Abbr. GPARM.

graduated-payment mortgage. A mortgage whose initial payments are lower than its later payments. • The payments are intended to gradually increase, as the borrower’s income increases over time.

growing-equity mortgage. A mortgage that is fully amortized over a significantly shorter term than the traditional 25- to 30-year mortgage, with increasing payments each year. — Abbr. GEM.

interest-only mortgage. A balloon-payment mortgage on which the borrower must at first make only interest payments, but must make a lump-sum payment of the full principal at maturity. — Also termed standing mortgage; straight-term mortgage.

joint mortgage. A mortgage given to two or more mortgagors jointly.

judicial mortgage. Civil law. A judgment lien created by a recorded legal judgment.

jumbo mortgage. A mortgage loan in a principal amount that exceeds the dollar limits for a government guarantee.

junior mortgage. A mortgage that is subordinate to another mortgage on the same property. — Also termed puisne mortgage.

leasehold mortgage. A mortgage secured by a lessee’s leasehold interest.

legal mortgage. Civil law. A creditor’s mortgage arising by operation of law on the debtor’s property. — Also termed tacit mortgage.

open-end mortgage. A mortgage that allows the mortgagor to borrow additional funds against the same property. Cf. closed-end mortgage.

package mortgage. A mortgage that includes both real and incidental personal property, such as a refrigerator or stove.

participation mortgage. 1. A mortgage that permits the lender to receive profits of the venture in addition to the normal interest payments. 2. A mortgage held by more than one lender.

price-level-adjusted mortgage. A mortgage with a fixed interest rate but the principal balance of which is adjusted to reflect inflation. — Abbr. PLAM.

purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage that a buyer gives the seller, when the property is conveyed, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price. — Abbr. PMM. See SECURITY AGREEMENT.

renegotiable-rate mortgage. A government-sponsored mortgage that requires the mortgagor to renegotiate its terms every three to five years, based on market conditions. — Also termed flexible-rate mortgage; rollover mortgage.

reverse annuity mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender disburses money over a long period to provide regular income to the (usu. elderly) borrower, and in which the loan is repaid in a lump sum when the borrower dies or when the property is sold. — Abbr. RAM. — Also termed reverse mortgage.

rollover mortgage. See renegotiable-rate mortgage.

second mortgage. A mortgage that is junior to a first mortgage on the same property, but that is senior to any later mortgage.

“A Landowner who already holds land subject to a mortgage may wish to hypothecate his equity. He does this by taking out a ‘second mortgage.’ Should the mortgagor default in his obligations on the first mortgage, the first mortgagee may foreclose. If there is a deficiency upon sale, the second mortgagee loses his security in the equity because there is no equity. If the mortgagee does not default on the first mortgage, but does on the second, the second mortgagee can foreclose on the mortgagor’s equity. Such a foreclosure would not affect the first mortgagee’s rights.” — Edward H. Rabin, Fundamentals of Modern Real Property Law 1087 (1974).

self-liquidating mortgage. See amortized mortgage.

senior mortgage. A mortgage that has priority over another mortgage (a junior mortgage) on the same property.

shared-appreciation mortgage. A mortgage giving the lender the right to recover (as contingent interest) an agreed percentage of the property’s appreciation in value when it is sold or at some other specified, future date. — Abbr. SAM.

shared-equity mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender shares in the profits from the property’s resale. • The lender must usu. first purchase a portion of the property’s equity by providing a portion of the down payment.

special mortgage. Civil law. A mortgage burdening only particular, specified property of the mortgagor. La. Civ. Code art. 3288.

standing mortgage. See interest-only mortgage.

straight mortgage. A mortgage in which the mortgagor is obligated to pay interest during the mortgage term along with a final payment of principal at the end of the term. Cf. amortized mortgage.

straight-term mortgage. See interest-only mortgage.

submortgage. See submortgage.

tacit mortgage. See legal mortgage.

technical mortgage. A traditional, formal mortgage, as distinguished from an instrument having the character of an equitable mortgage. Cf. equitable mortgage.

VA mortgage. A veteran’s mortgage that is guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

variable-rate mortgage. See adjustable-rate mortgage.

Welsh mortgage. A type of mortgage, formerly common in Wales and Ireland, by which the mortgagor, without promising to pay the debt, transfers title and possession of the property to the mortgagee, who takes the rents and profits and applies them to the interest, often with a stipulation that any surplus will reduce the principal. • The mortgagee cannot compel the mortgagor to redeem, and cannot foreclose the right to redeem, because no time is fixed for payment. The mortgagor is never in default, but may redeem at any time.

wraparound mortgage. A second mortgage issued when a lender assumes the payments on the borrower’s low-interest first mortgage (usu. issued through a different lender) and lends additional funds. • Such a mortgage covers both the outstanding balance of the first mortgage and the additional funds loaned. 12 CFR § 226.17 cmt. 6. — Also termed extended first mortgage; all-inclusive mortgage.

zero-rate mortgage. A mortgage with a large down payment but no interest pay-ments, with the balance paid in equal installments.

mortgage-backed security. See security.

mortgage banker. An individual or organization that originates real-estate loans for a fee, resells them to other parties, and services the monthly payments.

mortgage certificate. A document evidencing part ownership of a mortgage.

mortgage clause. An insurance-policy provision that protects the rights of a mortgagee when the insured property is subject to a mortgage. • Such a clause usu. provides that any insurance proceeds must be allocated between the named insured and the mortgagee “as their interests may appear.” — Also termed mortgagee clause. See loss-payable clause; atima.

open mortgage clause. A mortgage clause that does not protect the mortgagee if the insured mortgagor does something to invalidate the policy (such as committing fraud). • This type of clause has been largely superseded by the mortgage-loss clause, which affords the mortgagee more protection. — Also termed simple mortgage clause. Cf. mortgage-loss clause.

standard mortgage clause. A mortgage clause that protects the mortgagee’s interest even if the insured mortgagor does something to invalidate the policy. • In effect, this clause creates a separate contract between the insurer and the mortgagor. — Also termed union mortgage clause.--- mortgage commitment. A lender’s written agreement with a borrower stating the terms on which it will lend money for the purchase of specified real property, usu. with a time limitation.

mortgage company. A company that makes mortgage loans and then sells or assigns them to investors.

mortgage-contingency clause. A real-estate-sale provision that conditions the buyer’s performance on obtaining a mortgage loan.

mortgage deed. See deed.
mortgage discount. The difference between the mortgage principal and the amount the mortgage actually sells for; the up-front charge by a lender at a real-estate closing for the costs of financing. • Although usu. paid by the buyer, the discount is sometimes paid by the seller when required by law, as with a VA mortgage. — Also termed point; mortgage point; loan-brokerage fee; new-loan fee.

mortgagee (mor-ga-je). One to whom property is mortgaged; the mortgage-creditor, or lender. — Also termed mortgage-holder.

mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee who takes control of mortgaged land by agreement with the mortgagor, usu. upon default of the loan secured by the mortgage.

mortgagee clause. See MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

mortgagee policy. A title-insurance policy that covers only the mortgagee’s title and not the owner’s title. Cf. OWNER’S POLICY.

mortgage foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

mortgage-guarantee insurance. Insurance provided by the Mortgage Guarantee Insurance Company to mortgage lenders that grant mortgages to parties having less than a 20% down payment. • The cost of the insurance is included in the closing costs.

mortgage-holder. See MORTGAGEE.

mortgage insurance. See INSURANCE.

mortgage lien. See LIEN.

mortgage loan. See LOAN.

mortgage-loss clause. A mortgage clause providing that title insurance will not be invalidated by the mortgagor’s acts. • Thus, even if the mortgagor does an act that would otherwise make the policy void, the act merely voids the policy as against the mortgagor, but it remains in full force for the benefit of the mortgagee. — Also termed New York standard clause; union-loss clause. Cf. open mortgage clause under MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

mortgage market. The conditions that provide the demand for new mortgage loans and the later resale of those loans in the secondary mortgage market.

primary mortgage market. The national market in which mortgages are originated.

secondary mortgage market. The national market in which existing mortgages are bought and sold, usu. on a package basis.

mortgage note. See NOTE (1).

mortgage point. See POINT (2); MORTGAGE DISCOUNT.

mortgage servicing. The administration of a mortgage loan, including the collection of payments, release of liens, and payment of property insurance and taxes. • Servicing is usu. performed by the lender or the lender’s agent, for a fee.

mortgage warehousing. An arrangement in which a mortgage company holds loans for later resale at a discount.

mortgaging out. The purchase of real property by financing 100% of the purchase price.

mortgagor (mor-ga-jor or mor-ga-jar). One who mortgages property; the mortgage-debtor, or borrower. — Also spelled mortgager; mortgagor.

mortis causa (mor-tis kaw-za). See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

mortmain (mort-mayn). [French “deadhand”] The condition of lands or tenements held inalienably by an ecclesiastical or other corporation. See AMORTIZE; DEADHAND CONTROL.

mortmain statute. A law that limits gifts or other dispositions of land to corporations (esp. charitable ones) and that prohibits corporations from holding land in perpetuity. • In England, laws such as the Provisions of Westminster and Magna Carta essentially required the Crown’s authorization before land could vest in a corporation. The object was to prevent lands from being held by religious corporations in perpetuity. Although this type of restriction was not generally part of the common law in the United States, it influenced the enactment of certain state laws restricting the amount of property a corporation can hold for religious or charitable purposes. — Also termed mortmain act; statute of mortmain.

mortuary. 1. A place where cadavers are prepared for burial; a place where dead bodies are held before burial. 2. A burial place. 3. Hist. A customary gift left by a deceased to a parish church for past tithes owed.

mortuary table. See ACTUARIAL TABLE.

mortuum vadium (mor-choo-am vay-dee-am). See vadium mortuum under VADIUM.

mortuus (mor-choo-as), adj. [Latin] Hist. 1. Dead. 2. A sheriff’s return that the named party is dead.

mortuus civiliter (mor-choo-as sa-vil-a-tar). [Latin “civilly dead”] A person civilly dead, deprived of civil rights. See CIVIL DEATH.

most favorable light. See LIGHT MOST FAVORABLE.

most favored nation. A treaty status granted to a nation, usu. in international trade, allowing it to enjoy the privileges accorded to the other nations that are parties to the treaty. • The primary effect of most-favored-nation status is lower trade tariffs. — Also termed most-favored-nation status. — Abbr. MFN.

most-favored-nation clause. 1. A clause in an agreement between two nations providing that each will treat the other as well as it treats any other nation that is given preferential treatment. 2. By extension, such a clause in any contract, but esp. an oil-and-gas contract. — Often shortened to favored-nation clause; MFN clause. — Also termed most-favored-nations clause. Cf. preferential tariff under TARIFF.

most-favored-tenant clause. A commercial-lease provision ensuring that the tenant will be given the benefit of any negotiating concessions given to other tenants.

most-significant-relationship test. Conflict of laws. The doctrine that, to determine the state law to apply to a dispute, the court should determine which state has the most substantial connection to the occurrence and the parties. • For example, in a tort case, the court should consider where the injury occurred, where the conduct that caused the injury occurred, the residence, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties, and the place where the relationship between the parties, if any, is centered. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 145 (1971). In a case involving a contract, the court should consider where the contract was made, where the contract was negotiated, where the contract was to be performed, and the domicile, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties. Id. § 188.

most suitable use. See highest and best use under USE (1).

most-suitable-use value. See optimal-use value under VALUE.

moteer (moh-ter). Hist. A customary payment or service made at the lord’s court.

mother. A woman who has given birth to or legally adopted a child. • The term is sometimes interpreted as including a pregnant woman who has not yet given birth.

adoptive mother. See adoptive parent under PARENT.

foster mother. See foster parent under PARENT.

mother country. A colonizing nation; a colonial power. Cf. COLONY.

Mother Hubbard clause. 1. A clause stating that a mortgage secures all the debts that the mortgagor may at any time owe to the mortgagee. — Also termed anaconda clause; dragnet clause. 2. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease or a mineral or royalty deed conveying small strips of land or irregularly shaped acreage outside the area described in the lease or deed. • Such a provision is usu. included to override any inaccuracies in the description of the land. — Also termed cover-all clause. 3. A court’s written declaration that any relief not expressly granted in a specific ruling or judgment is denied.

mother-in-law. The mother of a person’s spouse.

motion. 1. A written or oral application requesting a court to make a specified ruling or order. 2. A proposal made under formal parliamentary procedure.

calendar motion. A motion relating to the time of court appearances. • Examples include motions to continue, motions to advance, and motions to reset.
contradictory motion. Civil law. A motion that is likely to be contested or that the nonmoving side should have an opportunity to contest.

dilatory motion (dil-a-tor-ee). 1. A motion made solely for the purpose of delay. 2. A motion that has the effect of delaying the proceedings.

ex parte motion (eks pahr-tee). A motion made to the court without notice to the adverse party; a motion that a court considers and rules on after hearing from fewer than all sides.

omnibus motion. A motion that makes several requests or asks for multiple forms of relief.

posttrial motion. A motion made after judgment is entered, such as a motion for new trial.

speaking motion. A motion that addresses matters not raised in the pleadings.

special motion. A motion specifically requiring the court’s discretion upon hearing, as distinguished from one granted as a matter of course.

motion for a more definite statement. See MOTION FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT.

motion for a new trial. See MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

motion for a protective order. See MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER.

motion for a repleader. Common-law pleading. An unsuccessful party’s posttrial motion asking that the pleadings begin anew because the issue was joined on an immaterial point. ● The court never awards a repleader to the party who tendered the immaterial issue.

motion for directed verdict. A party’s request that the court enter judgment in its favor before submitting the case to the jury because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary foundation on which a reasonable jury could find for the other party. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the equivalent court paper is known as a motion for judgment as a matter of law. — Also termed motion for a directed verdict. — Abbr. MDV. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW; DIRECTED VERDICT under VERDICT.

motion for judgment as a matter of law. A party’s request that the court enter a judgment in its favor before the case is submitted to the jury, or after a contrary jury verdict, because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a jury could find for the other party. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may move for judgment as a matter of law anytime before the case has been submitted to the jury. This kind of motion was formerly known as a motion for directed verdict (and still is in many jurisdictions). If the motion is denied and the case is submitted to the jury, resulting in an unfavorable verdict, the motion may be renewed within ten days after entry of the judgment. This aspect of the motion replaces the court paper formerly known as a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50.

motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. A party’s request that the court enter a judgment in its favor despite the jury’s contrary verdict because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a jury to find for the other party. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this procedure has been replaced by the provision for a motion for judgment as a matter of law, which must be presented before the case has been submitted to the jury but can be reasserted if it is denied and the jury returns an unfavorable verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. — Also termed motion for j.n.o.v. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW.

motion for judgment of acquittal. A criminal defendant’s request, at the close of the government’s case or the close of all evidence, to be acquitted because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable jury could return a guilty verdict. ● If the motion is granted, the government has no right of appeal. — Abbr. MJOA.

motion for judgment on the pleadings. A party’s request that the court rule in its favor based on the pleadings on file, without accepting evidence, as when the outcome of the case rests on the court’s interpretation of the law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c).

motion for leave to appeal. A request that an appellate court review an interlocutory order that meets the standards of the collateral-order doctrine. — Abbr. MLA. See COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE.

motion for more definite statement. A party’s request that the court require an opponent to amend a vague or ambiguous pleading to which the party cannot reasonably be required to respond. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). — Also termed motion for a more definite statement.

“Another disfavored motion is the motion for a more definite statement. By a 1948 amendment to the rules, the old bill of particulars was abolished. The motion for more definite statement, which serves much the same function, is to be granted only where a pleading to which a responsive pleading is permitted is so vague or ambiguous that the party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading. If the pleading is sufficiently definite that the opponent can reply to it, the motion for more definite statement should be denied and any particulars that the opponent needs to prepare for trial obtained by depositions, interrogatories, and similar discovery procedures. The motion is never proper where no responsive pleading is permitted, nor should it be used to force the plaintiff to include additional particulars that may make the complaint vulnerable to a motion to dismiss.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 66, at 461–62 (5th ed. 1994).

motion for new trial. A party’s postjudgment request that the court vacate the judgment and order a new trial for such reasons as factually insufficient evidence, newly discovered evidence, or jury misconduct. • In many jurisdictions, this motion is required before a party can raise such matters on appeal. — Also termed motion for a new trial.

motion for protective order. A party’s request that the court protect it from potentially abusive action by the other party, usu. relating to discovery, as when one party seeks discovery of the other party’s trade secrets. • A court will sometimes craft a protective order to protect one party’s trade secrets by ordering that any secret information exchanged in discovery be used only for purposes of the pending suit and not be publicized. — Also termed motion for a protective order.

motion for relief from the judgment. A party’s request that the court correct a clerical mistake in the judgment — that is, a mistake that results in the judgment’s incorrectly reflecting the court’s intentions — or to relieve the party from the judgment because of such matters as (1) inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, (2) newly discovered evidence that could not have been discovered through diligence in time for a motion for new trial, (3) the judgment’s being the result of fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct by the other party, or (4) the judgment’s being void or having been satisfied or released. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60. Cf. MOTION TO ALTER OR AMEND THE JUDGMENT.

motion for summary judgment. A request that the court enter judgment without a trial because there is no genuine issue of material fact to be decided by a fact-finder — that is, because the evidence is legally insufficient to support a verdict in the nonmovant’s favor. • In federal court and in most state courts, the movant-defendant must point out in its motion the absence of evidence on an essential element of the plaintiff’s claim, after which the burden shifts to the nonmovant-plaintiff to produce evidence raising a genuine fact issue. But if a party moves for summary judgment on its own claim or defense, then it must establish each element of the claim or defense as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. 56. — Abbr. MSJ. — Also termed summary-judgment motion; motion for summary disposition. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

motion in arrest of judgment. 1. A defendant’s motion claiming that a substantial error appearing on the face of the record vitiates the whole proceeding and the judgment. 2. A postjudgment motion in a criminal case claiming that the indictment is insufficient to sustain a judgment or the verdict is somehow insufficient.

motion in limine (in lim-a-ne). A pretrial request that certain inadmissible evidence not be referred to or offered at trial. • Typically, a party makes this motion when it believes that mere mention of the evidence during trial would be highly prejudicial and could not be remedied by an instruction to disregard. If, after the motion is granted, the opposing party mentions or attempts to offer the evidence in the jury’s presence, a mistrial may be ordered. A ruling on a motion in limine does not preserve evidentiary error for appellate purposes. Instead, to raise such an error on appeal, a party must have formally objected when the evidence was actually admitted or excluded during trial.

motion to alter or amend the judgment. A party’s request that the court correct a substantive error in the judgment, such as a manifest error of law or fact. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion to alter or amend the judgment must be filed within ten days after the judgment is entered. It should not ordinarily be used to correct clerical errors in a judgment. Those types of errors — that is, errors that result in the judgment not reflecting the court’s intention — may be brought in a motion for relief from the judgment, which motion to alter or amend the judgment does not have the ten-day deadline. A motion to alter or amend the judgment is usu. directed to substantive issues regarding the judgment, such as an intervening change in the law or newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). Cf. MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM THE JUDGMENT.

motion to compel discovery. A party’s request that the court force the party’s opponent to respond to the party’s discovery request (as to answer interrogatories or produce documents). Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a). — Often shortened to motion to compel. — Also termed motion to enforce discovery.

motion to dismiss. A request that the court dismiss the case because of settlement, voluntary withdrawal, or a procedural defect. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the case (under Rule 41(a)) or the defendant may ask the court to dismiss the case, usu. based on one of the defenses listed in Rule 12(b). These defense include lack of personal or subject-matter jurisdiction, improper venue, insufficiency of process, the plaintiff’s failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, and the failure to join an indispensable party. A defendant will frequently file a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, which is governed by Rule 12(b)(6), claiming that even if all the plaintiff’s allegations are true, they would not be legally sufficient to state a claim on which relief might be granted. — Abbr. MTD.

motion to enforce discovery. See MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY.

motion to lift the stay. Bankruptcy. A party’s request that the bankruptcy court alter the automatic bankruptcy stay to allow the movant to act against the debtor or the debtor’s property, as when a creditor seeks permission to foreclose on a lien because its security interest is not adequately protected. — Also termed motion for relief from stay; motion to modify the stay.

motion to modify the stay. See MOTION TO LIFT THE STAY.

motion to quash (kwash). A party’s request that the court nullify process or an act instituted by the other party, as in seeking to nullify a subpoena.

motion to remand. In a case that has been removed from state court to federal court, a party’s request that the federal court return the case to state court, usu. because the federal court lacks jurisdiction or because the procedures for removal were not properly followed. 28 USCA § 1447(c).

motion to strike. 1. Civil procedure. A party’s request that the court delete insufficient defenses or immaterial, redundant, impertinent, or scandalous statements from an opponent’s pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). 2. Evidence. A request that inadmissible evidence be deleted from the record and that the jury be instructed to disregard it.

motion to suppress. A request that the court prohibit the introduction of illegally obtained evidence at a criminal trial.

motion to transfer venue. A request that the court transfer the case to another district or county, usu. because the original venue is improper under the applicable venue rules or because of local prejudice. See VENUE; CHANGE OF VENUE.

motive. Something, esp. willful desire, that leads one to act. — Also termed ulterior intent. Cf. intent.

“The term ‘motive’ is unfortunately ambiguous. That feeling which internally urges or pushes a person to do or refrain from doing an act is an emotion, and is of course evidential towards his doing or not doing the act. But when that evidential fact comes in turn to be evidenced, we must rely on two sorts of data, (a) the person’s own expressions of that emotion, e.g., ‘I hate M,’ or ‘I wish I owned that necklace’; and (b) external circumstances likely in human experience to arouse the emotion, e.g., a slander on D may be evidence that D became angry; a purse of money left in sight of D may be evidence that D’s desire to have it was aroused. Now this second sort of evidential circumstance (b) is loosely referred to as ‘motive,’ — though in reality it is only evidential of the emotion, which itself is evidential of the act.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 76 (1935).

bad motive. A person’s knowledge that an act is wrongful while the person commits the act.

malicious motive. A motive for bringing a prosecution, other than to do justice.

Motor Carrier Act. A federal statute, originally enacted in 1935 (49 USCA §§ 502–507), subjecting commercial motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now the U.S. Department of Transportation. • The Act was repealed in the 1980s. movable, n. (usu. pl.) 1. Property that can be moved or displaced, such as personal goods.

"Moveables and immovables. The main distinction drawn in later Roman law and modern systems thereon between kinds of things subject to ownership and possession. While basically the distinction corresponds to everyday conceptions, assigning animals and vehicles to the former and land and buildings to the latter category, particular things may be assigned to one category rather than the other for reasons of convenience. Thus, in French law, farm implements and animals are immovables. The distinction is also important in international private law, more so than that between real and personal ... Thus, land held on lease is personal property by English law for historical reason, but in international private law it is a right in immovable property." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 858 (1980).

intangible movable. A physical thing that can be moved but that cannot be touched in the usual sense. Examples are light and electricity. "Intangible moveables' is a term of art in the common law which has been applied more widely than its meaning literally justifies, which is merely to those things that have physical existence and can be moved, though cannot be touched in the normal sense, such as light, electricity and radioactive waves. In English law the term has been generally applied to interests created by law which have only a legal, not a physical existence, and are accordingly capable only of legal, not physical, movement. It is convenient, however, to retain a term which is generally accepted and understood in this special legal meaning." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 470 (7th ed. 1974).

"Moveables are, in the phraseology of the law of Scotland, opposed to heritage; so that every species of property, and every right a person can hold, is by that law either heritable or moveable. Hence, moveables are not merely corporeal subjects capable of being moved, but every species of property, corporeal or incorporeal, which does not descend to the heir in heritage." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 1882).

movable estate. See personal property under property.

movable freehold. The land a seashore owner acquires or loses as water recedes or approaches.

movant (moov-ant). One who makes a motion to the court. — Formerly also spelled movent.

move, vb. 1. To make an application (to a court) for a ruling, order, or some other judicial action <the appellant moved the court for a new trial>. 2. To propose under formal parliamentary procedure <the senator moved that a vote be taken>.

mulet (məlkt), n. A fine or penalty.

mulet, vb. 1. To punish by a fine. 2. To deprive or divest of, esp. fraudulently.

mulier (myoo-lee-ar), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A woman. — This term at various times referred to a marriageable virgin, a woman not a virgin, a wife, and a mother. 2. Hist. & Scots law. A legitimate son; the son of a mulier ("lawful wife"). — Also termed mulieratus.
mulier puisne (myoo-lee-ar pyoo-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. The younger lawful son, usu. distinguished from the bastard eigné ("the elder bastard son").

"The common law developed one exception to its harsh doctrine of bastardy. Where the eldest son was born out of wedlock (the bastard eigné) and the next son was born to the same parents after the marriage (the mulier puisné), and upon the ancestor's death the bastard eigné entered as heir and remained in undisturbed possession until his own death, the bastard eigné was treated as if he had been legitimate with respect to the inheritance of that land. The reason given by Littleton was that a person who was legitimate by the Canon law could not be bastardised posthumously, when he no longer had the opportunity to contest the issue." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 559 (3d ed. 1990).

mulierity (myoo-lee-ar-tee). Hist. The condition of a legitimate child, as distinguished from a bastard.

multa (mal-ta), n. [Latin "a fine"] Hist. Eccles. law. A fine the bishops paid to the king so that they could make and probate wills and administer estates. — Also termed multura episcopi (mal-ty-loor-a i-pis-ka-pl).

multicraft union. See UNION.

multidistrict litigation. Civil procedure. Federal-court litigation in which civil actions pending in different districts and involving common fact questions are transferred to a single district for coordinated pretrial proceedings, after which the actions are returned to their original districts for trial. • Multidistrict litigation is governed by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, which is composed of seven circuit and district judges appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States. 28 USCA § 1407. — Abbr. MDL.

multifarious (mal-ta-fair-ee-as), adj. 1. (Of a single pleading) improperly joining distinct matters or causes of action, and thereby confounding them. 2. Improperly joining parties in a lawsuit. 3. Diverse; many and various. — multifariousness, n.

municipal utility district. See DISTRICT.

municipium (myoo-na-sip-ee-am). [fr. Latin munus “honor” + capere “to take”] Roman law. A self-governing town; specific, any community allied with or conquered by Rome and allowed to maintain certain privileges (such as maintaining separate laws called leges municipales) and to exchange certain rights with Rome, such as intermarriage with Roman citizens.

muniment (myoo-na-mant). A document (such as a deed or charter) evidencing the rights or privileges of a person, family, or corporation. — Also termed (archaically) miniment.

muniment house. Hist. A place (such as a room in a castle or cathedral) where titles, deeds, and other evidences of title are stored.

muniment of title. Documentary evidence of title, such as a deed or a judgment regarding the ownership of property. — Also termed common assurence. See CHAIN OF TITLE.

murder, n. The killing of a human being with malice aforethought. • At common law, the crime of murder was not subdivided, but many state statutes have adopted the degree structure outlined below (though the Model Penal Code has not). — murderer, vb. — murderous, adj. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Cf. MANSLAUGHTER.

“The word ‘murder’ has ... had a devious history. Its original sense is the particularly heinous crime of secret slaying. After the conquest it was observed that Normans were frequently found dead under mysterious circumstances, and so William I enacted that anyone who were found slain and the slayer were not caught, then the hundred should pay a fine; this fine is a murdrum. The practice soon grew up to taking inquests and if it were presented that the dead man was English, then the fine was not due. In 1267 it was enacted that accidental deaths should not give rise to murdrum, and finally in 1340 presentment of Englishry and murdrum were abolished. Henceforth the word slowly tends to get linked up with ‘malice aforesaid’ and so we get the classical formulae describing the crime of murder.” Theodore F.T. Plucknett, A Concise History of the Common Law 445 (5th ed. 1956).

deprieved-heart murder. A murder resulting from an act so reckless and careless of the safety of others that it demonstrates the perpetrator’s complete lack of regard for human life.

felony murder. Murder that occurs during the commission of a felony (esp. a serious one). — Also termed (in English law) constructive murder. See FELONY-MURDER RULE.

first-degree murder. Murder that is willful, deliberate, or premeditated, or that is committed during the course of another serious felony (often limited to rape, kidnapping, robbery, burglary, or arson). • All murder perpetrated by poisoning or by lying in wait is considered first-degree murder. All types of murder not involving willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing are usu. considered second-degree murder. — Also termed murder of the first degree; murder one.

murder by torture. A murder preceded by the intentional infliction of pain and suffering on the victim.

“In some jurisdictions, a murder by torture may constitute murder in the first degree. It occurs when a defendant intentionally inflicts pain and suffering upon his victim for the purpose of revenge, extortion, or persuasion.” 2 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton’s Criminal Law § 144, at 281 (15th ed. 1994).

murder of the first degree. See first-degree murder.

murder one. See first-degree murder.

second-degree murder. Murder that is not aggravated by any of the circumstances of first-degree murder. — Also termed murder of the second degree; murder two.

serial murder. A murder pattern in which one criminal selects several victims at random or because the victims share similar characteristics.

third-degree murder. A wrong that did not constitute murder at common law. • Only a few states have added to their murder statutes a third degree of murder. The other states classify all murders in two degrees. Manslaughter is not a degree of the crime of murder, but instead is a distinct offense.

willful murder. The unlawful and intentional killing of another without excuse or mitigating circumstances.

murdrum (mar-dram). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The secret killing of someone. 2. A fine against the tithing where the secret and unsold homicide took place.

“The readiness with which the Norman administrators seized on this Anglo-Saxon system was probably due to its effectiveness in collecting the murdrum, the murder fine. In ordinary cases of homicide, the whole district — except the kin of the suspect — would be zealous to bring the malefactor to justice. But we can readily see that, if the person killed was a Norman, every effort would be made to shield the murderer. The Norman rulers had recourse to the device ... of imposing a group responsibility. The tithing within which the murdered Norman was found was compelled to pay a fine or to discover and surrender the homicide. The word murd-rum is a word of uncertain etymology, and has given us our term for willful homicide." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 175–76 (1936).

3. Murder; specif., murder with malice aforethought. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

mutatio nominis (myoo-tay-shee-oh nom-o-nis). [Latin] Roman law. Change of name. • It was allowed provided that no prejudice was thereby caused to others. The related phrase mutato nomine (myoo-tay-toh nom-o-nee) means "the name having been changed."

mutatis mutandis (myoo-tay-tis myoo-tan-dis). [Latin] All necessary changes having been made; with the necessary changes <what was said regarding the first contract applies mutatis mutandis to all later ones>.

mutilation, n. 1. The act or an instance of rendering a document legally ineffective by subtracting or altering — but not completely destroying — an essential part through cutting, tearing, burning, or erasing. 2. Criminal law. The act of cutting off or permanently damaging a body part, esp. an essential one. — mutilate, vb. — mutilator, n. See MAYHEM.

mutiny (myoo-to-nee), n. 1. An insubordination or insurrection of armed forces, esp. sailors, against the authority of their commanders; a forcible revolt by members of the military against constituted authority, usu. their commanding officers.

"Both mutiny and failure to prevent, suppress, or report a mutiny are capital offenses.... The elements of mutiny are (1) creation of any violence or disturbance or acting in concert with others to refuse to obey orders (2) with the intent to usurp or override lawful military authority. One fails to prevent, suppress, or report mutiny when he does not take all reasonable means to overcome or report mutiny. Concert of action is not required for mutiny when the accused creates violence or disturbance." Charles A. Shanor & L. Lynn Hogue, Military Law in a Nutshell 197–98 (2d ed. 1996).

2. Loosely, any uprising against authority. — mutinous, adj.

Mutiny Act. Hist. An English statute enacted annually from 1689 to 1879 to provide for a standing army and to punish mutiny, desertion, and other military offenses. • It was merged into the Army Discipline and Regulation Act of 1879 (ch. 33).

mutual, adj. 1. Generally, directed by each toward the other or others; reciprocal. 2. (Of a condition, credit covenant, promise, etc.) reciprocally given, received, or exchanged. 3. (Of a right, etc.) belonging to two parties; common. — mutuality, n.

mutual account. See ACCOUNT.

mutual affray. See MUTUAL COMBAT.

mutual-agreement program. A prisoner-rehabilitation plan in which the prisoner agrees to take part in certain self-improvement activities to receive a definite parole date.

mutual assent. Agreement by both parties to a contract, usu. in the form of offer and acceptance. • In modern contract law, mutual assent is determined by an objective standard — that is, by the apparent intention of the parties as

mutual association. A mutually owned, cooperative savings and loan association, with the deposits being shares of the association. • A mutual association is not allowed to issue stock and is usu. regulated by the Office of Thrift Supervision, an agency of the U.S. Treasury Department. — See SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

mutual-benefit association. A fraternal or social organization that provides benefits for its members, usu. on an assessment basis.

“In the absence of ... statutory definition, the question of the extent to which mutual benefit, fraternal beneficiary, and like associations or societies, are within the meaning of the insurance laws must depend upon the terms of the different statutes, and the various circumstances of each particular case ... Broadly speaking, when a company, society, or association, either voluntary or incorporated, and whether known as a relief, benevolent, or benefit society, or by some similar name, contracts for a consideration to pay a sum of money upon the happening of a certain contingency, and the prevalent purpose and nature of the organization is that of insurance, it will be regarded as an insurance company and its contracts as insurance contracts ...” 2A George J. Couch, Couch on Insurance § 20:2, at 11 (rev. 2d ed. 1984).

mutual-benefit insurance. Benefits provided by a mutual-benefit association upon the occurrence of a loss.

mutual combat. A consensual fight on equal terms — arising from a moment of passion but not in self-defense — between two persons armed with deadly weapons. • A murder charge may be reduced to voluntary manslaughter if death occurred by mutual combat. — Also termed mutual affray. Cf. DUEL.

mutual company. See COMPANY.

mutual contract. See bilateral contract under CONTRACT.

mutual debts. See DEBT.

mutual demands. Countering demands between two parties at the same time .

mutual fund. 1. An investment company that invests its shareholders' money in a usu. diversified selection of securities. — Often shortened to fund. 2. Loosely, a share in such a company.

balanced fund. A mutual fund that maintains a balanced investment in stocks and bonds, investing a certain percentage in senior securities.

bond fund. A mutual fund that invests primarily in specialized corporate bonds or municipal bonds.

closed-end fund. A mutual fund having a fixed number of shares that are traded on a major securities exchange or an over-the-counter market.

common-stock fund. A mutual fund that invests only in common stock.

dual fund. A closed-end mutual fund that invests in two classes of stock — stock that pays dividends and stock that increases in investment value without dividends. • A dual fund combines characteristics of an income fund and a growth fund. — Also termed dual-purpose fund; leverage fund; split fund.

fully managed fund. A mutual fund whose policy allows reasonable discretion in trading securities in combination or quantity.

growth fund. A mutual fund that typically invests in well-established companies whose earnings are expected to increase. • Growth funds usu. pay small dividends but offer the potential for large share-price increases.

income fund. A mutual fund that typically invests in securities that consistently produce a steady income, such as bonds or dividend-paying stocks.

index fund. A mutual fund that invests in the stock of companies constituting a specific market index, such as Standard & Poor's 500 stocks, and thereby tracks the stock average.

leverage fund. See dual fund.

load fund. A mutual fund that charges a commission, usu. ranging from 4 to 9%, either when shares are purchased (a front-end load) or when they are redeemed (a back-end load).

money-market fund. A mutual fund that invests in low-risk government securities and short-term notes.

no-load fund. A mutual fund that does not charge any sales commission (although it may charge fees to cover operating costs).

open-end fund. A mutual fund that continually offers new shares and buys back existing shares on demand. • An open-end fund will continue to grow as more shareholders invest because it does not have a fixed number of shares outstanding.
performance fund. A mutual fund characterized by an aggressive purchase of stocks expected to show near-term growth.

split fund. See dual fund.

utility fund. A mutual fund that invests only in public-utility securities.

value fund. A mutual fund that invests in stocks that its manager believes to be priced below their true market value.

vulture fund. An investment company that purchases bankrupt or insolvent companies to reorganize them in hopes of reselling them at a profit.

mutual insurance. See insurance.

mutual insurance company. An insurer whose policyholders are its owners, as opposed to a stock insurance company owned by outside shareholders. Cf. stock insurance company.

mutuality. The state of sharing or exchanging something; a reciprocation; an interchange <mutuality of obligation>.

mutuality doctrine. The collateral-estoppel requirement that, to bar a party from relitigating an issue determined against that party in an earlier action, both parties must have been in privy with one another in the earlier proceeding.

mutuality of assent. See meetings of the minds.

mutuality of contract. See mutuality of obligation.

mutuality of debts. Bankruptcy. For purposes of setoff, the condition in which debts are owed between parties acting in the same capacity, even though the debts are not of the same character and did not arise out of the same transaction.

mutuality of estoppel. The collateral-estoppel principle that a judgment is not conclusively in favor of someone unless the opposite decision would also be conclusively against that person.

mutuality of obligation. The agreement of both parties to a contract to be bound in some way. — Also termed mutuality of contract. See mutual assent.

"The doctrine of mutuality of obligation is commonly expressed in the phrase that in a bilateral contract 'both parties must be bound or neither is bound.' But this phrase is over-generalization because the doctrine is not one of mutuality of obligation but rather one of mutuality of consideration. Phrasing the rule in terms of mutuality of obligation rather than in terms of consideration has led to so-called exceptions and judicial circumventions.... It has been suggested that the term 'mutuality of obligation' should be abandoned and we must agree in the light of the confusion that this term has engendered." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4–12, at 226 (3d ed. 1987).

mutuality of remedy. The availability of a remedy, esp. equitable relief, to both parties to a transaction, usu. required before either party can be granted specific performance. See specific performance.

mutual mistake. See mistake.

mutual rescission. See rescission (2).

mutual savings bank. See bank.

mutual testaments. See mutual wills under will.

mutual will. See will.

mutuant (myoo-choo-ant). The provider of property in a mutuum. See mutuum.

mutuari (myoo-choo-air-i), vb. [Latin] To borrow.

mutuarey (myoo-choo-er-ee). The recipient of property in a mutuum. See mutuum.

mutuatus (myoo-choo-ay-tas), n. [Latin] A borrowing; a loan of money.

mutuum (myoo-choo-am). 1. A transaction (sometimes referred to as a bailment) in which goods are delivered, but instead of being returned, are replaced by other goods of the same kind. • At common law such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, and not as a bailment, because the particular goods are not returned. 2. Roman law. A loan in which the borrower is entitled to consume the goods lent and return an equivalent amount. • This was one of three types of contract for permissive use, the other two being commodatum (kom-a-day-tom) and locatio conductio (loh-kay-shee-oh kan-dak-shee-oh). mysterious disappearance. A loss of property under unknown or baffling circumstances that are difficult to understand or explain. • The term is used in insurance policies covering theft.

"Under a policy insuring against loss of property by 'mysterious disappearance' recovery is generally allowed where the article disappears from the place the insured left it, while recovery is ordinarily disallowed where the insured has no recollection of when he last had possession of the article and cannot say when or from what place it disappeared. Thus the addition of the words 'mysterious disappearance' to a theft policy does not transform it to an 'all loss' policy covering lost or mislaid articles, but it remains a theft policy." 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 501, at 575–76 (1982).

narr-and-cognovit law (nahr-and-kahng-noh-vit). [Latin narratio “declaration” and cognovit “the person has conceded”] Hist. A law providing that a plaintiff will be granted judgment on a note through an attorney’s confession that the amount shown on the note, together with interest and costs, constitutes a legal and just claim. Cf. COGNOVIT JUDGMENT; confession of judgment under JUDGMENT.

narratio (na-ray-shee-oh), n. [Latin “narrative”] Hist. A declaration, complaint, or petition in which the plaintiff sets out the facts of a case; an oral narrative by the plaintiff of the facts and legal arguments on which the claim is based. • The term has also been called the “conte” or “tale.” — Abbrev. narr.

"[T]he making of the count, in Latin the narratio, was the very centre of the legal process. We do not know how it came about that the litigant was allowed to speak through the mouth of another, though it has been suggested that it was not to prevent mistakes being made but to prevent them being fatal. Certainly the litigant could disavow what was said on his behalf; and perhaps it was only 'said' by him when he formally adopted it. If this is right, our modern barrister began as one who could harmlessly blunder.” S.P.C. Milson, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 28 (1969).

narrative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

narrator (na-ray-tor or na-ray-tar), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A pleader or counter; a person who prepares pleadings (i.e., narrs). • For example, a serjeant-at-law was also known as serviens narrator. Pl. narratores (na-rra-toor-eez).

“The Latin narrator and its French equivalent contouren became technical terms. If an English term was in use, it was perhaps forspoke.” — 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 215 n.1 (2d ed. 1898).

narrow-channel rule. The navigational requirement that a vessel traveling down a slim fairway must keep as near to the fairway wall on the vessel’s starboard side as is safe and practicable. 33 USCA § 2009(a)(i).

narrowly tailored, adj. (Of a content-neutral restriction on the time, place, or manner of speech in a designated public forum) being only as broad as is reasonably necessary to promote a substantial governmental interest that would be achieved less effectively without the restriction; no broader than absolutely necessary. See designated public forum under PUBLIC FORUM.

narrow sea. (often pl.) A sea running between two coasts that are close to each other. • The English Channel, for example, is a narrow sea.

nasceturus (nas-ə-t(y)oor-əs or -t(y)or-əs), n. [fr. Latin nascor “to be born”] Roman law. An unborn child.

NASD. abbr. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SECURITIES DEALERS.

NASDAQ (naz-dak). abbr. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SECURITIES DEALERS AUTOMATED QUOTATION SYSTEM.

natale (na-tay-lee), n. [Latin “of or belonging to birth”] Hist. The status a person acquires by birth. • For example, if one or both parents of a child were serfs, the child was generally regarded as a serf, and a child born free rarely became a serf. See NATIVUS.

nati et nascituri (nay-ti et nas-ə-t(y)oor-i or -t(y)or-i), n. pl. [Latin “born and to be born”] Hist. A person’s heirs, near and remote.

nation, n. 1. A large group of people having a common origin, language, and tradition and usu. constituting a political entity. • When a nation is coincident with a state, the term nation-state is often used. — Also termed nationality.

“The nearest we can get to a definition is to say that a nation is a group of people bound together by common history, common sentiment and traditions, and, usually (though not always, as, for example, Belgium or Switzerland) by common heritage. A state, on the other hand, is a society of men united under one government. These two forms of society are not necessarily coincident. A single nation may be divided into several states, and conversely a single state may comprise several nations or parts of nations.” — John Salmond, Jurisprudence 136 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. A community of people inhabiting a defined territory and organized under an independent government; a sovereign political state. Cf. STATE.

national, adj. 1. Of or relating to a nation <national anthem>. 2. Nationwide in scope <national emergency>.

national, n. 1. A member of a nation. 2. A person owing permanent allegiance to and under the protection of a state. 8 USCA § 1101(a)(21).

National Aeronautics and Space Act. A 1958 federal statute that created the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), a civilian agency of the federal government whose functions include conducting space research, improving aeronautical travel, building manned and unmanned space vehicles, developing operational space programs, and engaging in other space activities devoted to peaceful purposes for the benefit of all humankind. 42 USCA §§ 2451–2484.

national association. See national bank under BANK.

National Association of Realtors. An association of real-estate brokers and agents promoting education, professional standards, and modernization in areas of real estate such as brokerage, appraisal, and property management. — Abbr. NAR.

National Association of Securities Dealers. A group of brokers and dealers empowered by the SEC to regulate the over-the-counter securities market. — Abbr. NASD.

National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotation system. A computerized system for recording transactions and displaying price quotations for a group of actively traded securities on the over-the-counter market. — Abbr. NASDAQ.

national bank. See BANK.

National Bar Association. An organization comprised primarily of African–American members of the legal profession, which was founded in 1925 and which seeks to promote education, professionalism, and the protection of civil rights. — Abbr. NBA.

National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. An organization that drafts and proposes statutes for adoption by individual states, with the goal of making the laws on various subjects uniform among the states. • Founded in 1892 and composed of representatives from all 50 states, the Conference has drafted more than 200 uniform laws, including the Uniform Commercial Code. — Abbr. NCCUSL. — Also termed Uniform Law Commissioners. See UNIFORM ACT; MODEL ACT.

national currency. Money (both notes and coins) approved by a national government and placed in circulation as a medium of exchange. See LEGAL TENDER.

National Daily Quotation Service. See PINK SHEET.

national debt. The total financial obligation of the federal government, including such instruments as Treasury bills, notes, and bonds, as well as foreign debt.

national defense. 1. All measures taken by a nation to protect itself against its enemies. • A nation’s protection of its collective ideals and values is included in the concept of national defense. 2. A nation’s military establishment.

national emergency. A state of national crisis or a situation requiring immediate and extraordinary national action.

National Environmental Policy Act. A 1969 federal statute establishing U.S. environmental policy. • The statute requires federal agencies to submit an environmental-impact statement with every proposal for a program or law that would affect the environment. 42 USCA§§ 4321–4347 — Abbr. NEPA. See ENVIRONMENTAL-IMPACT STATEMENT.

national government. The government of an entire country, as distinguished from that of a province, state, subdivision, or territory of the country and as distinguished from an international organization.

National Guard. The U.S. militia, which is maintained as a reserve for the U.S. Army and Air Force. • Its members are volunteers, recruited and trained on a statewide basis and equipped by the federal government. A state may request the National Guard’s assistance in quelling disturbances, and the federal government may order the National Guard into active service in times of war or other national emergency. See MILITIA.

nationality. 1. NATION (1). 2. The relationship between a citizen of a nation and the nation itself, customarily involving allegiance by the citizen and protection by the state; membership in a nation. 3. The formal relationship between a ship and the nation under whose flag the ship sails. See FLAG STATE.

"'Nationality' is a term which has long been used to define the legal relationship between a state and a ship which is authorized by the state to fly its flag. ... Discussions in the International Law Commission in 1951 reflected concern that the use of the term 'nationality' in reference to ships was misleading as it implied similarity to the term's use in defining the legal relationship between a state and its citizen. Nonetheless, the term has continued to be the one most often employed in describing the relationship between a ship and its flag state. It is important to realize, however, that in spite of their common names, the legal relationship ascribed to the nationality of ships does differ from that arising from the nationality of natural or juridical persons." Louis B. Sohn & Kristen Gustafson, The Law of the Sea in a Nutshell 1–2 (1984).

Nationality Act. See IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT.

nationalization, n. 1. The act of bringing an industry under governmental control or ownership. 2. The act of giving a person the status of a citizen. See NATURALIZATION.

nationalize, vb. 1. To bring (an industry) under governmental control or ownership. 2. To give (a person) the status of a citizen; NATURALIZE.

National Labor Relations Act. A federal statute regulating the relations between employers and employees and establishing the National Labor Relations Board. 29 USCA §§ 151–169. •
The statute is also known as the Wagner Act of 1935. It was amended by the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947 and the Landrum-Griffin Act of 1959. — Also termed Wagner Act. — Abbr. NLRA.

National Labor Relations Board. A federal agency (created by the National Labor Relations Act) that regulates employer-employee relations by establishing collective bargaining, conducting union elections, and prohibiting unfair labor practices. 29 USCA § 153. — Abbr. NLRB. — Often shortened to Labor Relations Board.

National Lawyers Guild. An association of lawyers, law students, and legal workers dedicated to promoting a left-wing political and social agenda. • Founded in 1937, it now comprises some 4,000 members. Cf. FEDERALIST SOCIETY.

National Mediation Board. A federal agency that, among other things, mediates disputes between rail and air carriers and their employees over wages and working conditions. • It was created by the Railway Labor Act. 45 USCA §§ 154–163. — Abbr. NMB.

national origin. The country in which a person was born, or from which the person’s ancestors came. • This term is used in several antidiscrimination statutes, including Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits discrimination because of an individual’s “race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.” 42 USCA § 2000e–2.

National Priorities List. Environmental law. The Environmental Protection Agency’s list of the most serious uncontrolled or abandoned hazardous-waste sites that are identified for possible long-term remediation as Superfund sites. 40 CFR § 35.6015. — Abbr. NPL.

National Quotation Bureau. A company that publishes daily price quotations (pink sheets) of over-the-counter securities.

National Reporter System. A series of lawbooks, published by the West Group, containing every published decision of the federal and state courts in the United States. • For federal courts, the system includes the Supreme Court Reporter, Federal Reporter, Federal Claims Reporter, Federal Supplement, Federal Rules Decisions, Bankruptcy Reporter, Military Justice Reporter, and Veterans Appeals Reporter. For state courts, the system includes the Atlantic Reporter, New York Supplement, North Eastern Reporter, North Western Reporter, Pacific Reporter, South Eastern Reporter, Southern Reporter, and South Western Reporter.

National Response Center. Environmental law. A nationwide communication center located in Washington, D.C., responsible for receiving, and relaying to appropriate federal officials, all notices of oil discharges and other releases of hazardous substances. 40 CFR § 310.11.

national-security privilege. See state-secrets privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

national-service life insurance. A policy, issuable to a person in active U.S. military service on or after October 8, 1940, that provides life insurance at favorable rates. • This insurance was established by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, and is regulated by the Administrator of Veterans Affairs. 38 USCA §§ 1901–1929.

national synod. See SYNOD.

National Transportation Safety Board. An independent government agency that investigates some transportation accidents, conducts safety studies, hears and rules on licensing appeals, and proposes safety guidelines and improved safety standards for the transportation industry. 49 USCA §§ 1101–1155. — Abbr. NTSB.

national-treatment clause. A provision contained in some treaties, usu. commercial ones, according foreigners the same rights, in certain respects, as those accorded to nationals.

national union. See UNION.

native, n. 1. A person who is a citizen of a particular place, region, or nation by virtue of having been born there. 2. A person whose national origin derives from having been born within a particular place. 3. Loosely, a person born abroad whose parents are citizens of the nation and are not permanently residing abroad. 4. Loosely, a person or thing belonging to a group indigenous to a particular place. • The term Native American is sometimes shortened to native.



navigable airspace. The area above the legally established minimum flight altitudes, including the area needed to ensure safe takeoffs and landings of aircraft. 49 USCA § 40102(a)(30).

navigable sea. Int'l law. The ocean waters divided into three zones of control among nations: (1) the inland waters, which are near a nation's shores and over which a nation has complete sovereignty; (2) territorial waters, which are measured from the seaward edge of the inland waters, over which a nation has extensive control but over which innocent parties must be allowed to travel to other nations; and (3) the high seas, which are international waters not subject to the domain of any single nation.

navigable water. 1. At early common law, any body of water affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. • This test was first adopted in England because most of England's in-fact navigable waters are influenced by the tide, unlike the large inland rivers that are capable of supporting commerce in the United States.

"[N]avigable waters in English admiralty law generally were defined as those waters subject to the ebb and flow of the tide. This limitation was acceptable for an American nation composed of states along the Atlantic coast, where inland streams generally were not used for commerce beyond the reach of tidal fluctuations. However, the expansion of the American nation westward resulted in the use for water-borne commerce of a number of important streams — most notably the Mississippi River — to carry goods and people far beyond the effect of tide waters." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 18 (2d ed. 1988).

2. (usu. pl.) A body of water that is used, or typically can be used, as a highway for commerce with ordinary modes of trade and travel on water. • Under the Commerce Clause, Congress has broad jurisdiction over all navigable waters in the United States.

navigable water of the United States. Navigable water that alone — or in combination with other waters — forms a continuous highway for commerce with other states or foreign countries.

navigate, vb. 1. To travel or sail in a vessel on water <to navigate from New York to Bermuda>. 2. To steer <to navigate the plane>. 3. To make way through, on, or about something <the plaintiff was unable to navigate the stairs in the dark>.

navigation. 1. The act of sailing vessels on water. 2. The process and business of directing the course of a vessel from one place to another. See RULES OF NAVIGATION.

navigation servitude. 1. An easement allowing the federal government to regulate commerce on navigable water without having to pay compensation for interference with private ownership rights. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

"The navigation servitude, because of its link to navigable waters and the protection of navigation, is often confused with the public trust doctrine. The navigation servitude, however, is a paramount federal servitude on navigable waters based on the commerce power rather than on ownership or trust responsibilities." Donna R. Christie, Coastal and Ocean Management Law in a Nutshell 34 (1994).

2. An easement, based on the state police power or public trust doctrine, that allows a state to regulate commerce on navigable water and provide limited compensation for interference with private ownership rights. • The state servitude is inferior to the federal servitude.

navy. 1. A fleet of ships. 2. The military sea force of a country, including its collective ships and its corps of officers and enlisted personnel; esp. (usu. cap.), the division of the U.S. armed services responsible primarily for seagoing forces. • The U.S. Constitution gives Congress the power to establish a navy and make laws governing the naval forces. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 13–14.

Navy Department. A division of the Department of Defense that oversees the operation and efficiency of the Navy, including the Marine Corps component and the U.S. Coast Guard when operating as a naval service. • Established in 1798, the Department is headed by the Secretary of the Navy, who is appointed by the President and reports to the Secretary of Defense.

nazeranna (naz-a-ran-a). Hist. The amount that a person pays to the government as an acknowledgment for public office or a grant of public lands.

N.B. abbr. [Latin nota bene] Note well; take notice — used in documents to call attention to something important.

NBA. abbr. NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION.
NCCUSL (nə-kˈyoo-səl), abbr. NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF COMMISSIONERS ON UNIFORM STATE LAWS.

n.c.d. abbr. NEMINE CONTRA DICENTE.

ne admissas (nee ad-mit-as), n. [Latin “that you admit not”] Eccles. law. A writ prohibiting a bishop, usu. in a quare impedit action, from admitting the other party’s clerk to be a parson of a church. ● After a party institutes a quare impedit action to enforce a right to propose a clerk to the position of parson of a vacant church (right of advowson), that party can resort to the ne admissas writ if it is believed that the bishop will admit another person’s proposed clerk before the quare impedit action concludes. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

near, adv. 1. Close to; not far away, as a measure of distance <the neighbors’ houses are near one another>. 2. Almost; close in degree . 3. Closely tied by blood <my brother is a near relative>. 4. Familiar; intimate .

near money. See current asset under ASSET.

neat, adj. 1. Clean; pure. 2. Free from extraneous matter.

neat weight. See net weight under WEIGHT.

ne baila pas (nə bā-lə pah), n. [Law French “he or she did not deliver”] In an action for detinue, a defendant’s plea denying the receipt of the property in question.

necation (ni-kā-shon), n. [fr. Latin necare “to kill”] Hist. The act of killing.

necessaries. 1. Things that are indispensable to living <an infant’s necessaries include food, shelter, and clothing>. — Also termed necessaries of life. 2. Things that are essential to maintaining the lifestyle to which one is accustomed . ● The term includes whatever is reasonably needed for subsistence, health, comfort, and education, considering the person’s age, station in life, and medical condition, but it excludes (1) anything purely ornamental, (2) anything solely for pleasure, (3) what the person is already supplied with, (4) anything that concerns someone’s estate or business as opposed to personal needs, and (5) borrowed money.

“Things may be of a useful character, but the quality or quantity supplied may take them out of the character of necessaries. Elementary textbooks might be a necessary to a student of law, but not a rare edition of ‘Littleton’s Tenures,’ or eight or ten copies of ‘Stephen’s Commentaries.’ Necessaries also vary according to the station in life of the infant or his peculiar circumstances at the time. The quality of clothing suitable to an Eton boy would be unnecessary for a telegraph clerk; the medical attendance and diet required by an invalid would be unnecessary to one in ordinary health. It does not follow therefore that because a thing is of a useful class, a judge is bound to allow a jury to say whether or no it is a necessary.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 172 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

necessary and proper, adj. Being appropriate and well adapted to fulfilling an objective.

Necessary and Proper Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution permitting Congress to make laws “necessary and proper” for the execution of its enumerated powers. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18. ● The Supreme Court has broadly interpreted this clause to grant Congress the implied power to enact any law reasonably designed to achieve an express constitutional power. McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819). — Also termed Basket Clause; Coefficient Clause; Elastic Clause; Sweeping Clause.

necessary damages. See general damages under DAMAGES.

necessary deposit. See DEPOSIT (5).

necessary diligence. See DILIGENCE.

necessary domicile. See DOMICILE.

necessary implication. See IMPLICATION.

necessary improvement. See IMPROVEMENT. necessary inference. A conclusion that is unavoidable if the premise on which it is based is taken to be true.

necessary intromission. See INTROMISSION.

necessary party. See PARTY (2).

necessary repair. An improvement to property that is both needed to prevent deterioration and proper under the circumstances.

necessary way. See easement by necessity under EASEMENT.

necessitas (na-ses-i-tas), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Necessity. 2. A force or influence that compels an unwilling person to act. • The term refers to a lack of free will to do a legal act, as opposed to libera voluntas (“free will”).

necessitas culpabilis (na-ses-i-tas kal-pay-balis). [Latin “culpable necessity”] Hist. An unfortunate necessity that, while essentially excusing the act done under its compulsion, does not necessarily relieve the actor from blame.

“And as to the necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo lord Bacon entitles it necessitas culpabilis . . . . For the law intends that the quarrel or assault arose from some unknown wrong . . . . and since in quarrels both parties may be, and usually are, in some fault; and it scarce can be tried who was originally in the wrong; the law will not hold the survivor entirely guiltless. But it is clear, in the other case, that where I kill a thief that breaks into my house, the original default can never be upon my side.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 186-87 (1769).

necessities. 1. Indispensable things of any kind. 2. NECESSARIES.

necessities of life. See NECESSARIES (1).

necessitous, adj. Living in a state of extreme want; hard up.

necessitous circumstances. The situation of one who is very poor; extreme want.

necessitudo (na-ses-i-tlyoo-doh), n. [Latin “need”] Hist. 1. An obligation. 2. A close connection or relationship between persons, such as a family relationship.

necessity. 1. Criminal law. A justification defense for a person who acts in an emergency that he or she did not create and who commits a harm that is less severe than the harm that would have occurred but for the person’s actions. • For example, a mountain climber lost in a blizzard can assert necessity as a defense to theft of food and blankets from another’s cabin. — Also termed choice of evils; duress of circumstances. 2. Torts. A privilege that may relieve a person from liability for trespass or conversion if that person, having no alternative, harms another’s property in an effort to protect life or health.

“In some cases even damage intentionally done may not involve the defendant in liability when he is acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil. The precise limits of the defence are not clear, for it has affinities with certain other defences, such as act of God, self-help, duress, or inevitable accident. It is distinguishable from self-defence on the ground that this presupposes that the plaintiff is prima facie a wrongdoer: the defence of necessity contemplates the infliction of harm on an innocent plaintiff. The defence, if it exists, enables a defendant to escape liability for the intentional interference with the security of another’s person or property on the ground that the acts complained of were necessary to prevent greater damage to the community or to another or to the defendant himself, or to their or his property. The use of the term necessity serves to conceal the fact that the defendant always has a choice between two evils. This is what distinguishes the defence of necessity from that of impossibility.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmon on the Law of Torts 493 (17th ed. 1977).

moral necessity. A necessity arising from a duty incumbent on a person to act in a particular way.

physical necessity. A necessity involving an actual, tangible force that compels a person to act in a particular way.

private necessity. Torts. A necessity that involves only the defendant’s personal interest and thus provides only a limited privilege. • For example, if the defendant harms the plaintiff’s dock by keeping a boat moored to the dock during a hurricane, the defendant can assert private necessity but must compensate the plaintiff for the dock’s damage.

public necessity. Torts. A necessity that involves the public interest and thus completely excuses the defendant’s liability. • For example, if the defendant destroys the plaintiff’s house to stop the spread of a fire that threatens the town, the defendant can assert public necessity.

necessity defense. See JUSTIFICATION (2).

neck verse. Hist. A verse, usu. consisting of the opening verse of Psalm 51 (Miserere mei, Deus “Have mercy on me, O God”), which was used as a literacy test for an accused who claimed benefit of clergy. • An accused who read the passage satisfactorily would not receive the maximum sentence (the person’s neck would be saved). Although judges could assign any passage, they usu. chose Psalm 51, so that for many years criminals memorized this verse and pretended to read it. Still, the records show that many accused persons failed the test. The reading of the neck verse was abolished in 1707. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

"During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the judges' attitudes to benefit of clergy changed completely, and they came to see it as a regular means of escape from the mandatory death penalty. Physical appearance was disregarded, and reading became the sole test of clerical status. When a man was convicted of a felony, he would fall on his knees and 'pray the book'; he would then be tendered a passage from the psalter, known as the neck-verse, and if he could read or recite it satisfactorily his clergy was taken to be proved ... Strictly speaking, the decision whether the convict read 'as a clerk' was for the ordinary; but he was subject to the control of the judges, and could be fined for refusing to accept someone. By the end of the sixteenth century as many as half of all men convicted of felony were recorded as having successfully claimed benefit of clergy." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 587 (3d ed. 1990).

ne disturbas pas (nə di-stər-bə pah), n. [Law French "did not disturb"] Eccles. law. A defendant's general denial (plea of the general issue) in a quare impedit action. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

ne dona pas (nə dəh-na pah), n. [Law French "did not give"] Hist. A defendant's general denial (plea of the general issue) in a formedon action, alleging that the plaintiff was given the right to land under a gift of tail. — Also termed non dedit. See FORMEDON.

nee (nay), adj. [French] (Of a woman) born. • This term is sometimes used after a married woman's name to indicate her maiden name <Mrs. Robert Jones nee Thatcher>. — Also spelled née.

need, n. 1. The lack of something important; a requirement. 2. Indigence. — need, vb.

needy, adj. 1. Needful; necessary. 2. Indigent; very poor. • Needy implies a more permanent and less urgent condition than necessary. See NECESSITOUS.

ne exeat republica (nə ek-see-at [or ek-see-at] ri-pah-li-kah), n. [Latin "let him not go out of the republic"] 1. A writ restraining a person from leaving the republic. 2. A chancer's writ ordering the person to whom it is addressed not to leave the jurisdiction of the court or the state. • Ne exeat writes — no longer widely used — are usu. issued to ensure the satisfaction of a claim against the defendant. — Often shortened to ne exeat. — Also termed writ of ne exeat; ne exeat regno.

"The district courts of the United States ... shall have such jurisdiction to make and issue in civil actions, writs and orders of injunction, and of ne exeat republica, orders appointing receivers, and such other orders and processes ... as may be necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the internal revenue laws." IRC (26 USCA) § 7402(a).

"Such a writ [ne exeat] might be issued upon the commencement of the suit for equitable relief, during the pendency of the suit, or upon issuance of the final decree to secure its enforcement. But such writ related primarily to the person of the defendant and issued only upon satisfactory proof that he planned or intended to remove himself beyond the court's jurisdiction so that he might escape obedience to such command as might be or had been laid upon him. The writ has been frequently termed an equitable bail. It involves taking and keeping the defendant in custody until he gives bail or bond in a designated amount, conditioned upon his keeping himself amenable to the effective processes of the court." William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity 21 (2d ed. 1956).

nefas (nə-fəs), n. [Latin ne "not" + fas "right"] 1. Roman law. Something that the gods forbid. 2. Roman law. Something against the law or custom. 3. Hist. Something that is wicked.

nepastus (ni-fəs-tas), n. [Latin ne "not" + fas tus "lawful for public business"] Roman law. A day when it is unlawful to open the courts, administer justice, or hold public assemblies. • The priests in charge of supervising the laws and religious observances established an official calendar, on which certain days, marked "nefas," were to be devoted to religious or public ceremonies. — Also termed dies nefasti. Cf. dies fasti under DIES.

negate, vb. 1. To deny. 2. To nullify; to render ineffective.

negative, adj. 1. Of or relating to something bad; not positive . 2. Of or relating to refusal of consent; not affirmative .

negative, n. 1. A word or phrase of denial or refusal <"no" and "not" are negatives>. 2. A word expressing the opposite of the positive <two negatives and one positive>. 3. The original plate of a photograph, on which light and shadows are the opposite of the positive images later created and printed <not only the pictures, but also the negatives, were required to be returned. > 4. Archaic. The power of veto <the king’s negative has eroded>.

negative, vb. To negate; to deny, nullify, or render ineffective <the jury negatived fraud>.

negative act. See act (2).

negative evidence. See evidence.

negative externality. See externality.

negative misprision. See misprision.

negative plea. See plea (3).

negative-pledge clause. 1. A provision requiring a borrower, who borrows funds without giving security, to refrain from giving future lenders any security without the consent of the first lender. 2. A provision, usu. in a bond indenture, stating that the issuing entity will not pledge its assets if it will result in less security to the bondholders under the indenture agreement.

negative pregnant. A denial implying its affirmative opposite by seeming to deny only a qualification of the allegation and not the allegation itself. • An example is the statement, “I didn’t steal the money last Tuesday,” the implication being that the theft might have happened on another day. — Also termed negative pregnant with an affirmative. Cf. affirmative pregnant.

neglect, n. The omission of proper attention to a person or thing, whether inadvertent, negligent, or willful; the act or condition of disregarding. — neglect, vb. — neglectful, adj.

"'Neglect' is not the same thing as 'negligence'. In the present connection the word 'neglect' indicates, as a purely objective fact, that a person has not done that which it was his duty to do; it does not indicate the reason for this failure. 'Negligence,' on the other hand, is a subjective state of mind, and it indicates a particular reason why the man has failed to do his duty, namely because he has not kept the performance of the duty in his mind as he ought to have done. A man can 'neglect' his duty either intentionally or negligently." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 106 n.1 (16th ed. 1982).

culpable neglect. Censurable or blameworthy neglect; neglect that is less than gross carelessness but more than the failure to use ordinary care.

excusable neglect. A failure — which the law will excuse — to take some proper step at the proper time (esp. in neglecting to answer a lawsuit) not because of the party’s own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the court’s process, but because of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident or because of reliance on the care and vigilance of the party’s counsel or on a promise made by the adverse party.

inexcusable neglect. Unjustifiable neglect; neglect that implies more than unintentional inadvertence. • A finding of inexcusable neglect in, for example, failing to file an answer to a complaint will prevent the setting aside of a default judgment.

neglect hearing. A judicial hearing involving alleged child abuse or some other situation in which a child has not been properly cared for. ● Depending on the jurisdiction, this type of hearing might take place in various types of courts, such as a family court, a juvenile court, a probate court, or a district court.

negligence, n. 1. The failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation; any conduct that falls below the legal standard established to protect others against unreasonable risk of harm, except for conduct that is intentionally, wantonly, or willfully disregarded of others’ rights. ● The term denotes culpable carelessness. The Roman-law equivalents are culpa and negligentia, as contrasted with dolus (wrongful intention). — Also termed actionable negligence; ordinary negligence; simple negligence. 2. A tort grounded in this failure, usu. expressed in terms of the following elements: duty, breach of duty, causation, and damages.

"Negligence in law ranges from inadvertence that is hardly more than accidental to sinful disregard of the safety of others." Patrick Dévin, The Enforcement of Morals 36 (1968).

"During the first half of the nineteenth century, negligence began to gain recognition as a separate and independent basis of tort liability. Its rise coincided in a marked degree with the Industrial Revolution; and it very probably was stimulated by the rapid increase in the number of accidents caused by industrial machinery, and in particular by the invention of railways. It was greatly encouraged by the disintegration of the old forms of action, and the disappearance of the distinction between direct and indirect injuries, found in trespass and case . . . . Intentional injuries, whether direct or indirect, began to be grouped as a distinct field of liability, and negligence remained as the main basis for unintended torts. Negligence thus developed into the dominant cause of action for accidental injury in this nation today." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 28, at 161 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

"Negligence is a matter or risk — that is to say, of recognizable danger of injury . . . . In most instances, it is caused by heedlessness or inadvertence, by which the negligent party is unaware of the results which may follow from his act. But is may also arise where the negligent party has considered the possible consequences carefully, and has exercised his own best judgment. The almost universal use of the phrase ‘due care’ to describe conduct which is not negligent should not obscure the fact that the essence of negligence is not necessarily the absence of solicitude for those who may be adversely affected by one’s actions but is instead behavior which should be recognized as involving unreasonable danger to others." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 31, at 169 (5th ed. 1984).

active negligence. Negligence resulting from an affirmative or positive act, such as driving through a barrier. Cf. passive negligence.

adventent negligence. Negligence in which the actor is aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating; RECKLESSNESS. — Also termed willful negligence.

joint negligence. The negligence of two or more persons acting together to cause an accident. Cf. concurrent negligence.

legal negligence. See negligence per se.

negligence in law. Failure to observe a duty imposed by law. See negligence per se; legal negligence.

negligence per se. Negligence established as a matter of law, so that breach of the duty is not a jury question. • Negligence per se usu. arises from a statutory violation. — Also termed legal negligence.

ordinary negligence. Lack of ordinary diligence; the failure to use ordinary care. • The term is most commonly used to differentiate between negligence and gross negligence.

passive negligence. Negligence resulting from a person’s failure or omission in acting, such as failing to remove hazardous conditions from public property. Cf. active negligence.

professional negligence. See MALPRACTICE.

reckless negligence. See gross negligence.

simple negligence. See inadvertent negligence.

slight negligence. The failure to exercise the great care of an extraordinarily prudent person, resulting in liability in special circumstances (esp. those involving bailments or carriers) in which lack of ordinary care would not result in liability; lack of great diligence.

subsequent negligence. The negligence of the defendant when, after the defendant’s initial negligence and the plaintiff’s contributory negligence, the defendant discovers — or should have discovered — that the plaintiff was in a position of danger and fails to exercise due care in preventing the plaintiff’s injuries. — Also termed supervening negligence. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

tax negligence. Negligence arising out of the disregard of tax-payment laws, for which the Internal Revenue Service may impose a penalty — 5% of the amount underpaid. IRC (26 USCA) § 6651(a).

wanton negligence. See gross negligence.

willful and wanton negligence. See gross negligence.

willful negligence. See advertent negligence.

negligence rule. Commercial law. The principle that if a party’s negligence contributes to an unauthorized signing or a material alteration in a negotiable instrument, that party is estopped from raising this issue against later negligence rule

parties who transfer or pay the instrument in good faith. • Examples of negligence include leaving blanks or spaces on the amount line of the instrument, erroneously mailing the instrument to a person with the same name as the payee, and failing to follow internal procedures designed to prevent forgeries.

negligent, adj. Characterized by a person’s failure to exercise the degree of care that someone of ordinary prudence would have exercised in the same circumstance. • The negligent driver went through the stop sign, <negligent construction caused the bridge to collapse>. Negligently, adv.

“[A] careful consideration is needed of the differences between the meaning of expressions like ‘inadvertently’ and ‘while his mind was a blank’ on the one hand, and ‘negligently’ on the other. In ordinary English, and also in lawyers’ English, when harm has resulted from someone’s negligence, if we say of that person that he has acted negligently we are not thereby merely describing the frame of mind in which he acted. ‘He negligently broke a saucer’ is not the same kind of expression as ‘he inadvertently broke a saucer’. The point of the adverb ‘inadvertently’ is merely to inform us of the agent’s psychological state, whereas if we say ‘He broke it negligently’ we are not merely adding to this an element of blame or reproach, but something quite specific, viz. we are referring to the fact that the agent failed to comply with a standard of conduct with which any ordinary reasonable man could and would have complied: a standard requiring him to take precautions against harm. The word ‘negligently’, both in legal and in non-legal contexts, makes an essential reference to an omission to do what is thus required: it is not a flinty descriptive psychological expression like ‘his mind was a blank’.” H.L.A. Hart, “Negligence, Mens Rea and Criminal Responsibility.” in Punishment and Responsibility 136, 147-48 (1968).

negligent entrustment. The act of leaving a dangerous article (such as a gun or car) with a person who the lender knows, or should know, is likely to use it in an unreasonably risky manner.

negligent escape. See ESCAPE (3).

negligent homicide. See HOMICIDE.

negligentia (neg-li-jen-she-a), n. [Latin] Roman law. Carelessness; inattentive omission. • Negligentia can be of varying degrees, which may or may not result in actionable liability. See CULPA. Cf. DILIGENTIA.

“In the sources negligentia is tantamount to culpa, and similarly graduated (magna, lata negligentia). Precision in terminology is no more to be found here than in the field of culpa. One text declares... ‘gross negligence (magna negligentia) is culpa, magna culpa is dolus’; another says: ‘gross negligence (dissoluta negligentia) is near to dolus (prope dolum).’ In the saying ‘lata culpa is exorbitant (extreme) negligence, i.e., not to understand (intelligere) what all understand’... negligentia is identified with ignorance.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 593 (1953).

lata negligentia (lay-ta neg-li-jen-she-a). Extreme negligence resulting from an unawareness of something that the actor should have known.

magna negligentia (mag-na neg-li-jen-she-a). See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

negligent infliction of emotional distress. The tort of causing another severe emotional distress through one’s negligent conduct. • Most courts will allow a plaintiff to recover damages for emotional distress if the defendant’s conduct results in physical contact with the plaintiff, or, when no contact occurs, if the plaintiff is in the zone of danger. Cf. EMOTIONAL DISTRESS; ZONE-OF-DANGER RULE. Cf. INTENTIONAL INFliction OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

negligent manslaughter. See involuntary manslaughter under MANSLAUGHTER.

negligent misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

negligent offense. See OFFENSE (1).

négoce (ni-gohs), n. [French] Trade; business.

negotiability. The capability of commercial paper to have its title transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery alone, so that the transferee has a rightful claim on it. • Negotiability (which pertains to commercial paper) differs from assignability (which pertains to contracts in general) because an assignee traditionally takes title subject to all equities, and an assignment is not complete without notice to the debtor, whereas an indorsee takes free of all equities and without any notice to the debtor.

negotiable, adj. 1. (Of a written instrument) capable of being transferred by delivery or indorsement when the transferee takes the instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. 2. (Of a deal, agreement, etc.) capable of being accomplished. 3. (Of a price or deal) subject to further bargaining and possible change. Cf. NONNEGOTIABLE; ASSIGNABLE.

“The term ‘negotiable,’ in its enlarged signification, is used to describe any written security which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery merely, so as to vest in the indorssee the legal title, and thus enable him to bring a suit thereon in his own name. But in a strictly commercial classification, and as the term is technically used, it applies only to those instruments which, like bills of exchange, not only carry the legal title with them by indorsement, or delivery, but carry as well, when transferred before maturity, the right of the transferee to demand the full amounts which their faces call for. ‘Assignable’ is the more appropriate term to describe bonds, and ordinary notes, or notes of hand as they are most commonly called; as ‘negotiable’ is the more fitting term to describe the peculiar instruments of commerce.” 1 John W. Daniel, A Treatise on the Law of Negotiable Instruments § 2, at 3 (Thomas H. Calvert ed., 7th ed. 1933).

negotiable bond. See BOND (2).

negotiable certificate of deposit. A security issued by a financial institution as a short-term source of funds, usu. with a fixed interest rate and maturity of one year or less.

negotiable instrument. A written instrument that (1) is signed by the maker or drawer, (2) includes an unconditional promise or order to pay a specified sum of money, (3) is payable on demand or at a definite time, and (4) is payable to order or to bearer. UCC § 3–104(a). — Also termed negotiable paper; negotiable note. • Among the various types of negotiable instruments are bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank checks, certificates of deposit, and other negotiable securities.

“What are called ‘negotiable instruments,’ or ‘paper to bearer,’ such as bills of exchange, or promissory notes, do really pass from hand to hand, either by delivery or indorsement, giving to each successive recipient a right against the debtor, to which no notice to the debtor is essential, and which, if the paper is held bona fide and for value, is unaffected by flaws in the title of intermediate assignors.” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 315–16 (13th ed. 1924).

“One must first understand that a negotiable instrument is a peculiar animal and that many animals calling for the payment of money and others loosely called ‘commercial paper’ are not negotiable instruments and not subject to the rules of Article 3.” James J. White & Robert S. Summers, 2 Uniform Commercial Code § 16–1, at 70 (4th ed. 1995).

negotiable order of withdrawal. A negotiable instrument (such as a check) payable on de-due negotiation. The transfer of a negotiable document of title so that the transferee takes it free of certain claims enforceable against the transferor. • This is the good-faith-purchase exception to the doctrine of derivitive title. UCC §§ 7–501(4); 7–502(1).

negotiation letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

negotiorum gestio (ni-goh-shee-or-am jes-chee-oh), n. [Latin “management of affairs”] Roman & civil law. A quasi-contractual situation in which an actor (negotiorum gestor) manages or interferes in the business transaction of another person (dominus negotii) in that person’s absence, done without authority but out of concern or friendship. • By such conduct, the actor was bound to conduct the matter to a conclusion and to deliver the transaction’s proceeds to the person, who likewise was bound to reimburse the actor for any expenses incurred. A negotiorum gestio did not exist if the gestor acted self-interestedly or if the owner expressly forbade the gestor from acting on the owner's behalf.

negotiorum gestor (ni-goh-shee-or-am jes-tor), n. [Latin “a manager of affairs”] Roman & civil law. A person who volunteers to render some necessary service to property, or to a business, in the absence of its owner. • This person has a claim to be compensated by the owner for the trouble taken, and the owner has a claim for any loss that results from the negotiorum gestor’s fault. — Sometimes shortened to gestor. See NEGOTIORUM GESTIO.

negotium (ni-goh-shee-am), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A matter; an affair, as in negotium absentis, a matter concerning an absent person. 2. A transaction; an agreement. 3. A trade; a business. 4. A civil or criminal trial. Pl. negotia.

n.e.i. abbr. NON EST INVENTUS.

neife (neef), n. [Law French] Hist. A person born into bondage or servdom; specif., a female serf. — Also spelled naif; nef; niefe.

“... For the children of villeins were also in the same state of bondage with their parents; whence they were called in Latin, nativi, which gave rise to the female appellation of a villein, who was called a neife.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 93–94 (1766).

neighbor, n. 1. A person who lives near another <Jensen’s neighbor spotted the fire>. 2. A person or thing situated near something <Canada is the United States’ neighbor to the north>. 3. A person in relation to humankind <love thy neighbor>.

neighborhood. 1. The immediate vicinity; the area near or next to a specified place. 2. People living in a particular vicinity, usu. forming a community within a larger group and having similar economic statuses and social interests. 3. The condition of being close together.

neighborhood effect. See EXTERNALITY.

neighboring rights. Copyright. The intellectual-property rights of performers, producers of sound recordings, and broadcasters. • Each of these right-holders creates something deserving of copyright protection, but these rights are less central to copyright law than such highly creative productions as novels and sculptures.

neighbor principle. The doctrine that one must take reasonable care to avoid acts or omissions that one can reasonably foresee will be likely to injure one’s neighbor. • According to this principle, neighbor includes all persons who are so closely and directly affected by the act that the actor should reasonably think of them when engaging in the act or omission in question.

ne injuste vexes (nee in-jas-tee vek-seez), n. [Law Latin “do not trouble unjustly”] Hist. A writ prohibiting a lord from demanding more services from a tenant than the tenure allowed.

“The writ of ne injuste vexes ... which prohibits distresses for greater services than are really due to the lord; being itself of the prohibitory kind, and yet in the nature of a writ of right. It lies, where the tenant in fee-simple and his ancestors have held of the lord by certain services; and the lord hath obtained seizin of more or greater services, by the inadvertent payment or performance of them by the tenant himself. Here the tenant cannot ... avoid the lord’s possessory right, because of the seizin given by his own hands; but is driven to this writ, to devalue the lord’s possession, and establish the mere right of property, by ascertaining the services, and reducing them to their proper standard.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 234 (1768).

neither party. A docket entry reflecting the parties’ agreement not to continue to appear to prosecute and defend a lawsuit. • This entry is equivalent to a dismissal.
ne luminibus officiatur (nee loo-min-i-bas a-fish-ee-a-ye-tar), n. [Latin "not impede light"] Roman law. A servitude restraining a homeowner from constructing anything that blocks light to an adjoining house.

nemine contradicente (nem-i-nee kahn-tra-di-sen-tee). [fr. Latin nemo "nobody" + contra dicere "contradict"] Without opposition or dissent. • This phrase expresses the lack of opposition by members of a court, legislative body, or other group to a resolution or vote <the motion passed nemine contradicente>. It is used in the English House of Commons. — Abbr. nem. con.; n.c.d. — Also termed nemine dissentiente.

nemo (nee-moh), n. [Latin] No one; no man. • This term is the first word of many Latin maxims, such as nemo est supra leges ("no one is above the law").

neopaticide. See INFANTICIDE.

NEPA (nee-pa). abbr. NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT.

nephew. 1. The son of a person’s brother or sister; sometimes understood to include the son of a person’s brother-in-law or sister-in-law. • This term is extended in some wills to include a grandnephew. 2. Hist. A grandchild. 3. Hist. A descendant.

"[N]ephew ... a son’s or daughter’s son, a grandson (also ... a grandchild), later also a brother’s or sister’s son, a nephew, in general a descendant ... The application, as with all other terms denoting relationship beyond the first degree, formerly varied (’grandson,’ ’nephew,’ ’cousin,’ ’kinsman,’ etc.); its final exclusive use for ‘nephew’ instead of ‘grandson’ is prob. due in part to the fact that, by reason of the great difference in age, a person has comparatively little to do with his grandsons, if he has any, whereas nephews are proverbially present and attentive, if their uncle is of any importance." 5 The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia 3968 (1895).

nepos (nep-ohs), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A grandson. 2. Hist. A nephew. • The term nepos later became neveu and then "nephew." See NEPHEW.

nepotism (nep-a-tiz-om), n. Bestowal of official favors (esp. in hiring) on one’s relatives. — nepotistic, adj.

nether house of Parliament. Hist. The lower house of Parliament; the English House of ne relessa pas (na ra-lee-sa pah), n. [Law French "did not release"] A plaintiff’s reply to a defendant’s plea of release as a defense to liability in a case.

nerve-center test. A method courts sometimes use to determine the location of a company’s principal place of business, by which the principal place of business is determined to be the location where the corporate officers, directors, and (sometimes) shareholders reside, and where they direct and control the corporation’s activities.

neutral property. Things belonging to citizens of a country that is not a party to a war, as long as the things are properly used and labeled. • For example, harmless neutral property aboard a captured belligerent ship would not normally be subject to seizure. But the hiding of explosives in otherwise neutral property could allow the property to be seized as contraband.

new, adj. 1. (Of a person, animal or thing) recently come into being <the new car was shipped from the factory this morning>. 2. (Of any thing) recently discovered . 3. (Of a person or condition) changed from the former state <she has a new state of mind>. 4. Unfamiliar; unaccustomed <she asked for directions because she was new to the area>. 5. Beginning afresh .

new, adj. 1. (Of a person, animal or thing) recently come into being <the new car was shipped from the factory this morning>. 2. (Of any thing) recently discovered . 3. (Of a person or condition) changed from the former state <she has a new state of mind>. 4. Unfamiliar; unaccustomed <she asked for directions because she was new to the area>. 5. Beginning afresh .

neutral, adj. 1. Indifferent. 2. (Of a judge, mediator, arbitrator, or actor in international law) refraining from taking sides in a dispute.

neutral, n. 1. A person or country taking no side in a dispute. Cf. BELLIGERENT. 2. A nonpartisan arbitrator typically selected by two other arbitrators — one of whom has been selected by each side in the dispute.

neutral, n. The condition of a nation that in time of war takes no part in the dispute but continues peaceful dealings with the belligerents. — neutral, adj.

neutral property. Things belonging to citizens of a country that is not a party to a war, as long as the things are properly used and labeled. • For example, harmless neutral property aboard a captured belligerent ship would not normally be subject to seizure. But the hiding of explosives in otherwise neutral property could allow the property to be seized as contraband.

new, adj. 1. (Of a person, animal or thing) recently come into being <the new car was shipped from the factory this morning>. 2. (Of any thing) recently discovered . 3. (Of a person or condition) changed from the former state <she has a new state of mind>. 4. Unfamiliar; unaccustomed <she asked for directions because she was new to the area>. 5. Beginning afresh .

new acquisition. See ACQUISITION.

new and useful. Patents. Two of the requirements for an invention to be patentable — namely, that the invention be novel and that it have practical utility. 35 USC § 101. See PATENT (3).

new asset. See ASSET.

new assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (5).
new-business rule. The principle precluding an award of damages for lost profits to a business with no recent record of profitability, because the damages would be too speculative.

new cause of action. See CAUSE OF ACTION.

new-contract dispute. See major dispute under DISPUTE.

new debtor. See DEBTOR.

new-debtor syndrome. Conduct showing a debtor's bad faith in filing for bankruptcy, as a result of which the court may dismiss the bankruptcy petition. ● An example is the debtor's formation of a corporation, immediately before the bankruptcy filing, solely to take advantage of the bankruptcy laws.

new drug. See DRUG.

new-for-old. 1. Marine insurance. In adjusting a partial marine-insurance loss, the principle that old materials apply toward payment of the new, so that the old material's value is deducted from the total repair expenses, and then from that balance one-third of the cost of repairs (one-third of the new materials for the old on the balance) is deducted and charged against the insured shipowner. — Also termed deduction for new. 2. The principle that a party whose property has been damaged is entitled to recover only the amount necessary to restore the property to the condition it was in before the damage, instead of acquiring a new item to replace one that was old and depreciated.

New Inn. Hist. English law. One of the Inns of Chancery (collegiate houses) in which law students were placed before entering the Inns of Court. ● This practice continued until approximately 1650, when the buildings began to be used only by attorneys and solicitors. See INNS OF CHANCERY. Cf. INNS OF COURT.

new issue. See ISSUE (2).

newly discovered evidence. See EVIDENCE.

new matter. See MATTER.

new promise. See PROMISE.

new-rule principle. Criminal procedure. A doctrine barring federal courts from granting habeas corpus relief to a state prisoner because of a rule, not dictated by existing precedent, announced after the prisoner's conviction and sentence became final. — Also termed nonretroactivity principle. See HABEAS CORPUS.

new ruling. Criminal procedure. A Supreme Court ruling not dictated by precedent existing when the defendant's conviction became final and thus not applicable retroactively to habeas cases. ● For example, when the Court in Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 106 S.Ct. 2595 (1986), ruled that the Eighth Amendment prohibits execution of insane prisoners, this new ruling was nonretroactive because it departed so widely from prior doctrine. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 109 S.Ct. 1060 (1989). See HABEAS CORPUS.

newsmen's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

newspaper. A publication for general circulation, usu. in sheet form, appearing at regular intervals, usu. daily or weekly, and containing matters of general public interest, such as current events.

daily newspaper. A newspaper customarily published five to seven days every week. — Often shortened to daily.

legal newspaper. A newspaper containing matters of legal interest including summaries of cases, legal advertisements, legislative or regulatory changes, and local bankruptcy notices.

newspaper of general circulation. A newspaper that contains news and information of interest to the general public, rather than to a particular segment, and that is available to the public within a certain geographic area. ● Legal notices (such as a class-action notice) are often required by law to be published in a newspaper of general circulation.

official newspaper. A newspaper designated to contain all the public notices, resolves, acts, and advertisements of a state or municipal legislative body.

newspaper prospectus. See PROSPECTUS.

new style. The modern system for ordering time according to the Gregorian method, introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582 and adopted in England and the American colonies in 1752. ● Because the Julian calendar was slightly longer than the astronomical year, the vernal equinox was displaced by ten days. Pope Gregory reformed the calendar by announcing that October 5, 1582 would be called October 15. And, while generally retaining a leap year for years divisible by 4, he skipped leap years in years divisible by 100 (such as 1800 and 1900), but retained leap years for years divisible by 400 (such as 2000). Thus, the years 2000, 2004, 2008, etc. are leap years, but 2100 is not. — Abbr. n.s. — Also termed Gregorian calendar. Cf. OLD STYLE.

new trial. A postjudgment retrial or reexamination of some or all of the issues determined in an earlier judgment. ● The trial court may order a new trial, either by motion of a party or on the court’s own initiative. Also, an appellate court, in reversing the trial court’s judgment, may remand the case to the trial court for a new trial on some or all of the issues on which the reversal is based. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59. See MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; REMAND.

New York interest. See Boston interest under INTEREST (3).

New York standard clause. See MORTGAGE-LOSS CLAUSE.

New York Stock Exchange. An unincorporated association of member firms that handle the purchase and sale of securities both for themselves and for customers. ● This exchange, the dominant one in the United States, trades in only large companies having at least one million outstanding shares. — Abbr. NYSE.

New York Supplement. A set of regional lawbooks that, being part of the West Group’s National Reporter System, contain every published decision from intermediate and lower courts of record in New York, from 1888 to date. ● The first series ran from 1888 to 1937; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. N.Y.S.; N.Y.S.2d.

New York Times rule. A commonsense rule of ethical conduct holding that one should not do anything arguably newsworthy — in public or in private — that one would mind having reported on the front page of a major newspaper. ● In various communities, a local newspaper is substituted for the Times. — Also termed New nexi (nek-si), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Debtors given in bondage to creditors until their debts have been paid. See NEXUM.

next devisee. See DEVISEE.

next friend. A person who appears in a lawsuit to act for the benefit of an incompetent or minor plaintiff, but who is not a party to the lawsuit and is not appointed as a guardian. — Also termed prochein ami. Cf. guardian ad litem under GUARDIAN.

next-in, first-out. A method of inventory valuation (but not a generally accepted accounting principle) whereby the cost of goods is based on their replacement cost rather than their actual cost. — Abbr. NIFO. Cf. FIRST-IN, FIRST-OUT; LAST-IN, FIRST-OUT.

next of kin. 1. The person or persons most closely related by blood to a decedent. 2. The person or persons entitled to inherit personal property from a decedent who has not left a will. See HEIR.

next presentation. Hist. Eccles law. In the law of advowsons, the right to present to the bishop a clerk to fill the first vacancy in a local parsonage. See ADVOWSON.

nexum (nek-sam), n. [Latin] Roman law. A transaction or practice under which a debtor, upon a failure to repay the debt, could be seized and held in bondage until the debt was repaid.

"Nexum. This highly controversial matter will be briefly dealt with as nexum had long been obsolete in classical law. Little is really known of it: it has been doubted whether there ever was such an institution. No text tells us that there was a contract called nexum ... But we have texts which speak of nexum as creative of obligation ... and many literary texts dealing with debtors who were nexi, so that it may be taken as certain that there was such a transaction ... which in some way reduced debtors to a sort of slavery, that great hardships resulted and that a l. Poetelia ... practically ended this state of things, presumably by requiring an actual judgment before seizure. The effect was not to abolish nexum, but, by depriving it of its chief value, the power of seizure ... to leave it with no advantages to counterbalance its chuminess, so that it went out of use." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 429–30 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).
nexus. A connection or link, often a causal one <cigarette packages must inform consumers of the nexus between smoking and lung cancer>. Pl. nexus; nexus.

nexus test. The standard by which a private person’s act is considered state action — and may give rise to liability for violating someone’s constitutional rights — if the conduct is so closely related to the government’s conduct that the choice to undertake it may fairly be said to be that of the state. • While similar to the symbiotic-relationship test, the nexus test focuses on the particular act complained of, instead of on the overall relationship of the parties. Still, some courts use the terms and analyses interchangeably. — Also termed close-nexus test. Cf. SYMBIOTIC-RELATIONSHIP TEST. See JOINT PARTICIPATION; STATE-COMPULSION TEST.

“The complaining party must ... show that there is a sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the regulated entity so that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself. The purpose of this requirement is to assure that constitutional standards are invoked only when it can be said that the State is responsible for the specific conduct of which the plaintiff complains. . . . Our precedents indicate that a State normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice must in law be deemed to be that of the State.” Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 921, 1004, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 2786 (1982).

niece. 1. The daughter of a person’s brother or sister; sometimes understood to include the daughter of a person’s brother-in-law or sister-in-law. • This term is extended in some wills to include a grandniece. See NEPHEW.

“When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis, or nient culpable; which was formerly used to be abbreviated upon the minutes, thus, ‘non (or nient) cul,’’ the clerk of the assize, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 333 (1769).

nient deire (nee-ent da-deer), vb. [Law French] Hist. To deny nothing; to be subject to a default judgment.

nient le fait (nee-ent la fait). [Law French] Hist. Not the deed. • This term was the earlier version of non est factum. See NON EST FACTUM.

nient seisi (nee-ent see-zee), n. [Law French] “not seised” Hist. The general denial in a writ to recover an annuity.

NIFO (ni-foh). abbr. NEXT-IN, FIRST-OUT.

night. 1. The time from sunset to sunrise. 2. Darkness; the time when a person’s face is not discernible. • This definition was used in the common-law definition of certain offenses, such as burglary.

“The definition of a burglar, as given by Sir Edward Coke, is, ‘he that by night breaketh and entereth into a mansion-house, with intent to commit a felony.’ . . . The time must be by night, and not by day; for in the daytime there is no burglary . . . . As to what is reckoned night, and what day, for this purpose anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sunrise, and to end immediately upon sunset; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be daylight . . . enough, begun or left, to discern a man’s face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moonlight; for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished: and besides, the malignity of the offence does not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest; when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 224 (1769).

3. Thirty minutes after sunset and thirty minutes before sunrise, or a similar definition as set forth by statute, as in a statute requiring specific authorization for night searches. 4. Evening.—Also termed nighttime. Cf. DAY.

nightwalker. 1. Hist. A person who suspiciously wanders about at night and who might disturb the peace. Nightwalking was an example of a “common” offense requiring no specific facts to be asserted in the indictment. 2. A sleepwalker. 3. A prostitute who walks the streets at night; streetwalk er.

nihil. See NHIL EST.

nihil capiat per breve (ni-hil kap-ee-at par bree-vee or breev), n. [Latin “Let him take nothing by his writ”] A judgment against the plaintiff in an action at bar or in abatement. — Also termed nihil capiat per billam (“let him take nothing by his bill”).

nihil dicit (ni-hil di-sit), n. [Latin “he says nothing”] 1. The failure of a defendant to answer a lawsuit. 2. See nil-dicit default judgment under DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nihil-dicit default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nihil est (ni-hil est). [Latin “there is nothing”] A form of return by a sheriff or constable who was unable to serve a writ because nothing was found to levy on. — Often shortened to nihil. Cf. NULLA BONA.

nihil habet (ni-hil hay-bat). [Latin “he has nothing”] A form of return by a sheriff or constable who was unable to serve a scire facias or other writ on the defendant. See SCIRE FACIAS.

nihilism (ni-al-iz-om). 1. A doctrine maintaining that there is no rational justification for moral principles and that there is no objective truth. 2. The view that traditional beliefs are unfounded and that life is meaningless and useless. 3. A theory that the existing economic, social, or political institutions should be destroyed, regardless of the result, because of the basic undesirability of those institutions. This theory, featured by Ivan Turgenev in his 1861 novel Fathers and Sons, was popular among Russian extremists until the collapse of the czarist government.

nihilist, n. A person who advocates nihilism. See NHILISM.

nil (nil). [Latin] Nothing. • This word is a contracted form of nihil. See NHIL EST.

“The proper general issue in debt on simple contracts and statutes is ‘nil debet,’ which is a formal denial of the debt. It denies not only the existence of any contract, but under it any matters in excuse or in discharge may also be shown.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 184, at 327 (Henry Winthrop Bal lantine ed., 3d ed. 1925).

nil-dicit default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nil habuit in tenementis (nil hab-yoo-it in ten-o-men-tis), n. [Law Latin “he has nothing in the tenements”] Hist. In an action to recover rent on a lease, the defendant’s plea that the landlord has no title or interest in the property at issue.

1933 Act. See SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.

ninety-day letter. Statutory notice of a tax deficiency sent by the IRS to a taxpayer. • During the 90 days after receiving the notice, the taxpayer must pay the taxes (and, if desired, seek a refund) or challenge the deficiency in tax court. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 6212, 6213. — Also written 90-day letter. — Also termed notice of deficiency; deficiency notice; tax-deficiency notice. Cf. THIRTY-DAY LETTER.

Ninth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, providing that rights listed in the Constitution must not be construed in a way that denies or disparages unlisted rights, which are retained by the people.
 nisi (nī-stī), adj. [Latin “unless"] (Of a court’s ex parte ruling or grant of relief) having validity unless the adversely affected party appears and shows cause why it should be withdrawn . See decree nisi under DECREE.

 nisi decree. See decree nisi under DECREE.

 nisi feceris (nī-stī fee-see-ə-ris), n. [Law Latin “unless you have done so”] Hist. A clause in a manorial writ providing that the king’s court or officer will do justice if the lords fail. • This provision allowed royal courts to usurp the jurisdiction of manorial courts.

 nisi prius (nī-stī prī-əs), [Latin “unl ess before then”] A civil trial court in which, unlike in an appellate court, issues are tried before a jury. • The term is obsolete in the United States except in New York and Oklahoma. — Abbr. n.p.

 NMB, abbr. NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD.

 NMI, abbr. No middle initial.

 no-action clause. An insurance-policy provision that bars suit against the insurer until the liability of the insured has been determined by a judgment.

 no-action letter. A letter from the staff of a governmental agency stating that if the facts are as represented in a person’s request for an agency ruling, the staff will advise the agency not to take action against the person. • Typically, a no-action letter is requested from the SEC on such matters as shareholder proposals, resales of stock, and marketing techniques.

 no actus reus (nōh ak-tas ree-əs). A plea in which a criminal defendant either denies involvement with a crime or asserts that the harm suffered is too remote from the criminal act to be imputable to the defendant.

 no-answer default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

 no arrival, no sale. A delivery term, included in some sales contracts, by which the seller assumes the duty to deliver the goods to a specified place, and assumes the risk of loss for the goods while they are in transit. • If the goods arrive damaged or late, the buyer can either avoid the contract or accept the goods at a discount.

 no award. In an action to enforce an award, the defendant’s plea denying that an award was made.

 nobility, n. pl. 1. Persons of social or political preeminence, usu. derived by inheritance or from the sovereign. • In English law, there are various degrees of nobility, or peerage, such as dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, and their female counterparts. Nobility is generally created either by a writ of summons to sit in Parliament or by a royal grant through letters patent, and was once usu. accompanied by a large land grant. Nobility by writ descended to a person’s bodily heirs. The modern practice is to grant nobility by letters patent, which provide limitations as to future heirs. The U.S. Constitution prohibits granting a title of nobility. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8.

 “In England nobility is apt to be confounded with the peculiar institution of the British peerage. Yet nobility, in some shape or another, has existed in most places and times or the world’s history, while the British peerage is an institution purely local, and one which has actually hindered the existence of a nobility in the sense which the word bears in most other countries... Nobility, then, in the strict sense of the word, is the hereditary handing on from generation to generation of some acknowledged pre-eminence, a pre-eminence founded on hereditary succession, and on nothing else... The pre-eminence so handed on may be of any kind, from substantial political power to mere social respect and precedence.” 17 Encyclopedia Britannica 538 (9th ed. 1907).

 2. Persons of high or noble character. 3. The collective body of persons making up the noble class.

 no bill, n. A grand jury’s notation that insufficient evidence exists for an indictment on a criminal charge <the grand jury returned a no bill instead of the indictment the prosecutors expected>. — no-bill, vb. <the grand jury沼 billed three of the charges>. Cf. true bill.

no-bonus clause. Landlord-tenant law. A lease provision that takes effect upon governmental condemnation, limiting the lessee’s damages to the value of any improvements to the property and preventing the lessee from recovering the difference between the lease’s fixed rent and the property’s market rental value. See condemnation.

no cause of action. See take-nothing judgment under judgment.

nocent (nok-sent), adj. [fr. Latin nocere “harm”] Archaic 1. Injurious; harmful. 2. Guilty; criminal. • This word is the little-used antonym of innocent.

nocent (nok-sent), n. [fr. Latin nocere “harm”] Hist. A person who is guilty.

no-claim, n. The lack of a claim. • Legal philosophers devised this term to denote the opposite of a claim. As one jurist has said apologetically, “there is no word in English which expresses the lack of a claim and therefore the rather barbarous ‘no-claim’ has been suggested.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 291 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

no-confidence vote. The formal legal method by which a legislative body, by a majority vote, forces the resignation of a cabinet or ministry. — Also termed vote of no confidence.

no contest. A criminal defendant’s plea that, while not admitting guilt, the defendant will not dispute the charge. • This plea is often preferable to a guilty plea, which can be used against the defendant in a later civil lawsuit. — Also termed nolo contendere; non vult contendere.

no-contest clause. A testamentary provision conditioning a gift or legacy on the beneficiary’s not challenging the will.

noctanter (nok-tan-tar), n. [Latin “by night”] Hist. A chancery writ issued to a sheriff as a first step in the recovery of damages for destroying a ditch or hedge. • The neighboring villagers (vills) were held liable for the damages unless they indicted the offender.

noctem de firma (nok-tam dee for-ma), n. [Law Latin “night of duty (payable)’’] Hist. The duty or custom of providing entertainment or provisions for a night. • At the time of the Norman Conquest, this was the duty or custom of entertaining the king for one night. — Also termed noctes; firma noctis.

nocumentum (nok-yo-men-tam). [fr. Latin nocere “to harm”] Hist. A nuisance. • There was no remedy at law for a nuisance causing only property damage, but there was a remedy for a nuisance causing injury.

no-duty, n. Liberty not to do an act. — Also termed liberty not.

no-duty doctrine. 1. Torts. The rule that a defendant who owes no duty to the plaintiff is not liable for the plaintiff’s injury. 2. The rule that the owner or possessor of property has no duty to warn or protect an invitee from known or obvious hazards.

no evidence. 1. The lack of a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable fact-finder to rule in favor of the party who bears the burden of proof <there is no evidence in the record about his whereabouts at midnight>. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party can move for judgment as a matter of law to claim that the other party — who bears the burden of proof — has been fully heard and has not offered sufficient evidence to prove one or more essential elements of the suit or defense. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. Though such a contention is usu. referred to as a no-evidence motion, the issue is not whether there was actually no evidence, but rather whether the evidence was sufficient for the fact-finder to be able to reasonably rule in favor of the other party.

“Since judgment as a matter of law deprives the party opposing the motion of a determination of the facts by a jury, it should be granted cautiously and sparingly. Nevertheless, the federal courts do not follow the rule that a scintilla of evidence is enough to create an issue for the jury. The question is not whether there is literally no evidence upon which the jury properly could find a verdict for that party.” 9A Charles Alan Wright & Ar-
Evidence that has no value in an attempt to prove a matter in issue <that testimony is no evidence of an alibi>.

2. Evidence that has no value in an attempt to prove a matter in issue <that testimony is no evidence of an alibi>.

no-evidentiary rule. Torts. The largely defunct principle holding that if no direct evidence shows what a dead person did to avoid an accident, the jury may infer that the person acted with ordinary care for his or her own safety. ● In a jurisdiction where the rule persists, a plaintiff in a survival or wrongful-death action can assert the rule to counter a defense of contributory negligence.

no-fault, adj. Of or relating to a claim that is adjudicated without any determination that a party is blameworthy <no-fault divorce>.

no-fault auto insurance. See INSURANCE.

no-fault divorce. See DIVORCE.

no funds. An indorsement marked on a check when there are insufficient funds in the account to cover the check.

no goods. See NULLA BONA.

nolens volens (nō-lenz vō-lenz), adv. & adj. [Latin] Willing or unwilling <nolens volens, the school district must comply with the court's injunction>.

no-limit order. See ORDER (4).

nolissement (nō-lis-mahn), n. [French] French law. The chartering of a ship; AFFREIGHTMENT.

nolition (nō-lish-an). The absence of volition; unwillingness.

nolle prosequi (nōl-ee prahs-ə-kwi), n. [Latin "not to wish to prosecute"] 1. A legal notice that a lawsuit has been abandoned. 2. A docket entry showing that the plaintiff or the prosecution has abandoned the action. — Often shortened to nolle.

"In America the term [nolle prosequi] bears the same meaning as in England, with one exception. The attorney-general has not the same discretion with which English law invests him. Although in some States the prosecuting officer may enter a nolle prosequi at his discretion, in others the leave of the court must be obtained." 17 Encyclopaedia Britannica 546 (9th ed. 1907).

"Nolle prosequi is a formal entry on the record by the prosecuting officer by which he declares that he will not prosecute the case further, either as to some of the counts of the indictment, or as to part of a divisible count, or as to some of the persons accused, or altogether. It is a judicial determination in favor of accused and against his conviction, but it is not an acquittal, nor is it equivalent to a pardon." 22A C.J.S. Criminal Law § 419, at 1 (1989).

nolle prosequi (nōl-ee prahs-ə-kwi), vb. To abandon (a suit or prosecution); to have (a case) dismissed by a nolle prosequi <the state nolle prosequi the charges against Johnson>. — Often shortened to nolle pros; nol-pro; nol-pro.

no-load fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

nolo contendere (nō-loh kan-ten-da-ree). [Latin "I do not wish to contend"] NO CONTEST. — Often shortened to nolo.

no man's land. Labor law. The lack of clear jurisdiction between a state government and the federal government over labor disputes. ● This term was common in the 1950s, but its use has declined as later laws have clarified jurisdictional issues.

NOM clause. abbr. NO-ORAL-MODIFICATION CLAUSE.

nomen (nō-men or -man), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A personal name. ● A Roman citizen generally had three names: a praenomen ("first name"), a nomen ("the name of the family group"), and cognomen ("a surname"). 2. Roman law. A claim; an obligation. 3. Hist. A person's first name. 4. More broadly, any name. See AGNOMEN.

nomen collectivum (nō-men kō-lak-ty-vum), n. [Latin] A collective name; a name of a class of things.

nomen generale (nō-men jen-ə-ray-lee), n. [Latin] A general name; a genus.

nomen generalissimum (nō-men jen-ə-ra-lis-i-mam), n. [Law Latin] A name with the most general meaning.
nomination

nominal-payee rule. Commercial law. The rule that validates any person’s indorsement of an instrument (such as a check) when the instrument’s drawer intended for the payee to have no interest in the instrument, UCC § 3–404(b).

nominal rate. See INTEREST RATE.

nominal sentence. See SENTENCE.

nominal trust. See passive trust under TRUST.

nominal value. See PAR VALUE.

nominal yield. See YIELD.

nominate, vb. 1. To propose (a person) for election or appointment <Steven nominated Jane for president>. 2. To name or designate (a person) for a position <the testator nominated an executor, who later withdrew because he couldn’t perform his duties>.

nominate contract. See CONTRACT.

nominatim (nah-mi-nay-tom), adv. [fr. Latin nomen “name”) Roman law. By name. ● This term refers to mentioning someone or something expressly or specifically by name, so that (for example) to disinherit persons nominatim means that there is no doubt who is meant to be excluded.

nominating and reducing. Hist. A method used, esp. in London, to obtain special jurors from which to select a jury panel. ● Under this method, a number representing each person on a sheriff’s list is drawn from a box until 48 unchallenged people have been nominated. Each party then strikes 12 people and the remaining 24 constitute the panel.

nominatio auctoris (nah-mi-nay-shoo-oh awk-tor-is), n. [Latin “naming of the originator (or seller)”] 1. In an action for the recovery of something, such as real estate, the defendant’s plea that the property is actually owned by another party. ● The true owner is then required to defend the action. 2. Roman law. In an action alleging ownership of an item, the defendant’s plea naming the seller, who then must assist in the defense of the action against the plaintiff. — Also termed laudare auctorem.

nomination. 1. The act of proposing a person for election or appointment. 2. The act of naming or designating a person for a position.
nomination paper. (usu. pl.) A document filed by an independent political group — usu. one not qualifying as a political party or able to hold primary elections — to place one or more nominees on a general-election ballot.

nomination to a living. Eccles. law. A right to offer a clerk to the owner of an advowson for presentation to the bishop of the diocese. • The owner of an advowson can grant the right to another but is then bound to present whomsoever the grantee chooses.

nominaticus pendens (nahm-a-na-ti-vas pen-denz), n. [Latin “nominative hanging”] In a sentence, a nominative phrase that is not grammatically connected with the rest of the sentence. — Also termed nominative absolute.

“Nominaticus pendens .... The opening words in the form of a deed inter partes (‘This deed, etc., down to whereas’), though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, having regard to the predicate ‘witnesseth’ or ‘nor this deed witnesseth,’ are sometimes of this kind.” — William A. Jowitt, The Dictionary of English Law 1230 (1859).

nomina villarum (nahm-a-na vi-la-rum), n. [Latin “names of the villages”] Hist. In the reign of Edward II, a list compiled by sheriffs of the names of the villages and possessors in their respective counties.

nominee. 1. A person who is proposed for an office, position, or duty. 2. A person designated to act in place of another, usu. in a very limited way. 3. A party who holds bare legal title for the benefit of others or who receives and distributes funds for the benefit of others.

At common law, a penalty for nonperformance, such as additional rent to be paid by a tenant to a landlord for failing to perform certain conditions in a lease.

nomocanon (nah-mok-a-non or noh-ma-kan-an). 1. A collection of canon and imperial laws applicable to ecclesiastical matters in the orthodox churches. • The first nomocanon is falsely ascribed to Johannes Scholasticus, patriarch of Constantinople, in 553. Later canons consist primarily of the canons of the Quinisext and the ecclesiastical laws of Justinian. 2. A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without regard to imperial constitutions.

“It was [in ancient Greek law] provided that all motions to repeal or amend an existing law should be brought before the ecclesia or general meeting of citizens, at the beginning of the year. They might be then and there rejected; but if a motion was received favorably, the ecclesia appointed a body of nomothetes, sometimes as many as a thousand in number, before whom the proposal was put on trial according to the regular forms of Athenian judicial procedure. A majority vote of the nomothetes was decisive for acceptance or rejection.” — Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia 4011 (1886).

non (non). [Latin] Not; no. • This term negates, sometimes as a separate word and sometimes as a prefix.

nonability. 1. The lack of legal capacity, esp. to sue on one’s own behalf. 2. A plea or exception raising a lack of legal capacity.

nonacceptance. 1. The refusal or rejection of something, such as a contract offer. See REJECTION. 2. A buyer’s rejection of goods because they fail to conform to contractual specifications. See UCC § 2-601(a). 3. A drawee’s failure or refusal to receive and pay a negotiable instrument.

nonacquiescence (non-ak-wee-es-ants). Administrative law. An agency’s policy of declining to be bound by lower-court precedent that is contrary to the agency’s interpretation of its organic statute, but only until the Supreme Court has ruled on the issue.

"Too much nonacquiescence, however, would interfere with the courts’ ability to prevent an agency from violating its statutory mandate. The practice is generally upheld, but is considered questionable when an agency adheres to its legal position in a case that could only be reviewed in a circuit that has already rejected the agency’s stance. When the Social Security Administration made frequent use of the latter kind of nonacquiescence in the administration of its disability benefits program in the 1980’s, it was widely criticized." Ernest Gellhorn & Ronald M. Levin, Administrative Law and Process in a Nutshell 98 n.2 (4th ed. 1997).

nonactuarially sound retirement system. A retirement plan that uses current contributions and assets to pay current benefit obligations, instead of investing contributions to pay future benefits. Cf. ACTUARILY SOUND RETIREMENT SYSTEM.

nongovernmental organization. Int’l law. Any scientific, professional, business, or public-interest organization that is neither affiliated with nor under the direction of a government; an international organization that is not the creation of an agreement among countries, but rather is composed of private individuals or organizations. Examples of these organizations, which are often granted consultative status with the United Nations, include OPEC, Greenpeace, and the Red Cross. — Abbr. NGO.

“This term should not be taken to refer to the membership of the organization: governments or branches of governments are members of many non-governmental organizations. The notion ‘non-governmental’ refers to the function of the international organization. Non-governmental organizations are not endowed with government powers. They operate under rules of private and not of public law.” Henry G. Schermers, International Institutional Law 12 (1972).

non impedivit (non im-pa-di-vit), n. [Latin “he did not impede] The defendant’s general denial in a quare impedit action. This is the Latin form equivalent to ne disturba pas. See NE DISTURBA PAS; QUARE IMPEDIT.

non sui juris (non s\(\textbullet\)yoo-i or soo-ee joor\(\textbullet\)is), adj. [Latin “not of one’s own right”] Lacking legal age or capacity. Cf. SUI JURIS.

nonsuit, n. 1. A plaintiff’s voluntary dismissal of a case or of a defendant, without a decision on the merits. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a voluntary dismissal is equivalent to a nonsuit. Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a). — Also termed voluntary discontinuance. 2. A court’s dismissal of a case or of a defendant because the plaintiff has failed to make out a legal case or to bring forward sufficient evidence. See judgment of nonsuit under JUDGMENT. — nonsuit, vb.

“Nonsuit . . . is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence in that, even if all facts that plaintiff presents are true, the evidence is not, as a matter of law, sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a judgment. However, a voluntary nonsuit, unlike a demurrer or a directed verdict which resolves the action on its merits, may result in another trial of the cause.” 75A Am. Jur. 2d Trial § 853 (1991).

compulsory nonsuit. An involuntary nonsuit.

non sum informatus (non sam in-far-may-tos), n. [Latin “I am not informed”] Hist. A type of default judgment based on a defense attorney’s statement that the client gave no instructions to answer the lawsuit.

nonsupport. The failure to support a person that one is legally obliged to provide for, such as a child, spouse, or other dependent. • Nonsupport is a crime in most states, where it is often termed criminal nonsupport.

non tenent insimul (non ten-ant in-sim-al), n. [Latin “they do not hold together”] Hist. In a partition action, the defendant’s plea denying a joint tenancy with the plaintiff in the estate at issue.

non tenuit (non ten-yew-wit). [Latin] In an action of replevin, the plaintiff’s plea in bar to the defendant’s assertion of a rightful taking of property (avowry), whereby the plaintiff denies holding the property in the manner and form alleged.

nontenure (non ten-yur). Hist. A general denial in a real action, whereby the defendant denies holding some or all of the land in question.

nonterm. See NON TERMINUS.

non terminus (non ter-mi-nas), n. [Law Latin “not the end”] Hist. The vacation between two terms of a court. • In England, it was also called “the time of days of the king’s peace.” — Also termed nonterm; non term.

A notation indicating that such means are lacking <the bill was indorsed “no recourse”>. See nonrecourse loan under LOAN; WITHOUT RE COURSE.

no-retract rule. Criminal law. The doctrine that the victim of a murderous assault may use deadly force in self-defense if there is no reasonable alternative to avoid the assailant’s threatened harm. • A majority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. re-TREAT RULE.

no-right, n. The absence of right against ano-other in some particular respect. • A no-right is the correlative of a privilege. — Also termed li-bility.

"A says to B, 'If you will agree to pay me $100 for this horse you may have him and you may indicate your agreement by taking him.' This is a physical fact, called an offer, consisting of certain muscular acts of A having certain physical results in B. The legal relations immediately following are (in part) as follows: B now has the privilege of taking the horse and A has no-right that he shall not . . . .” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law

" 'No-right' is sometimes derided as being a purely negative concept. If a no-right is something that is not a right, the class of no-rights must, it is said, include elephants. The answer is that negative terms are often useful as alternative ways of stating propositions involving negatives. For instance, the terms 'alien,' 'cold,' and 'dark' are all negative or privative, because their meaning includes the idea of the absence of something else.
The proposition that A is an alien means that A is not a British subject; in the one mode of statement the negative is incorporated in the noun, whereas in the other it is expressed as a separate word. Similarly the word 'liberty' is negative, and critics who attack the concept of no-right should logically attack the concept of liberty also. . . . [L]iberty means 'no-duty not.' . . . [F]or the sake of clear thinking it is necessary to give each of the four meanings of right] a separate name. Words like 'no-right' and 'no-duty' may seem uncoherent at first sight, but it is surely a clear and useful statement to say that 'right' sometimes means 'no-duty not.'” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 240-41 n.(a) (Glanville L. Williams ed., norm. 1. A model or standard accepted (voluntarily or involuntarily) by society or other large group, against which society judges someone or something. • An example of a norm is the standard for right or wrong behavior. 2. An actual or set standard determined by the typical or most frequent behavior of a group.

basic norm. In the legal theory of Hans Kelsen, the law from which all the other laws in a society derive. • Kelsen’s “pure theory of law” maintains that laws are norms. Therefore, a society’s legal system is made up of its norms, and each legal norm derives its validity from other legal norms. Ultimately, the validity of all laws is tested against the “basic norm,” which may be as simple as the concept that all pronouncements of the monarch are to be obeyed. Or it may be an elaborate system of lawmaking, such as a constitution. — Also termed grundnorm. See PURE THEORY.

Norris–La Guardia Act (nor-is lə gwahrdee-ə). A 1932 federal law that forbids federal courts from ruling on labor policy and that severely limits their power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. • The statute was passed to curb federal-court abuses of the injunctive process, to declare the government’s neutrality on labor policy, to curtail employers’ widespread normal, adj. 1. According to a regular pattern; natural <it is normal to be nervous in court>.

2. According to an established rule or norm <it is not normal to deface statues>. 3. Setting a normal mind. A mental capacity that is similar to that of the majority of people who can handle life’s ordinary responsibilities.

normal school. A training school for public-school teachers. • Normal schools first appeared in the United States in the 1800s and were two-year post-high-school training programs for elementary-school teachers. At the turn of the century, normal schools expanded into four-year teaching colleges. Most of these institutions have developed into liberal arts colleges offering a wider variety of education and teaching programs. — Also termed normal college.

Norman French. A language that was spoken by the Normans and became the official language of English courts after the Norman Conquest in 1066. • The language deteriorated into Law French and continued to be used until the late 17th century. English became the official language of the courts in 1731.

notarius (noh-tair-ee-us), n. [fr. Latin nota “a character or mark”] 1. Roman law. A writer (sometimes a slave) who takes dictation or records proceedings by shorthand. • A notarius was later also called a scriba. 2. Roman law. An officer who takes a magistrate’s dictation by shorthand. 3. Hist. An officer who prepares deeds and other contracts. 4. A notary or a scribe.

notary public (noh-ta-ree), n. A person authorized by a state to administer oaths, certify documents, attest to the authenticity of signatures, and perform official acts in commercial matters, such as protesting negotiable instruments. — Often shortened to notary. — Abbr. n.p. Pl. notaries public. — notarize, vb. — notarial, adj.

“A notary public is an officer long known to the civil law, and designated as registrarius, actuarius, or scrivarius.” — John Proffett, A Treatise on the Law Relating to the Office and Duties of Notaries Public § 1, at 1 (John F. Tyler & John J. Stephens eds., 2d ed. 1892).

“The notary public, or notary, is an official known in nearly all civilized countries. The office is of ancient origin. In Rome, during the republic, it existed, the title being tabelliones forenses, or personae publicae; and there are records of the appointment of notaries by the Frankish kings and the Popes as early as the ninth century. They were chiefly employed in drawing up legal documents; as scribes or scriveners they took minutes and made short drafts of writings, either of a public or a private nature. In modern times their more characteristic duty is to attest the genuineness of any deeds or writings, in order to render the same available as evidence of the facts therein contained.” — Benjamin F. Rex, The Notaries’ Manual § 1, at 1-2 (J.H. McMillin ed., 6th ed. 1913).

notary seal. 1. The imprint or embossment made by a notary public’s seal. 2. A device, usu. a stamp or embosser, that makes an imprint on a notarized document. — Also termed notarial seal.

embossed seal. 1. A notary seal that is impressed onto a document, raising the impression above the surface. • An embossed seal clearly identifies the original document because the seal is only faintly reproducible. For this reason, this type of seal is required in some states and on some documents notarized for federal purposes. 2. The embossment made by this seal.

rubber-stamp seal. 1. In most states, a notary public’s official seal, which is ink-stamped onto documents and is therefore photographically reproducible. • It typically includes the notary’s name, the state seal, the words “Notary Public,” the name of the county where the notary’s bond is filed, and the expiration date of the notary’s commission. 2. The imprint made by this seal.

notation credit. A letter of credit specifying that anyone purchasing or paying a draft or demand for payment made under it must note the amount of the draft or demand on the letter. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

note, n. 1. A written promise by one party (the maker) to pay money to another party (the payee) or to bearer. • A note is a two-party negotiable instrument, unlike a draft (which is a three-party instrument). — Also termed promissory note. Cf. DRAFT (1).

accommodation note. A note that an accommodating party has signed and thereby assumed secondary liability for; ACCOMMODATION PAPER.

approved indorsed note. A note indorsed by a person other than the maker to provide additional security.

balloon note. A note requiring small periodic payments but a very large final payment. • The periodic payments usu. cover only interest, while the final payment (the balloon payment) represents the entire principal.

banknote. See BANKNOTE.

blue note. A note that maintains a life-insurance policy in effect until the note becomes due.

bought note. A written memorandum of a sale delivered to the buyer by the broker responsible for the sale.

circular note. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

coal note. Hist. A promissory note written according to a statute that required payment for coal out of any vessel in the port of London to be in cash or by promissory note containing the words “value received in coal.” • Noncompliance with the statute resulted in a fine of £100.

cognovit note. See COGNOVIT NOTE.

collateral note. See secured note.

coupon note. A note with attached interest coupons that the holder may present for payment as each coupon matures.

demand note. A note payable whenever the creditor wants to be paid. See call loan under LOAN.

executed note. A note that has been signed and delivered.

floating-rate note. A note carrying a variable interest rate that is periodically adjusted within a predetermined range, usu. every six months, in relation to an index, such as Treasury bill rates. — Also termed floater. hand note. A note that is secured by a collateral note.

installment note. A note payable at regular intervals. — Also termed serial note.

inverse-floating-rate note. A note structured in such a way that its interest rate moves in the opposite direction from the underlying index (such as the London Interbank Offer Rate). Many such notes are risky investments because if interest rates rise, the securities lose their value and their coupon earnings fall. — Also termed inverse floater.

joint and several note. A note for which multiple makers are jointly and severally liable for repayment, meaning that the payee may legally look to all the makers, or any one of them, for payment of the entire debt. See joint and several liability under LIABILITY.

joint note. A note for which multiple makers are jointly, but not severally, liable for repayment, meaning that the payee must legally look to all the makers together for payment of the debt. See joint liability under LIABILITY.

mortgage note. A note evidencing a loan for which real property has been offered as security.

negotiable note. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

nonrecourse note. A note that may be satisfied upon default only by means of the collateral securing the note, not by the debtor’s other assets. Cf. recourse note.

note of hand. See promissory note.

premium note. A promissory note given by an insured to an insurance company for part or all of the premium.

promissory note. An unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay absolutely and in any event a certain sum of money either to, or to the order of, the bearer or a designated person. — Also termed note of hand.

recourse note. A note that may be satisfied upon default by pursuing the debtor’s other assets in addition to the collateral securing the note. Cf. nonrecourse note.

reissuable note. A note that may again be put into circulation after having once been paid.

renewal note. A note that continues an obligation that was due under a prior note.

sale note. A broker’s memorandum on the terms of a sale, given to the buyer and seller.

savings note. A short-term, interest-bearing paper issued by a bank or the U.S. government.

secured note. A note backed by a pledge of real or personal property as collateral. — Also termed collateral note.

sold note. A written memorandum of sale delivered to the seller by the broker responsible for the sale, and usu. outlining the terms of the sale. See CONFIRMATION SLIP.

stock note. A note that is secured by securities, such as stocks or bonds.

tax-anticipation note. A short-term obligation issued by state or local governments to finance current expenditures and that usu. matures once the local government receives individual and corporate tax payments. — Abbr. TAN.

time note. A note payable only at a specified time and not on demand.

treasury note. See TREASURY NOTE.

unsecured note. A note not backed by collateral.

2. A scholarly legal essay shorter than an article and restricted in scope, explaining or criticizing a particular set of cases or a general area of the law, and usu. written by a law student for publication in a law review. — Also termed comment; hand note. Cf. ANNOTATION. 3. A minute or memorandum intended for later reference; MEMORANDUM (1).

note, vb. 1. To notice carefully or with particularity <the defendant noted that the plaintiff seemed nervous>. 2. To put down in writing <the court reporter noted the objection in the record>. 3. Archaic. To brand <as punishment, the criminal was noted>. See NOTA.

note broker. See BROKER.

note of a fine. Hist. English law. A step in the judicial process for conveying land, consisting of a chirographer’s brief of the proceedings before the documents of conveyance are engrossed. — Also termed abstract of a fine. See FINE.

note of allowance. English law. A master’s note, upon receiving a party’s memorandum of an error of law in a case, allowing error to be asserted.

note of hand. See promissory note under NOTE (1). Pl. NOTES OF HAND.
note of protest. A notary’s preliminary memo, to be formalized at a later time, stating that a negotiable instrument was neither paid nor accepted upon presentment. See PROTEST.

note payable. See account payable under ACCOUNT.

note receivable. See account receivable under ACCOUNT.

note verbal (noht var-bal). Int’l law. An unsigned diplomatic note, usu. written in the third person, that sometimes accompanies a diplomatic message or note of protest to further explain the country’s position or to request certain action. — Also spelled note verbale (vair-bahl).

not-for-profit corporation. See nonprofit corporation under CORPORATION.

not found. Words placed on a bill of indictment, meaning that the grand jury has insufficient evidence to support a true bill. See IGNORAMUS; NO BILL. Cf. TRUE BILL.

not guilty. 1. Criminal law. A defendant’s plea denying the crime charged. 2. A jury verdict acquitting the defendant because the prosecution failed to prove the defendant’s guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

not guilty by reason of insanity. 1. A not-guilty verdict, based on mental illness, that usu. does not release the defendant but instead results in commitment to a mental institution. 2. A criminal defendant’s plea of not guilty that is based on the insanity defense. — Abbreviation: NGRI. — Also termed not guilty on the ground of insanity. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

3. Common-law pleading. A defendant’s plea denying both an act of trespass alleged in a plaintiff’s declaration and the plaintiff’s right to possess the property at issue.

"In trespass, whether to person or property, the general issue is ‘not guilty.’ It operates in the first place as a denial that the defendant committed the act of trespass alleged, to wit, the application of force to the plaintiff’s person, the entry on his land, or the taking or damages of his goods. It also denies the plaintiff’s possession, title, or right of possession of the land or goods." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 170, at 307-08 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

not guilty by statute. Hist. Under certain acts of Parliament, the pleading form for a defendant’s general denial in a civil action. — This pleading form allowed a public officer to indicate action under a statute. The officer had to write the words “by statute” in the margin along with the year, chapter, and section of the applicable statute, and the defendant could not file any other defense without leave of court. The right to plead “not guilty by statute” was essentially removed by the Public Authorities Protection Act of 1893.

4. A general denial in an ejectment action.

"The general issue in ejectment is not guilty. This plea operates as follows: (1) As a denial of the unlawfulness of the withholding; i.e., of the plaintiff’s title and right of possession. (2) All defenses in excuse or discharge, including the statute of limitations, are available under the general issue in ejectment." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 188, at 333 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

not-guilty plea. See PLEA (1).

nothous (noh-thas), adj. Archaic. Spurious; illegitimate.

nothus (noh-thas), n. [fr. Greek nothos “false”] Roman law. An illegitimate child; one of base birth. ● If the child’s mother was a Roman citizen, the child was also a Roman citizen. — Also termed spurius.

notice, n. 1. Legal notification required by law or agreement, or imparted by operation of law as a result of some fact (such as the recording of an instrument); definite legal cognizance, actual or constructive, of an existing right or title <under the lease, the tenant must give the landlord written notice 30 days before vacating the premises>. ● A person has notice of a fact or condition if that person (1) has actual knowledge of it; (2) has received a notice of it; (3) has reason to know about it; (4) knows about a related fact; or (5) is considered as having been able to ascertain it by checking an official filing or recording. 2. The condition of being so notified, whether or not actual awareness exists <all prospective buyers were on notice of the judgment lien>. 3. A written or printed announcement <the notice of sale was posted on the courthouse bulletin board>. Cf. KNOWLEDGE.

actual notice. Notice given directly to, or received personally by, a party.

adequate notice. See due notice.

commercial-law notice. Under the UCC, notice of a fact arising either as a result of actual knowledge or notification of the fact, or as a result of circumstances under which a person would have reason to know of the fact, UCC § 1-201(25).
constructive notice. Notice arising by presumption of law from the existence of facts and circumstances that a party had a duty to take notice of, such as a registered deed or a pending lawsuit; notice presumed by law to have been acquired by a person and thus imputed to that person. — Also termed legal notice.

direct notice. Actual notice of a fact that is brought directly to a party’s attention. — Also termed positive notice.

due notice. Sufficient and proper notice that is intended to and likely to reach a particular person or the public; notice that is legally adequate given the particular circumstance. — Also termed adequate notice; legal notice.

express notice. Actual knowledge or notice given to a party directly, not arising from any inference, duty, or inquiry.

fair notice. 1. Sufficient notice apprising a litigant of the opposing party’s claim. 2. The requirement that a pleading adequately apprise the opposing party of a claim. • A pleading must be drafted so that an opposing attorney of reasonable competence would be able to ascertain the nature and basic issues of the controversy and the evidence probably relevant to those issues. 3. FAIR WARNING.

immediate notice. 1. Notice given as soon as possible. 2. More commonly, and esp. on notice of an insurance claim, notice that is reasonable under the circumstances.

implied notice. Notice that is inferred from facts that a person had a means of knowing and that is thus imputed to that person; actual notice of facts or circumstances that, if properly followed up, would have led to a knowledge of the particular fact in question. — Also termed indirect notice; presumptive notice.

imputed notice. Information attributed to a person whose agent, having received actual notice of the information, has a duty to disclose it to that person. • For example, notice of a hearing may be imputed to a witness because it was actually disclosed to that witness’s attorney of record.

indirect notice. See implied notice.

inquiry notice. Notice attributed to a person when the information would lead an ordinarily prudent person to investigate the matter further; esp., the time at which the victim of an alleged securities fraud became aware of facts that would have prompted a reasonable person to investigate.

judicial notice. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

legal notice. 1. See constructive notice. 2. See due notice.

notice by publication. See public notice.

personal notice. Oral or written notice, according to the circumstances, given directly to the affected person.

positive notice. See direct notice.

public notice. Notice given to the public or persons affected, usu. by publishing in a newspaper of general circulation. • This notice is usu. required, for example, in matters of public concern. — Also termed notice by publication.

reasonable notice. Notice that is fairly to be expected or required under the particular circumstances.

record notice. Constructive notice of the contents of an instrument, such as a deed or mortgage, that has been properly recorded.

notice, vb. 1. To give legal notice to or of <the plaintiff’s lawyer noticed depositions of all the experts that the defendant listed>. 2. To realize or give attention to <the lawyer noticed that the witness was leaving>.

notice act. See NOTICE STATUTE.

notice-and-comment period. Administrative law. The statutory time frame during which an administrative agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comment on the regulation. • The regulation cannot take effect until after this period expires. — Often shortened to comment period.

notice-and-comment rulemaking. See informal rulemaking under RULEMAKING.

notice by publication. See public notice under NOTICE.

notice doctrine. The equitable doctrine that when a new owner takes an estate with notice that someone else had a claim on it at the time of the transfer, that claim may still be asserted against the new owner even if it might have been disregarded at law. — Also termed doctrine of notice.

notice filing. The perfection of a security interest under Article 9 of the UCC by filing only a financing statement, as opposed to a copy or abstract of the security agreement. • The financing statement must contain (1) the debtor’s signature, (2) the secured party’s name and address, (3) the debtor’s name and mailing address, and (4) a description of the types of, or items of, collateral.

notice of appeal. A document filed with a court and served on the other parties, stating an intention to appeal a trial court’s judgment or order. ● In most jurisdictions, filing a notice of appeal is the act by which the appeal is perfected. For instance, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure provide that an appeal is taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the district court from which the appeal is taken, and that the clerk is to send copies of the notice to all the other parties’ attorneys, as well as the court of appeals. Fed. R. App. P. 3(a), (d). — Also termed claim of appeal. See APPEAL.

notice of appearance. 1. Procedure. A party’s written notice filed with the court or oral announcement on the record informing the court and the other parties that the party wants to participate in the case. 2. Bankruptcy. A written notice filed with the court or oral announcement in open court by a person who wants to receive all pleadings in a particular case. ● This notice is usu. filed by an attorney for a creditor who wants to be added to the official service list. 3. A pleading filed by an attorney to notify the court and the other parties that he or she represents one or more parties in the lawsuit.

notice of deficiency. See NINETY-DAY LETTER.

notice of dishonor. Notice to the indorser of an instrument that acceptance or payment has been refused. ● This notice — along with presentment and actual dishonor — is a condition of an indorser’s secondary liability. UCC § 3-503(a).

notice of motion. Written certification that a party to a lawsuit has filed a motion or that a motion will be heard or considered by the court at a particular time. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the requirement that a motion be made in writing is fulfilled if the motion is stated in a written notice of the hearing on the motion. Also, the courts in most jurisdictions require all motions to include a certificate, usu. referred to as a certificate of service, indicating that the other parties to the suit have been given notice of the motion’s filing. Notice of any hearing or other submission of the motion must usu. be provided to all parties by the party requesting the hearing or submission. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d), 7(b)(1); Fed. R. Civ. P. Form 19.

notice of orders or judgments. Written notice of the entry of an order or judgment, provided by the court clerk or one of the parties. ● Notice of a judgment is usu. provided by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was entered. If the court does not provide notice, a party is usu. required to provide it. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the clerk is required to provide immediate notice of any order or judgment to any party to the case who is not in default. Fed. R. Civ. P. 77(d); Fed. R. Crim. P. 49(c).

notice of protest. 1. A statement, given usu. by a notary public to a drawer or indorser of a negotiable instrument, that the instrument was neither paid nor accepted; information provided to the drawer or indorser that protest was made for nonacceptance or nonpayment of a note or bill. See PROTEST (2). 2. A shipowner’s or crew’s declaration under oath that damages to their vessel or cargo were the result of perils of the sea and that the shipowner is not liable for the damages. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

notice of removal. The pleading by which the defendant removes a case from state court to federal court. ● A notice of removal is filed in the federal district court in the district and division in which the suit is pending. The notice must contain a short and plain statement of the grounds for removal and must include a copy of all process, pleadings, and orders that have served on the removing party while the case has been pending. The removing party must also notify the state court and other parties to the suit that the notice of removal has been filed. A notice of removal must be filed, if at all, within 30 days after the defendant is served with process in the suit. 28 USCA § 1446; Murphy Bros., Inc. v. Michetti Pipe Stringing, Inc., 119 S.Ct. 1322 (1999).

notice of trial. A document issued by a court informing the parties of the date on which the lawsuit is set for trial. ● While the court typically provides the notice to all parties, it may instead instruct one party to send the notice to all the others.

notice-prejudice rule. A doctrine barring an insurer from using late notice as a reason to deny an insured's claim unless the insurer can show that it was prejudiced by the untimely notice.

notice-race statute. See RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

notice statute. A recording act providing that the person with the most recent valid claim, and who purchased without notice of an earlier, unrecorded claim, has priority. • About half the states have notice statutes. — Also termed notice act. Cf. RACE STATUTE; RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

notice to appear. A summons or writ by which a person is cited to appear in court. • This is an informal phrase sometimes used to refer to the summons or other initial process by which a person is notified of a lawsuit. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require the summons to state that the defendant must appear and defend within a given time and that failure to do so will result in a default judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(a). See PROCESS; SUMMONS; DEFAULT JUDGMENT; NOTICE TO PLEAD.

notice to creditors. Bankruptcy. A formal notice to creditors that a creditors' meeting will be held, that proofs of claim must be filed, or that an order for relief has been granted.

notice to plead. A warning to a defendant, stating that failure to file a responsive pleading within a prescribed time will result in a default judgment. • The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require the summons to notify the defendant that failure to appear and defend within a prescribed time will result in a default judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(a). See PROCESS; SUMMONS; DEFAULT JUDGMENT; NOTICE TO APPEAR.

notice to produce. See REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION.

notice to quit. 1. A landlord's written notice demanding that a tenant surrender and vacate the leased property, thereby terminating the tenancy. 2. A landlord's notice to a tenant to pay any back rent within a specified period (often seven days) or else vacate the leased premises.

notification. 1. Intl law. A formal announcement of a legally relevant fact, action, or intent, such as notice of an intent to withdraw from a treaty. 2. NOTICE.

notify, vb. 1. To inform (a person or group) in writing or by any method that is understood <I notified the court of the change in address>. 2. Archaic. To give notice of; to make known <to notify the lawsuit to all the defendants>. See NOTICE.

noting protest. See PROTEST (2).

notitia (noh-tish-ee-a), n. [Latin “knowledge”] 1. Roman law. Knowledge; information. • This term carried over for a time into English practice. 2. Roman law. A list; register; catalogue. • The notitia dignitatum (dig-ni-tay-tam) was a list of the high offices in the Eastern and Western parts of the empire. 3. Hist. Notice. 4. A list of ecclesiastical sees.

not law. A judicial decision regarded as wrong by the legal profession.

"Even when it is not possible to point out any decision that affects the point in question in any one of the ways enumerated, it sometimes happens that the profession has grown to ignore the old decision as wrong or obsolete; and though this does not happen often, when it does happen, the old decision is very likely not to be followed in case the point is squarely raised again. This is one of the instances in which lawyers rather mystically, though soundly, say that a decision is 'not law.'" William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 329 (3d ed. 1914).

notoriety. 1. The state of being generally, and often unfavorably, known and spoken of <the company's executive achieved notoriety when she fled the country to avoid paying taxes>. 2. A person in such a state <the notoriety gave a rare interview>.

notorious, adj. 1. Generally known and spoken of. 2. (Of the possession of property) so conspicuous as to impute notice to the true owner. — Also termed (in sense 2) open and notorious. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

notorious insolvency. Scots law. A bankruptcy; the stage of insolvency in which the debtor has publicly acknowledged insolvency under the statute. • This stage is usu. followed by sequestration, which is notorious insolvency coupled with the appointment of a trustee for creditors. — Also termed notour bankruptcy.
“Bankruptcy, according to the law of Scotland, is public or notorious insolvency. When a debtor in an obligation cannot fulfill his obligation as undertaken . . . a position which constitutes insolvency — and makes public acknowledgment, in manner determined by statute, of his inability, the status or condition of bankruptcy has arisen, and the insolvent debtor is, in the language of the statutes, a ‘notour’ bankrupt . . . The law of notour bankruptcy is mainly statutory. Legislation has fixed the circumstances which constitute the status, and determined all the most important results.” George Watson, Bell’s Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 78 (3d ed. 1882).

notorious possession. See POSSESSION.

not otherwise indexed by name. A phrase used in shipping and tariff construction, usu. to show a classification of something generally rather than specifically. • For example, a shipment of aircraft and boat engines merely labeled “other articles” is not otherwise indexed by name. — Abbr. n.o.i.b.n.

notour bankruptcy. See NOTORIOUS INSOLVENCY.

not possessed. Common-law pleading. In an action in trover, the defendant’s plea denying possession of the articles allegedly converted. See TROVER.

not proven. An archaic jury verdict — now used only in Scots criminal law — equivalent in result to not guilty, but carrying with it a strong suspicion of wrongdoing. — Also termed Scotch verdict.

not satisfied. A form of return by a sheriff or constable, on a writ of execution, indicating only that the amount due on a judgment was not paid. • A general return of this type is usu. viewed as technically deficient because it does not state why the writ was not satisfied. Cf. NULLA BONA.

not sufficient funds. The notation of dishonor (of a check) indicating that the drawer’s account does not contain enough money to cover payment. — Abbr. NSF. — Also termed insufficient funds.

notwithstanding, prep. Despite; in spite of <notwithstanding the conditions listed above, the landlord can terminate the lease if the tenant defaults>.

n.o.v. abbr. NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

nova causa interveniens. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

nova custuma (noh-va kos-t(y)a-ma), n. [Law Latin “new custom”] Hist. A tax; an imposition. Cf. ANTIQUA CUSTUMA.

novae narrationes (noh-vee no-ray-shee-ohn-nee), n. [Law Latin “new counts or tales”] Hist. A collection of pleading forms published during the reign of Edward III.

nova statuta (noh-va sto-tijoo-ta), n. pl. [Law Latin] Hist. New statutes. • This term refers to the statutes passed beginning with the reign of Edward III. Cf. VETERA STATUTA.

novation (noh-vay-shan), n. The act of substituting for an old obligation a new one that either replaces an existing obligation with a new obligation or replaces an original party with a new party. • A novation may substitute (1) a new obligation between the same parties, (2) a new debtor, or (3) a new creditor. — Also termed substituted agreement; (Roman law) novatio (noh-vay-shee-oh). — novate (noh-vayt or noh-vayt), vb. — novatory (noh-va-tor-e), adj. See substituted contract under CONTRACT; ACCORD (2).

“The only way in which it is possible to transfer contractual duties to a third party is by the process of novation, which requires the consent of the other party to the contract. In fact novation really amounts to the extinction of the old obligation, and the creation of a new one, rather than to the transfer of the obligation from one person to another. Thus if B owes A £100, and C owes B the same amount, B cannot transfer to C the legal duty of paying his debt to A without A’s consent. But if A agrees to accept C as a debtor in place of B, and if C agrees to accept A as his creditor in place of B, the three parties may make a tripartite agreement to this effect, known as novation. The effect of this is to extinguish B’s liability to A and create a new liability on the part of C.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 283 (3d ed. 1981).

“The word ‘novation’ is used in a variety of senses. Courts frequently use it as synonymous with ‘substituted contract.’ Most academic writers and both contracts restatements, however, restrict its use to describe a substituted contract involving at least one obligor or obligee who was not a party to the original contract . . . . The development of a separate category under the rubric ‘novation’ is doubtless traceable to problems of consideration formerly thought to be present in such contracts because of the former common law rule that consideration must be supplied by the promisee. This rule has long since been laid to rest almost everywhere.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11-8, at 444-45 (3d ed. 1987).
objective novation. Civil law. A novation involving the substitution of a new obligation for an old one.

subjective novation. Civil law. A novation involving the substitution of a new obligor for a previous obligor who has been discharged by the obligee.

novel assignment. See new assignment under ASSIGNMENT (5).

novel disseisin (nov-al dis-see-zin), n. A recent disseisin. See DISSEISIN; ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN.

Novellae (no-vel-e). See NOVELS.

Novellae Constitutiones. See NOVELS.

Novellae Leonis (no-vel-e lee-oh-nis), n. [Latin “novels of Leo”] A collection of 113 ordinances issued by Emperor Leo from A.D. 887–893.

Novels. A collection of 168 constitutions issued by the Roman emperor Justinian and his immediate successors. • Taken together, the Novels make up one of four component parts of the Corpus Juris Civilis. — Also termed Novellae; Novellae Constitutiones. See CORPUS JURIS CIVILIS.

novelty. Patents. 1. The fact that an invention is new in form and in function or performance. 2. The requirement that this fact must be demonstrated for an invention to be patentable. • If the invention has been previously patented, described in a publication, or known or used by others, it is not novel. 35 USCA § 102. Cf. NON-OBSVIOUSNESS.

noverca (no-var-ka), n. [Latin] A stepmother.

noverint universi per praesentes (noh-va-rant yoo-ni-var-st par pri-zen-teez). [Latin] Know all men by these presents. • This is a formal phrase once found at the beginning of deeds of release. In translation, they still sometimes appear on various types of legal documents. See KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS; PATEAT UNIVERSIS PER PRAESENTES.

novigild (noh-va-gild), n. [fr. Latin novem “nine” + Anglo-Saxon gid or geld “a payment”] Hist. The money a person must pay for damaging another person’s property, the amount equaling nine times the purchase price of the property damaged.

novi operis nuntiatio (noh-vi ahp-a-ris nan-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin “new work protest”] Roman law. A protest or prohibition against an opus novum (“new work”). • A person whose rights were impaired by the building or tearing down of a structure could protest at the worksite and forbid further activity. — Also termed (edictum) de novi operis nuntiatio.

noviter perenta (noh-va tar par-ven-ta), n. pl. [Law Latin “newly known”] Eccles. law. Newly discovered facts, which are usually allowed to be introduced in a case even after the pleadings are closed.

novus actus interveniens (noh-vas ak-tas in-tor-vee-nee-anz). See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

novus homo (noh-vas hoh-moh), n. [Latin “new man”] Hist. A man who has been pardoned for a crime.

NOW account. See ACCOUNT.

now comes. See COMES NOW.

noxa (nok-so), n. [Latin “injury”] Hist. 1. Roman law. An offense such as injury to a person or property, esp. one committed by a slave or son. 2. Roman law. The obligation to pay for damage committed by a son, slave, or animal. • The father or master generally had to pay for the damages or else surrender the offender to the injured party. 3. An offense, generally. 4. The punishment for an offense. 5. Something that exerts a harmful effect on the body.

noxal (nok-sol), adj. Archaic. Of or relating to a claim against a father or owner for damage done by a son, a slave, or an animal.

noxal action. [fr. Latin actio noxalis “injurious action”] 1. Roman law. The claim against a master or father for a tort committed by a son, a slave, or an animal. • The head of the family could be sued either to pay a penalty due or to surrender the tortfeasor to the victim. Roman law also provided for the surrender of animals that caused damage under actio de pauperie. 2. Hist. A person’s claim to recover for damages committed by a person’s son, slave, or animal.
noxious (nok-shas), adj. 1. Harmful to health; injurious. 2. Unwholesome; corruptive. 3. Archaic. Guilty.

n.p. abbr. 1. NISI PRIUS. 2. NOTARY PUBLIC.

NPL. abbr. NATIONAL PRIORITIES LIST.

NPV. See net present value under PRESENT VALUE.

n.r. abbr. 1. New reports. 2. Not reported. 3. NONRESIDENT.

n.s. abbr. 1. New series. • This citation form indicates that a periodical has been renumbered in a new series. 2. NEW STYLE.

NSF. abbr. NOT SUFFICIENT FUNDS.

NTSB. abbr. NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD.

nubilis (n[y]oo-ba-lis), n. [Latin “marriageable”] Civil law. A person, esp. a girl, who is old enough to be married.

nuclear-nonproliferation treaty. See non-proliferation treaty under TREATY.

nude, adj. 1. Naked; unclothed. 2. Lacking in consideration or in some essential particular. See NUDUM PACTUM. 3. Mere; lacking in description.

nude contract. See NUDUM PACTUM.

nude matter. A mere allegation.

“[N]ude matter is not of so high nature, as either a mater of Record or a specialty, otherwise there called mater in decipe; which maketh mee to thinke, that nude mater is a naked allegation of a thing done, to be proved only by witnesses, and not either by Record, or other specialty in writing vnnder seale.” John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

nudum pactum (n[y]oo-dam pak-tam). [Latin “bare agreement”] 1. Roman law. An informal agreement that is not legally enforceable, because it does not fall within the specific classes of agreements that can support a legal action. • But a pactum could create an exception to or modification of an existing obligation. 2. An agreement that is unenforceable as a contract because it is not “clothed” with consideration. — Also termed naked contract; nude contract; nude pact.

nugatory (n[y]oo-ga-tor-ee), adj. Of no force or effect; useless; invalid <the Supreme Court rendered the statute nugatory by declaring it unconstitutional>.

nuisance. 1. A condition or situation (such as a loud noise or foul odor) that interferes with the use or enjoyment of property. • Liability might or might not arise from the condition or situation. — Formerly also termed annoyance.

“A nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard.” Village of Euclid v. Amber Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 388, 47 S.Ct. 114, 118 (1926).

“A ‘nuisance’ is a state of affairs. To conduct a nuisance is a tort. In torts, the word ‘nuisance’ has had an extremely elastic meaning; sometimes it is little more than a pejorative term, a weasel word used as a substitute for reasoning…. The general distinction between a nuisance and a trespass is that the trespass flows from a physical invasion and the nuisance does not.” Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 7.2, at 417 (2d ed. 1993).

2. Loosely, an act or failure to act resulting in an interference with the use or enjoyment of property. • In this sense, the term denotes the action causing the interference, rather than the resulting condition <the Slocums’ playing electric guitars in their yard constituted a nuisance to their neighbors>.

“There is perhaps no more impenetrable jungle in the entire law than that which surrounds the word ‘nuisance.’ It has meant all things to all people, and has been applied indiscriminately to everything from an alarming advertisement to a cockroach baked in a piece.” Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 86, at 616 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

3. The class of torts arising from such conditions, acts, or failures to act when they occur unreasonably. — Also termed actionable nuisance.

“Nuisance is really a field of tortious liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct: the feature which gives it unity is the interest invaded — that of the use and enjoyment of land. The tort emphasizes the harm to the plaintiff rather than the conduct of the defendant.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 50-51 (17th ed. 1977).
abatable nuisance. A nuisance so easily removable that the aggrieved party may lawfully cure the problem without notice to the liable party, such as overhanging tree branches.

absolute nuisance. 1. Interference with a property right that a court considers fixed or invariable, such as a riparian owner's right to use a stream in its natural condition. 2. See nuisance per se. 3. Interference in a place where it does not reasonably belong, even if the interfering party is careful. 4. Interference for which a defendant is held strictly liable for resulting harm, esp. in the nature of pollution. Cf. qualified nuisance.

Sense (4) has been disapproved: "[T]he use of the term 'nuisance' to describe the tort liability that sometimes results from accidental invasions produces too much confusion." Prosser and Keehn on the Law of Torts § 89, at 637 (W. Page Keehn ed., 5th ed. 1984).

anticipatory nuisance. A condition that, although not yet at the level of a nuisance, is very likely to become one, so that a party may obtain an injunction prohibiting the condition. — Also termed prospective nuisance.

attractive nuisance. A dangerous condition that may attract children onto land, thereby causing a risk to their safety. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE.

"[T]he doctrine acquired the unfortunate misnomer 'attractive nuisance,' a label which persists to this day. It cannot be taken literally, since the courts have largely rejected the notion that the child must be attracted by that which injures him, and whether or not the condition is in fact a 'nuisance' has nothing at all to do with defendant's liability to the child." Edward J. Klonka, Torts in a Nutshell 89 (2d ed. 1992).

cognate nuisance. Rare. Interference with an easement.

"The term nuisance is applied to torts of two distinct groups, first, acts of wrongful user by an owner or possessor of land resulting in an unreasonable interference with the rights of enjoyment of the owner or possessor of neighboring land, and, second, wrongful interferences with easements or other incorporeal rights." William F. Walsh, A Treatise on Equity 170 (1930).

"When an easement was interfered with, an action on the case lay as a matter of course... Such an interference is sometimes called 'cognate nuisance' to distinguish it from interferences with the personal enjoyment of the incidents of occupying the land." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 486 (3d ed. 1990).

common nuisance. See public nuisance.

continuing nuisance. A nuisance that is either uninterrupted or frequently recurring.

bullet It need not be constant or unceasing, but it must occur often enough that it is almost continuous.

legalized nuisance. A nuisance sanctioned by legislative, executive, or other official action and therefore immune from liability, such as a city park.

mixed nuisance. A condition that is both a private nuisance and a public nuisance, so that it is dangerous to the community at large but also causes particular harm to private individuals.

nuisance at law. See nuisance per se.

nuisance dependent on negligence. See qualified nuisance.

nuisance in fact. A nuisance existing because of the circumstances of the use or the particular location. • For example, a machine emitting high-frequency sound may be a nuisance only if a person's dog lives near enough to the noise to be disturbed by it. — Also termed nuisance per accidens.

nuisance per se (par say). Interference so severe that it would constitute a nuisance under any circumstances; a nuisance regardless of location or circumstances of use, such as a leaky nuclear-waste storage facility. — Also termed nuisance at law; absolute nuisance.

permanent nuisance. A nuisance that cannot readily be abated at reasonable expense. Cf. temporary nuisance.

private nuisance. A condition that interferes with a person's enjoyment of property, but does not involve a trespass. • The condition constitutes a tort for which the adversely affected person may recover damages or obtain an injunction.

"Trespass and private nuisance are alike in that each is a field of tort liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct. In each, liability may arise from an intentional or an unintentional invasion. For an intentional trespass, there is liability without harm; for a private nuisance, there is no liability without significant harm... In private nuisance an intentional interference with the plaintiff's use or enjoyment is not of itself a tort, and unreasonableness of the interference is necessary for liability." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821D cmt. d (1979).

"The different ways and combinations of ways in which the interest in the use or enjoyment of land may be invaded are infinitely variable. A private nuisance may consist of an interference with the physical condition of the land itself, as by vibration or blasting which damages a house, the destruction of crops, flooding, raising the water table, or the pollution of a stream or of an underground water supply." Prosser and Keehn on the Law of Torts § 87, at 619 (W. Page Keehn ed., 5th ed. 1984).
prospective nuisance. See anticipatory nuisance.

public nuisance. An unreasonable interference with a right common to the general public, such as a condition dangerous to health, offensive to community moral standards, or unlawfully obstructing the public in the free use of public property. • Such a nuisance may lead to a civil injunction or criminal prosecution. — Also termed common nuisance.

“Public and private nuisances are not in reality two species of the same genus at all. There is no generic conception which includes the crime of keeping a common gaming-house and the tort of allowing one’s trees to overhang the land of a neighbour. A public nuisance fails within the law of torts only so far as it may in the particular case constitute some form of tort also. Thus the obstruction of a highway is a public nuisance; but if it causes any special and peculiar damage to an individual, it is also a tort actionable at his suit.” R.F.V. Houston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 49-50 (17th ed. 1977).

“[P]ublic nuisance ... is an amorphous and unsatisfactory area of the law covering an ill-assorted collection of wrongs, some of which have little or no association with tort and only appear to fill a gap in criminal law. Others cover what could be generally described as ‘noisome trade,’ which could be dealt with under some form of statutory nuisance. Yet, a third group deals with what we would generally describe as ‘abuses of the highway’ . . . .” R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 254 (1984).

qualified nuisance. A condition that, though lawful in itself, is so negligently permitted to exist that it creates an unreasonable risk of harm and, in due course, actually results in injury to another. • It involves neither an intentional act nor a hazardous activity. — Also termed nuisance dependent on negligence. Cf. absolute nuisance.

temporary nuisance. A nuisance that can be corrected by a reasonable expenditure of money or labor. Cf. permanent nuisance.

nul (nal). [Law French] No; none. • This negative particle begins many phrases, such as nul tiel.

nul agard (nal a-gahr-d), n. [Law French “no award”] In an action to enforce an arbitration award on an arbitration bond, a plea denying the existence of the award. Cf. AGARD.

nul disseisin (nal dis-see-zin). [Law French “no disseisin”] In a real action, a defendant’s plea that the plaintiff was not deprived of the possession of any land and tenements. See DISSEISIN.

nul fait agard (nal fay a-gahr-d). [Law French] No award was made. Cf. AGARD.

null, adj. Having no legal effect; without binding force; VOID <the contract was declared null and void>. • The phrase null and void is a common redundancy.

nulla bona (nal-a boh-na). [Latin “no goods”] A form of return by a sheriff or constable upon an execution when the judgment debtor has no seizable property within the jurisdiction. Cf. NIL EST.

nullification (nal-i-fi-kay-shan), n. 1. The act of making something void; specifically, the action of a state in abrogating a federal law, on the basis of state sovereignty. 2. The state or condition of being void. See JURY NULLIFICATION.

nullification doctrine. The theory — espoused by southern states before the Civil War — advocating a state’s right to declare a federal law unconstitutional and therefore void.

nullify, vb. To make void; to render invalid.

nullity (nal-a-tee). 1. Something that is legally void <the forged commercial transfer is a nullity>. 2. The fact of being legally void <she filed a petition for nulility of marriage>.

absolute nullity. Civil law. 1. An act that is void because it is against public policy, law, or order. 2. The state of such a nullity. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

relative nullity. Civil law. 1. A legal nullity that can be cured by confirmation because the object of the nullity is valid. 2. The state of such a nullity.

nullity of marriage. 1. The invalidity of a presumed or supposed marriage because it is void on its face or has been voided by court order. ● A void marriage, as in an incestuous marriage, is invalid on its face and requires no formality to end. A voidable marriage, such as a marriage lacking requisite parental consent, requires a court order to invalidate.

"The declaration of nullity is appropriate if the marriage is relatively null or absolutely null yet one or both spouses were in good faith. If the marriage is relatively null, civil effects flow until the declaration of nullity. On the other hand, the marriage that is absolutely null generally produces civil effects only if one or both of the spouses were in good faith and only so long as good faith lasts." 16 Katherine S. Spalt & W. Lee Hargrave, Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: Matrimonial Regimes § 7.6, at 348 (2d ed. 1997).

2. A suit brought to nullify a marriage. See ANNULMENT.

nullius filius (na-li-as fil-ee-as), n. [Latin "son of no one"] An illegitimate child.

nullius in bonis (na-li-as in bob-nis), adj. [Latin "among the property of no person"] Hist. Belonging to no one. ● Wild animals were considered to be nullius in bonis. — Also termed in nullius bonis.

nullum arbitrium (na-lum arh-bi-tree-om), n. [Law Latin "no decision"] Hist. In an action to enforce an arbitration bond, a plea denying the existence of an arbitration award.

nullum est erratum (na-lum est a-ray-tam), n. [Latin "there is no error in the record"] In response to an assignment of error, the common plea that there is no error in the record. ● The effect of the plea is essentially to admit well-pleaded facts.

nullum feecerunt arbitrium (na-lum fa-seer-ant arh-bi-tree-om). [Latin "they never submitted to arbitration"] Hist. In an action to enforce an arbitration award, the defendant’s plea denying that there had been an arbitration.

Nullum Tempus Act (na-lum tem-pas akt), n. [Latin] Hist. English law. The Crown Suits Act of 1769 (amended in 1862) that limited the Crown’s time to sue, in land and other specified matters, to 60 years. ● The statute altered the common-law rule of nullum tempus aut locus occurrat regi ("no time or place affects the Crown"), which was based on the idea that the Crown was too busy with governmental affairs to timely attend to its legal affairs.

nullum tempus occurrit reipublicae (na-lam tem-pas a-kar-it ree-i-pab-la-see), n. [Latin "no time runs against the state"] The principle that a statute of limitations does not apply to a commonwealth or state unless a statute specifically provides that it does. ● The purpose of the rule is to fully protect public rights and property from injury.

nul tel (nael teel). [Law Latin] No such. ● This phrase typically denotes a plea that denies the existence of something.

nul tiel corporation, n. [Law French "no such corporation exists"] A plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation. ● The defense of nul tiel corporation must usu. be affirmatively pleaded by a defendant before a plaintiff is required to prove its corporate existence.

nul tiel record, n. [Law French "no such record"] A plea denying the existence of the record on which the plaintiff bases a claim. ● Evidence may generally be introduced to invalidate the record only, not the statements in the record. See trial by record under TRIAL.

"The proper general issue in debt on judgments is 'nul tiel record,' which denies the existence of the record alleged. Nul tiel record sets up: (1) the defense either that there is no record at all in existence; or (2) one different from that which the defendant has declared of; or (3) that the judgment is void on the face of the record." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 166, at 330 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

nul tort (nael tort). n. [Law French "no wrong"] Hist. A type of general denial in an action to recover lands and tenements, by which the defendant claims that no wrong was done. See NUL DISSEISIN.

"The general issue, or general plea, is what traverses, thwarts, and denies at once the whole declaration; without offering any special matter whereby to evade it .... [In real actions, nul tort, no wrong done; nul disseisin, no disseisin; and in a writ of right, that the tenant has more right to hold than the demandant has to demand. These pleas are called the general issue, because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration, they amount at once to an issue; by which we mean a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 305 (1768).
nul waste (nal wast), n. [Law French “no waste’’] Hist. The defendant’s general denial in an action to recover damages for the destruction of lands and tenements. See NUL TORT.

number lottery. See Genoese lottery under LOTTERY.

numbers game. A type of lottery in which a person bets that on a given day a certain series of numbers will appear from some arbitrarily chosen source, such as stock-market indexes or the U.S. Treasury balance. • The game creates a fund from which the winner’s share is drawn and is subject to regulation as a lottery.

numerical lottery. See Genoese lottery under LOTTERY.

numerosity (n[y]oo-mar-ahs-a-tee). The requirement in U.S. district courts that, for a case to be certified as a class action, the party applying for certification must show, among other things, that the class of potential plaintiffs is so large that the joinder of all of them into the suit is impracticable. See CLASS ACTION.

nummata (na-may-ta), n. [Law Latin “money’’] The monetary price of something.

nunciatio (nan-shee-ay-toh). See NUNTIACTIO.

nuncio (nan-shee-oh), n. [Italian, fr. Latin nunciare “to announce’’] 1. A papal ambassador to a foreign court or government; a representative of the Vatican in a country that maintains diplomatic relations with it. — Also termed nuncius; nuntio. Cf. INTERNUNCIO; LEGATE. 2. Archaic. A messenger.

nunc pro tunc (nangk pruh tangk or nuungk pruh tuungk). [Latin “now for then’’] Having retroactive legal effect through a court’s inherent power <the court entered a nunc pro tunc order to correct a clerical error in the record>.

“When an order is signed ‘nunc pro tunc’ as of a specified date, it means that a thing is now done which should have been done on the specified date.” 35A C.J.S. Federal Civil Procedure § 370, at 556 (1960).

nunc pro tunc amendment. See AMENDMENT.

nunc pro tunc judgment. See JUDGMENT.

nuncupare (nang-kyuu-pay-ee), vb. [Latin “call by name’’] Hist. To name or pronounce orally. • Nuncupare heredem means to name an heir before public witnesses.

nuncupate (nang-kya-payt), vb. [fr. Latin nuncupare “call by name’’] 1. Hist. To designate or name. 2. To vow or declare publicly and solemnly. 3. To declare orally, as a will. 4. To dedicate or inscribe (a work).

nuncupative (nang-kya-pay-tiv or nang-kyou-pay-tiv), adj. [fr. Latin nuncupare “to name’’] Stated by spoken word; declared orally.

nuncupative will. See WILL.

nundinae (nan-da-nee), n. [fr. Latin novem “nine’’ + dies “day’’] 1. Roman law. A fair or market. 2. Roman law. The period between two consecutive markets (usu. eight days). • This period was often fixed for the payment of debts.

nundination (nan-di-nay-shan), n. [fr. Latin nundinatio “the holding of a market or fair’’] Hist. The act of buying or selling at a fair.

nunquam indebitatus (nan[g]-kwam in-debi-tay-tos), n. [Latin “never indebted’’] Hist. A defensive plea in a debt action, by which the defendant denies any indebtedness to the plaintiff. Cf. CONCESSIT SOLVERE.

nuntiation (nan-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin “a declaration’’] Hist. A formal declaration or protest. • A nuntiation novi operis was an injunction placed on the construction of a new building by the person protesting the construction. — Also spelled nunciatio.

nuntio. See NUNCIO.

nuntius (nan-shee-as), n. [Latin “bearer of news’’] 1. Roman law. A messenger. • Declarations through a messenger were usu. as valid as those by letter. 2. Hist. A messenger sent to make an excuse for a party’s absence in court. 3. Hist. An officer of the court. — Also termed summonner; beadle. 4. Eccles. law. NUNCIO (1).

nuper obiit (n[y]oo-par oh-bee-it), n. [Latin “lately died’’] Hist. A writ available to an heir to establish the equal division of land when, on the death of an ancestor who held the estate in fee simple, a coheir took the land and prevented the other heirs from possessing it. The writ was abolished in 1833. See coparcener.

nuptiae (nɔp-shee-ee). See matrimonium.

nuptiae secundae (nɔp-shee-ee sə-kɔn-dee), n. [Latin] Eccles. law. A second or subsequent marriage. • In canon law, second or subsequent marriages were frowned upon, and priests would not attend those ceremonies.

nuptial (nɔp-shal), adj. Of or relating to marriage.

Nuremberg defense (nɔr-əm-bərg). The defense asserted by a member of the military who has been charged with the crime of failing to obey an order and who claims that the order was illegal, esp. that the order would result in a violation of international law. • The term is sometimes used more broadly to describe situations in which citizens accused of committing domestic crimes, such as degradation of government property, claim that their crimes were justified or mandated by international law.

nurture, vb. 1. To supply with nourishment. 2. To train, educate, or develop.

nychthemeron (nik-thee-mar-ahn), n. [Greek] An entire day and night; a 24-hour period.

nystagmus (ni-stag-mas). A rapid, involuntary jerking or twitching of the eyes, sometimes caused by ingesting drugs or alcohol. • The “horizontal gaze nystagmus test” is one of the field-sobriety tests given to people suspected of being intoxicated. In the procedure, the suspect is told to focus on an object, such as a pencil, and to track its movement, usu. from side to side, by moving only the eyes. Intoxication is indicated if the eyes jerk or twitch while tracking the object.
OASDI. abbr. Old Age, Survivors, Disability, and Disability Insurance. See OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

OASI. abbr. OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

OATH. abbr. OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

oath. 1. A solemn declaration, accompanied by a swearing to God or a revered person or thing, that one's statement is true or that one will be bound to a promise. • The person making the oath implicitly invites punishment if the statement is untrue or the promise is broken. The legal effect of an oath is to subject the person to penalties for perjury if the testimony is false.

2. A statement or promise made by such a declaration.

3. A form of words used for such a declaration.

4. A formal declaration made solemn without a swearing to God or a revered person or thing; AFFIRMATION.

"The word 'oath' (apart from its use to indicate a profane expression) has two very different meanings: (1) a solemn appeal to God in attestation of the truth of a statement or the binding character of such a promise; (2) a statement or promise made under the sanction of such an appeal." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 515 (3d ed. 1982).

assertory oath (a-sor-to-ree). An oath by which one attests to some factual matter, rather than making a promise about one's future conduct. • A courtroom witness typically takes such an oath.

corporal oath (kor-par-al). An oath made solemn by touching a sacred object, esp. the Bible.

"Oath (Juramentum) Is a calling Almighty God to witness that the Testimony is true; therefore it is aptly termed Sacramentum, a Holy Band, a Sacred Tye, or Godly Vow. And it is called a Corporal Oath, because the party when he swears, toucheth with his right hand the Holy Evangelists or Book of the New Testament." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

decisive oath. Civil law. An oath by a party in a lawsuit, used to decide the case because the party's adversary, not being able to furnish adequate proof, offered to refer the decision of the case to the party. — Also termed decisive oath.

extrajudicial oath. An oath that, although formally sworn, is taken outside a legal proceeding or outside the authority of law.

judicial oath. An oath taken in the course of a judicial proceeding, esp. in open court.

loyalty oath. See oath of allegiance.

oath ex officio (eks a-fish-ee-oh). At common law, an oath under which a member of the clergy who was accused of a crime could swear innocence before an ecclesiastical court.

oath in litem (lit-tem or -tem). Civil law. An oath taken by a plaintiff in testifying to the value of the thing in dispute when there is no evidence of value or when the defendant has fraudulently suppressed evidence of value.

oath of allegiance. An oath by which one promises to maintain fidelity to a particular sovereign or government. • This oath is most often administered to a high public officer, to a soldier or sailor, or to an alien applying for naturalization. — Also termed loyalty oath; test oath.

oath of calumny (kal-am-nee). An oath, taken by a plaintiff or defendant, that attests to the party's good faith and to the party's belief that there is a bona fide cause of action. See CALUMNY.

oath of office. An oath taken by a person about to enter into the duties of public office, by which the person promises to perform the duties of that office in good faith.

oath of supremacy. Hist. English law. An oath required of those taking office, along with the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, declaring that the sovereign is superior to the church in ecclesiastical matters.

oath purgatory. See purgatory oath.

oath suppletory. See suppletory oath.

pauper's oath. An affidavit or verification of poverty by a person requesting public funds or services. See poverty affidavit under AFFIDAVIT; IN FORMA PAUPERIS. promissory oath. An oath that binds the party to observe a specified course of conduct in the future. • Both the oath of office and the oath of allegiance are types of promissory oaths.

purgatory oath. An oath taken to clear oneself of a charge or suspicion. — Also termed oath purgatory.

suppletory oath (sap-lə-tor-ē). 1. Civil law. An oath administered to a party, rather than a witness, in a case in which a fact has been proved by only one witness. • In a civil-law case, two witnesses are needed to constitute full proof. See HALF-PROOF. 2. An oath administered to a party to authenticate or support some piece of documentary evidence offered by the party. — Also termed oath suppletory.

test oath. See oath of allegiance.

oath against an oath. See SWARING CONTEST.

oath ex officio. See OATH.

Oath or Affirmation Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution requiring members of Congress and the state legislatures, and all member of the executive or judicial branches — state or local — to pledge by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

oath purgatory. See purgatory oath under OATH.

oath-rite. The form or ceremony used when taking an oath.

oath suppletory. See suppletory oath under OATH.

oathworthy, adj. Legally capable of making an oath.

obaeratus (oh-ba-ray-tas). [Latin] Roman law. A debtor obliged to serve the creditor until the debt is discharged.

ob continentiam delicti (ob kon-ta-nen-shē-əm de-lik-ti). [Latin] On account of contingency to the offense; being contaminated by association with something illegal.

obedience. Compliance with a law, command, or authority.

obediential obligation. See OBLIGATION.

obiit (oh-bee-it). [Latin] He died; she died.

obit. 1. Archaic. A memorial service on the anniversary of a person’s death. 2. A record or notice of a person’s death; an obituary.

obiter (oh-bid-ar), adv. [Latin “by the way”] Incidentally; in passing <the judge said, obiter, that a nominal sentence would be inappropriate>.

obiter, n. See OBITER DICTUM.

obiter dictum (ob-i-tar dik-tam), [Latin “something said in passing”] A judicial comment made during the course of delivering a judicial opinion, but one that is unnecessary to the decision in the case and therefore not precedential (though it may be considered persuasive). — Often shortened to dictum or, less commonly, obiter. Pl. obiter dicta. See DICTUM. Cf. HOLDING (1); RATIO DECIDENDI.

“Strictly speaking an ‘obiter dictum’ is a remark made or opinion expressed by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, ‘by the way’ — that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon the question before the court; or it is any statement of law enunciated by the judge or court merely by way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion.... In the common speech of lawyers, all such extrajudicial expressions of legal opinion are referred to as ‘dicta,’ or ‘obiter dicta,’ these two terms being used interchangeably.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 304 (3d ed. 1914).
obiter ex post facto (ob-i-tar eks post fak-toh). A court’s holding that, according to a later court, was expressed in unnecessarily broad terms. • Some authorities suggest that this is not, properly speaking, a type of obiter dictum at all.

object (ob-jekt), n. 1. A person or thing to which thought, feeling, or action is directed <the natural object of one’s bounty>. See NATURAL OBJECT. 2. Something sought to be attained or accomplished; an end, goal, or purpose <the financial objects of the joint venture>.

object (ah-jekt), vb. 1. To state in opposition; to put forward as an objection <the plaintiff objected that the defendant’s discovery requests were overbroad>. 2. To state or put forward an objection, esp. to something in a judicial proceeding <the defense objected to the testimony on the ground that it was privileged>. — ob- jector, n.

objection, n. A formal statement opposing something that has occurred, or is about to occur, in court and seeking the judge’s immediate ruling on the point. • The party objecting must usu. state the basis for the objection to preserve the right to appeal an adverse ruling.

continuing objection. A single objection to all the questions in a given line of questioning. • A judge may allow a lawyer to make a continuing objection when the judge has overruled an objection applicable to many questions, and the lawyer wants to preserve the objection for the appellate record. — Also termed running objection.

general objection. An objection made without specifying any grounds in support of the objection. • A general objection preserves only the issue of relevancy. — Also termed broadside objection.

speaking objection. An objection that contains more information (often in the form of argument) than needed by the judge to sustain or overrule it. • Many judges prohibit lawyers from using speaking objections, and sometimes even from stating the grounds for objections, because of the potential for influencing the jury.

specific objection. An objection that is accompanied by a statement of one or more grounds in support of the objection.

objection in point of law. A defensive pleading by which the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff but objects that they do not make out a legal claim.

objective, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or based on externally verifiable phenomena, as opposed to an individual’s perceptions, feelings, or intentions <the objective facts>. 2. Without bias or prejudice; disinterested <because her son was involved, she felt she could not be objective>. Cf. SUBJECTIVE.

objective ethics. See MORAL ABSOLUTISM.

objective meaning. See MEANING.

objective novation. See NOVATION.

objective standard. See STANDARD.

objective theory of contract. The doctrine that a contract is not an agreement in the sense of a subjective meeting of the minds but is instead a series of external acts giving the objective semblance of agreement. • Often shortened to objective theory. Cf. SUBJECTIVE THEORY OF CONTRACT; MEETING OF THE MINDS.

object of a right. The thing in respect of which a right exists; the subject matter of a right. — Also termed subject of a right. See SUBJECT OF A RIGHT.

object offense. See OFFENSE (1).

object of the power. See permissible appointee under APPOINTEE.

object of the power of appointment. See permissible appointee under APPOINTEE.

objurgatrix (ob-jor-gay-triks). Hist. A common scold. See SCOLD.

oblation (ah-blay-shan). An offering or sacrifice, esp. one in a religious or ritualistic ceremony.

oblige, vb. 1. To bind by legal or moral duty. 2. To commit (funds, property, etc.) to meet or secure an obligation.

obligatio civilis (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh-sə-vi-lis). [Latin “civil obligation”] 1. An obligation recognized under jus civilis as opposed to one recognized only under jus honorarium. — Also termed obligatio praetoria (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh pri-tər-ee-a); obligatio honoraria (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh [h]ən-ər-ray-ee-a). 2. A legally enforceable obligation, such as one by contract.

obligatio ex delicto (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh eks də-li-k-təh). [Latin “tortious obligation”] An obligation arising from a wrongdoing against the person or property of another; an obligation enforceable in tort. — Also termed obligatio ex maleficio (mal-ə-fish-ee-oh).

obligatio naturalis (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh nach-ə-ray-lis). [Latin “natural obligation”] An obligation that is not legally enforceable; an obligation deriving only from the law of nature.

obligatio quasi ex contractu (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh kwaɪ-stər [or -zəl] eks kan-tra-k-təl-yoo). [Latin “obligation from quasi-contract”] An obligation arising between two persons who have not contracted with each other but have formed a relationship similar to a contractual one; a quasi-contractual obligation. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT.

obligatio quasi ex delicto (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh kwaɪ-stər [or -zəl] eks də-li-k-təh). [Latin “obligation from something resembling a tort”] An obligation arising from a wrong that is not covered by an obligatio ex delicto but that nonetheless creates liability. — Also termed obligatio quasi ex maleficio (mal-ə-fish-ee-oh).

obligation, n. 1. A legal or moral duty to do or not do something. 2. A formal, binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain amount or to do a certain thing for a particular person or set of persons. — Also termed legal obligation. See DUTY; LIABILITY.

| "[I]n English-speaking countries an unfortunate habit has arisen of using ‘obligation’ in a lax manner as co-extensive with duties of every kind." Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 82 (1896).
| "A man cannot be obliged or bound to the entire community: his duties to the political society of which he is a member are matters of public, or criminal law. Nor can the whole community be under an obligation to him: the rights on his part correlative to the duties owed to him would be rights in rem, would be in the nature of property as opposed to obligation. The word obligation has been unfortunately used in this sense by Austin and Bentham as including the general duty, which the law imposes on all, to respect such rights as the law sanctions. Whether the rights are to personal freedom or security, to character, or to those more material objects which we commonly call property, they impose corresponding duties on all to forbear from molesting the right. Such rights are rights in rem. But it is of the essence of obligation that the duties which it imposes are imposed on definite persons, and are themselves definite: the rights which it creates are rights in personam." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 9 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

| "Obligation in its popular sense is merely a synonym for duty. Its legal sense, derived from Roman law, differs from this in several respects. In the first place, obligations are merely one class of duties, namely, those which are the correlatives of rights in personam. An obligation is the vinculum juris, or bond of legal necessity, which binds together two or more determinate individuals. Secondly, the term obligation is in law the name, not merely of the duty, but also of the correlative right. It denotes the legal relation or vinculum juris in its entirety, including the right of the one party, no less than the liability of the other. Looked at from the point of view of the person entitled, an obligation is a right; looked at from the point of view of the person bound, it is a duty. — An obligation, therefore, may be defined as a proprietary right in personam or a duty which corresponds to such a right." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 460 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

absolute obligation. An obligation requiring strict fulfillment according to the terms of the engagement, without any alternatives to the obligor.

accessory obligation. An obligation that is incidental to another obligation. • For example, a mortgage to secure payment of a bond is an accessory obligation. The primary obligation is to pay the bond itself. Cf. primary obligation (1).

alternative obligation. An obligation that can be satisfied in two different ways, at the choice of the obligor.

bifactorial obligation (bi-fak-tər-əl). An obligation created by two parties.

conditional obligation. An obligation that depends on an uncertain event.

conventional obligation. An obligation that results from actual agreement of the parties; a contractual obligation. Cf. obedi-ential obligation.

corrreal obligation (kor-ee-al or kə-ree-al). Roman law. A joint obligation.

| "A correal obligation means a plurality of obligations based on a community of obligation: a joint liability in respect of the whole of the same debt or a joint right in respect of the whole of the same claim." Rudolph Sohm, *The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of..."
current obligation. An obligation that is presently enforceable, but not past due.

inheritable obligation. An obligation that may be enforced by a successor of the creditor or against a successor of the debtor. — Also termed heritable obligation.

joint obligation. 1. An obligation that binds two or more debtors to a single performance for one creditor. 2. An obligation that binds one debtor to a single performance for two or more creditors.

natural obligation. Civil law. A moral duty that is not enforceable by judicial action. ● Natural obligations are recognized in civil-law jurisdictions. While they are not enforceable by judicial action, something that has been performed under a natural obligation may not be reclaimed. For example, if an indigent patient in a hospital has no legal obligation to pay for the treatment but does so anyway, that person cannot later reclaim the payments voluntarily made. — Also termed obli-gatio naturalis.

obediential obligation (o-bee-dee-en-shal). An obligation incumbent on the parties as a result of their situation or relationship, such as an obligation of parents to care for their children. Cf. conventional obligation.

primary obligation. 1. An obligation that arises from the essential purpose of the transaction between the parties. Cf. accessory obligation. 2. A fundamental contractual term imposing a requirement on a contracting party from which other obligations may arise.

pure obligation. Scots law. An absolute obligation already due and immediately enforceable.

secondary obligation. A duty, promise, or undertaking that is incident to a primary obligation; esp., a duty to make reparation upon a breach of contract. — Also termed accessory obligation.

several obligation. 1. An obligation that binds two or more debtors to separate performances for one creditor. 2. An obligation that binds one debtor to separate performances for two or more creditors.

simple obligation. An obligation that does not depend on an outside event; an unconditional obligation.

single obligation. An obligation with no penalty attached for nonperformance, as when one party simply promises to pay 20 dollars to another.

solidary obligation (sol-a-der-e). Roman & civil law. An obligation that binds each of two or more debtors for the entire performance. ● Solidary obligations are analogous to common-law joint and several obligations.

“A solidary obligation means the separate liability of several persons in respect of one and the same object. The normal case of a solidary obligation is a joint delict, as when two or more persons, acting jointly, do damage to property or commit a theft. So far as the obligation creates a duty to pay damages, it is solidary. Each of the co-delinquents is liable to make good the whole of the same damage.” Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 361–62 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

statutory obligation. An obligation — whether to pay money, perform certain acts, or discharge duties — that is created by or arises out of a statute, rather than based on an independent contractual or legal relationship.

unifactorial obligation (yoo-na-fak-tar-al). An obligation created by one party.

obligation, mutuality of. See MUTUALITY OF OB-LIGATION.

obligational. See OBLIGATORY.

obligatio naturalis. See OBLIGATIO.

obligation bond. See general obligation bond under BOND (3).

obligationes innominati. See INNOMINATE OBLIGATIONS.

Obligation of Contracts Clause. See CONTRACTS CLAUSE.

obligations, law of. See LAW OF OBLIGATIONS.

obligatio praetoria. See obligatio civilis (1) under OBLIGATIO.

obligatio quasi ex contractu. See OBLIGATIO.

obligatio quasi ex delicto. See OBLIGATIO.

obligatio quasi ex maleficio. See obligatio quasi ex delicto under OBLIGATIO.

obligatory (o-blig-a-tor-e). adj. 1. Legally or morally binding <an obligatory promise>. 2. Required; mandatory <attendance is not obligatory>. 3. Creating or recording an obligation . — Also termed (rarely) obligatory.
oblige (oblิต), vb. 1. To bind by legal or moral duty; obligate. 2. To bind by doing a favor or service.

oblige (oblጹ-że). 1. One to whom an obligation is owed; a promisee or creditor. 2. Archaic. One who is obliged to do something; OBLIGOR (1).

“Several dictionaries, such as The Random House College Dictionary (rev. ed. 1988) and Webster’s New World Dictionary (1979), define oblige in its etymological sense (‘obliged’), as if it were synonymous with obligor. Random House, for example, defines obligee as ‘a person who is under obligation,’ but that meaning ought to be reserved for obligor. An obligee, in modern usage, is one to whom an obligation is owed.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 609 (2d ed. 1995).

obliger (oblጹ-gor or ob-lጹ-gor). 1. One who has undertaken an obligation; a promisor or debtor. 2. Archaic. One who obliges another to do something; OBLIGEE (1).

oblique evidence. See circumstantial evidence under EVIDENCE.

obliquus (ob-lিক-was). [Latin “oblique”] Hist. (Of a line of descent) collateral; indirect. Cf. RECTUS.

obliterate, vb. 1. To wipe out, rub off, or erase (a writing or other markings). 2. To remove from existence; to destroy all traces of. — obliteration, n.

obliterated corner. See CORNER.

oblivion. 1. The act or fact of forgetting or having forgotten <the oblivion of sleep>. 2. The state of being completely forgotten or unknown . 3. An official disregard of an offense; pardon; amnesty <an act of oblivion by Parliament>.

obloquy (ob-la-kwee). 1. Abusive or defamatory language; CALUMNY. 2. The state or condition of being ill spoken of; disgrace or bad repute.

obnoxious, adj. 1. Offensive; objectionable <obnoxious behavior>. 2. Contrary; opposed . 3. Archaic. Exposed to harm; liable to something undesirable <actions obnoxious to criticism>.

obruption (ob-reপ-শন). The obtaining of a gift or dispensation from a sovereign or ecclesiastical authority by fraud. Cf. SUBREPTION.

obrogate (ob-ra-gayt), vb. Civil law. To modify or repeal (a law) in whole or in part by passing a new law. — obrogation, n. Cf. ABRIGATE.

obscene, adj. Extremely offensive under contemporary community standards of morality and decency; grossly repugnant to the generally accepted notions of what is appropriate. • Under the Supreme Court’s three-part test, material is legally obscene — and therefore not protected under the First Amendment — if, taken as a whole, the material (1) appeals to the prurient interest in sex, as determined by the average person applying contemporary community standards; (2) portrays sexual conduct, as specifically defined by the applicable state law, in a patently offensive way; and (3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607 (1973).

“If there be no abstract definition, ... should not the word ‘obscene’ be allowed to indicate the present critical point in the compromise between candor and shame at which the community may have arrived here and now?” United States v. Kennerley, 209 F. 119, 121 (S.D.N.Y. 1913) (per Hand, J.).

obscenity, n. 1. The quality or state of being morally abhorrent or socially taboo, esp. as a result of referring to or depicting sexual or excretory functions. 2. Something (such as an expression or act) that has this quality. See CONTEMPORARY COMMUNITY STANDARD. Cf. INDECENCY.

“Obscenity is not deemed to be protected by the First Amendment, and the operative legal tests for obscenity are spongy and leave much to the vagaries of juries asked to evaluate expert testimony on literary merit, offensiveness, and other unmeasurables.” Richard A. Posner, Law and Literature: A Misunderstood Relation 329 (1988).

observe, vb. To adhere to or abide by (a law, rule, or custom) .

observer, Int’l law. A representative of a country or international organization who attends meetings of an international body (such as the United Nations) to which the observer’s country does not belong. • Observers do not vote or sign documents, but they are sometimes allowed to participate in discussions.

obsignare (ob-sig-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To seal up, as with money that has been tendered and refused.

obsignation, n. A formal ratification or confirmation, esp. by an official seal. — obsignatory (ob-sig-na-tor-ee), adj.

obsolescence (ob-sa-les-ants). 1. The process or state of falling into disuse or becoming obsolete. 2. A diminution in the value or usefulness of property, esp. as a result of technological advances. • For tax purposes, obsolescence is usu. distinguished from physical deterioration. Cf. depreciation.

economic obsolescence. Obsolescence that results from external economic factors, such as decreased demand or changed governmental regulations.

functional obsolescence. Obsolescence that results either from inherent deficiencies in the property, such as inadequate equipment or design, or from improvements in the property since its use began.

planned obsolescence. A system or policy of deliberately producing consumer goods that will wear out or become outdated after limited use, thus inducing consumers to buy new items more frequently. — Also termed built-in obsolescence.

obsolescent, adj. Going out of use; becoming obsolete.

obsolete, adj. No longer in general use; out-of-date.

obstante (ob-stan-tee or ab-). [Latin] Withstanding; hindering. See NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

obsta principii (ob-sto prin-sip-ee-is). [Latin] Withstand beginnings; resist the first approaches or encroachments.

obstinate desertion. See DESERTION.

obstrict (ob-strikt), vb. To coerce. — obstrictive, adj. — obstrictiveness, n.

"The element of coercion or obstrictiveness. The contrast here is between voluntary and obstricted (or coerced) conduct. The coercion need not be actual (objective), but may be merely potential (subjective) by fear of the possible force; as, when the faithful canine, Towser, susceptible to the sight of a feline enemy, is tempted to pursue, but upon his owner's stern voice and a shake of the stick, Towser turns humbly back and crushes his impulse." John Henry Wigmore, Problems of Law 7-8 (1920).

obstruction of justice. Interference with the orderly administration of law and justice, as by giving false information to or withholding evidence from a police officer or prosecutor, or by harming or intimidating a witness or juror. • Obstruction of justice is a crime in most jurisdictions. — Also termed obstructing justice; obstructing public justice.

"The goal, — to proscribe every wilful act of corruption, intimidation or force which tends in any way to distort or impede the administration of law either civil or criminal — has been very largely attained, partly by aid of legislation. And any punishable mischief of such a nature which is not recognized as a distinct crime, is usually called 'obstruction of justice,' or 'obstructing justice,' — a common-law misdemeanor." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 552 (3d ed. 1982).

obtest (ob- or ab-test), vb. 1. To call to or invoke as a witness. 2. To ask for earnestly; beseech; implore. 3. To protest.

obtulit se (ob-t[y]l-i-se). [Latin] Offered himself. • In old English practice, these words were entered on the record when one party appeared ("offered himself") in court against an opposing party who did not appear.

obviation (ob- or ab-ven-shan). Eccles. law. An incoming fee or revenue, esp. one that comes occasionally or incidentally.

obviate (ob-vee-aht), vb. 1. To dispose of or do away with (a thing); to anticipate and prevent from arising <they obviated the growing problem through legislation>. 2. To make unnecessary <the movant obviated the all-night drafting session by getting the opponent to agree to an extension>. — obviator, n.

obviousness, n. Patents. The quality or state of being easily apparent to a person with ordinary skill in a given art, considering the scope and content of the prior art, so that the person could reasonably believe that, at the time it was conceived, the invention was to be expectobviousness

ed. • An invention that is determined to be obvious cannot be patented. — obvious, adj. Cf. NONOBVIOUSNESS.

obviousness double patenting. See DOUBLE PATENTING.

o.c. abbr. 1. OPE CONSIGILIO. 2. Orphan’s court. See probate court under COURT.

occasio (ə-kay-zhee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A tax that a lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity. 2. Hindrance or trouble; esp., vexatious litigation.

occupancy. 1. The act, state, or condition of holding, possessing, or residing in or on something; actual possession, residence, or tenancy; esp. of a dwelling or land. 2. The act of taking possession of something that has no owner (such as abandoned property) so as to acquire legal ownership. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. 3. The period or term during which one owns, rents, or otherwise occupies property. 4. The state or condition of being occupied. 5. The use to which property is put.

occupant. 1. One who has possessory rights in, or control over, certain property or premises. 2. One who acquires title by occupancy.

general occupant. A person who occupies land in the interim arising after the death of a pur autre vie tenant but before the death of the person who serves as the measuring life for the estate. • A general occupancy can arise when the grant to the pur autre vie tenant does not state who may occupy the land after the death of the first tenant. Because no heir is named, the land can be occupied by the first possessor of the land. — Also termed common occupant. Cf. CESTUI QUE VIE.

special occupant. A pur autre vie tenant’s heir who occupies land in the interim between the death of the tenant and the death of the person who serves as the measuring life for the estate. • A special occupancy can arise when the grant to the pur autre vie tenant provides that possession is for the life of the tenant, then to the tenant’s heirs.

occupare (ok-ya-pair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To seize or take possession of (property); to enter (land) upon a vacant possession.

occupatible (ok-ya-pa-til). Hist. Property that has been left by its rightful owner and is now possessed by another.

occupatio (ok-ya-pay-shee-oh). Roman law. A mode of acquisition by which a person obtains absolute title by first possessing a thing that previously belonged to no one, such as a fish in the sea or a wild bird.

occupation. 1. An activity or pursuit in which a person is engaged; esp., a person’s usual or principal work or business. 2. The possession, control, or use of real property; OCCUPANCY. 3. The seizure and control of a territory by military force; the condition of territory that has been placed under the authority of a hostile army. 4. The period during which territory seized by military force is held.

occupational-disability insurance. See INSURANCE.

occupational disease. A disease that is contracted as a result of exposure to debilitating conditions or substances in the course of employment. • Employees who suffer from occupational diseases are eligible for workers’ compensation. Courts have construed the term to include a variety of ailments, including lung conditions (such as asbestosis or black lung), hearing loss, and carpal tunnel syndrome. — Also termed industrial disease.

“Certain diseases and infirmities which develop gradually and imperceptibly as a result of engaging in particular employments and which are generally known and understood to be usual incidents or hazards thereof, are distinguished from those having a traumatic origin, or otherwise developing suddenly and unexpectedly, by the term ‘occupational,’ and ‘industrial.’” 82 Am. Jur. 2d Workers’ Compensation § 326 (1992).

occupational hazard. A danger or risk that is peculiar to a particular calling or occupation. • Occupational hazards include both accidental injuries and occupational diseases.

Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. A 1970 federal statute that requires employers to (1) keep the workplace free from recognized hazards that cause or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to employees, and (2) comply with standards promulgated by the Secretary of Labor. — Abbr. OSHA (oh-sha).

“Although OSHA has been one of the most controversial pieces of protective legislation ever enacted, Congress has not passed any substantive amendments to the Act. There have been, however, some limitations on OSHA enforcement activity attached to appropriations bills. In addition, OSHA has been affected by newer laws such as the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act, the Equal Access to Justice Act, and the Surface Transportation Assistance Act. . . . The Act covers employment in every state, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. A federal agency that establishes and enforces health and safety standards in various industries. • This agency, created in 1970 as part of the Labor Department, routinely conducts inspections of businesses and issues citations for noncompliance with its standards. — Abbr. OSHA.

occupational tax. See occupation tax under TAX.

occupation tax. See TAX.

occupavit (ok-yah-pay-vit). [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to regain possession to land or a tenement from which one was ejected in time of war.

occupying claimant. A person who claims the right under a statute to recover for the cost of improvements done to land that is later found not to belong to the person.

occurrence. Something that happens or takes place; specif., an accident, event, or continuing condition that results in personal injury or property damage that is neither expected nor intended from the standpoint of an insured party. • This specific sense is the standard definition of the term under most liability policies.

occurrence policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

occurrence rule. Civil procedure. The rule that a limitations period begins to run when the alleged wrongful act or omission occurs, rather than when the plaintiff discovers the injury. • This rule applies, for example, to most breach-of-contract claims. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. Cf. DISCOVERY RULE.

ocean. 1. The continuous body of salt water that covers more than 70% of the earth’s surface; the high seas; the open sea. See SEA. 2. Any of the principal geographic divisions of this body. • There are generally considered to be five oceans: Atlantic, Pacific, Indian, Arctic, and Antarctic.

ocean bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING. ocean marine insurance. See INSURANCE.

octo tales (ok-toh tay-leez or taylz). [Latin “eight such"] 1. A supply of eight additional jurors for a trial. 2. A writ commanding the sheriff to summon eight more jurors for a trial. See TALES.

octroi (ok-troy or ohk-trwah). n. [French] 1. Hist. A grant or privilege of a charter by a sovereign. 2. A local tax levied on certain goods that are brought into a city (esp. in some European countries). 3. The place where such a tax is collected. 4. The agency for collecting such a tax.

octroy (ok-troy), vb. (Of a sovereign) to grant or concede as a privilege.

OD. abbr. 1. Overdose. 2. OVERDRAFT (2). 3. See ordinary seaman under SEAMAN.

odal (oh-dal), n. Hist. Land not subject to feudal duties or burdens; ALLODIUM. — Also termed odal; odhal; odhall. — odal, adj. <an odal right>.

odd-lot, adj. Of, relating to, or designating a worker who is so substantially disabled as to be unable to find stable employment in the ordinary labor market, and thus is considered totally disabled and entitled to workers’-compensation benefits under the odd-lot doctrine <an odd-lot worker who could find only sporadic employment>.

odd-lot doctrine. Workers’ compensation. The doctrine that permits a finding of total disability for an injured claimant who, though able to work sporadically, cannot obtain regular employment and steady income and is thus considered an “odd lot” in the labor market.

odel. See ODAL. odhal. See ODAL. odhall. See ODAL. odo et atia. See DE ODIO ET ATIA.

odium (oh-dee-um). 1. The state or fact of being hated. 2. A state of disgrace, usu. resulting from detestable conduct. 3. Hatred or strong aversion accompanied by loathing or contempt. —  odious, adj.

of counsel. See COUNSEL.

of course. 1. Following the ordinary procedure <the writ was issued as a matter of course>. 2. Naturally; obviously; clearly <we'll appeal that ruling, of course>.

off-board, adj. Outside a major exchange; over-the-counter or between private parties <off-board securities transaction>. — Also termed off-the-board. See OVER-THE-COUNTER.

offender. A person who has committed a crime.

adult offender. 1. A person who has committed a crime after reaching the age of majority. 2. A person who, having committed a crime while a minor, has been convicted after reaching the age of majority. 3. A juvenile who has committed a crime and is tried as an adult rather than as a juvenile.

first offender. A person who authorities believe has committed a crime but who has never before been convicted of a crime. • Such a person is often treated leniently at sentencing or in plea negotiations.

repeat offender. A person who has been convicted of a crime more than once; recidivist.

status offender. A youth who engages in conduct that — though not criminal by adult standards — is considered inappropriate enough to bring a charge against the youth in juvenile court; a juvenile who commits a status offense. Cf. youthful offender; juvenile delinquent.

youthful offender. 1. A person in late adolescence or early adulthood who has been convicted of a crime. • A youthful offender is often eligible for special programs not available to older offenders, including community supervision, the successful completion of which may lead to erasing the conviction from the offender's record. 2. Juvenile delinquent. — Also termed young offender; youth offender. Cf. status offender.

offense (ə-fents). 1. A violation of the law; a crime, often a minor one. See CRIME.

acquisitive offense. An offense characterized by the unlawful appropriation of another's property. • This is a generic term that refers to a variety of crimes (such as larceny) rather than a particular one.

anticipatory offense. See inchoate offense.

arrestable offense. English law. An offense for which the punishment is fixed by law or for which a statute authorizes imprisonment for five years, or an attempt to commit such an offense. • This statutory category, created in 1967, abolished the traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) arrestable offence.

capital offense. A crime for which the death penalty may be imposed. — Also termed capital crime.

civil offense. See public tort under TORT.

cognate offense. A lesser offense that is related to the greater offense because it shares several of the elements of the greater offense and is of the same class or category. • For example, shoplifting is a cognate offense of larceny because both crimes require the element of taking property with the intent to deprive the rightful owner of that property. Cf. lesser included offense.

continuing offense. A crime that is committed over a period of time, such as a conspiracy, so that the last act of the crime controls for the commencement of the statute of limitations.

cumulative offense. An offense committed by repeating the same act at different times.

divisible offense. A crime that includes one or more crimes of lesser grade. • For example, murder is a divisible offense comprising assault, battery, and assault with intent to kill.

extraneous offense. An offense beyond or unrelated to the offense for which a defendant is on trial.

graded offense. A crime that is divided into various degrees of severity with corresponding levels of punishment, such as murder (first-degree and second-degree) or assault (simple and aggravated). See DEGREE (2).

impeachable offense. See IMPEACHABLE OFFENSE.

inchoate offense. A step toward the commission of another crime, the step in itself being serious enough to merit punishment. • In criminal law, the three inchoate offenses are attempt, conspiracy, and solicitation. The term is sometimes criticized (see quot. below). — Also termed anticipatory offense; inchoate crime; preliminary crime.

“These preliminary crimes have sometimes been erroneously described as ‘inchoate’ offenses. This is misleading because the word ‘inchoate’ connotes something which is not yet completed, and it is therefore not accurately used to denote something which is itself complete, even though it be a link in a chain of events leading to some object which is not yet attained. The offense of incitement is fully performed even though the person incited immediately repudiates the suggested deed; a conspiracy is committed although the conspirators have not yet moved to execute their purposed crime, and the performance of a criminal attempt must always have been reached before the end is gained. In all these instances it is the ultimate crime which is inchoate and not the preliminary crime, the position indeed being just the same as in the example imagined above of a man who stole a revolver and committed other crimes in order to effect his purpose of murder. There the murder was inchoate, but the larceny and other crimes (including the attempt) were completed.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 77 (16th ed. 1952).

included offense. See lesser included offense.

index offense. One of eight classes of crimes reported annually by the FBI in the Uniform Crime Report. The eight classes are murder (and nonnegligent homicide), rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny-theft, arson, and auto theft. — Also termed index crime.

indictable offense. A crime that can be prosecuted only by indictment. In federal court, such an offense is one punishable by death or by imprisonment for more than one year or at hard labor. Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(a).

See INDICTMENT.

joint offense. An offense (such as conspiracy) committed by the participation of two or more persons.

lesser included offense. A crime that is composed of some, but not all, of the elements of a more serious crime and that is necessarily committed in carrying out the greater crime <battery is a lesser included offense of murder>. For double-jeopardy purposes, a lesser included offense is considered the “same offense” as the greater offense, so that acquittal or conviction of either offense precludes a separate trial for the other. — Also termed included offense; necessarily included offense. Cf. cognate offense.

liquor offense. Any crime involving the inappropriate use or sale of intoxicating liquor. See DRAM-SHOP LIABILITY; DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

multiple offense. An offense that violates more than one law but that may require different proof so that an acquittal or conviction under one statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution under another.

necessarily included offense. See lesser included offense.

negligent offense. A violation of law arising from a defective discharge of duty or from criminal negligence. See criminal negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

object offense. The crime that is the object of the defendant’s attempt, solicitation, conspiracy, or complicity. For example, murder is the object offense in a charge of attempted murder. — Also termed target offense.

offense against property. A crime against another’s personal property. The common-law offenses against property were larceny, embezzlement, cheating, cheating by false pretenses, robbery, receiving stolen goods, malicious mischief, forgery, and uttering forged instruments. Although the term crimes against property, a common term in modern usage, includes crimes against real property, the term offense against property is traditionally restricted to personal property. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PROPERTY.

offense against public justice and authority. A crime that impairs the administration of justice. The common-law offenses of this type were obstruction of justice, barratry, maintenance, champerty, embracery, escape, prison breach, rescue, misprision of felony, compounding a crime, subornation of perjury, bribery, and misconduct in office.

offense against the habitation. A crime against another’s house — traditionally either arson or burglary.

offense against the person. A crime against the body of another human being. The common-law offenses against the person were murder, manslaughter, mayhem, rape, assault, battery, robbery, false imprisonment, abortion, seduction, kidnapping, and abduction. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.

offense against the public health, safety, comfort, and morals. A crime traditionally viewed as endangering the whole of society. The common-law offenses of this type were nuisance, bigamy, adultery, fornication, lewdness, illicit cohabitation, incest, miscegenation, sodomy, bestiality, buggery, abortion, and seduction.

offense against the public peace. A crime that tends to disturb the peace. The common-law offenses of this type were riot, unlawful assembly, dueling, rout, affray, forcible entry and detainer, and libel on a private person.

petty offense. A minor or insignificant crime.

"We find . . . an apparent implication that a 'petty offense' is not a 'crime.' Much could be said for such a position but it is not the law at the present time. In the federal penal code, for example, it is provided that any misdemeanor 'the penalty for which does not exceed imprisonment for a period of six months or a fine of not more than $500, or both, is a petty offense.' " Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 22 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting 18 USCA § 1(3)).

political offense. See POLITICAL OFFENSE.

public offense. An act or omission forbidden by law.

public-welfare offense. A minor offense that involves no moral delinquency, being intended only to secure the effective regulation of conduct in the interest of the community. • An example is driving a car with one brake-light missing. — Also termed regulatory offense; contravention.

regulatory offense. 1. A statutory crime, as opposed to a common-law crime. 2. See public-welfare offense.

same offense. 1. For double-jeopardy purposes, the same criminal act, omission, or transaction for which the person has already stood trial. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY. 2. For sentencing and enhancement-of-punishment purposes, an offense that is quite similar to a previous one.

second offense. An offense committed after conviction for a first offense. • The previous conviction, not the indictment, forms the basis of the charge of a second offense.

separate offense. 1. An offense arising out of the same event as another offense but containing some differences in elements of proof. • A person may be tried, convicted, and sentenced for each separate offense. 2. An offense arising out of a different event entirely from another offense under consideration.

serious offense. An offense not classified as a petty offense and usu. carrying at least a six-month sentence. — Also termed serious crime. Cf. petty offense.

sexual offense. An offense involving unlawful sexual conduct, such as prostitution, indecent exposure, incest, pederasty, and bestiality.

status offense. 1. See status crime under CRIME. 2. A minor’s violation of the juvenile code by doing some act that would not be considered illegal if an adult did it, but that indicates that the minor is beyond parental control. • Examples include running away from home, truancy, and incorrigibility. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

substantive offense (sub-stan-tiv). A crime that is complete in itself and is not dependent on another crime for one of its elements. — Also termed substantive crime.

summary offense. An offense (such as a petty misdemeanor) that can be prosecuted without an indictment. Cf. indictable offense.

target offense. See OBJECT OFFENSE.

unnatural offense. See SODOMY.

unrelated offense. A crime that is independent from the charged offense.

2. Civil law. An intentional unlawful act that causes injury or loss to another and that gives rise to a claim for damages. • This sense of offense is essentially the same as the common-law intentional tort.

quasi-offense. Civil law. A negligent unlawful act that causes injury or loss to another and that gives rise to a claim for damages. • This is equivalent to the common-law tort of negligence. — Also termed quasi-delict.

offense against property. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against public justice and authority. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the habitation. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the person. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the public health, safety, comfort, and morals. See OFFENSE (1).

offensive (a-fen-siv), adj. 1. Of or for attack <an offensive weapon>. 2. Unpleasant or disagreeable to the senses; obnoxious <an offensive odor>. 3. Causing displeasure, anger, or resentment; esp., repugnant to the prevailing sense of what is decent or moral <patently offensive language and photographs>. See OBSCENE.

offensive and defensive league. Int’l law. A league binding the parties not only to aid one another when attacked but also to support one another when attacking in offensive warfare.

offensive collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL. offensive strike. See STRIKE.

offensive-use waiver. An exemption from the attorney-client privilege, whereby a litigant is considered to have waived the privilege by seeking affirmative relief, if the claim relies on privileged information that would be outcome-determinative and that the opposing party has no other way to obtain. Cf. AT-ISSUE WAIVER.

offer, n. 1. The act or an instance of presenting something for acceptance <the prosecutor’s offer of immunity>. 2. A promise to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future; a display of willingness to enter into a contract on specified terms, made in a way that would lead a reasonable person to understand that an acceptance, having been sought, will result in a binding contract <she accepted the $750 offer on the Victorian armoire>. Cf. ACCEPTANCE.

"[A]n offer is, in effect, a promise by the offeror to do or abstain from doing something, provided that the offeree will accept the offer and pay or promise to pay the ‘price’ of the offer. The price, of course, need not be a monetary one. In fact, in bilateral contracts, as we explained earlier, the mere promise of payment of the price suffices to conclude the contract, while in a unilateral contract it is the actual payment of the price which is required." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 44 (3d ed. 1981).

irrevocable offer (i-rev-ə-ka-bal). An offer that includes a promise to keep it open for a specified period, during which the offer cannot be withdrawn without the offeror’s becoming subject to liability for breach of contract. ● Traditionally, this type of promise must be supported by consideration to be enforceable, but under UCC § 2-205, a merchant’s signed, written offer giving assurances that it will be held open — but lacking consideration — is nonetheless irrevocable for the stated period (or, if not stated, for a reasonable time not exceeding three months). — Also termed (in the UCC) firm offer; (specif.) merchant’s firm offer.

"It has sometimes been asserted that an irrevocable offer is ‘a legal impossibility.’ See Langdell, Summary of the Law of Contracts, § 175, also § 4; Wormer, ‘The True Conception of Unilateral Contracts,’ 26 Yale Law Journal 137, note; Lee, Title Contracts, in Jenks’ Dig. of Eng. Civ. Law, § 195; Ashley, Contracts, § 13. A close analysis shows that there is nothing impossible either in the conception itself or in its application. If we define ‘offer’ as an act on the part of the offeror . . . , then no offer can ever be revoked, for it is of yesterday — it is indeed factum. But if we mean by ‘offer’ the legal relation that results from the offeror’s act, the power then given to the offeree of creating contractual relations by doing certain voluntary acts on his part, then the offer may be either revocable or irrevocable according to the circumstances. The idea of an irrevocable power is not at all an unfamiliar one.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 53–54 n.3 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

offer to all the world. An offer, by way of advertisement, of a reward for the rendering of specified services, addressed to the public at large. ● As soon as someone renders the services, a contract is made.

public-exchange offer. A takeover attempt in which the bidder corporation offers to exchange some of its securities for a specified number of the target corporation’s voting shares. Cf. TENDER OFFER.

standing offer. An offer that is in effect a whole series of offers, each of which is capable of being converted into a contract by a distinct acceptance.

two-tier offer. See TWO-TIER OFFER.

3. A price at which one is ready to buy or sell; BID <she lowered her offer to $200>. 4. ATTEMPT (2) <an offer to commit battery>. — offer, vb. — offeror, n. — offeree, n.

"Where criminal assault has been given this dual scope, a definition in terms of ‘an attempt or offer’ to commit a battery is assumed to represent both grounds. The word ‘offer,’ it is said, signifies a threat that places the other in reasonable apprehension of receiving an immediate battery. It would be a mistake, however, to assume that the word carried any such significance when it first appeared in the definition of this offense. In one of its meanings, ‘offer’ is a synonym of ‘attempt.’ " Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 163 (3d ed. 1982).

offering, n. 1. The act of making an offer; something offered for sale. 2. The sale of an issue of securities. See ISSUE (2).

all-or-none offering. An offering that allows the issuer to terminate the distribution if the entire block of offered securities is not sold.

initial public offering. A company’s first public sale of stock; the first offering of an issuer’s equity securities to the public through a registration statement. — Abbr. IPO.

negotiated offering. A securities offering in which the terms (including the underwriters’ compensation) have been negotiated between the issuer and the underwriters.

primary offering. An offering of newly issued securities.

private offering. An offering made only to a small group of interested buyers. — Also termed private placement.
public offering. An offering made to the general public.

registered offering. A public offering of securities registered with the SEC and with appropriate state securities commissions. — Also termed registered public offering.

rights offering. An issue of stock-purchase rights allowing shareholders to buy newly issued stock at a fixed price, usu. below market value, and in proportion to the number of shares they already own. — Also termed privileged subscription. Cf. PREEMPTIVE RIGHT.

secondary offering. 1. Any offering by an issuer of securities after its initial public offering. 2. An offering of previously issued securities by persons other than the issuer. See secondary distribution (1) under DISTRIBUTION.

special offering. An offering of a large block of stock that, because of its size and the market in the particular issue, is specially handled on the floor of the stock exchange.

undigested offering. A public offering of securities that remain unsold because there is insufficient demand at the offered price.

offering circular. A document, similar to a prospectus, that provides information about a private securities offering. — Also termed offering statement.

offering price. See asking price under PRICE.

offering statement. See OFFERING CIRCULAR.

offer of compromise. An offer by one party to settle a dispute amicably (usu. by paying money) to avoid or end a lawsuit or other legal action. • An offer of compromise is usu. not admissible at trial as evidence of the offering party's liability. — Also termed offer in compromise; offer of settlement.

offer of judgment. A settlement offer by one party to allow a specified judgment to be taken against the party. • In federal procedure (and in many states), if the adverse party rejects the offer, and if a judgment finally obtained by that party is not more favorable than the offer, then that party must pay the costs incurred after the offer was made. Fed. R. Civ. P. 68.

offer of performance. Contracts. One party's reasonable assurance to the other, through words or conduct, of a present ability to fulfill contractual obligations. • When performances are to be exchanged simultaneously, each party is entitled to refuse to proceed with the exchange until the other party makes an appropriate offer of performance.

"The requirement of an offer of performance is to be applied in the light of what is reasonably to be expected by the parties in view of the practical difficulties of absolute simultaneity and is subject to the agreement of the parties, as supplemented or qualified by usage and course of dealing." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 238 cmt. b (1981).

offer of proof. Procedure. A presentation of evidence for the record (but outside the jury's presence) usu. made after the judge has sustained an objection to the admissibility of that evidence, so that the evidence can be preserved on the record for an appeal of the judge's ruling. • An offer of proof, which may also be used to persuade the court to admit the evidence, consists of three parts: (1) the evidence itself, (2) an explanation of the purpose for which it is offered (its relevance), and (3) an argument supporting admissibility. Such an offer may include tangible evidence or testimony (through questions and answers, a lawyer's narrative description, or an affidavit). Fed. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). — Also termed avowal.

offer of settlement. See OFFER OF COMPROMISE.

offer to all the world. See OFFER.

office practitioner. A lawyer who does not litigate; an attorney whose work is accomplished primarily in the office, without court appearances. — Also termed office lawyer.

officer. 1. A person who holds an office of trust, authority, or command. • In public affairs, the term refers esp. to a person holding public office under a national, state, or local government, and authorized by that government to exercise some specific function. In corporate law, the term refers esp. to a person elected or appointed by the board of directors to manage the daily operations of a corporation, such as a CEO, president, secretary, or treasurer. Cf. Director (2).

acting officer. One performing the duties of an office — usu. temporarily — but who has no claim of title to the office.

administrative officer. 1. An officer of the executive department of government, usu. of inferior rank. 2. A ministerial or executive officer, as distinguished from a judicial officer.

corporate officer. An officer of a corporation, such as a CEO, president, secretary, or treasurer.

county officer. An officer whose authority and jurisdiction are confined to the limits of the county served.

de facto officer. See officer de facto.

de jure officer. See officer de jure.

legislative officer. 1. A member of a federal, state, or municipal legislative body. 2. A government official whose duties relate primarily to the enactment of laws, such as a federal or state congressman. • State and federal constitutions generally restrict legislative officers' duties to the enactment of legislation. But legislative officers occasionally exercise judicial functions, such as presenting or hearing cases of impeachment of other government officers.

ministerial officer. An officer who primarily executes mandates issued by the officer's superiors. • One who performs specified legal duties when the appropriate conditions have been met, but who does not exercise personal judgment or discretion in performing those duties.

officer de facto (di fak-toh). 1. An officer who exercises the duties of an office under color of an appointment or election, but who has failed to qualify for office for any one of various reasons, as by being under the required age, having failed to take the oath, having not furnished a required bond, or having taken office under a statute later declared unconstitutional. 2. Corporations. One who is acting under color of right and with apparent authority, but who is not legally a corporate officer. • The corporation is bound by all acts and contracts of an officer de facto in the same way as it is with those of an officer de jure. — Also termed de facto officer.

officer de jure (di juur-ee). 1. An officer who exercises the duties of an office for which the holder has fulfilled all the qualifications. 2. A duly authorized corporate officer. — Also termed de jure officer.

state officer. 1. A person whose authority or jurisdiction extends to the general public or state as a whole, as distinguished from an officer whose authority and jurisdiction is confined to the limits of a particular political subdivision. 2. An officer exercising authority under a state — rather than the federal — government.

subordinate officer. 1. An officer ranking below and performing under the direction of another officer. 2. An independent officer subject only to statutory direction.

United States officer. An officer appointed under the authority of the federal government; specif., an officer appointed in the manner described in Article II, section 2, of the U.S. Constitution.

Oireachtas (air-ak-thas or eer-ak-tas). The Parliament of the Republic of Ireland.

old-age and survivors' insurance. (usu. cap.) A system of insurance, subsidized by the federal government, that provides retirement benefits for persons who turn 65 and payments to survivors upon the death of the insured. This was the original name for the retirement and death benefits established by the Social Security Act of 1935. As the scope of these benefits expanded, the name changed to Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI), and then to Old Age, Survivors, Disability, and Health Insurance (OASDHI). Today, the system is most often referred to as social security. — Abbr. OASI. See SOCIAL SECURITY.

old style. The system of ordering time according to the Julian method, introduced by Julius Caesar in 46 B.C., by which all years have 365 days except the years divisible by 4, which have 366 days. This differs from the modern calendar in that it assumes that there are exactly 365.25 days in a year. But there are actually slightly less than 365.25 days in a year, so the old-style calendar adds too many days over time. The Julian calendar was reformed by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582. — Abbr. o.s. — Also termed Julian calendar. Cf. NEW STYLE.

Oléron, laws of (oh-la-ron or aw-lay-ron). See LAWS OF OLÉRON.

one-action rule. In debtor-creditor law, the principle that when a debt is secured by real property, the creditor must foreclose on the collateral before proceeding against the debtor's unsecured assets.

one-court-of-justice doctrine. A principle in some states holding that there is but a single court in the state and that this court is composed of several divisions, such as the supreme court, the courts of appeals, and district courts, probate courts, and any other legislatively created courts. ● Michigan, for example, has embodied this doctrine in its constitution (art. VI, § 1). — Also termed one court of justice.

one-day, one-trial method. A system of summoning and using jurors whereby a person answers a jury summons and participates in the venire for one day only, unless the person is actually impaneled for a trial, in which event the juror's service lasts for the entire length of the trial. ● This system, which is used in several states, reduces the average term of service and expands the number of individual jurors called.

180-day rule. 1. A rule that, in some jurisdictions, allows a person charged with a felony to be released on personal recognizance if the person has been in jail for 180 days without being brought to trial, and if the delay has not resulted from the defendant's own actions. 2. A rule requiring all pending charges against a prison inmate to be brought to trial in 180 days or to be dismissed with prejudice.

one-month liquidation. See LIQUIDATION.

one-person, one-vote rule. Constitutional law. The principle that the Equal Protection Clause requires legislative voting districts to have about the same population. Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 553, 84 S.Ct. 1362 (1964). — Also termed one-man, one-vote rule. See APPORTIONMENT.

onerando pro rata portione. See DE ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONE.

onere (on-er-e) vb. [Latin] Hist. To burden or load.
onerari non (on-ə-rair-ə nən). [Law Latin] Hist. Ought not to be charged. • In pleading, these words were used by a defendant to begin a plea in a debt action. Cf. ACTIO NON.

Having or involving obligations that outweigh the advantages <onerous property>. 3. Civil law. Done or given in return for something of equivalent value; supported by consideration <an onerous contract>. — onerousness, n. Cf. GRATUITOUS.

onerous contract. See CONTRACT.

onerous title. See TITLE (2).

one-satisfaction rule. The principle that a plaintiff is only entitled to one recovery for a particular harm, and that the plaintiff must elect a single remedy if the jury has awarded more than one. • This rule is, for example, one of the foundations of a defendant’s right to have a jury verdict reduced by the amount of any settlements the plaintiff has received from other entities for the same injury. — Also termed single-recovery rule.

one-subject rule. The principle that a statute should embrace only one topic, which should be stated in its title.

onomastic (on-ə-mas-tik), adj. 1. Of or relating to names or nomenclature. 2. (Of a signature on an instrument) in a handwriting different from that of the body of the document; esp., designating an autograph signature alone, as distinguished from the main text in a different hand or in typewriting. Cf. HOLOGRAPHIC; SYMBOLIC. — onomastics (for sense 1), n.

on or about. Approximately; at or around the time specified. • This language is used in pleading to prevent a variance between the pleading and the proof, usu. when there is any uncertainty about the exact date of a pivotal event. When used in nonpleading contexts, the phrase is mere jargon.

on pain of. Followed by punishment inflicted if one does not comply with a command or condition <ordered to cease operations on pain of a $2,000 fine>.

on point. Discussing the precise issue now at hand; apposite <this opinion is not on point as authority in our case>. — Also termed in point. Cf. OFF POINT.

operational, adj. 1. Engaged in operation; able to function. 2. Ministerial.

operation of law. The means by which a right or a liability is created for a party regardless of the party's actual intent <because the court didn't rule on the motion for rehearing within 30 days, it was overruled by operation of law>.

operative, adj. 1. Being in or having force or effect; esp., designating the part of a legal instrument that gives effect to the transaction involved <the operative provision of the contract>. 2. Having principal relevance; essential to the meaning of the whole <may is the operative word of the statute>.

operative fact. See fact.

operative performance bond. See performance bond.

operis novi nuntiatio (op-er-is noh-vee nan-shee-ay-shee-oh). [Latin "declaration of a new work"] Civil law. A protest or warning against a new work undertaken by another to one's detriment.

OPIC. abbr. overseas private investment corporation.

opinio juris sive necessitatis (o-pin-ee-oh joor-is siv-ee na-ses-i-tay-tis). [Latin "opinion that an act is necessary by rule of law"] Int'l law. The principle that for a country's conduct to rise to the level of international customary law, it must be shown that the conduct stems from the country's belief that international law (rather than moral obligation) mandates the conduct. — Also termed opinio juris.

opinion. 1. A court's written statement explaining its decision in a given case, usu. including the statement of facts, points of law, rationale, and dicta. — Abbr. op. — Also termed judicial opinion. See decision. Cf. judgment; ruling.

advisory opinion. 1. A nonbinding statement by a court of its interpretation of the law on a matter submitted for that purpose. • Federal courts are constitutionally prohibited from issuing advisory opinions by the case-or-controversy requirement, but other courts, such as the International Court of Justice, render them routinely. See case-or-controversy requirement. 2. A written statement, issued only by an administrator of an employee benefit plan, that interprets ERISA and applies it to a specific factual situation. • Only the parties named in the request for the opinion can rely on it, and its reliability depends on the accuracy and completeness of all material facts.

concurring opinion. See concurrence (3).

dissenting opinion. An opinion by one or more judges who disagree with the decision reached by the majority. — Often shortened to dissent. — Also termed minority opinion.

majority opinion. An opinion joined in by more than half of the judges considering a given case. — Also termed main opinion.

memorandum opinion. A unanimous opinion stating the decision of the court; an opinion that briefly reports the court's conclusion, usu. without elaboration because the decision follows a well-established legal principle or does not relate to any point of law. — Also termed memorandum decision.

minority opinion. See dissenting opinion.

per curiam opinion (par kyoor-ee-ahm). An opinion handed down by an appellate court without identifying the individual judge who wrote the opinion. — Sometimes shortened to per curiam.

plurality opinion. An opinion lacking enough judges' votes to constitute a majority, but receiving more votes than any other opinion.

seriatim opinions (seer-ee-ay-tim). A series of opinions written individually by each judge on the bench, as opposed to a single opinion speaking for the court as a whole.

slip opinion. 1. A court opinion that is published individually after being rendered and then collectively in advance sheets before being released for publication in a reporter. • Unlike an unpublished opinion, a slip opinion can usu. be cited as authority. Cf. advance sheets. 2. Archaic. A preliminary draft of a court opinion not yet ready for publication. — Also termed slip decision. Cf. unpublished opinion.
unpublished opinion. An opinion that the court has specifically designated as not for publication. • Court rules usu. prohibit citing an unpublished opinion as authority. Such an opinion is considered binding on only the parties to the particular case in which it is issued. Cf. slip opinion.

2. A formal expression of judgment or advice based on an expert's special knowledge; esp., a document, usu. prepared at a client's request, containing a lawyer's understanding of the law that applies to a particular case. — Also termed opinion letter.

"The essence of a lawyer's job is to obtain the facts and the law with due diligence and then to give advice. But, strangely, no controlling definition has evolved for what is an 'opinion.' The lack of a definition is not crucial for some purposes. On the other hand, a definition is vital in other areas; for example, to determine within a law firm when peer review is necessary ...." 8 Arnold S. Jacobs, Opinion Letters in Securities Matters § 3, at Intro-12 (1988).

adverse opinion. An outside auditor's opinion that a company's financial statements do not conform with generally accepted accounting principles or do not accurately reflect the company's financial position.

audit opinion. A certified public accountant's opinion regarding the audited financial statements of an entity.

coverage opinion. A lawyer's opinion on whether a particular event is covered by a given insurance policy.

legal opinion. A written document in which an attorney provides his or her understanding of the law as applied to assumed facts. • The attorney may be a private attorney or attorney representing the state or other governmental entity. Private attorneys frequently render legal opinions on the ownership of real estate or minerals, insurance coverage, and corporate transactions. A party may be entitled to rely on a legal opinion, depending on factors such as the identity of the parties to whom the opinion was addressed and the law governing these opinions. See coverage opinion.

title opinion. A lawyer's or title company's opinion on the state of title for a given piece of real property, usu. describing whether the title is clear and marketable or whether it is encumbered. See TITLE SEARCH.

unqualified opinion. An audit opinion given by an accountant who is satisfied that the financial statements reviewed were fairly presented and consistent with the previous year, and that the audit was performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards.

3. A witness's thoughts, beliefs, or inferences about facts in dispute, as opposed to personal knowledge of the facts themselves. — Also termed (in sense 3) conclusion. See opinion evidence under EVIDENCE.

opinion letter. See OPINION (2).

opinion rule. Evidence. The principle that a witness should testify to facts, not opinions, and that a witness's opinions are often excludable from evidence. • Traditionally, this principle is regarded as one of the important exclusionary rules in evidence law. It is based on the idea that a witness who has observed data should provide the most factual evidence possible, leaving the jury to draw inferences and conclusions from the evidence. Under this system, the witness's opinion is unnecessary.

"This rule [the opinion rule] is an historical blunder, for the early cases excluding 'opinion' meant a belief by a person who had personally seen and known nothing, and was therefore not qualified to speak; whereas the modern rule applies it to witnesses who have had personal observation as a basis for their inference. Moreover, it is a senseless rule, for not once in a thousand times can the observed data be exactly and fully reproduced in words. Still further, no harm could be done by letting the witness offer his inference, except perhaps the waste of a moment's time, whereas the application of the rule wastes vastly more time. And finally the rule is so pedantically applied by most courts that it excludes the most valuable testimony, such as would be used in all affairs of life outside a court room." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 156 (1938).

"The opinion rule in its stark simplicity might be interpreted as excluding all value judgments, that is to say all statements not being factual propositions susceptible of some sort of empirical proof or disproof. The rule, if it is to be given any purely logical meaning at all, must be interpreted as excluding at least all inferences drawn from perceived data. Even if value judgments are saved by construing the rule as having application only to factual propositions, the rule would seem to purport to exclude all such propositions in the formulation of which inference by the witness has played some part." Zelman Cowen, Essays on the Law of Evidence 162 (1956).

opignorate (op-ign-or-rayt). vb. Archaic. To pawn or pledge. — Also spelled oppignorate. Cf. PIGNORATE.

opponent. 1. An adverse party in a contested matter. 2. A party that is challenging the admissibility of evidence — opposed to proponent. opportunity. The fact that the alleged doer of an act was present at the time and place of the act.

opportunity cost. See COST (1).

opportunity to be heard. The chance to ap-ppear in a court or other tribunal and present evidence and argument before being deprived of a right by governmental authority. • The opportunity to be heard is a fundamental requirement of procedural due process. It ordinarily includes the right to receive fair notice of the hearing, to secure the assistance of counsel, and to cross-examine adverse witnesses. See procedural due process under DUE PROCESS.

opposer. 1. Intellectual property. One who formally seeks to prevent the grant of a patent or the registration of a trademark. 2. Hist. APPO-SER.

oppression. 1. The act or an instance of unjustly exercising authority or power. 2. An offense consisting in the abuse of discretionary authority by a public officer who has an improper motive, as a result of which a person is injured.
• This offense does not include extortion, which is typically a more serious crime. 3. Contracts.
Coercion to enter into an illegal contract. • Oppression is grounds for the recovery of money paid or property transferred under an illegal contract. See DURESS; UNCONSCIONABILITY. shareholders (esp. in a close corporation) by the directors or those in control of the corporation.
See FREEZE-OUT. • Also termed (in sense 4) shareholder oppression. • oppress, vb. • oppressive, adj.

oppressor. A public official who unlawfully or wrongfully exercises power under color of authority in a way that causes a person harm; one who commits oppression.

OPRA. abbr. OPTIONS PRICE REPORTING AUTHO-RITY.

opt in, vb. To choose to participate in (something) <when the choice of settling or not settling came, the Joneses opted in, hoping to avoid a lengthy trial>.

option. n. 1. The right or power to choose; something that may be chosen <the lawyer was running out of options for settlement>. 2. A contract made to keep an offer open for a specified period, so that the offeror cannot revoke the offer during that period <the option is valid because it is supported by consideration.> • Also termed option contract. See irrevocable offer under OFFER. 3. The right conveyed by such a contract <Phil declined to exercise his first option to buy the house>. 4.
The right (but not the obligation) to buy or sell a given quantity of securities, commodities, or other assets at a fixed price within a specified time <trading stock options is a speculative business>. • Cf. FUTURES CONTRACT.

call option. An option to buy something (esp. securities) at a fixed price even if the market rises; the right to require another to sell.
• Often shortened to call.

cash-value option. The right of a life-insurance policyholder to surrender the policy for its cash value at a specified time or at any time.

commodity option. An option to buy or sell a commodity.

futures option. An option to buy or sell a futures contract.

naked option. A call option that grants another the right to buy stock even though the option-giver does not own the stock to back up that commitment. • Also termed uncovered option.

nonforfeiture option. A policyholder’s option, upon the lapse of premium payments, to continue an insurance policy for a shorter period than the original term, to surrender the policy for its cash value, to continue the policy for a reduced amount, or to take some other action rather than forfeit the policy.

option to purchase real property. A contract by which an owner of realty enters an agreement with another allowing the latter to buy the property at a specified price within a specified time, or within a reasonable time in the future, but without imposing an obligation to purchase upon the person to whom it is given.

put option. An option to sell something (esp. securities) at a fixed price even if the market declines; the right to require another to buy.
• Often shortened to put.

seller’s option. A special stock-exchange transaction that gives the seller the right to deliver the security within a specified period, usu. 5 to 60 days.

settlement option. Insurance. A life-insurance-policy clause providing choices in the method of paying benefits to a beneficiary, as option

by lump-sum payment or periodic installments.

stock option. See stock option.

uncovered option. See naked option.

option, vb. To grant or take an option on something <Ward optioned his first screenplay to the studio for $50,000>.

option agreement. Corporations. A share-transfer restriction that commits the shareholder to sell, but not the corporation or other shareholders to buy, the shareholder’s shares at a fixed price when a specified event occurs. Cf. buy-sell agreement (2); option (2).

optional bond. See bond (3).

optional completeness, rule of. See rule of optional completeness.

optional-completeness doctrine. See rule of optional completeness.

optional writ. See writ.

optionee (op-sha-nee). One who receives an option from another. — Also termed option-holder.

optionor (op-sha-nor or op-sha-nor). One who grants an option to another. — Also spelled optioner. — Also termed option-giver.

option premium. See premium (4).

option spread. Securities. The difference between the option price and the fair market value of the underlying stock when the option is exercised. See spread.

Options Price Reporting Authority. A national market-system plan approved by the SEC for collecting and disseminating last-sale and quotation information on options traded on a five-member exchange consisting of the American Stock Exchange, the Chicago Board of Options Exchange, the New York Stock Exchange, the Pacific Stock Exchange, and the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. — Abbr. OPRA.

option to purchase real property. See option.

opt out, vb. To choose not to participate in (something) <with so many plaintiffs opting out of the class, the defendant braced itself for multiplicitious lawsuits>.

opus (oh-pas), n. [Latin “work”] A product of work or labor; esp., an artistic, literary, or musical work or composition. Pl. opuses, opera (ah-pe-ra or oh-pe-ra).

O.R. abbr. Own recognizance; on one’s own recognizance <the prosecutor agreed not to object to releasing the suspect O.R.> See recognizance.

oraculum (or-a-ka-ya-lam). [Latin “a prophetic declaration”] Roman law. A response or sentence delivered by the emperor.

oral, adj. Spoken or uttered; not expressed in writing. Cf. farol.

oral argument. An advocate’s spoken presentation before a court (esp. an appellate court) supporting or opposing the legal relief at issue. “[T]he oral argument is the one chance for you (not for some chance-assigned mere judge) to answer any questions you can stir any member of the court into being bothered about and into bothering with, and the one chance to sew up each such question into a remembered point in favor…. In any but freak situations, oral argument is a must.” Karl N. Llewellyn, The Common Law Tradition: Deciding Appeals 240 (1969).

oral confession. See confession.

oral contract. See parol contract (1) under contract.

oral deposition. See deposition.

oral trust. See trust.

oral will. See will.

oratio consultoria (or-a-see-oh kon-sol-tor-ee-a). See libellus consultoria.

orator (or-a-tor). 1. Roman law. An advocate or pleader. 2. Hist. A plaintiff or petitioner in an action in chancery. oratrix (or-ə-traɪks). Hist. A female orator.

oration (or-ə-shən). Hist. Bereavement or deprivation of one's parents or children.

ordeal. Hist. A primitive form of trial in which an accused person was subjected to a dangerous or painful physical test, the result being considered a divine revelation of the person's guilt or innocence. • The participants believed that God would reveal a person's culpability by protecting an innocent person from the torture. The ordeal was commonly used in Europe as late as the 13th century, and was sporadically used even later. — Also termed trial by ordeal; judicium Dei (“judgment of God”); vulgaris purgatio. Cf. CANFARA.

“Ordeals involved an appeal to God to reveal the truth in human disputes, and they required pious participation to achieve this rapport with the Deity. Several forms of ordeal were recognised by the early Christian Church, but in England they usually took the form of fire or water. In the former, a piece of iron was put into a fire and then in the party's hand; the hand was bound, and inspected a few days later: if the burn had healed, God was taken to have decided against the party. The ordeal of cold water required the party to be trussed and lowered into a pond; if he sank, the water was deemed to have ‘received him’ with God's blessing, and so he was quickly fished out. . . . In 1215, the Lateran Council . . . took the decisive step of forbidding clergy to participate any more in ordeals. This led in England to the introduction of the criminal trial jury.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 5–6 (3d ed. 1990).

ordeal by fire. An ordeal in which the accused person was forced to hold a piece of hot metal or to walk barefoot across a hot surface, the judgment of guilt or innocence depending on how quickly the person's hands or feet healed. — Also termed fire ordeal.

ordeal by water. 1. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence depended on whether the accused person floated or sank after being submerged in cold water. • Those who sank were declared innocent, while those who floated were adjudged guilty because floating revealed the water's (and therefore God's) rejection of the accused. This type of ordeal was used esp. in witchcraft trials. — Also termed ordeal by cold water. 2. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence was determined by how quickly the accused person's arm healed after being placed in boiling water. — Also termed (in sense 2) ordeal by hot water; (in both senses) water ordeal.

ordel (or-del). See OREDelf.

ordels (or-deelz). Hist. English law. The right to conduct trials by ordeal within a given jurisdiction.

order, n. 1. A command, direction, or instruction. 2. A written direction or command delivered by a court or judge. — Also termed court order; judicial order.

"An order is the mandate or determination of the court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings." 1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 1, at 5 (2d ed. 1902).

administrative order. 1. An order issued by a government agency after an adjudicatory hearing. 2. An agency regulation that interprets or applies a statutory provision.

decretal order (di-kree-tal). A court of chancery's interlocutory order that is issued on motion of a party and has the effect of a final decree. See decree nisi under DECREE.

ex parte order (eks pahr-tee). An order made by the court upon the application of one party to an action without notice to the other.

final order. An order that is dispositive of the entire case. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

interim order. 1. A temporary court decree that takes effect until something else occurs. 2. See interlocutory order.

interlocutory order (in-tar-lok-ya-tor-e). An order that relates to some intermediate matter in the case; any order other than a final order. • Most interlocutory orders are not appealable until the case is fully resolved. But by rule or statute, most jurisdictions allow some types of interlocutory orders (such as preliminary injunctions and class-certification orders) to be immediately appealed. — Also termed interlocutory decision; interim order; intermediate order. See appealable decision under DECISION; COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE.

minute order. 1. An order recorded in the minutes of the court rather than directly on a case docket. • Although practice varies, traditionally when a trial judge is sitting officially, with or without a court reporter, a clerk or deputy clerk keeps minutes. When the judge makes an oral order, the only record of that order may be in the minutes. It is therefore referred to as a minute order. — Also termed minute entry. 2. A court order not directly relating to a case, such as an order adopting a local rule of court. • In this sense, the court is not a single judge acting in an adjudicatory capacity, but a chief judge, or a group of two or more judges, acting for a court in an administrative or some other nonadjudicatory capacity.

preclusion order. An order barring a litigant from presenting or opposing certain claims or defenses for failing to comply with a discovery order.

show-cause order. An order directing a party to appear in court and explain why the party took (or failed to take) some action or why the court should or should not grant some relief. — Also termed order to show cause.

standing order. A forward-looking order that applies to all cases pending before a court. • Some individual judges issue a standing order on a subject when there is no local rule bearing on it, often because a rule would not be acceptable to other judges on the court. Standing orders are frequently criticized because they undermine uniformity of procedural rules, esp. at the local level.

turnover order. An order by which the court commands a judgment debtor to surrender certain property to a judgment creditor, or to the sheriff or constable on the creditor’s behalf. • Such an order is usu. directed to property that is difficult to acquire by the ordinary judgment-collection process, such as share certificates and accounts receivable.

3. The words in a draft (such as a check) directing one person to pay money to or deliver something to a designated person. • An order should appear to be the demand of a right as opposed to the request for a favor. See order paper under PAPER. 4. Securities. A customer’s instructions to a broker about how and when to buy or sell securities.

all-or-none order. An order to buy a security to be executed either in its entirety or not at all.

alternative order. An order to buy a security by either of two alternatives (e.g., buy a stock at a limited price or buy on a stop order). — Also termed either-or order.

buy order. An investor’s instruction to purchase stock.

day order. An order to buy or sell on one particular day only. Cf. open order.

discretionary order. An order to buy or sell at any price acceptable to the broker.

either-or order. See alternative order.

fill-or-kill order. An order that must be executed as soon as it reaches the trading floor. • If the order is not filled immediately, it is canceled.

limit order. An order to buy or sell at a specified price, regardless of market price. Cf. no-limit order.

market order. An order to buy or sell at the best price immediately available on the market. — Also termed order at the market.

matched order. An order to buy and sell the same security, at about the same time, in about the same quantity, and at about the same price.

no-limit order. An order to buy or sell securities with no limits on price. Cf. limit order.

open order. An order that remains in effect until filled by the broker or canceled by the customer. Cf. day order.

order at the market. See market order.

percentage order. An order to buy or sell a stated amount of a certain stock after a fixed number of shares of the stock have traded.

scale order. An order to buy or sell a security at varying price ranges.

sell order. An investor’s instruction to sell stock.

split order. An order directing a broker to sell some stock at one price and some stock at another price.

stop order. An order to buy or sell when the security’s price reaches a specified level (the stop price) on the market. • By fixing the price beforehand, the investor is cushioned against stock fluctuations. — Also termed stop-loss order.

time order. An order that becomes a market or limited-price order at a specified time.

order absolute. See decree absolute under DEGREE.

order assigning residue. A probate court’s order naming the persons entitled to receive parts of an estate and allotting that share to each.

order at the market. See market order under ORDER (4).

order bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

order document. See order paper under PAPER.

ordered, adjudged, and decreed. Judicially mandated; required by court order.
"The usual style of a decree is 'it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed'; and of an order or rule, 'it is ordered,' etc."
1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 2, at 6–7 (2d ed. 1902).

ordinance (or-da-nants). An authoritative law or decree; esp., a municipal regulation. • Municipal governments can pass ordinances on matters that the state government allows to be regulated at the local level. — Also termed bylaw; municipal ordinance.

"An ordinance . . . may be purely administrative in nature, establishing offices, prescribing duties, or setting salaries; it may have to do with the routine or procedure of the governing body. Or it may be a governmental exercise of the power to control the conduct of the public — establishing rules which must be complied with, or prohibiting certain actions or conduct. In any event it is the determination of the sovereign power of the state as delegated to the municipality. It is a legislative enactment, within its sphere, as much as an act of the state legislature." 1 Judith O’Gallagher, Municipal Ordinances § 1A.01, at 5 (2d ed. 1996).

ordinandi lex (or-da-nan-di leks). [Latin] The law of procedure, as distinguished from substantive law.

ordinarily prudent person. See reasonable person.

1. Occurring in the regular course of events; normal; usual. Cf. extraordinary. 2. (Of a judge) having jurisdiction by right of office rather than by delegation. 3. (Of jurisdiction) original or immediate, as opposed to delegated.

originality. Copyright. 1. The quality or state of being the product of independent creation and having a minimum degree of creativity. • Originality is a requirement for copyright protection. But this is a lesser standard than that of novelty in patent law: to be original, a work does not have to be novel or unique. Cf. novelty. 2. The degree to which a product claimed for copyright is the result of an author’s independent efforts. Cf. creativity.

"‘Original’ in reference to a copyrighted work means that the particular work ‘owes its origin’ to the ‘author.’ No large measure of novelty is necessary.” Alfred Bell & Co. v. Catalda Fine Arts, Inc., 191 F.2d 99, 102 (2d Cir. 1951) (Frank, J.). override (oh-var-rid), n. 1. A commission paid to a manager on a sale made by a subordinate. 2. A commission paid to a real-estate broker who listed a property when, within a reasonable amount of time after the expiration of the listing, the owner sells that property directly to a buyer with whom the broker had negotiated during the term of the listing. 3. Royalty (2).

overrule, vb. 1. To rule against; to reject <the judge overruled all of the defendant's objections>. 2. (Of a court) to overturn or set aside (a precedent) by expressly deciding that it should no longer be controlling law <in Brown overrule

v. Board of Education, the Supreme Court overruled Plessy v. Ferguson. Cf. VACATE (1).

"If a decision is not a recent one, and especially if it seems to be very poor, it should not be relied upon without ascertaining whether it may not have been expressly or impliedly overruled by some subsequent one; that is, whether the court may not have laid down a contrary principle in a later case." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 94 (1922).

"Overruling is an act of superior jurisdiction. A precedent overruled is definitely and formally deprived of all authority. It becomes null and void, like a repealed statute, and a new principle is authoritatively substituted for the old." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 189 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

overseas bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

Overseas Private Investment Corporation. A corporation created by the federal government to finance and insure overseas investments by U.S. companies. • Chartered in 1969, the corporation is a for-profit entity that is not federally funded, but its insurance commitments are backed by the full faith and credit of the federal government. — Abbr. OPIC.

oversubscription. A situation in which there are more subscribers to a new issue of securities than there are securities available for purchase.

overt, adj. Open and observable; not concealed or secret <the conspirators’ overt acts>.

overt act. Criminal law. 1. An act that indicates an intent to kill or seriously harm another person and thus gives that person a justification to use self-defense. 2. An outward act, however innocent in itself, done in furtherance of a conspiracy, treason, or criminal attempt. • An overt act is usu. a required element of these crimes. 3. See ACTUS REUS. — Also termed positive act.

over-the-counter, adj. 1. Not listed or traded on an organized securities exchange; traded between buyers and sellers who negotiate directly <over-the-counter stocks>. 2. (Of drugs) sold legally without a doctor’s prescription <over-the-counter cough medicine>. — Abbr. OTC.

over-the-counter market. The market for securities that are not traded on an organized exchange. • Over-the-counter (OTC) trading usu. occurs through telephone or computer negotiations between buyers and sellers. Many of the more actively traded OTC stocks are listed on NASDAQ. — Abbr. OTC market.

time worked by an employee in excess of a standard day or week. • Under the Fair Labor Standards Act, employers must pay extra wages (usu. 1½ times the regular hourly rate) to certain employees (usu. nonsalaried ones) for each hour worked in excess of 40 hours per week. 2. The extra wages paid for excess hours worked.

overtry, vb. (Of a trial lawyer) to try a lawsuit by expending excessive time, effort, and other resources to explore minutiae, esp. to present more evidence than the fact-trier can assimilate, the result often being that the adversary gains arguing points by disputing the minutiae.

overturn, vb. To overrule or reverse <the court overturned a long-established precedent>.

owelt, adj. • Engineer’s. C. R. 2074. An engine or engine part operating in such a manner as to produce a temperature change in the products of combustion of less than 120°F.

owelt, adj. Equality as achieved by a compensatory sum of money given after an exchange of parcels of land having different values or after an unequal partition of real property. 2. The sum of money so paid.

OWI. abbr. Operating while intoxicated. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

owing, adj. That is yet to be paid; owed; due .

owing, adj. Hist. The smuggling of wool or sheep out of England. • The term usu. refers to nighttime smuggling.

own, vb. To have or possess as property; to have legal title to.

owned-property exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

owner. One who has the right to possess, use, and convey something; a proprietor. See OWNERSHIP.

adjoining owner. A person who owns land abutting another’s; ABUTTER.

beneficial owner. 1. One recognized in equity as the owner of something because use and title belong to that person, even though legal title may belong to someone else; esp., one for whom property is held in trust. — Also termed equitable owner. 2. A corporate shareholder who has the power to buy or sell the shares, but who is not registered on the corporation’s books as the owner.

equitable owner. See beneficial owner (1). general owner. One who has the primary or residuary title to property; one who has the ultimate ownership of property. Cf. special owner.

legal owner. One recognized by law as the owner of something; esp., one who holds legal title to property for the benefit of another. See TRUSTEE.

owners' association. The basic governing entity for a condominium or planned unit developments. • It is usu. an unincorporated association or a nonprofit corporation.

owners' equity. The aggregate of the owners' financial interests in the assets of a business entity; the capital contributed by the owners plus any retained earnings. — Also termed (in a corporation) shareholders' equity; stockholders' equity.

"Owner's equity is the residual claim of the owners of the business on its assets after recognition of the liabilities of the business. Owner's equity represents the amounts contributed by the owners to the business, plus the accumulated income of the business since its formation, less any amounts that have been distributed to the owners." Charles H. Meyer, Accounting and Finance for Lawyers in a Nutshell 4 (1995).

ownership. The collection of rights allowing one to use and enjoy property, including the right to convey it to others. • Ownership implies the right to possess a thing, regardless of any actual or constructive control. Ownership rights are general, permanent, and inheritable. Cf. POSSESSION; TITLE (1).

"Possession is the de facto exercise of a claim; ownership is the de jure recognition of one. A thing is owned by me when my claim to it is maintained by the will of the state as expressed in the law; it is possessed by me, when my claim to it is maintained by my own self-assertive will. Ownership is the guarantee of the law; possession is the guarantee of the facts. It is well to have both forms if possible; and indeed they normally co-exist." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 311 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"Ownership does not always mean absolute dominion. The mere an owner, for his advantage, opens up his property for use by the public in general, the more do his rights become circumscribed by the statutory and constitutional powers of those who use it." Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U.S. 501, 506, 66 S.Ct. 276, 278 (1946) (Black, J.).

bare ownership. See trust ownership.

beneficial ownership. A beneficiary's interest in trust property.

bonitarian ownership (bahn-o-tair-ee-in). Roman law. A type of equitable ownership recognized by a praetor when the property was conveyed by an informal transfer, or by a formal transfer by one not the true owner.

corporeal ownership. The actual ownership of land or chattels.

incorporeal ownership. The ownership of rights in land or chattels.

joint ownership. Ownership shared by two or more persons whose interests, at death, pass to the survivor or survivors by virtue of the right of survivorship.

ownership in common. Ownership shared by two or more persons whose interests, at death, pass to the dead owner's heirs or successors.

qualified ownership. Ownership that is shared, restricted to a particular use, or limited in the extent of its enjoyment.

trust ownership. A trustee's interest in trust property. — Also termed bare ownership.

vested ownership. Ownership in which title is perfect; absolute ownership.

owner's policy. Real estate. A title-insurance policy covering the owner's title as well as the mortgagee's interest. Cf. MORTGAGEE POLICY.

own-product exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

own-work exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

oxfild (oks-fild). Hist. A restoration made by a county or hundred for a wrong done by someone within that region.
oxgang (oks-gang). Hist. An amount of land equal to what an ox plows in one year, usu. 12 to 15 acres. • An oxgang, equaling one-eighth of a carucate, was used to assess land for tax purposes. — Also termed oxgate; bovata terrae. Cf. CARUCATE.

oyer (oy-ør or oh-yar). [fr. Old French oir “to hear”] Hist. 1. A criminal trial held under a commission of oyer and terminer. See COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER. 2. The reading in open court of a document (esp. a deed) that is demanded by one party and read by the other. 3. Common-law pleading. A prayer to the court by a party opposing a profert, asking to have the instrument on which the opponent relies read aloud. • Oyer can be demanded only when a profert has been properly made, but it is disallowed for a private writing under seal.

“A party having a right to demand oyer is yet not obliged, in all cases, to exercise that right; nor is he obliged, in all cases, after demanding it, to notice it in the pleading he afterwards files or delivers. Sometimes, however, he is obliged to do both, namely, where he has occasion to found his answer upon any matter contained in the deed of which profert is made, and not set forth by his adversary. In these cases the only admissible method of making such matter appear to the court is to demand oyer, and, from the copy given, set forth the whole deed verbatim in his pleading.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 289, at 483 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

oyer, demand of. See DEMAND OF OYER.

oyez (oh-yes or oh-yez or oh-yay). [Law French] Hear ye; the utterance oyez, oyez, oyez is usu. used in court by the public crier to call the courtroom to order when a session begins or when a proclamation is about to be made.

packing, n. A gerrymandering technique in which a dominant political or racial group minimizes minority representation by concentrating the minority into as few districts as possible. Cf. CRACKING; STACKING (2).

packing a jury. See JURY-PACKING.

Pac-Man defense (pak-man). An aggressive antitakeover defense by which the target company attempts to take over the bidder company by making a cash tender offer for the bidder company's shares. • The name derives from a video game popular in the 1980s, the object of which was to gobble up the enemy. This defense is seldom used today.

pact. An agreement between two or more parties; esp., an agreement (such as a treaty) between two or more nations or governmental entities.

pacta sunt servanda (pak-ta sant sor-van-da). [Latin “agreements must be kept”] The rule that agreements and stipulations, esp. those contained in treaties, must be observed <the Quebec courts have been faithful to the pacta sunt servanda principle>.

pact de non alienando (pakt dee non ay-lee-aa-nan-doh). [Latin] Civil law. An agreement not to alienate encumbered (esp. mortgaged) property. • This stipulation will not void a sale to a third party, but it does allow the mortgagee to proceed directly against the mortgaged property without notice to the purchaser.

pactio (pak-shh-oh). [Latin] Civil law. 1. The negotiating process that results in a pactum. 2. The pactum arrived at; an agreement.

pains (pay or pays). See IN PAIS.

Palace Court. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over all personal actions arising within 12 miles of Whitehall. ● This court was created by James I in response to complaints about the inconvenience of using the itinerant Court of the Marshalsea; its jurisdiction was similar, but the court remained in Whitehall. It was abolished along with the Court of the Marshalsea in 1849. See COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA.

“The court of the marshalsea, and the palace court at Westminster, though two distinct courts, are frequently confounded together. The former was originally held before the steward and marshal of the king’s house, and was instituted to administer justice between the king’s domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and thereby the king lose their service. But this court being ambulatory, and obliged to follow the king in all his progresses, so that by the removal of the household, actions were frequently discontinued, and doubts having arisen as to the extent of its jurisdiction ... [the king] erected a new court of record, called the curia palatii, or palace-court, to be held before the steward of the household and knight marshal, and the steward of the court, or his deputy; with jurisdiction to hold plea of all manner of personal actions whatsoever, which shall arise between any parties within twelve miles of his majesty’s palace at Whitehall.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 76 (1768).

palimony (pal-oh-moh-nee). A court-ordered allowance paid by one member to the other of a couple that, though unmarried, formerly cohabited. Cf. ALIMONY.

pallio cooperire (pal-ee-oh ko-op-er-ree). [Latin “to cover with a pallium”] Hist. A marriage of persons who have already had a child together. ● The pallium was a veil or cover over the bride, which was extended to cover the bastard child. Its removal at the wedding was deemed to legitimate the child.

Palmer’s Act. An English statute, enacted in 1856, giving a person accused of a crime falling outside the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court the right to have the case tried in that court. St. 19 & 20 Vict., ch. 16. — Also termed CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT ACT. See CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

palming off. See PASSING OFF.

Palsgraf rule (pawlz-graf). Torts. The principle that negligent conduct resulting in injury will lead to liability only if the actor could have reasonably foreseen that the conduct would injure the victim. ● In Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99 (1928), two railroad attendants negligently dislodged a package of fireworks from a man they were helping board a train. The package exploded on impact and knocked over some scales that fell on Mrs. Palsgraf. The New York Court of Appeals, in a 4-3 majority opinion written by Chief Justice Benjamin Cardozo, held that the attendants could not have foreseen the possibility of injury to Palsgraf and therefore did not breach any duty to her. In the dissenting opinion, Justice William S. Andrews asserted that the duty to exercise care is owed to all, and thus a negligent act will subject the actor to liability to all persons proximately harmed by it, whether foreseeable or not. Both opinions have been widely cited to support the two views expressed in them.

panel-shopping. The practice of choosing the most favorable group of judges to hear an appeal.

papal law (pay-pal). See CANON LAW.

paper. 1. Any written or printed document or instrument. 2. A negotiable document or instrument evidencing a debt; esp., commercial documents or negotiable instruments considered as a group. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

3. (pl.) COURT PAPERS.

accommodation paper. See ACCOMMODATION PAPER.

bankable paper. Notes, checks, bank bills, drafts, and other instruments received as cash by banks.

bearer paper. An instrument payable to the person who holds it rather than to the order of a specific person. • Bearer paper is negotiable simply by delivering the instrument to a transferee. — Also termed bearer document; bearer instrument.

chattel paper (chat-al). See CHATTEL PAPER.

commercial paper. 1. An instrument, other than cash, for the payment of money. • Commercial paper — typically existing in the form of a draft (such as a check) or a note (such as a certificate of deposit) — is governed by Article 3 of the UCC. But even though the UCC uses the term commercial paper when referring to negotiable instruments of a particular kind (drafts, checks, certificates of deposit, and notes as defined by Article 3), the term long predates the UCC as a business and legal term in common use. Before the UCC, it was generally viewed as synonymous with negotiable paper or bills and notes. It was sometimes applied even to nonnegotiable instruments. — Also termed mercantile paper. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

"Commercial paper' is rather a popular than a technical expression, often used, however, both in statutes and in decisions of courts, to designate those simple forms of contract long recognized in the world's commerce and governed by the law merchant." — Joseph F. Randolph, A Treatise on the Law of Commercial Paper § 1, at 1 (2d ed. 1899).

"Defined most broadly, commercial paper refers to any writing embodying rights that are customarily conveyed by transferring the writing. A large subset of commercial paper consists of such writings that are negotiable, which means that the law enables a transferee to acquire the embodied rights free of claims and defenses against the transferor." — Richard E. Speidel, Negotiable Instruments and Check Collection in a Nutshell 1 (4th ed. 1993).

pander, n. One who engages in pandering. — Also termed panderer. See PIMP.

pandering (pan-dar-ing), n. 1. The act or offense of recruiting a prostitute, finding a place of business for a prostitute, or soliciting customers for a prostitute. — Also termed promoting prostitution. 2. The act or offense of selling or distributing textual or visual material (such as magazines or videotapes) openly advertised to appeal to the recipient's sexual interest. • Although the concept of pandering was invoked by the U.S. Supreme Court in Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942 (1966), it has seldom been discussed by the Court since then. — panden, vb.

parens patriae (par-enz pâl-tree-ee or pa-tree-i). [Latin “parent of his or her country”] 1. The state regarded as a sovereign; the state in its capacity as provider of protection to those unable to care for themselves <the attorney general acted as parens patriae in the administrative hearing>. 2. A doctrine by which a government has standing to prosecute a lawsuit on behalf of a citizen, esp. on behalf of someone who is under a legal disability to prosecute the suit <parens patriae allowed the state to institute proceedings>. • The state ordinarily has no standing to sue on behalf of its citizens, unless a separate, sovereign interest will be served by the suit. — Also termed doctrine of parens patriae.

parent. 1. The lawful father or mother of someone. • In ordinary usage, the term denotes more than responsibility for conception and birth. The term commonly includes (1) either the natural father or the natural mother of a child, (2) the adoptive father or adoptive mother of a child, (3) a child’s putative blood parent who has expressly acknowledged paternity, and (4) an individual or agency whose status as guardian has been established by judicial decree. In law, parental status based on any criterion may be terminated by judicial decree.

foster parent. An adult who, though without blood ties or legal ties, cares for and rears a child, esp. an orphaned or neglected child that might otherwise be deprived of nurture. • Foster parents sometimes give care and support temporarily until a child is legally adopted by others.

parentage (pair-an-tij or par-). The state or condition of being a parent; kindred in the direct ascending line.

parentage action. See Paternity Suit.

parental consortium. See CONSORTIUM.

parental immunity. See IMMUNITY (2).

parental kidnapping. See KIDNAPPING.

Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act. A federal law, enacted in 1980, providing a penalty for child-kidnapping by a noncustodial parent and requiring a state to recognize and enforce a child-custody order rendered by a court of another state. 28 USCA § 1738A; 42 USCA parental-liability law. A statute obliging parents to pay damages for torts (esp. intentional ones) committed by their minor children. • All states have these laws, but most limit the parents’ liability to about $3,000 per tort.

parental-preference doctrine. The principle that a fit parent, who is willing and able to care for a minor child, should be granted custody instead of someone who is not the child’s parent. • Also termed parental-preservation rule.

parental-responsibility statute. A law imposing criminal sanctions (such as fines) on parents whose minor children commit crimes as a result of the parents’ failure to exercise sufficient control over them. • Also termed control-your-child law.

parental rights. A parent’s rights concerning his or her child, including the right to educate and discipline the child and the right to control the child’s earnings and property.

parent-child immunity. See parental immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

par item. See ITEM.

parium judicium (pair-ee-am joo-dish-ee-om). [Law Latin] The judgment of peers; trial by a jury of one’s peers or equals.

Parker doctrine. See STATE-ACTION DOCTRINE.
parking. 1. The sale of securities subject to an agreement that the seller will buy them back at a later time for a similar price. • Parking is illegal if done to circumvent securities regulations or tax laws. It is often a method of evading the net-capital requirements of the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), which requires a brokerage firm to discount the value of any stock it holds in its own account when it files its monthly report about its net-capital condition. To reach technical compliance with the NASD’s net-capital requirements, a brokerage firm “sells” stock from its own account to a customer at market price, thereby avoiding the discount for reporting purposes. Having filed its report, it can then “buy” the shares back from the customer, usu. at the same price at which it “sold” the stock, plus interest. 2. The placement of assets in a safe, short-term investment while other investment opportunities are being considered. — Also termed (in sense 1) stock-parking.

parking-lot rule. The principle that workers’ compensation insurance covers the injuries suffered by an employee on the employer’s premises when the employee is arriving at or leaving work. — Also termed premises rule.

parol (pa-rol or par-al), adj. 1. Oral; unwritten <parol evidence>. 2. Not under seal <parol contract>.

parol (pa-rol or par-al), n. 1. An oral statement or declaration. 2. Hist. The oral pleadings in a case.

"Anciently pleadings were conducted in court orally, and the whole pleadings were called the parol; but for centuries the pleadings in civil actions have been required to be in writing." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 176–79 (2d ed. 1899).

parol agreement. See parol contract (1) under CONTRACT.

parol arrest. See ARREST.

parol contract. See CONTRACT.

parol demurrer. See DEMURRER.

parole (pa-rol), n. The release of a prisoner from imprisonment before the full sentence has been served. • Although not available under some sentences, parole is usu. granted for good behavior on the condition that the parolee regularly report to a supervising officer for a specified period. — parole, vb. Cf. PARDON; PROBATION (1).

"The essence of parole is release from prison, before completion of the sentence, on condition that the prisoner abide by certain rules during the balance of the sentence. Parole is not freedom." 59 Am. Jur. 2d Pardon and Parole § 6 (1987).

juvenile parole. The conditional release of a juvenile offender from confinement. — Also termed aftercare.

parole board. A governmental body that decides whether prisoners may be released from prison before completing their sentences. — Also termed board of parole; parole commission.

parolee (pa-rol-lee). A prisoner who is released on parole.

parole revocation. The administrative act of returning a parolee to prison because of the parolee’s failure to abide by the conditions of parole (as by committing a new offense).

parol evidence. See EVIDENCE.

parol-evidence rule. Contracts. The principle that a writing intended by the parties to be a final embodiment of their agreement cannot be modified by evidence that adds to, varies, or contradicts the writing. • This rule usu. operates to prevent a party from introducing extrinsic evidence of negotiations that occurred before or while the agreement was being reduced to its final written form. See INTEGRATION (2); MERGER (2). Cf. FOUR-CORNERS RULE.

"The basic principle is often called the 'parol evidence rule', and according to this rule evidence is not admissible to contradict or qualify a complete written contract. The rule is usually stated in the form of a rule of evidence, but it is probably best regarded as a rule of substantive law. The question is not really whether evidence can be admitted which might vary the written document, but whether, if the evidence is admitted, it will have the legal effect of varying the document." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 161–62 (3d ed. 1981).

"The parol evidence rule assumes that the formal writing reflects the parties’ minds at a point of maximum resolution and, hence, that duties and restrictions that do not appear in the written document, even though apparently accepted at an earlier stage, were not intended by the parties to survive. In addition, and quite apart from the survival of matters discarded in the course of negotiations, there is the obvious danger of outright fraud.” Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 82–83 (1990).

parol lease. See LEASE.

parol trust. See oral trust under TRUST.

parricide (par-ə-sid), n. 1. The act of killing a close relative, esp. a parent. 2. One who kills such a relative. — parricidal, adj. Cf. PATRICIDE.

parson. See RECTOR (1).

pars rea (pahrz ə-re-ə). A party defendant.

parte inaudita (pahr-tee in-aw-dy-ta or in-a-wdi-ta). [Latin “one side being unheard”] Of or relating to action taken ex parte.

partes finis nihil habuerunt (pahr-teez fi-nis ni-hil hab-yoo-er-ant). [Law Latin “the parties to the fine had nothing”] Hist. A plea to set aside a conveyance of land on grounds that the transferor did not have a sufficient ownership interest in the property to alienate it.

“Yet where a stranger ... officiously interferes in an estate which in nowise belongs to him, his fine is of no effect; and may at any time be set aside ... by pleading that ‘partes finis nihil habuerunt.’” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 356-57 (1765).

partiarius (pahr-shee-air-ee-as), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A legatee entitled to a portion of an inheritance along with the appointed heirs. 2. A tenant who is bound to hand over a portion of the crop in lieu of rent.

particeps criminis (pahr-tseeps krimee-neez), n. [Latin “partner in crime”] 1. An accomplice or accessory. Pl. participes criminis (pahr-tseeps krimee-neez). See ACCESSORY.

"Even in felonies but little practical importance now attaches to the distinctions between the first three of these four classes of ‘accomplices’ — a term which the law applies to all the participes criminis, whatever their degree of ‘complicity’ in the offence, though popular use generally limits it to those who take only a minor part. For the maximum punishment prescribed for any given crime is the same in the case of all three classes.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 90 (16th ed. 1952).

2. The doctrine that one participant in an unlawful activity cannot recover in a civil action against another participant in the activity.
- This is a civil doctrine only, having nothing to do with criminal responsibility.

participating bond. See BOND (3).

participating insurance. See INSURANCE.

participating policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

partitio (pahr-tish-ee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. Division; partition.

partitio legata (pahr-tish-ee-oh la-gay-ta). [Latin] A directive from a testator to an heir to divide the inheritance and deliver a designated portion to a named legatee; a testamentary partition.

partition, n. 1. Something that separates one part of a space from another. 2. The act of dividing; esp., the division of real property held jointly or in common by two or more persons into individually owned interests. — partition, vb. — partible, adj.

definitive partition. A partition that is irrevocable.

provisional partition. A temporary partition, often made before the remainder of the property can be divided.
partner. 1. One who shares or takes part with another, esp. in a venture with shared benefits and shared risks; an associate or colleague <partners in crime>. 2. One of two or more persons who jointly own and carry on a business for profit <the firm and its partners were sued for malpractice>. See Partnership. 3. One of two persons who are married or who live together; a spouse or companion <my partner in life>.

dormant partner. See silent partner.

general partner. A partner who ordinarily takes part in the daily operations of the business, shares in the profits and losses, and is personally responsible for the partnership's debts and liabilities. — Also termed full partner.

junior partner. A partner whose participation is limited with respect to both profits and management.

limited partner. A partner who receives profits from the business but does not take part in managing the business and is not liable for any amount greater than his or her original investment. — Also termed special partner; (in civil law) partner in commendam. See limited partnership under Partnership.

liquidating partner. The partner appointed to settle the accounts, collect the assets, adjust the claims, and pay the debts of a dissolving or insolvent firm.

name partner. A partner whose name appears in the name of the partnership <Mr. Tibbs is a name partner in the accounting firm of Gibbs & Tibbs>. — Also termed named partner; title member.

nominal partner. A person who is held out as a partner in a firm or business but who has no actual interest in the partnership. — Also termed ostensible partner; partner by estoppel.

partner in commendam (in ka-men-dom). See limited partner.

quasi-partner. A person who joins others in an enterprise that appears to be, but is not, a partnership. • A joint adventurer, for example, is a quasi-partner.

secret partner. A partner whose connection with the firm is concealed from the public. — Also termed sleeping partner.

senior partner. A high-ranking partner, as in a law firm.

silent partner. A partner who shares in the profits but who has no active voice in management of the firm and whose existence is often not publicly disclosed. — Also termed dormant partner.

sleeping partner. See secret partner.

special partner. See limited partner.

surviving partner. The partner who, upon the partnership's dissolution because of another partner's death, serves as a trustee to administer the firm's remaining affairs.

partner in commendam. See limited partner under Partnership.

partnership. A voluntary association of two or more persons who jointly own and carry on a business for profit. • Under the Uniform Partnership Act, a partnership is presumed to exist if the persons agree to share proportionally the business's profits or losses. Cf. joint venture; strategic alliance.

collapsible partnership. Tax. A partnership formed by partners who intend to dissolve it before they realize any income. • Any partner's gain resulting from unrealized receivables or inventory that has increased substantially in value will be treated by the IRS as ordinary income rather than as capital gain. IRC (26 USC) § 751. Cf. collapsible corporation under corporation.

commercial partnership. See trading partnership.

family partnership. See family partnership.

general partnership. A partnership in which all partners participate fully in running the business and share equally in profits and losses (though the partners' monetary contributions may vary).

implied partnership. See partnership by estoppel.

limited-liability partnership. A partnership in which a partner is not liable for a negligent act committed by another partner or by an employee not under the partner's supervision. • All states have enacted statutes that allow a business (typically a law firm or accounting firm) to register as this type of partnership. — Abbr. L.L.P.

limited partnership. A partnership composed of one or more persons who control the business and are personally liable for the partnership's debts (called general partners), and one or more persons who contribute capital and share profits but who cannot manage the business and are liable only for the amount of their contribution (called limited partners). • The chief purpose of a limited partnership is to enable persons to invest their money in a business without taking an active part in managing the business, and without risking more than the sum originally contributed, while securing the cooperation of others who have ability and integrity but insufficient money. — Abbr. L.P. — Also termed special partnership; (in civil law) partnership in commendam.

"Unknown at common law, the limited partnership was derived from the commenda or societé en commandite of continental Europe to permit a person to invest and share in the profits of a partnership business and yet limit one's liability to one's investment. It was first recognized in the United States by a New York statute of 1822. It is now recognized by statute in all American jurisdictions." Henry C. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 28, at 86 (3d ed. 1983).

"The two primary characteristics of a limited partnership are liability of limited partners only for their agreed contributions, and a hierarchical structure with management in one or more general partners and very little power or authority in the limited partners. Thus, limited partners are typically — although not necessarily — passive contributors of capital. In this respect they resemble shareholders in a corporation, but, depending on the details of the organizational documents, they may have greater or lesser rights." 3 Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnerships § 12.01, at 12.5-12.6 (1999).

master limited partnership. A limited partnership whose interests or shares are publicly traded. See publicly traded partnership.

nontrading partnership. A partnership that does not buy and sell but instead is a partnership of employment or occupation. — Also termed noncommercial partnership.

particular partnership. A partnership in which the members unite to share the benefits of a single transaction or enterprise.

partnership at will. A partnership that any partner may dissolve at any time without thereby incurring liability. Cf. partnership for a term.

partnership by estoppel. A partnership implied by law when one or more persons represent themselves as partners to a third party who relies on that representation. • A person who is deemed a partner by estoppel becomes liable for any credit extended to the partnership by the third party. — Also termed implied partnership.

partnership for a term. A partnership that exists for a specified duration or until a specified event occurs. • Such a partnership can be prematurely dissolved by any partner, but that partner may be held liable for breach of the partnership agreement. Cf. partnership at will.

partnership in commendam. See limited partnership.

publicly traded partnership. A partnership whose interests are traded either over-the-counter or on a securities exchange. • These partnerships are treated as corporations for income-tax purposes. — Abbr. PTP.

special partnership. 1. See limited partnership. 2. A partnership formed only for a single venture.

subpartnership. An arrangement between a firm's partner and a nonpartner to share the partner's profits and losses in the firm's business, but without forming a legal partnership between the partner and the nonpartner.

tiered partnership. An ownership arrangement consisting of one parent partnership that is a partner in one or more subsidiary partnerships.

trading partnership. A partnership whose usual business involves buying and selling. — Also termed commercial partnership.

umbrella limited partnership. A limited partnership used by a real-estate investment trust to acquire investment properties in exchange for shares in the partnership. See umbrella partnership real-estate investment trust under REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

universal partnership. A partnership formed by persons who agree to contribute all their individually owned property — and to devote all their skill, labor, and services — to the partnership.

partnership agreement. A contract defining the partners' rights and duties toward one another — not the partners' relationship with third parties. — Also termed articles of partnership.

partnership association. A business organization that combines the features of a limited partnership and a close corporation. • Partnership associations are statutorily recognized in only a few states. — Also termed statutory partnership association; limited partnership association.

partnership at will. See PARTNERSHIP.

partnership by estoppel. See PARTNERSHIP.

partnership certificate. A document that evidences the participation of the partners in a partnership certificate partnership. • The certificate is often furnished to financial institutions when the partnership borrows money.

partnership distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

partnership for a term. See PARTNERSHIP.

partnership in commendam. See limited partnership under PARTNERSHIP.

partnership insurance. See INSURANCE.

partner's lien. A partner's right to have the partnership property applied in payment of the partnership's debts and to have whatever is due the firm from fellow partners deducted from what would otherwise be payable to them for their shares.

part payment. A buyer's delivery of money or other thing of value to the seller, and its acceptance by the seller, when the money or the value of the thing does not equal the full sum owed.

part performance. 1. The accomplishment of some but not all of one's contractual obligations. 2. A party's execution, in reliance on an opposing party's oral promise, of enough of an oral contract's requirements that a court may hold the statute of frauds not to apply. 3. PART-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

part-performance doctrine. The equitable principle by which a failure to comply with the statute of frauds is overcome by a party's execution, in reliance on an opposing party's oral promise, of an oral contract's requirements. — Sometimes shortened to part performance.

"Part performance is not an accurate designation of such acts as taking possession and making improvements when the contract does not provide for such acts, but such acts regularly bring the doctrine into play. The doctrine is contrary to the words of the Statute of Frauds, but it was established by English courts of equity soon after the enactment of the Statute. Payment of purchase-money, without more, was once thought sufficient to justify specific enforcement, but a contrary view now prevails, since in such cases restitution is an adequate remedy. English decisions treated a transfer of possession of the land as sufficient, if unequivocally referable to the oral agreement, apparently on the ground that the promise to transfer had been executed by a common-law conveyance. Such decisions are not generally followed in the United States. Enforcement has instead been justified on the ground that repudiation after 'part performance' amounts to a 'virtual fraud.' A more accurate statement is that courts with equitable powers are vested by tradition with what in substance is a dispensing power based on the promise's reliance, a discretion to be exercised with caution in the light of all the circumstances." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 129 cmt. a (1981).

part-sovereign state. See SOVEREIGN STATE.

party. 1. One who takes part in a transaction .

"Note, that if an Indenture be made between two as Parties thereto in the Beginning, and in the Deed one of them grants or lets a Thing to another who is not named in the Beginning, he is not Party to the Deed, nor shall take any Thing thereby." John Rastell, Les Termes de la Ley 471 (26th ed. 1721).

"A person who takes part in a legal transaction or proceeding is said to be a party to it. Thus, if an agreement, conveyance, lease, or the like, is entered into between A. and B., they are said to be parties to it; and the same expression is often, though not very correctly, applied to the persons named as the grantors or releasors in a deed-poll." 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 930 (1883).

party of the first part. Archaic. The party named first in a contract; esp., the owner or seller.

party of the second part. Archaic. The party named second in a contract; esp., the buyer.

2. One by or against whom a lawsuit is brought .

adverse party. A party whose interests are opposed to the interests of another party to the action.

aggrieved party. A party whose personal, pecuniary, or property rights have been adversely affected by another person's actions or by a court's decree or judgment. — Also termed party aggrieved; person aggrieved.

formal party. See nominal party.

indispensable party. A party who, having interests that would inevitably be affected by a court's judgment, must be included in the case. • If such a party is not included, the case must be dismissed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(b). Cf. necessary party.

innocent party. A party who did not consciously or intentionally participate in an event or transaction.

interested party. A party who has a recognizable stake (and therefore standing) in a matter.

necessary party. A party who, being closely connected to a lawsuit, should be included in the case if feasible, but whose absence will not require dismissal of the proceedings. See compulsory joinder under JOINDER. Cf. indispensable party.

nominal party. A party who, having some interest in the subject matter of a lawsuit, will not be affected by any judgment but is nonetheless joined in the lawsuit to avoid procedural defects. • An example is the disinterested stakeholder in a garnishment action. — Also termed formal party. Cf. real party in interest.

party aggrieved. See aggrieved party.

party in interest. See real party in interest.

party opponent. An adversary in a legal proceeding. — Sometimes written party-opponent.

party to be charged. A defendant in an action to enforce a contract falling within the statute of frauds.

prevailing party. A party in whose favor a judgment is rendered, regardless of the amount of damages awarded <in certain cases, the court will award attorney's fees to the prevailing party>. — Also termed successful party.

proper party. A party who may be joined in a case for reasons of judicial economy but whose presence is not essential to the proceeding. See permissive joinder under JOINER.

real party in interest. A person entitled under the substantive law to enforce the right sued upon and who generally, but not necessarily, benefits from the action's final outcome. — Also termed party in interest; (archaically) intereseesee. Cf. nominal party.

"[The 'real party in interest' is the party who, by the substantive law, possesses the right sought to be enforced, and not necessarily the person who will ultimately benefit from the recovery.... The concept of real party in interest should not be confused with the concept of standing. The standing question arises in the realm of public law, when governmental action is attacked on the ground that it violates private rights or some constitutional principle.... Unfortunately, confusion between standing on the one hand and real party in interest or capacity on the other has been increasing."

successful party. See prevailing party.

third party. See THIRD PARTY.

parum cavisse videtur (par-um ko-vis-ee vi-dee-tor). [Latin] Hist. He seems to have taken too little care; he seems to have been incautious. • This expression was used by a judge when pronouncing a death sentence.

par value. The value of an instrument or security as shown on its face; esp., the arbitrary dollar amount assigned to a stock share by the corporate charter, or the principal of a bond. — Often shortened to par. — Also termed face value; nominal value; stated value.

"At one time par value had considerable importance because it was widely viewed as the amount for which the shares would be issued: shares with a par value of one hundred dollars could be subscribed for at one hundred dollars per share with confidence that all other identical shares would also be issued for $100. This practice, however, long ago fell into disuse. Today, par value serves only a minor function and is in no way an indication of the price at which the shares are issued, with this one exception: The one basic rule about setting the price for shares of common stock with a par value is that the price must be equal to or greater than par value." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 109 (3d ed. 1991).

pass, vb. 1. To pronounce or render an opinion, ruling, sentence, or judgment <the court refused to pass on the constitutional issue, deciding the case instead on procedural grounds>. 2. To transfer or be transferred <the woman's will passes title to the house to her nephew, much to her husband's surprise> <title passed when the nephew received the deed>. 3. To enact (a legislative bill or resolution) <Congress has debated whether to pass a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution>. 4. To approve or certify (something) as meeting specified requirements <the mechanic informed her that the car had passed inspection>. 5. To publish, transfer, or circulate (a thing, often a forgery) <he was found guilty of passing counterfeit bills>. 6. To forgo or proceed beyond <the case was passed on the court's trial docket because the judge was presiding over a criminal trial>.

passage, n. 1. The passing of a legislative measure into law. 2. A right, privilege, or permission to pass over land or water; an easement to travel through another's property.

pass-along, adj. See PASS-THROUGH.

passbook. A depositor's book in which a bank records all the transactions on an account. — Also termed bankbook.

passed dividend. See DIVIDEND.

passim (pas-im), adv. [Latin] Here and there; throughout (the cited work). • In modern legal writing, the citation signal see generally is preferred to passim as a general reference, although passim can be useful in a brief's index of authorities to show that a given authority is cited throughout the brief.

passing off, n. The act or an instance of falsely representing one's own product as that of another in an attempt to deceive potential buyers. • Passing off is actionable in tort under the law of unfair competition. — Also termed palming off. — pass off, vb. Cf. MISAPPROPRIATION.

passive, adj. Not involving active participation; esp., of or relating to a business enterprise in which an investor does not have immediate control over the activity that produces income.

passive activity. Tax. A business activity in which the taxpayer does not materially participate and therefore does not have immediate control over the income. • A typical example is the ownership and rental of real property by someone not in the real-property business.

passive bond. See BOND (3).

passive breach of contract. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

passive concealment. See CONCEALMENT.

passive debt. See DEBT.

passive duty. See negative duty under DUTY (1). passive euthanasia. See EUTHANASIA.

passive income. See INCOME.

passive investment income. See INCOME.

passive loss. See LOSS.

passive negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

passive trust. See TRUST.

passport. 1. A formal document certifying a person's identity and citizenship so that the person may travel to and from a foreign country. 2. See SEA LETTER.

pass the witness. See TAKE THE WITNESS.

pass-through, adj. (Of a seller's or lessor's costs) chargeable to the buyer or lessee. — Also termed pass-along.

pass-through security. See SECURITY.

pass-through taxation. See TAXATION.

past consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

past recollection recorded. Evidence. A document concerning events that a witness once knew about but can no longer remember. • The document itself is evidence and, despite being hearsay, may be admitted (or read into the record) if it was prepared or adopted by the witness when the events were fresh in the witness's memory. Fed. R. Evid. 803(5). — Also termed recorded recollection; past recorded recollection. Cf. PRESENT RECOLLECTION RE-FRESHED.

Pasula–Robinette test. The principle that if a miner establishes a prima facie case of retaliation for filing a claim under the Mine Safety and Health Act, the mine operator can still prevail by proving, as an affirmative defense, that (1) the miner did not engage in a protected activity, (2) the adverse action was based on the miner's unprotected activity, and (3) the mine operator would have taken the same action based solely on the unprotected activity. • To establish a prima facie case of retaliation, the evidence must show that the miner engaged in a protected activity and that an adverse employment action occurred based at least in part on that activity. 30 USCA § 815(e); Secretary ex rel. Pasula v. Consolidation Coal Co., 2 FMSHRC 2786 (1980); Secretary ex rel. Robinette v. United Coal Co., 3 FMSHRC 802 (1981).

pat-down, n. See FRISK.

pateat universis per praesentes (pat-ee-at yoo-na-var-sis par pri-zen-tess). [Law Latin] Let it be open to all men by these presents. Cf.
Pate hearing. A proceeding in which the trial court seeks to determine whether a criminal defendant is competent to stand trial. Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 86 S.Ct. 836 (1966); 18 USCA § 4241. — Also termed competency hearing; incompetency hearing.

patent (pay-tenant), adj. Obvious; apparent . Cf. LATENT.

patent (pat-ant), n. 1. The governmental grant of a right, privilege, or authority. 2. The official document so granting. — Also termed public grant. See LETTERS PATENT.

call patent. A land patent in which the corners have been staked but the boundary lines have not been run out at the time of the grant.

land patent. An instrument by which the government conveys a grant of public land to a private person.

lapse patent. A land patent substituting for an earlier patent to the same land that lapsed because the previous patentee did not claim it.

3. The exclusive right to make, use, or sell an invention for a specified period (usu. 17 years), granted by the federal government to the inventor if the device or process is novel, useful, and nonobvious. 35 USCA §§ 101–103.

"What, exactly, is a patent and how does it operate to foster the 'progress of the useful arts'? In its simplest terms a patent is an agreement between an inventor and the public, represented by the federal government; in return for a full public disclosure of the invention the inventor is granted the right for a fixed period of time to exclude others from making, using, or selling the defined invention in the United States. It is a limited monopoly, designed not primarily to reward the inventor (this may or may not follow), but to encourage a public disclosure of inventions so that after the monopoly expires, the public is free to take unrestricted advantage of the invention." Earl W. Kintner & Jack L. Lahr, An Intellectual Property Law Primer 7–11 (2d ed. 1982).

basic patent. A patent granted to an invention recognized by industry or the scientific community as pioneering, unexpected, and unprecedented. — Also termed pioneer patent.

combination patent. A patent granted for an invention that unites existing components in a novel way.

design patent. A patent granted for a new, original, and ornamental design for an article of manufacture; a patent that protects a product's appearance or nonfunctional aspects. •

Design patents — which, unlike utility patents, have a term of only 14 years — are similar to copyrights.

fencing patent. A patent procured in an effort to broaden the scope of the invention beyond the article or process that is actually intended to be manufactured or licensed. Cf. DOUBLE PATENTING.

paper patent. A patent granted for a discovery or invention that has never been used commercially. • A paper patent receives less protection under the law than a patent granted for a device that is actually used in industry.

pioneer patent. See basic patent.

plant patent. A patent granted for the invention or discovery of a new and distinct variety of asexually reproducing plant.

process patent. A patent for a method of treating specified materials to produce a certain result; a patent outlining a means of producing a physical result independently of the producing mechanism. • The result might be brought about by chemical action, by applying some element or power of nature, by mixing certain substances together, or by heating a substance to a certain temperature.

reissue patent. A patent that is issued to correct one or more errors in an original patent, as to revise the specification or to fix an invalid claim. • A reissue patent replaces the original patent and lasts for the rest of the original patent's term. 35 USCA § 251. — Sometimes shortened to reissue.

"[R]eissuing patents are relatively rare, because the push and pull of the patent prosecution process tends to make the claims both accurate and as broad as the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office will allow." Stephen Elias, Patent, Copyright and Trademark 278 (1996).

utility patent. A patent granted for one of the following types of inventions: a process, a machine, a manufacture, or a composition of matter (such as a new chemical). • Utility patents are the most commonly issued patents. 35 USCA § 101.

Peeping Tom. A person who spies on another (as through a window), usu. to gain sexual pleasure; VOYEUR.

peer, n. 1. A person who is of equal status, rank, or character with another.

"The commonalty, like the nobility, are divided into several degrees; and, as the lords, though different in rank, yet all of them are peers in respect of their nobility, so the commoners, though some are greatly superior to others, yet all are in law peers, in respect of their want of nobility ...." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 391 (1765).

2. A member of the British nobility (such as a duchess, marquis, earl, viscount, or baroness). — peerage (peer-ij), n.

"The Crown has power to create any number of peers and of any degree. In modern practice the power is exercised on the advice of the Prime Minister and the honour is most commonly a reward for political services. Peerages can be, and have been, conferred for party political reasons; 12 were created in 1712 to save the government, and 16 to help pass the Reform Bill in 1832. In 1832 and 1911 the Opposition of the House of Lords was overcome by the threat to create enough peers to secure a majority .... The main privilege of a peer is to

peine forte et dure (pen for tay door or payn fort ay dyoor). [French “strong and hard punishment”] Hist. The punishment of an alleged felon who refused to plead, consisting of pressing or crushing the person’s body under heavy weights until the accused either pleaded or died.

“In all other felonies, however, the punishment of peine forte et dure was, until lately, denounced as the consequence of an obstinate silence. The greatest caution and deliberation were indeed to be exercised before it was resorted to; and the prisoner was not only to have ‘trina admonitio,’ but a respite of a few hours, and the sentence was to be distinctly read to him, that he might be fully aware of the penalty he was incurring.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 425-26 (2d ed. 1826).

“In old English law, a person charged with felony who, refusing to accept jury trial, was pressed to death (peine forte et dure), was not regarded as committing suicide, so that he did not forfeit his property.” Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 270 n.4 (1967).

pell. See CLERK OF THE PELLS.

pellex (pel-eks), n. [Latin] Roman law. A concubine.

penal (pee-nal), adj. Of, relating to, or being a penalty or punishment, esp. for a crime.

“The general rule is that penal statutes are to be construed strictly. By the word ‘penal’ in this connection is meant not only such statutes as in terms impose a fine, or corporal punishment, or forfeiture as a consequence of violating laws, but also all acts which impose by way of punishment damages beyond compensation for the benefit of the injured party, or which impose any special burden, or take away or impair any privilege or right.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 344 (3d ed. 1914).

“The word penal connotes some form of punishment imposed on an individual by the authority of the state. Where the primary purpose of a statute is expressly enforceable by fine, imprisonment, or similar punishment the statute is always construed as penal.” 3 Norman J. Singer, Sutherland Statutes and Statutory Construction § 59.01, at 1 (4th ed. 1986).

penal action. See ACTION.

penal bill. See penal bond under BOND (2).

2. CRIMINAL LAW.

penal liability. See LIABILITY.

penal redress. See REDRESS.

penal sanction. See criminal sanction under SANCTION.

penal statute. See STATUTE.

penal sum. The monetary amount specified as a penalty in a penal bond. See penal bond under BOND (2).

penalty. 1. Punishment imposed on a wrong-doer, esp. in the form of imprisonment or fine. • Though usu. for crimes, penalties are also sometimes imposed for civil wrongs. 2. Excessive liquidated damages that a contract purports to impose on a party that breaches. • If the damages are excessive enough to be considered a penalty, a court will usu. not enforce that particular provision of the contract. Some contracts specify that a given sum of damages is intended “as liquidated damages and not as a penalty” — but even that language is not fool-proof.

“A penalty is a sum which a party ... agrees to pay or forfeit in the event of a breach, but which is fixed, not as a pre-estimate of probable actual damages, but as a punishment, the threat of which is designed to prevent the breach, or as security, where the sum is deposited or the covenant to pay is joined in by one or more sureties, to insure that the person injured shall collect his actual damages. Penalties ... are not recoverable or retainable as such by the person in whose favor they are framed ...” Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 146, at 600 (1935).

civil penalty. A fine assessed for a violation of a statute or regulation <the EPA levied a civil penalty of $10,000 on the manufacturer for exceeding its pollution limits>.

statutory penalty. A penalty imposed for a statutory violation; esp., a penalty imposing automatic liability on a wrongdoer for violation of a statute’s terms without reference to any actual damages suffered.

penalty clause. A contractual provision that assesses an excessive monetary charge against a defaulting party. • Penalty clauses are generally unenforceable. — Often shortened to penalty. — Also termed penal clause. Cf. LIQUIDATED-DAMAGES CLAUSE; LIMITATION-OF-REMEDIES CLAUSE.

“It not infrequently happens that contracts provide for what is to happen in the event of a breach by the parties, or by one of them. Such provisions may be perfectly simple attempts to avoid future disputes, and to quantify the probable amount of any loss. That is unobjectionable. But sometimes clauses of this kind are not designed to quantify the amount of the probable loss, but are designed to terrorize, or frighten, the party into performance. For example, a contract may provide that the promisor is to pay £5 on a certain event, but if he fails to do so, he must then pay £500. Now a clause of that kind is called a penalty clause by lawyers, and for several hundred years it has been the law that such promises cannot be enforced. The standard justification for the law here is that it is unfair and unconscionable to enforce clauses which are designed to act in terrorem.” P.S. Atiyah, Promises, Morals, and Law 57-58 (1981).

penance. Eccles. law. A punishment assessed by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense.

vested pension. A pension in which an employee (or employee’s estate) has rights to benefits purchased with the employer’s contributions to the plan, even if the employee is no longer employed by this employer at the time of retirement. • The vesting of qualified pension plans is governed by ERISA. See EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.

Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. The federal agency that guarantees the payment of retirement benefits covered by private pension plans that lack sufficient assets to pay the promised benefits. — Abbr. PBGC.

pensioner. A recipient or beneficiary of a pension plan.

pension plan. An employer’s plan established to pay long-term retirement benefits to employees or their beneficiaries; a plan providing systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to employees over a period of years, usu. for life, after retirement. • Retirement benefits are typically determined by such factors as years of the employee’s service and compensation received. ERISA governs the administration of many pensions. See EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT. Cf. EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

contributory pension plan. A pension plan in which both the employer and the employee contribute.

defined-contribution plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

penumbra (pi-nam-bra), n. A surrounding area or periphery of uncertain extent. • In constitutional law, the Supreme Court has ruled that the specific guarantees in the Bill of Rights have penumbrae containing implied rights, esp. the right of privacy. Pl. penumbrae (pi-nam-bree). — penumbral (pi-nam-bral), adj.

"Problems of fringe are sometimes spoken of as 'problems of the penumbra,' the point being that, in the case of a great many words, there is no doubt about the hard core of their meanings, but different views may well be taken on the question whether the words are applicable to things or situations outside that hard core." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 57 (1976).

peonage (pee-9-niij), n. Illegal and involuntary servitude in satisfaction of a debt. — peon, n.

"Peonage, which is a term descriptive of a condition that existed in Spanish America, and especially in Mexico, and in the territory of New Mexico, and which may be defined as the status or condition of compulsory service based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master, the basic fact being the indebtedness, is abolished and prohibited by an act of Congress which further declares that any statute, resolution, regulation, ordinance, or usage of any territory or state designed or operating to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons per aversionem (par a-var-zhee-oh-nam). [Latin "for a lump sum"] Roman & civil law. Of a sale in which goods are taken in bulk or land is bought by estimation of the number of acres. ● This type of sale is so called because the buyer "turns away" from a careful scrutiny of the things purchased.

per bouche (par boosh). [Law French] By the mouth; orally.

per capita (par kap-i-ta), adj. [Latin "by the head"] 1. Divided equally among all individuals, usu. in the same class <the court will distribute the property to the descendants on a per capita basis>. Cf. PER STIRPES.

"Per capita means taking as an individual and not as a representative of an ancestor. Suppose the testator ... with three living children and three grandchildren who are the issue of a deceased son, had desired and had so stated in his will that his own children and the children of his deceased son should share equally in the estate. In that event the estate would be divided into six parts and each of the three children and each of the three grandchildren would receive an equal portion of the total estate — namely, one-sixth." Gilbert Thomas Stephenson, Wills 30 (1934).

per capita with representation. Divided equally among all members of a class of takers, including those who have predeceased the testator, so that no family stocks are cut off by the prior death of a taker. ● For example, if T (the testator) has three children — A, B, and C — and C has two children but predeceases T, C's children would still take C's share when T's estate is distributed.

2. Allocated to each person; possessed by each individual <the average annual per capita income has increased over the last two years>. — per capita, adv.

per capita tax. See poll tax under TAX.

percentage lease. See LEASE.

percentage-of-completion method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

percentage order. See ORDER (4).

perception. Civil law. The act of taking into possession (as rents, profits, etc.).

percolating water. See WATER.

per consequens (par kon-sa-kwenz). [Latin] By consequence; consequently.

per considerationem curiae (par kon-sid-ar-ray-shee-oh-nam kyoor-ee-ee). [Law Latin] By the consideration of the court.

per contra (par kon-tra). [Latin] On the other hand; to the contrary; by contrast.

per curiam (par kyoor-ee-am), adv. & adj. [Latin] By the court as a whole. per curiam, n. See per curiam opinion under OPINION (1).

per curiam opinion. See OPINION (1).

per diem (par di-em or dee-em), adv. [Latin] By the day; for each day. Cf. IN DIEM.

per diem, adj. Based on or calculated by the day <per diem interest>.

per diem, n. 1. A monetary daily allowance, usu. to cover expenses. 2. A daily fee.

perdonatio utilgariae (par-da-nay-shoo-ah al-gair-yee-ee). [Law Latin “pardon of outlawry”] Hist. A pardon given to a person outlawed for failing to obey a court’s summons. • A person who voluntarily surrendered was eligible for this type of pardon.

perduellio (par-d[y]oo-el-yee-oh). [Latin “treason”] Roman law. Treasonous conduct, such as joining the enemy or deserting the battlefield. • Perduellio was later absorbed into a broader category of crimes against the state, the crimen laesae majestatis. • Also termed perduellion (par-d[y]oo-el-yahn). See CRIMEN LAESAE MAJESTATIS.

perdurable (par-d[y]uurr-a-bal), adj. (Of an estate in land) lasting or enduring; durable; permanent.

perempt (par empt), vb. 1. Civil law. To quash, do away with, or extinguish. 2. Slang. To exercise a peremptory challenge.

peremption. Civil law. The period during which a legal right exists. • If the right is not exercised during this period, it is destroyed. Where- as prescription simply bars a specific remedy, peremption bars the action itself. Cf. PRESCRIPTION (1). See STATUTE OF REPOSE.

peremptory (par-empta-ree), adj. 1. Final; absolute; conclusive; incontrovertible <the king’s peremptory order>. 2. Not requiring any shown cause; arbitrary <peremptory challenges>.

peremptory, n. See peremptory challenge under CHALLENGE (2). peremptory challenge. See CHALLENGE (2).

peremptory day. See DAY.

peremptory defense. See DEFENSE (1).

peremptory exception. See EXCEPTION (1).

peremptory instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

peremptory mandamus. See MANDAMUS.

peremptory plea. See PLEA (3).

peremptory strike. See peremptory challenge under CHALLENGE (2).

peremptory writ. See WRIT.

per eundem (par ee-an-dam). [Latin] By the same. • This term often appears in the phrase per eundem in eadem (“by the same judge in the same case”).

perfect (par-fekt), vb. To take all legal steps needed to complete, secure, or record (a claim, right, or interest); to put in final conformity with the law <perfect a security interest> <perfect the title>.

perfect attestation clause. A provision in a testamentary instrument asserting that all actions required to make a valid testamentary disposition have been performed.

perfect competition. See COMPETITION.

perfect duty. See DUTY (1).

perfected security interest. See SECURITY INTEREST.

perfect equity. See EQUITY.

perfecting amendment. See AMENDMENT (1).

perfect instrument. See INSTRUMENT.

perfection. Validation of a security interest as against other creditors, usu. by filing a statement with some public office or by taking possession of the collateral. Cf. ATTACHMENT (4).

automatic perfection. The self-operative perfection of a purchase-money security interest without filing or without possession of the collateral. • The security interest is perfected simply by the attachment of the security interest, without any additional steps. See PURCHASE-MONEY SECURITY INTEREST under SECURITY INTEREST.
perfection

temporary perfection. The continuous perfection of a security interest for a limited period. • For example, a security interest in proceeds from the original collateral is perfected for ten days after the debtor receives the proceeds; the interest will become unperfected after this ten-day period unless certain statutory requirements are met. On most instruments, a secured party who advances new value under a written security agreement obtains a 21-day perfection period, even if the secured party does not file a financing statement and the collateral remains with the debtor. UCC § 9–304(4).

perfect tender. See TENDER (2).

perfect-tender rule. Commercial law. The principle that a buyer may reject a seller’s goods if the quality, quantity, or delivery of the goods fails to conform precisely to the contract. • Although the perfect-tender rule was adopted by the UCC (§ 2–601), other Code provisions — such as the seller’s right to cure after rejection — have softened the rule’s impact. Cf. SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

"At common law, a buyer of goods possessed a legal right to insist upon ‘perfect tender’ by the seller. If the goods failed to conform exactly to the description in the contract — whether as to quality, quantity or manner of delivery — the buyer could reject the goods and rescind the contract, which meant that the parties would be returned to the positions they occupied before the contract was entered into." Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 112 (1990).

perfect title. See TITLE (2).

perfect usufruct. See USUFRUCT.

perfect war. See WAR.

perfidy (par-fə-dee). Int’l law. A combatant’s conduct that creates the impression that an adversary is entitled to, or is obliged to accord, protection under international law, when in fact the conduct is a ruse to gain an advantage. • Acts of perfidy include feigning an intent to negotiate under a flag of truce, or feigning protected status by using signs, emblems, or uniforms of the United Nations or of a neutral country.

per formam doni (par for-mam doh-ni). [Law Latin] By the form of the gift; by the designation of the giver rather than by operation of law.

performance, n. 1. The successful completion of a contractual duty, usu. resulting in the performer’s release from any past or future liability; EXECUTION (2). — Also termed full performance. — perform, vb. Cf. NONPERFORMANCE.

defective performance. A performance that, whether partial or complete, does not completely comply with the contract. • One example is late performance.

future performance. Performance in the future of an obligation that will become due under a contract.

misperformance. See MISPERFORMANCE.

nonperformance. See NONPERFORMANCE.

part performance. See PART PERFORMANCE.

specific performance. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

substantial performance. Performance of the primary, necessary terms of an agreement. See SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

2. The equitable doctrine by which acts consistent with an intention to fulfill an obligation are construed to be in fulfillment of that obligation, even if the party was silent on the point. 3. A company’s earnings. 4. The ability of a corporation to maintain or increase earnings.

performance bond. 1. A bond given by a surety to ensure the timely performance of a contract. • In major international agreements, performance bonds are typically issued by banks, but sometimes also by insurance companies. The face amount of the bond is typically 2% of the value of performance, but occasionally as much as 5%. 2. A third party’s agreement to guarantee the completion of a construction contract upon the default of the general contractor. — Also termed completion bond; surety bond; contract bond. Cf. common-law bond under BOND (2).

nonoperative performance bond. A performance bond that is not currently in effect but is activated upon the issuance of the buyer’s letter of credit or other approved financing.

operative performance bond. A performance bond that has been activated by the issuance of the buyer’s letter of credit or other approved financing.
revolving performance bond. A performance bond that is in effect on a continuing basis for the duration of the contract, usu. plus an additional number of days (often 45).

up-front performance bond. A performance bond given before the issuance of the buyer's letter of credit or other financing.

performance fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

performance plan. A bonus compensation plan in which executives are paid according to the company's growth.

performance right. A copyright holder's exclusive right to recite, play, act, show, or otherwise render the protected work publicly, whether directly or by technological means (as by broadcasting the work on television).

performance shares. Stock given to an executive when the corporation meets a performance objective.

performance stock. See glamour stock under STOCK.

per fraudem (par fraud-dam), adv. [Latin] By fraud; fraudulently.

periculosus (par-i-kay-loh-sus), adj. [Latin] Dangerous; perilous.

periculum (pa-rick-yay-lam), n. [Latin] Civil law. Peril; danger; risk.

peril. 1. Exposure to the risk of injury, damage, or loss <the perils of litigation>. 2. Insurance. The cause of a loss to person or property <insured against all perils>. Cf. RISK (3).

peril of the sea. An action of the elements at sea of such force as to overcome the strength of a well-founded ship and the normal precautions of good marine practice. • A peril of the sea may relieve a carrier from liability for the resulting losses. — Also termed danger of navigation; danger of river; marine peril; marine risk; (in regard to the Great Lakes) perils of the lakes.

"Of the marine perils, by far the most important are those of the sea'. What is covered is not any loss that may happen on the sea, but fortuitous losses occurring through extraordinary action of the elements at sea, or any accident or mishap in navigation. By far the greatest number of claims for marine loss, and of the insurance problems connected with other topics treated in this book arise under this clause. Extraordinary action of the wind and waves is a sea peril. Collision, foundering, stranding, striking on rocks and icebergs, are all covered under these words. Even a swell from a passing ship may be a 'peril of the sea'. On the other hand, ordinary wear and tear are not included under the coverage of this or any other phrase in the clause, nor are losses which are anticipatable as regular incidents of sea carriage in general or of navigation in a particular part of the world." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 2-9, at 72-73 (2d ed. 1975).

per incuriam (par in-kyoor-ee-am), adj. (Of a judicial decision) wrongly decided, usu. because the judge or judges were ill-informed about the applicable law.

"As a general rule the only cases in which decisions should be held to have been given per incuriam are those of decisions given in ignorance or forgetfulness of some inconsistent statutory provision or of some authority binding on the court concerned, so that in such cases some features of the decision or some step in the reasoning on which it is based is found on that account to be demonstrably wrong. This definition is not necessarily exhaustive, but cases not strictly within it which can properly be held to have been decided per incuriam, must in our judgment, consistently with the stare decisis rule which is an essential part of our law, be of the rarest occurrence." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 149 (4th ed. 1991).

per infortunium (par in-for-tyoo-nee-am), adj. or adv. [Latin] By misadventure. • At common law, when one person killed another per infortunium, a conviction and royal pardon were necessary even when there was no fault. See homicide per infortunium under HOMICIDE.

"It may seem strange to modern minds that for centuries it was a rule of our law that a man who killed another either by misadventure (per infortunium) or in reasonable self-defence (against an attack not itself felonious), although he did not commit a felony, must yet be held guilty of unlawful homicide and require the King's pardon if he were to escape punishment, and even if granted pardon would still be liable to suffer forfeiture of his property; and that he was exposed to claims for compensation from the family of the deceased." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 113 (16th ed. 1952).

periodic alimony. See permanent alimony under ALIMONY.

periodic estate. See ESTATE.

periodic-payment-plan certificate. See CERTIFICATE.

permissive inference. See permissive presumption under PRESUMPTION.

permissive joinder. See JOINDER.

permissive presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

permissive subject of bargaining. Labor law. An employment or collective-bargaining issue, other than a basic employment issue, that is not required to be the subject of collective bargaining but that cannot be implemented by management without union approval. • For example, altering the scope of the bargaining unit does not affect a term or condition of employment, so it is a permissive, instead of mandatory, subject of bargaining. Disagreement on a permissive subject of bargaining cannot be used as the basis for an impasse in negotiating a collective-bargaining agreement, unlike a mandatory subject of bargaining. — Often shortened to permissive subject. Cf. MANDATORY SUBJECT.

permissive use. See USE (4).

permissive waste. See WASTE (1).

permit (pər-mit), n. A certificate evidencing permission; a license .

permit (pər-mit), vb. 1. To consent to formally <permit the inspection to be carried out>. 2. To give opportunity for <lax security permitted the escape>. 3. To allow or admit of <if the law so permits>.

permit bond. See license bond under BOND (2).

permit card. Labor law. A document issued by a union to a nonunion member to allow the person to work on a job covered by a union contract.

per mitter le droit (par mit-or la droyt). [Law French] Hist. By passing the right. • This described how releases became effective, as when a person disseised of land released the estate to the dissecor, at which time the right and possession combined to give the dissecor the entire estate.

per mitter l’estate (par mit-or la-stayt). [Law French] Hist. By passing the estate. • This described the manner in which a joint tenant’s right to an entire estate arose when the tenant received the remaining estate from the other joint tenant.

permutatio (par-myoo-tay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. An agreement for barter or exchange.

per my et per tout (par mee ay par too[t]). [Law French] By the half and by the whole. • This phrase described the estate held by joint tenants: by the half for purposes of survivorship, by the whole for purposes of alienation. Cf. PER TOUT ET NON PER MY.

pernancy (par-non-see). Hist. A taking or reception, as of the profits of an estate.

pernor of profits (par-nor or -nor). Hist. A person who receives the profits of property; one who has the perrancy of the profits.

perpetuating testimony. The means or procedure for preserving for future use witness testimony that might otherwise be unavailable at trial.

perpetuities, rule against. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.

perpetuity (par-pa-tee-oh-tee). 1. The state of continuing forever. 2. Hist. An unbarrable entail. 3. Hist. An inalienable interest. 4. An interest that does not take effect or vest within the period prescribed by law. • In reference to the rule against perpetuities, only sense 4 is now current. See Rule Against Perpetuities.

“A perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive of the Commonwealth; it would put a stop to commerce and prevent the circulation of the riches of the Kingdom, and therefore is not to be countenanced in equity. If in equity you could come nearer to a perpetuity than the rules of Common Law admit, all men being desirous to continue their estates in their families, would settle their estates by way of trust; which might indeed make well for the jurisdiction of the court, but would be destructive of the commonwealth.” (1683) 1 Vern. 163 (per Lord North) (as quoted in George W. Keeton, English Law: The Judicial Contribution 118 (1974)).

perpetuity of the king or queen. A fiction of English law that for political purposes the king or queen is immortal; that is, a monarch dies, but the office is never vacant.

per quae servititia (par kwee sar-vish-ee-a). [Latin “by which services”] Hist. A real action by which the grantee of a landed estate could compel the tenants of the grantor to attorn to him. • This action was abolished in the 19th century.
perquisite (par-kwi-zit). A privilege or benefit given in addition to one's salary or regular wages. — Often shortened to perk.

perquisitor (par-kwiz-ə-tər). [Latin "a seeker out"] Hist. A purchaser; esp., one who first acquires an estate by sale or gift.

per quod (par kwod), adv. & adj. [Latin "whereby"] Requiring reference to additional facts; (of libel or slander) actionable only on allegation and proof of special damages. See libel per quod under LIBEL; slander per quod under SLANDER.

per quod consortium amitis (par kwod kan-sor-shə-am ə-mi-zit). [Law Latin] Hist. Whereby he lost the company (of his wife). • This phrase was used in a trespass declaration to describe the loss suffered by a husband whose wife had been beaten or otherwise abused.

per quod servitium amitis (par kwod sar-vish-ee-am ə-mi-zit). [Law Latin] Hist. Whereby he lost the services (of his servant). • This phrase was used in a trespass declaration to describe the loss suffered by a master whose servant had been injured by another.

per se (par say), adv. & adj. [Latin] 1. Of, in, or by itself; standing alone, without reference to additional facts. See libel per se under LIBEL. 2. As a matter of law.

persecutio (par-sə-kyoo-shə-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A lawsuit or civil claim.

per se deadly weapon. See deadly weapon per se under WEAPON.

persequi (par-sə-kwəl), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To claim through a judicial proceeding.

per se rule. Antitrust. The judicial principle that a trade practice violates the Sherman Act simply if the practice is a restraint of trade, regardless of whether it actually harms anyone. See SHERMAN ANTITRUST ACT. Cf. RULE OF REASON.

per se violation. Antitrust. A trade practice (such as price-fixing) that is considered inherently anticompetitive and injurious to the public without any need to determine whether it has actually injured market competition.

person. 1. A human being. 2. An entity (such as a corporation) that is recognized by law as having the rights and duties of a human being. 3. The living body of a human being <contra-band found on the smuggler's person>.

"So far as legal theory is concerned, a person is any being whom the law regards as capable of rights and duties. Any being that is so capable is a person, whether a human being or not, and no being that is not so capable is a person, even though he be a man. Persons are the substances of which rights and duties are the attributes. It is only in this respect that persons possess juridical significance, and this is the exclusive point of view from which personality receives legal recognition." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 318 (Gianville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

artificial person. An entity, such as a corporation, created by law and given certain legal rights and duties of a human being; a being, real or imaginary, who for the purpose of legal reasoning is treated more or less as a human being. — Also termed fictitious person; juristic person; legal person; moral person.

disabled person. A person who has a disability. See DISABILITY.

fictitious person. See artificial person.

interested person. A person having a property right in or claim against a thing, such as a trust or decedent's estate.

juristic person. See artificial person.

legal person. See artificial person.

moral person. See artificial person.

natural person. A human being, as distinguished from an artificial person created by law.

person in loco parentis (in loh-koh pa-ren-tis). A person acting in the place of a parent; a person who has assumed the obligations of a parent without formally adopting the child.

person of incidence. The person against whom a right is enforceable; a person who owes a legal duty.

person of inheritance (in-heer-ants). The person in whom a legal right is vested; the owner of a right.

private person. 1. A person who does not hold public office or serve in the military. 2. Civil law. An entity such as a corporation or partnership that is governed by private law.

protected person. 1. A person for whom a conservator has been appointed or other protective order has been made. 2. Int'l law. A person who is protected by a rule of international law; esp., one who is in the hands of an occupying force during a conflict. • Protected persons are entitled to a standard of treatment (including a prohibition on coercion and corporal punishment) by the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (1949). 3. English law. An inhabitant of a protectorate of the United Kingdom. • Though not a British subject, such a person is given diplomatic protection by the Crown.

persona (par-soh-na), n. [Latin] Roman law. A person; an individual human being.

personable, adj. Having the status of a legal person (and thus the right to plead in court, enter into contracts, etc.) .

persona designata (par-soh-na dez-ig-nay-ta). [Latin] A person considered as an individual (esp. in a legal action) rather than as a member of a class.

persona ficta (par-soh-na fik-ta). [Latin "false mask"] Hist. A fictional person, such as a corporation.

"But units other than individual men can be thought of as capable of acts, or of rights and liabilities: such are Corporations and even Hereditates Lacentae. Accordingly the way is clear to apply the name of person to these also. The mediaeval lawyers did so, but as they regarded Corporations as endowed with personality by a sort of creative act of the State, and received from the Roman lawyers the conception of the hereditas lacensa as representing the persona of the deceased rather than as itself being a person, they called these things Personae Fictae, an expression not used by the Romans." W.W. Buckland, Elementary Principles of the Roman Private Law 16 (1912).

persona grata (par-soh-na gray-ta or grah-ta or grat-o), n. [Latin] An acceptable person; esp., a diplomat who is acceptable to a host country. Pl. personae gratae (par-soh-nee gray-tee or grah-tee or grat-ee). Cf. PERSONA NON GRATA.

personaliter (par-so-nay-la-tar), adv. [Latin] Personally; in person.

personality. The legal status of one regarded by the law as a person; the legal conception by which the law regards a human being or an artificial entity as a person. — Also termed legal personality.

"Legal personality ... refers to the particular device by which the law creates or recognizes units to which it ascribes certain powers and capacities." George Whitecroy Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 393 (G.W. Paton & David F. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

personal judgment. See JUDGMENT.

personal jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

personal justice. See JUSTICE (1).

personal knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.
personal law. The law that governs a person's family matters, usu. regardless of where the person goes. • In common-law systems, personal law refers to the law of the person's domicile. In civil-law systems, it refers to the law of the individual's nationality (and so is sometimes called lex patriae). Cf. TERRITORIAL LAW.

"The idea of the personal law is based on the conception of man as a social being, so that those transactions of his daily life which affect him most closely in a personal sense, such as marriage, divorce, legitimacy, many kinds of capacity, and succession, may be governed universally by that system of law deemed most suitable and adequate for the purpose... [Although the law of the domicile is the chief criterion adopted by English courts for the personal law, it lies within the power of any man of full age and capacity to establish his domicile in any country he chooses, and thereby automatically to make the law of that country his personal law.]" R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 188 (7th ed. 1974).

peter-pence. Hist. A tax levied on each house in England and paid to the Pope, so called because it was collected on St. Peter’s Day. — Also termed hearth money.

petit (pet-eer or pet-it), adj. [Law French “minor, small”] See PETTY.

petit cape. See CAPE PARVUM under CAPE.

petite assize. See ASSIZE (6).

Petite policy. The Department of Justice rule forbidding a federal prosecution after a previous state or federal prosecution based on the same acts unless (1) the prosecution has been approved by the Assistant Attorney General, (2) there is a substantial federal interest supporting the prosecution, (3) the previous prosecution failed to vindicate the federal interest, and (4) there is sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction. Petite v. United States, 361 U.S. 529, 80 S.Ct. 450 (1960).

“(‘Petite Policy’) . . . . The purpose of this policy is to vindicate substantial federal interests through appropriate federal prosecutions, to protect persons charged with criminal conduct from the burdens associated with multiple prosecutions and punishments for substantially the same act(s) or transaction(s), to promote efficient utilization of Department resources, and to promote coordination and cooperation between federal and state prosecutors.” United States Attorneys’ Manual § 9-2.031 (Sept. 1997).

“In response to the Court’s continuing sensitivity to the fairness implications of the multiple prosecution power, the Justice Department adopted the policy of refusing to bring a federal prosecution following a state prosecution except when necessary to advance compelling interests of federal law enforcement. The Petite policy was designed to limit the exercise of the power to bring successive prosecutions for the same offense to situations comporting with the rationale for the existence of that power. Although not constitutionally mandated, this Executive policy serves to protect interests which, but for the ‘dual sovereignty’ principle inherent in our federal system, would be embraced by the Double Jeopardy Clause. In light of the parallel purposes of the Government’s Petite policy and the fundamental constitutional guarantee against double jeopardy, the federal courts should be receptive, not circumspect, when the Government seeks leave to implement that policy.” Rinaldi v. United States, 434 U.S. 22, 28-29, 98 S.Ct. 81, 85 (1977) (citation omitted).

petition, n. 1. A formal written request presented to a court or other official body.

placitare (plas-a-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To plead; to bring an action in a court of law.
placitory (plas-ə-tor-ee), adj. [Law Latin] Of or relating to pleas or pleading.

placitum (plas-ə-tam), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. Roman law. An agreement between parties. 2. Roman law. An imperial constitution. 3. A judicial decision. 4. A court; a judicial tribunal. 5. A judicial proceeding; a trial. 6. A fine, mulct, or pecuniary punishment. 7. A pleading or plea. 8. A paragraph or section of a title or page where the point decided in a case is set forth separately. — Abbr. (in sense 8) pl. Pl. plactita.

plagiarism (play-ja-riz-am), n. The act or an instance of copying or stealing another’s words or ideas and attributing them as one’s own. — plagiarize (play-ja-riz), vb. — plagiarist (play-ja-rist), n. Cf. INFRINGEMENT.

"Plagiarism, which many people commonly think has to do with copyright, is not in fact a legal doctrine. True plagiarism is an ethical, not a legal, offense and is enforceable by academic authorities, not courts. Plagiarism occurs when someone — a hurried student, a neglectful professor, an unscrupulous writer — falsely claims someone else’s words, whether copyrighted or not, as his own. Of course, if the plagiarized work is protected by copyright, the unauthorized reproduction is also a copyright infringement." Paul Goldstein, Copyright’s Highway 12 (1994).

"That the supporting evidence for the accusation of plagiarism may on occasion be elusive, insufficient, or uncertain, is not the same as thinking that the definition of plagiarism is uncertain. The gray areas may remain resistant to adjudication without being resistant to definition. It may be perfectly clear what constitutes plagiarism ("using the work of another with an intent to deceive") without its being clear that what faces us is truly a case of this." Christopher Ricks, "Plagiarism," 97 Proceedings of the British Academy 149, 151 (1998).

plagium (play-je-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. The act of kidnapping, which included harboring another’s slave.

plaideur (play- or ple-dar), n. [Law French "pleader"] Archaic. An attorney at law; an advocate.

plain bond. See DEBENTURE.

plain error. See ERROR (2).

plain-feel doctrine. Criminal procedure. The principle that a police officer, while conducting a legal pat-down search, may seize any contraband that the officer can clearly identify, by touch, as being illegal or incriminating. — Also termed plain-touch doctrine.

plain-language law. Legislation requiring non-technical, readily comprehensible language in consumer contracts such as residential leases or insurance policies. • Many of these laws have genuinely simplified the needlessly obscure language in which consumer contracts have traditionally been couched.

plain-language movement. 1. The loosely organized campaign to encourage legal writers and business writers to write clearly and concisely — without legalese — while preserving accuracy and precision. 2. The body of persons involved in this campaign.

plain meaning. See MEANING.

plain-meaning rule. The rule that if a writing, or a provision in a writing, appears to be unambiguous on its face, its meaning must be determined from the writing itself without resort to any extrinsic evidence. • Though often applied, this rule is often condemned as simplistic because the meaning of words varies with the verbal context and the surrounding circumstances, not to mention the linguistic ability of the users and readers (including judges). — Also termed ordinary-meaning rule. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; MISCHIEF RULE; EQUITY-OF-THE-STATUTE RULE.

"On its positive side, the plain meaning rule states a tautology: Words should be read as saying what they say. The rule tells us to respect meaning but it does so without disclosing what the specific meaning is. At best, it reaffirms the preeminence of the statute over materials extrinsic to it. In its negative aspect, on the other hand, the rule has sometimes been used to read ineptly expressed language out of its proper context, in violation of established principles of meaning and communication. To this extent it is an impediment to interpretation.” Reed Dickerson, The Interpretation and Application of Statutes 229 (1975).

plaint. 1. Archaic. A complaint, esp. one filed in a replevin action. See COMPLAINT (1). 2. Civil law. A complaint or petition, esp. one intended to set aside an allegedly invalid testament. plaintiff. The party who brings a civil suit in a court of law. — Abbr. pltf. Cf. defendant.

plaintiff in error. Archaic. See appellant; petitioner.

plaintiff’s-viewpoint rule. The principle that courts should measure the amount in controversy in a case by analyzing only the amount of damages claimed by the plaintiff.

plain-touch doctrine. See plain-feel doctrine.

plain-vanilla swap. See interest-rate swap.

plain-view doctrine. Criminal procedure. The rule permitting a police officer’s warrantless seizure and use as evidence of an item observed in plain view from a lawful position or during a legal search when the officer has probable cause to believe that the item is evidence of a crime. — Also termed clear-view doctrine; plain-sight rule. Cf. open-fields doctrine.

PLAM. See price-level-adjusted mortgage under mortgage.

plan, n. 1. bankruptcy plan. 2. employee benefit plan.

planned obsolescence. See obsolescence.

planned-unit development. A land area zoned for a single-community subdivision with flexible restrictions on residential, commercial, and public uses. — Abbr. PUD. Cf. residential cluster.

planning board. A local government body responsible for approving or rejecting proposed building projects. • In most jurisdictions, the planning board’s decisions are subject to the review of the city council. — Also termed planning commission.

plan of rehabilitation. See bankruptcy plan.

plan of reorganization. See bankruptcy plan.

plan-of-the-convention doctrine. The principle that each U.S. state, by ratifying the U.S. Constitution, has consented to the possibility of being sued by each of the other states, and has no immunity from such a suit under the 11th Amendment.

plant patent. See patent (3).

plea. 1. A small piece of land; plot (1). 2. A map describing a piece of land and its features, such as boundaries, lots, roads, and easements.

platform. A statement of principles and policies adopted by a political party as the basis of the party’s appeal for public support.

plat map. A document that gives the legal descriptions of pieces of real property by lot, street, and block number. • A plat map is usu. drawn after the property has been described by some other means, such as a government survey. Once a plat map is prepared, property descriptions are defined by referring to the appropriate map.

plea, n. 1. An accused person’s formal response of “guilty,” “not guilty,” or “no contest” to a criminal charge.

blind plea. A guilty plea made without the promise of a concession from either the judge or the prosecutor. Cf. negotiated plea.

guilty plea. An accused person’s formal admission in court of having committed the charged offense. • A guilty plea is usu. part of a plea bargain. It must be made voluntarily, and only after the accused has been informed of and understands his or her rights. A guilty plea ordinarily has the same effect as a guilty verdict and conviction after a trial on the merits.

insanity plea. See insanity defense.

negotiated plea. The plea agreed to by a criminal defendant and the prosecutor in a plea bargain. See plea bargain. Cf. blind plea.

not-guilty plea. An accused person’s formal denial in court of having committed the charged offense. • The prosecution must then prove all elements of the charged offense beyond a reasonable doubt if the defendant is to be convicted.

2. At common law, the defendant’s responsive pleading in a civil action. Cf. declaration (7).

3. A factual allegation offered in a case; a pleading. Cf. demurrer.

affirmative plea. See pure plea.

anomalous plea. An equitable plea consisting in both affirmative and negative matter. • That is, it is partly confession and avoidance and partly traverse. The plea is appropriate when the plaintiff, in the bill, has anticipated the plea, and the defendant then traverses the anticipatory matters. — Also termed plea not pure. Cf. pure plea.
common plea. 1. A common-law plea in a civil action as opposed to a criminal prosecution. — Also termed common cause; common suit. 2. Hist. A plea made by a commoner.

"By 'common pleas' Magna Carta meant no more than ordinary pleas between commoners." Alan Harding, A Social History of English Law 51 (1966).

dilatory plea (dil-ə-tor-ee). A plea that does not challenge the merits of a case but that seeks to delay or defeat the action on procedural grounds.

"Dilatory pleas are those which do not answer the general right of the plaintiff, either by denial or in confession and avoidance, but assert matter tending to defeat the particular action by resisting the plaintiff's present right of recovery. They may be divided into two main classes: (1) Pleas to the jurisdiction and venue. (2) Pleas in abatement. A minor class, sometimes recognized, is pleas in suspension of the action." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 220, at 382 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

double plea. A plea consisting in two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense for the same issue. Cf. alternative pleading under PLEADING (2); DUTCliP (2).

issuable plea. A plea on the merits presenting a complaint to the court. Cf. issuable defense under DEFENSE (1).

jurisdictional plea. A plea asserting that the court lacks jurisdiction either over the defendant or over the subject matter of the case — Also termed plea to the jurisdiction.

negative plea. A plea that traverses some material fact or facts stated in the bill.

nonissuable plea. A plea on which a court ruling will not decide the case on the merits, such as a plea in abatement.

peremptory plea. A plea that responds to the merits of the plaintiff's claim.

plea in abatement. A plea that objects to the place, time, or method of asserting the plaintiff's claim but does not dispute the claim's merits. A defendant who successfully asserts a plea in abatement leaves the claim open for continuation in the current action or reassertion in a later action if the defect is cured.

plea in bar. See PLEA IN BAR.

plea in confession and avoidance. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

plea in discharge. A plea alleging that the defendant has previously satisfied and discharged the plaintiff's claim.

plea in equity. A special defense relying on one or more reasons why the suit should be dismissed, delayed, or barred. The various kinds are (1) pleas to the jurisdiction, (2) pleas to the person, (3) pleas to the form of the bill, and (4) pleas in bar of the bill. Pleas in equity generally fall into two classes: pure pleas and anomalous pleas.

plea in estoppel. Common-law pleading. A plea that neither confesses nor avoids but pleads a previous inconsistent act, allegation, or denial on the part of the adverse party to preclude that party from maintaining an action or defense.

plea in reconvention. Civil law. A plea that sets up a new matter, not as a defense, but as a cross-complaint, setoff, or counterclaim.

plea in suspension. A plea that shows some ground for not proceeding in the suit at the present time and prays that the proceedings be stayed until that ground is removed, such as a party's being a minor or the plaintiff's being an alien enemy.

plea not pure. See anomalous plea.

plea of confession and avoidance. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

plea of privilege. A plea that raises an objection to the venue of an action. See CHANGE OF VENUE (1).

plea of release. A plea that admits the claim but sets forth a written discharge executed by a party authorized to release the claim. See RELEASE (2).

plea puis darrein continuance (pwis dar-ayn kan-tin-oo-ants). [Law French "plea since the last continuance"] A plea that alleges new defensive matter that has arisen during a continuance of the case and that did not exist at the time of the defendant's last pleading.

plea to further maintenance to the action. Hist. A defensive plea asserting that events occurring after the commencement of the action necessitate its dismissal. The plea is obsolete because of the pleading requirements in federal and state rules of civil procedure.

plea to the declaration. A plea in abatement that objects to the declaration and applies immediately to it — Also termed plea to the count.

plea to the jurisdiction. See jurisdictional plea.

plea to the person of the defendant. A plea in abatement alleging that the defendant has a legal disability to be sued.
plea to the person of the plaintiff. A plea in abatement alleging that the plaintiff has a legal disability to sue.

plea to the writ. A plea in abatement that objects to the writ (summons) and applies (1) to the form of the writ for a matter either apparent on the writ's face or outside the writ, or (2) to the way in which the writ was executed or acted on.

pure plea. An equitable plea that affirmatively alleges new matters that are outside the bill. • If proved, the effect is to end the controversy by dismissing, delaying, or barring the suit. A pure plea must track the allegations of the bill, not evade it or mistake its purpose. Originally, this was the only plea known in equity. — Also termed affirmative plea. Cf. anomalous plea.

rolled-up plea. Defamation. A defendant's plea claiming that the statements complained of are factual and that, to the extent that they consist of comment, they are fair comment on a matter of public interest. See Fair Comment.

special plea. A plea alleging one or more new facts rather than merely disputing the legal grounds of the action or charge. • All pleas other than general issues are special pleas. See general issue under Issue (1).

plea bargain, n. A negotiated agreement between a prosecutor and a criminal defendant whereby the defendant pleads guilty to a lesser offense or to one of multiple charges in exchange for some concession by the prosecutor, usu. a more lenient sentence or a dismissal of the other charges. — Also termed plea agreement; negotiated plea. — plea-bargain, vb. — plea-bargaining, n.

plead, vb. 1. To make a specific plea, esp. in response to a criminal charge <he pleaded not guilty>. 2. To assert or allege in a pleading <fraud claims must be pleaded with particularity>. 3. To file or deliver a pleading <the plaintiff hasn't pleaded yet>.

pleader. 1. A party who asserts a particular pleading. 2. A person who pleads in court on behalf of another. 3. Hist. At common law, a person who (though not an attorney) specialized in preparing pleadings for others. — Also termed special pleader. 4. Hist. Narrator.

pleading, n. 1. A formal document in which a party to a legal proceeding (esp. a civil lawsuit) sets forth or responds to allegations, claims, denials, or defenses. • In federal civil procedure, the main pleadings are the plaintiff's complaint and the defendant's answer.

accusatory pleading. An indictment, information, or complaint by which the government begins a criminal prosecution.

amended pleading. A pleading that replaces an earlier pleading and that contains matters omitted from or not known at the time of the earlier pleading.

"An amendment is the correction of an error or the supplying of an omission in the process or pleadings. An amended pleading differs from a supplemental pleading in that the true function of the latter is to spread upon the record matter material to the issue which has arisen subsequent to the filing of a pleading, while matter of amendment purely is matter that might well have been pleaded at the time the pleading sought to be amended was filed, but which through error or inadvertence was omitted or mistated. It has been declared that the allowance of amendments is incidental to the exercise of all judicial power and is indispensable to the ends of justice." Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 68 (1916).

anomalous pleading. A pleading that is partly affirmative and partly negative in its allegations.

articulated pleading. A pleading that states each allegation in a separately numbered paragraph.

possess, vb. To have in one’s actual control; to have possession of. — possessor, n.

possessio (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] The de facto relation between the holder of a thing and the thing itself.

pedis possessio (pee-dis or ped-is pa-zes[h]- ee-oh). [Latin] A foothold; an actual possession of real property, implying either actual occupancy or enclosure or use. See pedis pos-sessio doctrine.

possessio bona fide (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh boh-na possessio mala fide.

possessio bonorum (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh bo-norpossessio civilis (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh sa-vi-lis).

[Latin] Roman law. Legal possession; that is, possessions accompanied with an intent to become the owner. • Possessio civilis served as the basis for acquiring property by prescription (usuacipio). Cf. possessio naturalis.

possessio fratri (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh fray-tris or fra-tris). [Latin] Hist. The possession or seisin of a brother; that is, a possession of an estate by a brother that would entitle his full sister to succeed him as heir, to the exclusion of a half-brother.

possessio mala fide (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh mal-a possessio bona fide.

possessio naturalis (pa-zes[h]-ee-oh nach-a-ray-lis). [Latin “natural possession”] Romans law. The simple holding of a thing, with no intent of keeping it permanently. — Also termed nuda detentio. See natural possession under possession. Cf. possessio civilis.

possession. 1. The fact of having or holding property in one’s power; the exercise of dominion over property. 2. The right under which one may exercise control over something to the exclusion of all others; the continuing exercise of a claim to the exclusive use of a material object. 3. (usu. pl.) Something that a person owns or controls; PROPERTY (2). 4. A territorial dominion of a state or nation. Cf. ownership;
title (1).

“A[ls the name of Possession is... one of the most important in our books, so it is one of the most ambiguous. Its legal senses (for they are several) overlap the popular sense, and even the popular sense includes the assumption of matters of fact which are not always easy to verify. In common speech a man is said to possess or to be in possession of anything of which he has the apparent control, or from the use of which he has the apparent power of excluding others ... . Any of the usual outward marks of ownership may suffice, in the absence of manifest power in some one else, to denote as having possession the person to whom they attach. Law takes this popular conception as a provisional groundwork, and builds up on it the notion of possession in a technical sense, as a definite legal relation to something capable of having an owner, which relation is distinct and separable both from real and from apparent ownship, though often concurrent with one or both of them.”
Frederick Pollock & Robert Samuel Wright, An Essay on Possession in the Common Law 1-2 (1888).

“In the whole range of legal theory there is no conception more difficult than that of possession. The Roman lawyers brought their usual acumen to the analysis of it, and since their day the problem has formed the subject of a voluminous literature, while it still continues to tax the ingenuity of jurists. Nor is the question one of mere curiosity or scientific interest, for its practical importance is not less than its difficulty. The legal consequences which flow from the acquisition and loss of possession are many and serious. Possession, for example, is evidence of ownership; the possessor of a thing is presumed to be the owner of it, and may put all other claimants to proof of their title.” John Salmond, Jurisactual possession. Physical occupancy or control over property. Cf. constructive possession.

adverse possession. See Adverse P osses-sion.

bona fide possession. Possession of property by a person who in good faith does not know that the property’s ownership is disputed.

civil possession. Civil law. Possession existing by virtue of a person’s intent to own a property even though the person no longer occupies or has physical control of it.

constructive possession. Control or domiinion over a property without actual possession or custody of it. — Also termed effective possession; possessio fictitia. Cf. actual possession.

corporeal possession. Possession of a material object, such as a farm or a coin. — Also termed natural possession; possessio corporis; (Ger.) Sachenbesitz.

derivative possession. Lawful possession by one (such as a tenant) who does not hold title.

direct possession. See immediate possession.
effective possession. See constructive possession.

exclusive possession. The exercise of exclusive dominion over property, including the use and benefit of the property.

hostile possession. Possession asserted against the claims of all others, including the record owner. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

immediate possession. Possession that is acquired or retained directly or personally. — Also termed direct possession.

incorporeal possession. Possession of something other than a material object, such as an easement over a neighbor’s land, or the access of light to the windows of a house. — Also termed possessio juris; quasi-possession.

“It is a question much debated whether incorporeal possession is in reality true possession at all. Some are of opinion that all genuine possession is corporeal, and that the other is related to it by way of analogy merely. They maintain that there is no single generic conception which includes possessio corporis and possessio juris as its two specific forms. The Roman lawyers speak with hesitation and even inconsistency on the point. They sometimes include both forms under the title of possessio, while at other times they are careful to qualify incorporeal possession as quasi possessio — something which is not true possession, but is analogous to it. The question is one of no little difficulty, but the opinion here accepted is that the two forms do in truth belong to a single genus. The true idea of possession is wider than that of corporeal possession, just as the true idea of ownership is wider than that of corporeal ownership.” John Salmon, Jurisprudence 288-89 (Glannville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

indirect possession. See mediate possession.

insular possession. An island territory of the United States, such as Puerto Rico.

mediate possession (mee-dee-it). Possession of a thing through someone else, such as an agent. • In every instance of mediate possession, there is a direct possessor (such as an agent) as well as a mediate possessor (the principal). — Also termed indirect possession.

“If I go myself to purchase a book, I acquire direct possession of it; but if I send my servant to buy it for me, I acquire mediate possession of it through him, until he has brought it to me, when my possession becomes immediate.” John Salmon, Jurisprudence 300 (Glannville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

naked possession. The mere possession of something, esp. real estate, without any apparent right or colorable title to it.

natural possession. Civil law. The exercise of physical detention or control over a thing, as by occupying a building or cultivating farmland. • Natural possession may be had without title, and may give rise to a claim of unlawful possession or a claim of ownership by acquisitive prescription. The term “natural possession” has been replaced by the term “corporeal possession” in the Louisiana Civil Code, by virtue of a 1982 revision. The change was nonsubstantive. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3425 (West 1994). See corporeal possession; PRESCRIPTION (2).

notorious possession. Possession or control that is evident to others; possession of property that, because it is generally known by people in the area where the property is located, gives rise to a presumption that the actual owner has notice of it. • Notorious possession is one element of adverse possession. — Also termed open possession; open and notorious possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

peaceable possession. Possession (as of real property) not disturbed by another’s hostile or legal attempts to recover possession. Cf. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

pedal possession. Actual possession, as by living on the land or by improving it. • This term usu. appears in adverse-possession contexts.

possession in fact. Actual possession that may or may not be recognized by law. • For example, an employee’s possession of an employer’s property is for some purposes not legally considered possession, the term detention or custody being used instead. — Also termed possessio naturalis.

possession in law. 1. Possession that is recognized by the law either because it is a specific type of possession in fact or because the law for some special reason attributes the advantages and results of possession to someone who does not in fact possess. 2. See constructive possession. — Also termed possessio civilis.

“There is no conception which will include all that amounts to possession in law, and will include nothing else, and it is impossible to frame any definition from which the concrete law of possession can be logically deduced.” John Salmon, Jurisprudence 287 (Glannville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

possession of a right. The de facto relation of continuing exercise and enjoyment of a right, as opposed to the de jure relation of ownership. — Also termed possessio juris; (Ger.) Rechtsbesitz.

precarious possession. Civil law. Possession of property by someone other than the owner on behalf of or with permission of the owner. • A lessee may have precarious possession of the leased property.

possibility. 1. An event that may or may not happen. 2. A contingent interest in real or personal property.

naked possibility. A mere chance or expectation that a person will acquire future property. • A conveyance of a naked possibility is usu. void for lack of subject matter, as in a deed conveying all rights to a future estate not yet in existence. — Also termed bare possibility; naked expectancy.

possibility coupled with an interest. An expectation recognized in law as an estate or interest, as occurs in an executory devise or in a shifting or springing use. • This type of possibility may be sold or assigned.

remote possibility. A limitation dependent on two or more facts or events that are contingent and uncertain; a double possibility. — Also termed possibility on a possibility.

possibility of reverter. A future interest retained by a grantor after conveying a fee simple determinable, so that the grantee's estate terminates automatically and reverts to the grantor if the terminating event ever occurs. • In this type of interest, the grantor transfers an estate whose maximum potential duration equals that of the grantor's own estate and attaches a special limitation that operates in the grantor's favor. — Often shortened to reverter. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE. Cf. POWER OF TERMINATION.

"Most treatise-writers define the possibility of reverter as the interest a transferor keeps when he transfers a fee simple determinable or a fee simple conditional. See, e.g., 1 American Law of Property § 4.12; Simes & Smith § 281. Although this definition is all right as far as it goes, it fails to provide for interests less than the fee simple that are granted on special limitation... Although we call the possibility of reverter an 'estate,' the courts of an earlier era would probably have called it a 'possibility of becoming an estate.'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 58 n.5 (2d ed. 1984).

possibility on a possibility. See remote possibility under POSSIBILITY.

POSSLQ (pahs-al-kyoo). abbr. A person of opposite sex sharing living quarters. • Although this term is intended to include only a person's roommate of the opposite sex to whom the person is not married, the phrase literally includes those who are married. This overbreadth has occasionally been criticized. See CUPOS.

"In the 1980 census, the United States Census Bureau — recognizing societal change with numerous persons living together without being 'officially' married — counted not only persons who were 'Single' and with the Latin word ‘postea,’ or ‘afterwards,’ was known as the ‘postea’ and was in fact drafted by the party in whose favour the verdict had gone, whence the phrase ‘postea to the plaintiff’ or ‘the defendant,’ which is found in the old reports.” Geoffrey Radcliffe & Geoffrey Cross, The English Legal System 185 (G.J. Hand & D.J. Bentley eds., 6th ed. 1977).

posted water. See WATER.

postieroes (pah-steer-ee-or-eez). [Latin] Roman law. Descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree.

postiority (pah-steer-ee-or-a-tiee). The condition or state of being subsequent. • This word was formerly used to describe the relationships existing between a tenant and the two or more lords the tenant held of; the tenant held the older tenancy “by priority” and the more recent one “by posteriority.”

posterity, n. 1. Future generations collectively. 2. All the descendants of a person to the furthest generation.

post facto (pohst fak-toh). [Latin] After the fact. See EX POST FACTO.

postglossators (pohst-glah-say-tarz). (often cap.) A group of Italian jurisconsults who were active during the 14th and 15th centuries writing commentaries and treatises that related Roman law to feudal and Germanic law, canon law, and other contemporary bodies of law. • The postglossators constituted the second wave of Roman-law study after its revival in the 11th century, the first being that of the glossators. — Also termed commentators. See GLOSSATORS.

post hoc (pohst hok). [Latin fr. post hoc, ergo propter hoc “after this, therefore because of this”] 1. adv. After this; consequently. 2. adj. Of or relating to the fallacy of assuming causality from temporal sequence; confusing sequence with consequence.

posthumous (pos-cha-mas), adj. Occurring or existing after death; esp., (of a child) born after the father’s death.

posthumous child. See CHILD.
posthumous work. Copyright. The product of an author who died before publication.

posting. 1. Accounting. The act of transferring an original entry to a ledger. 2. The act of mailing a letter. 3. A method of substituted service of process by displaying the process in a prominent place (such as the courthouse door) when other forms of service have failed. See SERVICE (1). 4. A publication method, as by displaying municipal ordinances in designated localities. 5. The act of providing legal notice, as by affixing notices of judicial sales at or on the courthouse door. 6. The procedure for processing a check, including one or more of the following steps: (1) verifying any signature, (2) ascertaining that sufficient funds are available, (3) affixing a "paid" or other stamp, (4) entering a charge or entry to a customer's account, and (5) correcting or reversing an entry or erroneous action concerning the check.

postliminium (pohst-la-min-ee-om), n. [fr. Latin post "after" + limen "threshold"] 1. Roman & civil law. The doctrine that a restoration of a person's lost rights or status relates back to the time of the original loss or deprivation, esp. in regard to the restoration of the status of a prisoner of war.

"[A] person who is taken captive and comes back within the limits of the Empire is correctly described as returning by postliminium. By 'limen' (threshold) we mean the frontier of a house, and the old lawyers applied the word to the frontier of the Roman State; so that the word postliminium conveys the idea of recrossing the frontier. If a prisoner is recovered from a beaten foe he is deemed to have come back by postliminium." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 85-86 (4th ed. 1956).

2. Int'l law. The act of invalidating all an occupying force's illegal acts, and the post-occupation revival of all illegitimately modified legal relations to their former condition, esp. the restoration of property to its rightful owner. — Also termed postliminy.

post litem motam (pohst li-tam moh-tam). [Law Latin] After suit commenced. • Depositions held after litigation had begun were formerly sometimes so called.

postman. Hist. A barrister in the Court of Exchequer who had precedence in motions. • The postman was so called because of the post he stood next to when making motions.

postmark. An official mark put by the post office on an item of mail to cancel the stamp and to indicate the place and date of sending or receipt.

postmaster. A U.S. Postal Service official responsible for a local branch of the post office. — Abbr. PM.

Postmaster General. The head of the U.S. Postal Service.

postmortem, adj. Done or occurring after death .

postmortem, n. See AUTOPSY.

post natus (pohst nay-tas). [Latin] A person born after a certain political event that affected the person's political rights; esp., a person born after the Declaration of Independence. Cf. ANTE NATUS.

post-note. A banknote payable at a future time rather than on demand.

postnuptial (pohst-nap-shal), adj. Made or occurring after marriage .

postnuptial agreement (pohst-nap-shal). An agreement entered into after marriage defining each spouse's property rights in the event of death or divorce. — Also termed postnuptial settlement. Cf. PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

post-obit bond. See BOND (3).

postpone, vb. 1. To put off to a later time. 2. To place lower in precedence or importance; esp., to subordinate (a lien) to a later one. — postponement, n.

post-terminal sitting. A court session held after the normal term.

post terminum (pohst taar-ma-nam). [Law Latin] After term, as a writ returned after the ending of a judicial term.

posttrial discovery. See postjudgment discovery under DISCOVERY. posttrial motion. See MOTION.

postulatio actionis (pos-chə-lay-shee-oh ak-shee-oh-nis). [Latin] Roman law. A request or petition to a magistrate having jurisdiction for permission to bring an action to redress a wrong. • This was similar to the former practice of applying for a writ.

poten(t)ate (poh-tan-tayt). A ruler who possesses great power or sway; a monarch.

potential, adj. Capable of coming into being; possible <things having a potential existence may be the subject of mortgage, assignment, or sale>.

potential Pareto superiority. See WEALTH MAXIMIZATION.

potestas (pə-test-as). [Latin "power"] Roman law. Authority or power, such as the power of a magistrate to enforce the law, or the authority of a master over a slave.

patria potestas (pay-tree-ə or pa-tree-ə po-tes-tas). [Latin "paternal power"] The authority held by the male head of a family over his children and further descendants in the male line, unless emancipated. • Initially, the father had extensive powers over the family, including the power of life and death. Over time, the broad nature of the patria potestas gradually became more in the nature of a responsibility to support and maintain family members.

"The power of the father continued ordinarily to the close of his life, and included not only his own children, but also the children of his sons, and those of his sons' sons, if any such were born during his lifetime .... Originally and for a long time the patria potestas had a terribly despotic character. Not only was the father entitled to all the service and all the acquisitions of his child, as much as to those of a slave, but he had the same absolute control over his person. He could inflict upon him any punishment however severe .... Consider now that the patria potestas had this character and extent down to the Christian era: that, in general, every citizen of the republic who had a living father was in this condition, unable to hold property, unable to acquire any thing for himself, wholly dependent on his father in property and person ... without help or vindication from the law .... The reason which caused the Romans to accept and uphold the patria potestas, to maintain it with singular tenacity against the influence of other systems with which they came in contact, must have been the profound impression of family unity, the conviction that every family was, and of right ought to be, one body, with one will and one executive." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law, 119–21 (1881).

pound, n. 1. A place where impounded property is held until redeemed. 2. A place for the detention of stray animals. 3. A measure of weight equal to 16 avoirdupois ounces or 7,000 grains. 4. The basic monetary unit of the United Kingdom, equal to 100 pence. — Also termed (in sense 4) pound sterling.

poundage fee. A percentage commission awarded to a sheriff for moneys recovered under judicial process, such as execution or attachment.

pound-breach. Hist. The offense of breaking a pound for the purpose of taking out something that has been impounded.

pound of land. An uncertain quantity of land, usu. thought to be about 52 acres.

pound sterling. See POUND.

pour acquit (poor a-kee), n. [French "for acquittance"] French law. The formula that a creditor adds when signing a receipt.

pour appuyer (poor a-poo-yay). [Law French] For the support of; in the support of.

pour faire proclamer (poor fair pro-klay-mar), n. [Law French "for making a proclamation"] Hist. A writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring that official to make a proclamation about some matter, such as a nuisance.

pour out, vb. Slang. To deny (a claimant) damages or relief in a lawsuit <the plaintiff was poured out of court by the jury's verdict of no liability>.

pourover trust. See TRUST. pourover will. See will.

pour saisir terres (poor si-zar ter-ez). [Law French “for seizing the lands”] Hist. A writ by which the Crown could seize land that the wife of its deceased tenant, who held in capite, had for her dower if she married without leave.

poverty affidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

Powell doctrine. See CORRUPT-MOTIVE DOCTRINE.

power. 1. The ability to act or not act. 2. Domicile, control, or influence over another. 3. The legal right or authorization to act or not act; the ability conferred on a person by the law to alter, by an act of will, the rights, duties, liabilities, or other legal relations either of that person or of another. 4. A document granting legal authorization. See AUTHORITY. 5. An authority to affect an estate in land by (1) creating some estate independently of any estate that the holder of the authority possesses, (2) imposing a charge on the estate, or (3) revoking an existing estate. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

appendant power (a-pen-dant). 1. A power that gives the donee a right to appoint estates that attach to the donee’s own interest. 2. A power held by a donee who owns the property interest in the assets subject to the power, and whose interest can be divested by the exercise of the power. • The power appendant is generally viewed as adding nothing to the ownership and thus is not now generally recognized as a true power. — Also termed power appendant.

beneficial power. A power that is executed for the benefit of the power’s donee, as distinguished from a trust power, which is executed for the benefit of someone other than the power’s donee (i.e., a trust beneficiary).

collateral power. A power created when the donee has no estate in the land, but simply the authority to appoint.

concurrent power. A political power independently exercisable by both federal and state governments in the same field of legislation.

congressional power. The authority vested in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives to enact laws and take other constitutionally permitted actions. U.S. Const. art. I.

enumerated power. A political power specifically delegated to a governmental branch by a constitution. — Also termed express power.

general power. Power that can be exercised in anyone’s favor, including the agent, to affect another’s interest in property; a power that authorizes the alienation of a fee to any alinee.

implied power. A political power that is not enumerated but that nonetheless exists because it is needed to carry out an express power.

incident power. A power that, although not expressly granted, must exist because it is necessary to the accomplishment of an express purpose. — Also termed incidental power.

inherent power. A power that necessarily derives from an office, position, or status.

institorial power (in-sta-tor-e-al). Civil law. The power given by a business owner to an agent to act in the owner’s behalf.

investigatory power (in-ves-ta-go-tor-ee). (usu. pl.) The authority conferred on a governmental agency to inspect and compel disclosure of facts germane to an investigation.

judicial power. See JUDICIAL POWER.

naked power. The power to exercise rights over something (such as a trust) without having a corresponding interest in that thing. Cf. power coupled with an interest.

plenary power (plee-na-ree or plen-a-ree). Power that is broadly construed; esp., a court’s power to dispose of any matter properly before it.

police power. See POLICE POWER.

power appendant. See appendant power.

power coupled with an interest. A power to do some act, conveyed along with an interest in the subject matter of the power. • A power coupled with an interest is not held for the benefit of the principal, and it is irrevocable due to the agent’s interest in the subject property. For this reason, some authorities assert that it is not a true agency power. — Also termed power given as security; proprietary power. Cf. naked power.
"(S)uppose that the principal borrows money from the agent and by way of security authorizes the agent to sell Blackacre if the loan is not repaid and pay himself out of the proceeds. In such case there is no more reason why the principal should be permitted to revoke than if he had formally conveyed or mortgaged Blackacre to the agent. Hence it would be highly unfair to the agent to allow his principal to revoke. The reason why such a case is not properly governed by the considerations usually making an agency revocable is that this is in reality not a case of agency at all. In a normal agency case the power is conferred upon the agent to enable him to do something for the principal while here it is given to him to enable him to do something for himself. Coupled with an interest means that the agent must have a present interest in the property upon which the power is to operate." Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 47, at 99 (1990).

power in gross. A power held by a donee who has an interest in the assets subject to the power but whose interest cannot be affected by the exercise of the power. • An example is a life tenant with a power over the remainder.

power of acceptance. An offeree's power to bind an offeror to a contract by accepting the offer.

power of revocation (rev-a-kay-shan). A power that a person reserves in an instrument (such as a trust) to revoke the legal relationship that the person has created.

power of sale. A power granted to sell the property that the power relates to.

power over oneself. See CAPACITY (2).

power over other persons. See AUTHORITY (1).

private power. A power vested in a person to be exercised for personal ends and not as an agent for the state.

proprietary power. See power coupled with an interest.

public power. A power vested in a person as an agent or instrument of the functions of the state. • Public powers comprise the various forms of legislative, judicial, and executive authority.

quasi-judicial power. An administrative agency’s power to adjudicate the rights of those who appear before it.

quasi-legislative power. An administrative agency’s power to engage in rulemaking. 5 USCA § 553.

relative power. A power that relates directly to land, as distinguished from a collateral power.

reserved power. A political power that is not enumerated or prohibited by a constitution, but instead is reserved by the constitution for a specified political authority, such as a state government. See TENTH AMENDMENT.

resulting power. A political power derived from the aggregate powers expressly or impliedly granted by a constitution.

special power. 1. A power that either does not allow the entire estate to be conveyed or restricts to whom the estate may be conveyed. 2. An agent’s limited authority to perform only specific acts or to perform under specific restrictions.

spending power. The power granted to a governmental body to spend public funds; esp., the congressional power to spend money for the payment of debt and provision of the common defense and general welfare of the United States. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

taxing power. The power granted to a governmental body to levy a tax; esp., the congressional power to levy and collect taxes as a means of effectuating Congress’s delegated powers. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1. See SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT.

power appendant. See POWER.

power coupled with an interest. See POWER.

power-delegating law. See LAW OF COMPETENCE.

power given as security. See power coupled with an interest under POWER.

power in gross. See POWER.

power of acceptance. See POWER.

power of alienation. The capacity to sell, transfer, assign, or otherwise dispose of property.

power of appointment. A power conferred on a donee by will or deed to select and nominate one or more recipients of the donor’s estate or income. — Also termed enabling power.

general power of appointment. A power of appointment by which the donee can appoint — that is, dispose of the donor’s property — in favor of anyone the donee chooses.

limited power of appointment. A power of appointment by which the donee can appoint to only the person or class specified in the instrument creating the power. — Also termed special power of appointment.
testamentary power of appointment (testa-men-ta-ree or -tree). A power of appointment created by a will.

power-of-appointment trust. See TRUST.

power of attorney. 1. An instrument granting someone authority to act as agent or attorney-in-fact for the grantor. — Also termed letter of attorney. 2. The authority so granted. Pl. powers of attorney. See ATTORNEY (1).

durable power of attorney. A power of attorney that remains in effect during the grantor’s incompetency. • Such instruments commonly allow an agent to make healthcare decisions for a patient who has become incompetent.

general power of attorney. A power of attorney that authorizes an agent to transact business for the principal.

irrevocable power of attorney (i-rev-a-ka-bal). A power of attorney that the principal cannot revoke. — Also termed power of attorney coupled with an interest. See power coupled with an interest under POWER.

power of attorney coupled with an interest. See irrevocable power of attorney.

special power of attorney. A power of attorney that limits the agent’s authority to only a specified matter.

power of revocation (rev-a-kay-shon). See POWER.

power of sale. See POWER.

power-of-sale clause. A provision in a mortgage or deed of trust permitting the mortgagee or trustee to sell the property without court authority if the payments are not made.

power-of-sale foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

power of termination. A future interest retained by a grantor after conveying a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent, so that the grantee’s estate terminates (upon breach of the condition) only if the grantor exercises the right to retake it. — Also termed right of entry; right of reentry; right of entry for breach of condition; right of entry for condition broken. See fee simple subject to a condition subsequent under FEE SIMPLE. Cf. POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

power over other persons. See AUTHORITY (1).

power politics. Int'l law. An approach to foreign policy that encourages a nation to use its economic and military strength to enlarge its own power as an end in itself; a system in which a country is willing to bring its economic and (esp.) military strength to bear in an effort to increase its own power.

practically irrigable acreage. Land that is susceptible to prolonged irrigation, at reasonable cost.

practice, n. 1. The procedural methods and rules used in a court of law <local practice requires that an extra copy of each motion be filed with the clerk>. 2. PRACTICE OF LAW <where is your practice?>.

practice act. A statute governing practice and procedure in courts. • Practice acts are usu. supplemented with court rules such as the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

practice book. A volume devoted to the procedures in a particular court or category of courts, usu. including court rules, court forms, and practice directions.

practice court. 1. MOOT COURT. 2. (cap.) BAIL COURT.

practice of law. The professional work of a duly licensed lawyer, encompassing a broad range of services such as conducting cases in court, preparing papers necessary to bring about various transactions from conveying land to effecting corporate mergers, preparing legal opinions on various points of law, drafting wills and other estate-planning documents, and advising clients on countless types of legal questions. • The term also includes activities that comparatively few lawyers engage in but that require legal expertise, such as drafting legislation and court rules. — Also termed legal practice. Cf. LAW PRACTICE.

unauthorized practice of law. The practice of law by a person, typically a nonlawyer, who has not been licensed or admitted to practice law in a given jurisdiction. — Abbr. UPL.

"The definitions and tests employed by courts to delineate unauthorized practice by non-lawyers have been vague or conclusory, while jurisdictions have differed significantly in describing what constitutes unauthorized practice in particular areas.

"Certain activities, such as the representation of another person in litigation, are generally proscribed. Even in that area, many jurisdictions recognize exceptions for such matters as small claims and landlord-tenant tribunals and certain proceedings in administrative agencies. Moreover, many jurisdictions have authorized law students and others not locally admitted to represent indigent persons or others as part of clinical legal education programs.

"Controversy has surrounded many out-of-court activities such as advising on estate planning by bank trust officers, advising on estate planning by insurance agents, stock brokers, or benefit-plan and similar consultants, filling out or providing guidance on forms for property transactions by real estate agents, title companies, and closing-service companies, and selling books or individual forms containing instructions on self-help legal services accomplished by personal, non-lawyer assistance on filling them out in connection with legal procedures such as obtaining a marriage dissolution. The position of bar associations has traditionally been that non-lawyer provisions of such services denies the person served the benefit of such legal measures as the attorney-client privilege, the benefits of such extraordinary duties as that of confidentiality of client information and the protection against conflicts of interest, and the protection of such measures as those regulating lawyer trust accounts and requiring lawyers to supervise non-lawyer personnel. Several jurisdictions recognize that many such services can be provided by non-lawyers without significant risk of incompetent service, that actual experience in several states with extensive non-lawyer provision of traditional legal services indicates no significant risk of harm to consumers of such services, that persons in need of legal services may be significantly aided in obtaining assistance at a much lower price than would be entailed by segregating out a portion of a transaction to be handled by a lawyer for a fee, and that many persons can ill afford, and most persons are at least inconvenienced by, the typically higher cost of lawyer services." Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 4 cmt. c (1998).

praecipe (pree-sa-pee or pres-a-pee), n. [Latin "command"] 1. At common law, a writ ordering a defendant to do some act or to explain why inaction is appropriate. — Also termed writ of praecipe. 2. A written motion or request seeking some court action, esp. a trial setting or an entry of judgment. — Also spelled precipe. — praecipe, vb.

praecipe quod redrat (pree-sa-pee or pres-a-pee kwod red-at). [Latin "command that he render"] Hist. A writ directing the defendant to return certain property. • An action for common recovery was often begun with this writ. When the writ was brought to recover land, it was termed ingressu. See COMMON RECOVERY.

"The praecipe quod redrat was the proper writ when the plaintiff's action was for a specific thing; as for the recovery of a debt certain, or for the restoration of such a chattel, or for giving up such a house, or so much land, specifying the nature and quantity of it. By this writ the sheriff was commanded to summon the tenant or defendant to appear at Westminster, at such a day in term." 1 George Crompton, Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas xxxix (3d ed. 1878).

praecipitium (pree-sa-pish-eem or pres-a-). [Latin] Roman law. The punishment of casting a criminal from the Tarpeian rock.

praedia (pree-dee-a), n. [Latin] pl. PRAEIDIUM.

praedial (pree-dee-al), adj. See PREDIAL.

praedictus (pri-dik-tos). [Law Latin] Hist. Aforesaid. • In pleading, praedictus usu. referred to a defendant, a town, or lands, idem to a plaintiff, and praefatus to a person other than a party. Cf. PRAEFATUS.

practick (prak-tik). Scots law. A precedent that is not necessarily binding.

practitioner. A person engaged in the practice of a profession, esp. law or medicine.

praedium urbanum (prē-deē-om ar-bay-nam). [Latin] An estate used for business or for dwelling; any estate other than a praedium rusticum.

praedo (prē-doh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A robber.

praefectura (pri-fek-char-ō), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. The office of prefect. 2. A town or territory administered by a prefect.

praefectus vigilium (pri-fek-tas vi-jil-e-ōm), n. [Latin "prefect of the watch"] Roman law. An officer with police and fire-prevention duties. • This officer had the authority to punish offenses relating to the public peace.

praefine. See PRIMER FINE.

praegatum (prē-łā-gay-tam), n. [Latin] Roman law. A legacy given in advance of the whole or part of the share that a given heir would be entitled to receive out of an inheritance. • This was similar to an advancement.

praemium emancipationis (prē-mēe-am i-man-sā-pay-shee-ō-nis), n. [Latin "reward for emancipation"] Roman law. A compensation allowed by Constantine to a father on the emancipation of his child, consisting of one-third of the property that came to the child from his mother’s side. • Justinian replaced this with the usufruct of half the child’s separate property.

praemium pudicitiae (prē-mēe-am pyoo-dā-sish-ee-ee), n. [Latin "the price of chastity"] Hist. Compensation paid by a man who seduced a chaste woman. — Also termed praemium pudoris.

praemunire (prē-myoo-nt-ree), n. [Latin praemoneri “to be forewarned”] Hist. The criminal offense of obeying an authority other than the king. • Praemunire stems from the efforts of Edward I (1272–1307) to counter papal influence in England, and takes its name from the writ’s initial words: praemunire factas (“that you cause to be forewarned”). Praemunire offenses included an archbishop’s refusal to elect a royal nominee as bishop, and an assertion that Parliament had legislative authority without the sovereign.

praenomen (prē-noh-man), n. [Latin] Roman law. The first of a person’s three names, given to distinguish the person from family members.

praepositus (prē-poz-ā-tas), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. An officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred. 2. A steward or bailiff of an estate.

praerogativa regis (prē-rog-ə-tī-va ree-jis), n. [Law Latin “of the Crown’s prerogative”] Hist. A declaration made at the time of Edward I (1272–1307) defining certain feudal and political rights of the Crown, including the right to wardship of an idiot’s lands to protect the idiot’s heirs from disinherition or alienation. — Also termed de praerogativa regis (dee prē-rog-ə-tī-va ree-jis).

“The king’s right is distinctly stated in the document known as praerogativa Regis, which we believe to come from the early years of Edward I. The same document seems to be the oldest that gives us any clear information about a wardship of lunatics. The king is to provide that the lunatic and his family are properly maintained out of the income of his estate, and the residue is to be handed over to him upon his restoration to sanity, or, should he die without having recovered his wits, is to be administered by the ordinary for the good of his soul; but the king is to take nothing to his own use.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 481 (2d ed. 1898).

praescriptio (pri-skrip-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A preliminary portion of a formula that defines the scope of action or states an exception or objection to the action. 2. A defensive plea in an action to recover land by which the defendant asserts ownership based on continuous possession for a prescribed time. — Also termed (in sense 2) praescriptio longi temporis.
praeses (pree-seez), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A governor of a province. 2. The president of a college or university.

praestare (pree-stair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. 1. To perform an obligation. 2. To undertake liability.

praesumitur pro negante (pri-zyoo-ma-tor prob ni-gan-tee). [Latin] It is presumed for the negative. • This is the rule of the House of Lords when the votes are equal on a motion.

praesumptio fortior (pri-zamp-shee-oh for-sheer-or or -or). [Latin] A strong presumption (of fact); a presumption strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposing party.

praesumptio hominis (pri-zamp-shee-oh hom-ay-nis). [Latin] The presumption of an individual; that is, a natural presumption unfettered by rules.

praesumptio juris (pri-zamp-shee-oh joor-ay-iss). [Latin] A presumption of law; that is, one in which the law assumes the existence of something until it is disproved. See presumption of law under presumption.

praesumptio Muciana (pri-zamp-shee-oh myoo-shee-ay-na). [Latin] Roman law. The rebuttable presumption that in case of doubt a thing possessed by a married woman had been given to her by her husband. • The presumption was named after the jurist Quintus Mucius.

praeteritio (pree-ta-or pret-a-rish-ee-oh). [Latin] A testator’s exclusion of an heir by passing the heir over.

praetor (pree-tar). [Latin] Roman law. A magistrate responsible for identifying and framing the legal issues in a case and ordering a lay judge (judeex) to hear evidence and decide the case in accordance with the statement of the issues.

praetor fidei-commissarius (pree-tar fi-dee-i-kom-a-sair-ee-as). A special praetor having jurisdiction of cases involving trusts.

praetorian edict. See EDICT.

praevocator (pree-var-a-kay-tar). See PREVATICATOR.

pratique (pra-teek or prat-ik). Maritime law. A license allowing a vessel to trade in a particular country or port after complying with quarantine requirements or presenting a clean bill of health.

praxis (prak-sis). [Greek “doing; action”] In critical legal studies, practical action; the practice of living the ethical life in conjunction and in cooperation with others.

prayer for relief. A request addressed to the court and appearing at the end of a pleading; esp., a request for specific relief or damages. — Often shortened to prayer. — Also termed demand for relief.

"The prayer for relief. The plaintiff prays in his bill for the relief to which he supposes himself entitled on the case made out in the bill. This is called the special prayer. He then prays for general relief, usually in these words: ‘And the plaintiff or your orator prays for such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require, and as may be agreeable to equity and good conscience.’ Both prayers are generally inserted in the bill, — the special prayer first, the general following.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 69 (2d ed. 1899).

general prayer. A prayer for additional unspecified relief, traditionally using language such as, “Plaintiff additionally prays for such other and further relief to which she may show herself to be justly entitled.” • The general prayer typically follows a special prayer.

special prayer. A prayer for the particular relief to which a plaintiff claims to be entitled.

prayer in aid. See AID PRAYER.

prayer of process. A conclusion in a bill in equity requesting the issuance of a subpoena if the defendant fails to answer the bill.

preamble (pree-am-bal), n. An introductory statement in a constitution, statute, or other document explaining the document’s basis and objective; esp., a statutory recital of the inferences for which the statute is designed to provide a remedy. — preamble (pree-am-by-er-ee), preambular (pree-am-by-er-lar), adj.

preappointed evidence. See EVIDENCE.

preaudience. English law. The right of a senior barrister to be heard in court before other barristers.
prebankruptcy, adj. Occurring before the filing of a bankruptcy petition <prebankruptcy transactions>.

prebend (preb-and), n. 1. A stipend granted in a cathedral church for the support of the members of the chapter. 2. The property from which the stipend comes.

prebendary (preb-on-der-ee). A person serving on the staff of a cathedral who receives a stipend from the cathedral’s endowment.

precariae (pri-kair-ee-ee). [Law Latin “favors”] Hist. Day labor that tenants of certain manors were bound to give their lords at harvest time. — Also termed preces.

precarious, adj. Dependent on the will or pleasure of another; uncertain.

precarious loan. See LOAN.

precarious possession. See posSESSion.

precarious trade. See trade.

precarium (pri-kair-ee-am). [Latin] 1. Roman law. Property granted or lent, to be returned at the will of the grantor. 2. Hist. An estate or tenure arising from a precarius grant, and usu. characterized by uncertainty or arduous conditions of tenure.

precatory (prek-ə-tor-ee), adj. (Of words) requesting, recommending, or expressing a desire for action, but usu. in a nonbinding way. ● An example of precatory language is “it is my wish and desire to . . .”

precatory trust. See trust.

precedence (pres-ə-dants or prə-seed-ənts), n. 1. The act or state of going before; esp., the order or priority in place or time observed by or for persons of different statuses (such as political dignitaries) on the basis of rank during ceremonial events. 2. The order in which persons may claim the right to administer an intestate’s estate. ● The traditional order is (1) surviving spouse, (2) next of kin, (3) creditors, and (4) public administrator.

precedent (prə-seed-ənt also pres-ə-dant), adj. Preceding in time or order <condition precedent>.

precedent (pres-ə-dant), n. 1. The making of law by a court in recognizing and applying new rules while administering justice. 2. A decided case that furnishes a basis for determining later cases involving similar facts or issues. — precessional, adj. See Stare Decisis.

“‘In law a precedent is an adjudged case or decision of a court of justice, considered as furnishing a rule or authority for the determination of an identical or similar case afterwards arising, or of a similar question of law. The only theory on which it is possible for one decision to be an authority for another is that the facts are alike, or, if the facts are different, that the principle which governed the first case is applicable to the variant facts.’” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 288 (3d ed. 1914).

“A precedent . . . is a judicial decision which contains in itself a principle. The underlying principle which thus forms its authoritative element is often termed the ratio decidendi. The concrete decision is binding between the parties to it, but it is the abstract ratio decidendi which alone has the force of law as regards the world at large.” John Salmon, Jurisprudence 191 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“One may say, roughly, that a case becomes a precedent only for such a general rule as is necessary to the actual decision reached, when shorn of unessential circumstances.” 1 James Parker Hall, Introduction, American Law and Procedure xlviii (1952).

“One may often accord respect to a precedent not by embracing it with a frozen logic but by drawing from its thought the elements of a new pattern of decision.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 151 (1968).

binding precedent. A precedent that a court must follow. ● For example, a lower court is bound by an applicable holding of a higher court in the same jurisdiction. — Also termed authoritative precedent; binding authority. Cf. imperative authority under AUTHORITY (4). declaratory precedent. A precedent that is merely the application of an already existing legal rule.

original precedent. A precedent that creates and applies a new legal rule.

persuasive precedent. A precedent that a court may either follow or reject, but that is entitled to respect and careful consideration. ● For example, if the case was decided in a neighboring jurisdiction, the court might evaluate the earlier court’s reasoning without being bound to decide the same way.

precedent sub silentio (sab-salen-shee-oh). A legal question that was neither argued nor considered in a judicial decision that is or might be treated as a precedent.

and used by lawyers as guides for preparing similar documents.

"Collections of Precedents have existed from very early times. In this connection precedents must not be confused with judicial precedents or case law. We refer here simply to common-form instruments compiled for use in practice, whereby the lawyer can be more or less certain that he is using the correct phraseology for the particular case before him. They were used both in conveyancing and litigation. . . . It is interesting to note that these precedents were apparently among the first legal works to be published after printing was introduced. Collections of conveyancing precedents continued to be brought up to date or new volumes issued . . . ." A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Outlines of English Legal History 42-43 (9th ed. 1958).

precept (pree-sept). 1. A standard or rule of conduct; a command or principle <several legal precepts govern here>. 2. A writ or warrant issued by an authorized person demanding another’s action, such as a judge’s order to an officer to bring a party before the court <the sheriff executed the precept immediately>.

preces primariae (pree-seez pri-mair-cee-e). [Latin] Hist. The right of the sovereign to appoint a person to fill a vacant prebendarry office after the sovereign’s accession. • This right was exercised during the reign of Edward I. — Also termed primae preces. See prebendary.

precinct. A geographical unit of government, such as an election district, a police district, or a judicial district.

precipe (pre-sap-pee). See praecipe.

précis (pray-see or pray-see), n. [French] A concise summary of a text’s essential points; an abstract. Pl. précis (pray-seez or pray-seez).

precludi non debet (pri-kloo-di non dee-bet or deb-et). [Latin “he ought not to be barred”] Hist. The beginning of a plaintiff’s reply to a plea in bar in which the plaintiff objects to being barred from maintaining the action.

preclusion order. See order (2).

precompounded prescription drug. See DRUG.

preconceived malice. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

precontract. See CONTRACT.

predate, vb. See ANTEDATE.

predatory intent. See INTENT (1).

predatory pricing. Unlawful below-cost pricing intended to eliminate specific competitors and reduce overall competition; pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run. See ANTI-TRUST.

predecease, vb. To die before (another) <she predeceased her husband>.

predecessor. 1. One who precedes another in an office or position. 2. An ancestor.

predecisional, adj. Of, relating to, or occurring during the time before a decision.

predial (pree-dee-ol), adj. Of, consisting of, relating to, or attached to land <predial servitude>. — Also spelled praedial.

predial servitude. See servitude appurtenant under SERVITUDE.

predicate act. In the law of RICO, one of two or more related acts of racketeering necessary to establish a pattern. See RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT.

predicate fact. See FACT.

prediction theory. See BAD-MAN THEORY; PREDICTIVE THEORY OF LAW.

predictive theory of law. The view that the law is nothing more than a set of predictions about what the courts will decide in given circumstances. • This theory is embodied in Holmes’s famous pronouncement, “The prophecies of what the courts will do in fact, and nothing more pretentious, are what I mean by the law.” Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., The Path of the Law, 10 Harv. L. Rev. 457, 460–61 (1897). — Also termed prediction theory. Cf. BAD-MAN THEORY.
predisposition. A person’s inclination to engage in a particular activity; esp., an inclination that vitiates a criminal defendant’s claim of entrapment.

preemption (pre-eem-shan), n. 1. The right to buy before others. See RIGHT OF PREEMPTION. 2. The purchase of something under this right. 3. An earlier seizure or appropriation. 4. The occupation of public land so as to establish a preemptive title. 5. Constitutional law. The principle (derived from the Supremacy Clause) that a federal law can supersede or supplant any inconsistent state law or regulation. — Also termed (in sense 5) federal preemption. — preempt, vb. — preemptive, adj. See COMPLETE-PREEMPTION DOCTRINE.

Garmon preemption. Labor law. A doctrine prohibiting state and local regulation of activities that are actually or arguably (1) protected by the National Labor Relations Act’s rules relating to the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively, or (2) prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act’s provision that governs unfair labor practices. San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 79 S.Ct. 773 (1959). — Also termed Garmon doctrine. See COLLECTIVE BARGAINING; UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE.

preemption claimant. One who has settled on land subject to preemption, intending in good faith to acquire title to it.

preemption right. The privilege to take priority over others in claiming land subject to preemption. • The privilege arises from the holder’s actual settlement of the land.

preemptive right. A shareholder’s privilege to purchase newly issued stock — before the shares are offered to the public — in an amount proportionate to the shareholder’s current holdings in order to prevent dilution of the shareholder’s ownership interest. • This right must be exercised within a fixed period, usu. 30 to 60 days. — Also termed subscription privilege. See SUBSCRIPTION RIGHT. Cf. rights offering under OFFERING.

preexisting condition. See CONDITION (2).

preexisting duty. See DUTY (1).

preexisting-duty rule. Contracts. The rule that if a party does or promises to do what the party is already legally obligated to do — or refrains or promises to refrain from doing what the party is already legally obligated to refrain from doing — the party has not incurred detriment. • This rule’s result is that the promise does not constitute adequate consideration for contractual purposes. For example, if a builder agrees to construct a building for a specified price but later threatens to walk off the job unless the owner promises to pay an additional sum, the owner’s new promise is not enforceable because, under the preexisting-duty rule, there is no consideration for that promise. — Also termed preexisting-legal-duty rule.

prefect (pre-fekt), n. 1. A high official or magistrate put in charge of a particular command, department, or region. 2. In New Mexico, a probate judge.

prefer, vb. 1. To put forward or present for consideration; esp. (of a grand jury), to bring (a charge or indictment) against a criminal suspect <the defendant claimed he was innocent of the charges preferred against him>. 2. To give priority to, such as to one creditor over another <the statute prefers creditors who are first to file their claims>.

preference. 1. The act of favoring one person or thing over another; the person or thing so favored. 2. Priority of payment given to one or more creditors by a debtor; a creditor’s right to receive such priority. 3. Bankruptcy. PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

insider preference. A transfer of property by a bankruptcy debtor to an insider more than 90 days before but within one year after the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

liquidation preference. A preferred shareholder’s right, once the corporation is liquidated, to receive a specified distribution before common shareholders receive anything.

voidable preference. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

preference shares. See preferred stock under STOCK.

preferential assignment. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

preferential debt. See DEBT.
preferential rule. Evidence. A rule that prefers one kind of evidence to another. • It may work provisionally, as when a tribunal refuses to consider one kind of evidence until another kind (presumably better) is shown to be unavailable, or it may work absolutely, as when the tribunal refuses to consider anything but the better kind of evidence.

"There are only three or four . . . sets of (preferential) rules. There is a rule preferring the production of the original of a document, in preference to a copy. There is a rule requiring the attesting witness to a will to be summoned to evidence its execution. And there is a rule preferring the magistrate's official report of testimony taken before him. Then there are a few miscellaneous rules, such as the officially certified enrollment of a statute, etc." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 219 (1935).

preferential shop. See SHOP.

preferential tariff. See TARIFF (2).

preferential transfer. Bankruptcy. A prebankruptcy transfer made by an insolvent debtor to or for the benefit of a creditor, thereby allowing the creditor to receive more than its proportionate share of the debtor's assets; specif., an insolvent debtor's transfer of a property interest for the benefit of a creditor who is owed on an earlier debt, when the transfer occurs no more than 90 days before the date when the bankruptcy petition is filed or (if the creditor is an insider) within one year of the filing, so that the creditor receives more than it would otherwise receive through the distribution of the bankruptcy estate. • Under the circumstances described in 11 USCA § 547, the bankruptcy trustee may recover — for the estate's benefit — a preferential transfer from the transferee. — Also termed preference; voidable preference; voidable transfer; preferential assignment. Cf. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE (2).

preferred, adj. Possessing or accorded a priority or privilege .

preferred creditor. See CREDITOR.

preferred dividend. See DIVIDEND.

preferred docket. See DOCKET (2).

preferred-provider organization. A group of healthcare providers (such as doctors, hospitals, and pharmacies) that agree to provide medical services at a discounted cost to covered persons in a given geographic area. — Abbr. PPO. Cf. HEALTH-Maintenance organization.

preferred stock. See STOCK.

preferring of charges. Military law. The formal completion of a charge sheet, which includes signing and swearing to the charges and specifications. • Only a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice can prefer charges. Cf. INITIATION OF CHARGES.

prehearing conference. An optional conference for the discussion of procedural and substantive matters on appeal, usu. held in complex civil, criminal, tax, and agency cases. • Those attending are typically the attorneys involved in the case as well as a court representative such as a judge, staff attorney, or deputy clerk. Fed. R. App. P. 33.

"The prehearing conference, if held, generally is scheduled after the time for appeal and cross-appeal has passed, and as soon as it becomes apparent that the case is complex due to the legal issues, the length of the record, or the number of parties. In a complex or multi-party case, the conference provides a forum in which to discuss briefing responsibilities, timing, and handling the record and joint appendix. There may be some discussion of the amount of oral argument the parties desire and how that argument will be divided . . . ." Michael E. Tigar, Federal Appeals: Jurisdiction and Practice § 8.06, at 309–10 (2d ed. 1993).

prejudice, n. 1. Damage or detriment to one's legal rights or claims. See dismissal with/without prejudice under DISMISSAL.

legal prejudice. A condition that, if shown by a party, will usu. defeat the opposing party's action; esp., a condition that, if shown by the defendant, will defeat a plaintiff's motion to dismiss a case without prejudice. • The defendant may show that dismissal will deprive the defendant of a substantive property right or preclude the defendant from raising a defense that will be unavailable or endangered in a second suit.

undue prejudice. The harm resulting from a fact-trier's being exposed to evidence that is persuasive but inadmissible (such as evidence of prior criminal conduct) or that so arouses the emotions that calm and logical reasoning is abandoned.

2. A preconceived judgment formed without a factual basis; a strong bias. — prejudice, vb. — prejudicial, adj.

prejudicial error. See reversible error under ERROR (2). prejudicial publicity. Extensive media attention devoted to an upcoming civil or criminal trial. • Under the Due Process Clause, extensive coverage of a criminal trial may deprive the defendant of a fair trial.

preliminary, adj. Coming before and usu. leading up to the main part of something <preliminary negotiations>.

preliminary complaint. See COMPLAINT.

preliminary crime. See INCHOATE OFFENSE under OFFENSE (1).

preliminary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

preliminary hearing. A criminal hearing (usu. conducted by a magistrate) to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to prosecute an accused person. • If sufficient evidence exists, the case will be set for trial or bound over for grand-jury review, or an information will be filed in the trial court. — Also termed preliminary examination; probable-cause hearing; bindover hearing; examining trial. Cf. ARRAIGNMENT.

preliminary inquiry. Military law. The initial investigation of a reported or suspected violation of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Cf. PRETRIAL INVESTIGATION.

preliminary-inquiry officer. Military law. The person, usu. an officer, who conducts a preliminary inquiry.

preliminary letter. See INVITATION TO NEGOTIATE.

preliminary objection. Int'l law. In a case before an international tribunal, an objection that, if upheld, would render further proceedings before the tribunal impossible or unnecessary. • An objection to the court's jurisdiction is an example of a preliminary objection.

preliminary proof. See PROOF.

preliminary statement. The introductory part of a brief or memorandum in support of a motion, in which the advocate summarizes the essence of what follows. • In at least two jurisdictions, New York and New Jersey, the preliminary statement is a standard part of court papers. In many other jurisdictions, advocates do not routinely include it. But preliminary statements are typically allowed, even welcomed, though not required.

preliminary warrant. See WARRANT (1).

premarital agreement. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

prematurity. 1. The circumstance existing when the facts underlying a plaintiff's complaint do not yet create a live claim. Cf. RIPENESS. 2. The affirmative defense based on this circumstance.

premeditated, adj. Done with willful deliberation and planning; consciously considered beforehand .

premeditated malice. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

premeditation, n. Consciously considered and planning that precedes some act (such as committing a crime). — premeditate, vb.

premier serjeant. See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

premise (prem-is), n. A previous statement or contention from which a conclusion is deduced. — Also spelled (in BrE) premiss. — premise (prem-is or pri-miz), vb.

premises (prem-a-siz). 1. Matters (usu. preliminary facts or statements) previously referred to in the same instrument <wherefore, premises considered, the plaintiff prays for the following relief>. 2. A house or building, along with its grounds <smoking is not allowed on these premises>.

premises liability. A landowner's or landholder's tort liability for conditions or activities on the premises.

premises rule. See PARKING-LOT RULE.

premium, n. 1. The periodic payment required to keep an insurance policy in effect. — Also termed insurance premium.

advance premium. A payment made before the start of the period covered by the insurance policy.

earned premium. The portion of an insurance premium applicable to the coverage period that has already expired. • For example, if the total premium for a one-year insurance policy is $1,200, the earned premium after three months is $300.

gross premium. 1. The net premium plus expenses (i.e., the loading), less the interest factor. See LOADING; INTEREST FACTOR. 2. The premium for participating life insurance. See participating insurance under INSURANCE.

natural premium. The actual cost of life insurance based solely on mortality rates. • This amount will be less than a net premium. See net premium.

net level annual premium. A net premium that stays the same each year.

net premium. 1. Generally, the premium amount for an insurance policy less agent commissions. 2. The portion of the premium that covers the estimated cost of claims. 3. The money needed to provide benefits under an insurance policy. • The net premium in a life-insurance policy is calculated by using an assumed interest and mortality-table rate; it does not include additional expense amounts that will be charged to the policyholder. — Also termed net valuation premium.

net single premium. The money that must be collected from a policyholder at one time to guarantee enough money to pay claims made on an insurance policy. • This amount assumes that interest accrues at an expected rate and is based on a prediction of the likelihood of certain claims.

net valuation premium. See net premium.

uneearned premium. The portion of an insurance premium applicable to the coverage period that has not yet occurred. • In the same example as above under earned premium, the uneared premium after three months is $900.

2. A sum of money paid in addition to a regular price, salary, or other amount; a bonus. 3. The amount by which a security's market value exceeds its face value. — Also termed (specific.) bond premium. Cf. DISCOUNT (3).

control premium. A premium paid for shares carrying the power to control a corporation. • The control premium is often computed by comparing the aggregate value of the controlling block of shares with the cost that would be incurred if the shares could be acquired at the going market price per share.

4. The amount paid to buy a securities option. — Also termed (in sense 4) option premium.

premum bond. See BOND (3).

premium loan. See LOAN.

premium note. See NOTE (1).

premium on capital stock. See paid-in surplus under SURPLUS.

premium rate. Insurance. The price per unit of life insurance. • It is usu. expressed as a cost per thousands of dollars of coverage. Life insurers use three factors — the interest factor, the mortality factor, and the risk factor — to calculate premium rates. — Sometimes shortened to rate. See INTEREST FACTOR; MORTALITY FACTOR; RISK FACTOR.

premium stock. See STOCK.

premium tax. See TAX.

prenatal tort. See TORT.

prender de baron (prender de bar-an). [Law French "a taking of husband"] Hist. A plea asserting that the former wife of a murder victim should not be allowed to appeal a murder case against the alleged killer because she has since remarried.

prenup, n. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

prenuptial (pree-nup-shal), adj. Made or occurring before marriage; premarital. — Also termed antenuptial (an-tee-nup-shal).

prenuptial agreement. An agreement made before marriage usu. to resolve issues of support and property division if the marriage ends in divorce or by the death of a spouse. — Also termed antenuptial agreement; antenuptial contract; premarital agreement; premarital contract; marriage settlement. — Sometimes shortened to prenup. See SETTLEMENT (2). Cf. POSTNUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

prenuptial gift. See GIFT.

prenuptial will. See WILL.

prepaid expense. See EXPENSE.

prepaid income. See INCOME.

prepaid interest. See INTEREST (3).

prepaid legal services. An arrangement — usu. serving as an employee benefit — that enables a person to make advance payments for future legal services.

preparation. Criminal law. The act or process of devising the means necessary to commit a crime. Cf. ATTEMPT.

prepayment clause. A loan-document provision that permits a borrower to satisfy a debt before its due date, usu. without paying a penalty.

prepayment penalty. A charge assessed against a borrower who elects to pay off a loan before it is due.

prepetition (pree-pa-tish-an, adj. Occurring before the filing of a petition (esp. in bankruptcy) <$prepetition debts>.

preponderance of the evidence. The greater weight of the evidence; superior evidentiary weight that, though not sufficient to free the mind wholly from all reasonable doubt, is still sufficient to incline a fair and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than the other. • This is the burden of proof in a civil trial, in which the jury is instructed to find for the party that, on the whole, has the stronger evidence, however slight the edge may be. — Also termed preponderance of proof; balance of probability. Cf. clear and convincing evidence under EVIDENCE.

prerogative (pri-rog-a-tiv, n. An exclusive right, power, privilege, or immunity, usu. acquired by virtue of office. — prerogative, adj.

prerogative court. In New Jersey, a probate court.

prerogative writ. See extraordinary writ under WRIT.

pres (pray. [Law French] Near. See CY PRES.

presale. The sale of real property (such as condominium units) before construction has begun. prescribable (pri-skrib-a-bal, adj. (Of a right) that can be acquired by prescription.

prescription, n. 1. The effect of the lapse of time in creating and destroying rights.

liberative prescription. Civil law. A bar to a lawsuit resulting from its untimely filing. • This term is essentially the civil-law equivalent to a statute of limitations. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

2. The acquisition of title to a thing (esp. an intangible thing such as the use of real property) by open and continuous possession over a statutory period. — Also termed positive prescription; acquisitive prescription. Cf. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

prescription in a que estate (ah kee. [Law French “prescription in whose estate”] A claim of prescription based on the immemorial enjoyment of the right by the claimant and the former owners whose estate the claimant has succeeded to.

3. The extinction of a title or right by failure to claim or exercise it over a long period. — Also termed negative prescription; extinctive prescription.

4. The act of establishing authoritative rules; a rule so established. 5. Int'l law. The acquisition of a territory through a continuous and undisputed exercise of sovereignty over it. — prescribe, vb. Cf. PROSCRIPTION.

prescriptive easement. See EASEMENT.

prescriptive right. A right obtained by prescription <$after a nuisance has been continuously in existence for 20 years, a prescriptive right to continue it is acquired as an easement appurtenant to the land on which it exists>.

presence-of-defendant rule. The principle that a felony defendant is entitled to be present at every major stage of the criminal proceeding. Fed. R. Crim. P. 43.

presence of the court. The company or proximity of the judge or other courtroom official. • For purposes of contempt, an action is in the presence of the court if it is committed within the view of the judge or other person in court and is intended to disrupt the court’s business.

“Some decisions indicate that the term ‘in the presence of the court’ is to be given a liberal interpretation, that ‘the court’ consists not of the judge, the courtroom, the jury, or the jury room individually, but of all of these combined, and that the court is present wherever any of its constituent parts is engaged in the prosecution of the business of the court according to law.” 17 Am. Jur. 2d Contempt § 19 (1996).

presence-of-the-testator rule. The principle that a testator must be aware (through sight or presence-of-the-testator rule

other sense) that the witnesses are signing the will. • Many jurisdictions interpret this requirement liberally, and the Uniform Probate Code has dispensed with it.

present, adj. 1. Now existing; at hand . 2. Being the one under consideration <the present appeal does not deal with that issue>. 3. In attendance; not elsewhere <all present voted for him>.

present ability. See ABILITY.

presentation. 1. The delivery of a document to an issuer or named person for the purpose of initiating action under a letter of credit; PRESENTMENT (3). 2. Hist. Eccles. law. A benefice patron’s recommendation of a person to fill a vacant benefice. • If the benefice’s bishop rejected the appointee, the patron could enforce the right to fill the vacancy by writ of QUARE IMPEDEIT in the Court of Common Pleas. See QUARE IMPEDEIT. Cf. ADVOWSON; INSTITUTION.

present case. See case at bar under CASE.

present conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

present covenant. See COVENANT (4).

presentation hearing. A proceeding at which a judge or jury receives and examines all relevant information regarding a convicted criminal and the related offense before passing sentence. — Also termed sentencing hearing.

presentation investigation report. A probation officer’s detailed account of a convicted defendant’s educational, criminal, family, and social background, conducted at the court’s request as an aid in passing sentence. — Abbr. PSI. — Often shortened to presentation report.

present enjoyment. See ENJOYMENT.

presenter. Commercial law. Any person presenting a document (such as a draft) to an issuer for honor. UCC § 5–102.

present estate. See ESTATE.

presenting bank. See BANK.

presenting jury. See GRAND JURY.

present interest. See INTEREST (2).

presentment (pri-zent-mant). 1. The act of presenting or laying before a court or other tribunal a formal statement about a matter to be dealt with legally. 2. A formal written accusation returned by a grand jury on its own initiative, without a prosecutor’s previous indictment request.

“A grand jury has only two functions, either to indict or to return a ‘no bill.’ The Constitution speaks also of a ‘presentment,’ but this is a term with a distinct historical meaning now not well understood. Historically presentment was the process by which a grand jury initiated an independent investigation and asked that a charge be drawn to cover the facts should they constitute a crime. With United States attorneys now always available to advise grand juries, proceeding by presentment is an outmoded practice.” 1 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 110, at 469 (3d ed. 1999).

3. The formal production of a negotiable instrument for acceptance or payment.

“Presentation and dishonor occur, for instance, when the holder of a check attempts to cash it at the drawee bank, but payment is refused because the drawer lacks sufficient funds on deposit. The demand for payment is presentment. The bank’s refusal to pay is dishonor.” 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 16–8, at 100 (4th ed. 1995).

presentment for acceptance. Production of an instrument to the drawer, acceptor, or maker for acceptance. • This type of presentment may be made anytime before maturity, except that with bills payable at sight, after demand, or after sight, presentment must be made within a reasonable time.

presentment for payment. Production of an instrument to the drawer, acceptor, or maker for payment. • This type of presentment must be made on the date when the instrument is due.

presentment of Englishry. Hist. The offering of proof that a slain person was English rather than (before the Conquest) a Dane or (after the Conquest) a Norman. • This requirement was issued first by the conquering Danes and then by the Normans to protect these groups from the English by the threat of a village- or hundred-wide amercement if the inhabitants failed to prove that a dead person found among them was English.

presentment warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

present recollection refreshed. Evidence. A witness’s memory that has been enhanced by showing the witness a document that describes the relevant events. • The document itself is merely a memory stimulus and is not admitted in evidence. Fed. R. Evid. 612. — Also termed refreshing recollection; present recollection revived. Cf. PAST RECÖLLECÖN RECÖRDÖED.

presents, n. pl. Archaic. The instrument under consideration. • This is usu. part of the phrase these presents, which is part of the longer phrase know all men by these presents (itself a loan translation from the Latin noverint universi per præsentes). See KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS.

present sale. See SALE.

present sense impression. Evidence. One's perception of an event or condition, formed during or immediately after the fact. • A statement containing a present sense impression is admissible even if it is hearsay. Fed. R. Evid. 803(1). Cf. EXCITED UTTERANCE.

present use. See USE (4).

present value. The sum of money that, with compound interest, would amount to a specified sum at a specified future date; future value discounted to its value today. — Also termed present worth.

adjusted present value. An asset's value determined by adding together its present value and the value added by capital-structure effects. — Abbr. APV.

net present value. The present value of net cash flow from a project, discounted by the cost of capital. • This value is used to evaluate the project's investment potential. — Abbr. NPV.

preside, vb. 1. To occupy the place of authority, esp. as a judge during a hearing or trial <preside over the proceedings>. 2. To exercise management or control <preside over the estate>.

president, n. 1. The chief political executive of a government; the head of state. 2. The chief executive officer of a corporation or other organization. — presidential, adj.

presidential elector. See ELECTOR.

Presidential message. See MESSAGE.

president judge. See presiding judge under JUDGE.

president of a court-martial. Military law. The senior member in rank present at a court-martial trial.

presumption. A legal inference or assumption that a fact exists, based on the known or proven existence of some other fact or group of facts. • Most presumptions are rules of evidence calling for a certain result in a given case unless the adversely affected party overcomes it with other evidence. A presumption shifts the burden of production or persuasion to the opposing party, who can then attempt to overcome the presumption. See BURDEN OF PRODUCTION.

"A presumption may be defined to be an inference as to the existence of one fact from the existence of some other fact founded upon a previous experience of their connecpresumption

artificial presumption. See presumption of law.

conclusive presumption. A presumption that cannot be overcome by any additional evidence or argument (it is a conclusive presumption that a child under the age of seven is incapable of committing a felony). — Also termed absolute presumption; irrebuttable presumption; mandatory presumption; presumption juris et de jure. Cf. rebuttable presumption.

"‘Conclusive presumptions’ or ‘irrebuttable presumptions’ are usually mere fictions, to disguise a rule of substantive law (e.g., the conclusive presumption of malice from an unexcused defamation); and when they are not fictions, they are usually repudiated by modern courts." John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 454 (1935).

"Conclusive presumptions, sometimes called irrebuttable presumptions of law, are really rules of law. Thus it is said that a child under the age of fourteen years is conclusively presumed to be incapable of committing rape. This is only another way of saying that such a child cannot be found guilty of rape." Richard Eggleston, Evidence, Proof and Probability 92 (1978).

conditional presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

conflicting presumption. One of two or more presumptions that would lead to opposite results. — Also termed inconsistent presumption.

"‘Conflicting presumptions’ are simply two ordinary presumptions that would give opposite results; usually they are really successive presumptions. E.g., where A proves himself to be the son of N, wife of M, but M and N were already separated, and later M married P, and had a son B, the later marriage of M might presume a prior divorce from N before separation to make it valid, and yet the birth of A from a married mother might be presumed legitimate, and thus the question whether A or B was the legitimate son would be attended by opposing presumptions. But in this aspect the doctrine of presumptions is clouded with difficulties and leads to much vain speculation and logical unrealism." John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 454 (1935).

disputable presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

factual presumption. See presumption of fact.

heeding presumption. A rebuttable presumption that an injured product user would have followed a warning label had the product manufacturer provided one.

inconsistent presumption. See conflicting presumption.

irrebuttable presumption. See conclusive presumption.

legal presumption. See presumption of law.

mandatory presumption. See conclusive presumption.

McClanahan presumption. See McClanahan presumption.

mixed presumption. A presumption containing elements of both law and fact.

Morgan presumption. See Morgan presumption.

natural presumption. A deduction of one fact from another, based on common experience.

permissive presumption. A presumption that a trier of fact is free to accept or reject from a given set of facts. — Also termed permissive inference.

presumption juris et de jure. See conclusive presumption.

presumption of fact. A type of rebuttable presumption that may be, but as a matter of law need not be, drawn from another established fact or group of facts <the possessor of recently stolen goods is, by presumption of fact, considered the thief>. — Also termed factual presumption.

presumption of general application. A presumption that applies across the board to all legislation, as a result of which lawmakers need not list each such presumption in all bills.

"One function of the word ‘presumption’ in the context of statutory interpretation is to state the result of this legislative reliance (real or assumed) on firmly established legal principles. There is a 'presumption' that mens rea is required in the case of statutory crimes, and a ‘presumption’ that statutory powers must be exercised reasonably. These presumptions apply although there is no question of linguistic ambiguity in the statutory wording under construction, and they may be described as ‘presumptions of general application.’ At the level of interpretation, their function is the promotion of brevity on the part of the draftsman. Statutes make dreary enough reading as it is, and it would be ridiculous to insist in each instance upon an enumeration of the general principles taken for granted.” Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 142–43 (1976).

presumption of intent. A permissive presumption that a criminal defendant who intended to commit an act did so.

presumption of law. A legal assumption that a court is required to make if certain facts are established and no contradictory evidence is produced <by presumption of law, a criminal defendant is considered innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.> — Also termed legal presumption; artificial presumption; præsumptio juris.

prima facie presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

procedural presumption. A presumption that may be rebutted by credible evidence.

rebuttable presumption. An inference drawn from certain facts that establish a prima facie case, which may be overcome by the introduction of contrary evidence. — Also termed prima facie presumption; disputable presumption; conditional presumption; presumptio juris. Cf. conclusive presumption.

statutory presumption. A rebuttable or conclusive presumption that is created by statute.

Thayer presumption. See THAYER PRESUMP-TION.

presumption of death. A presumption that arises on the unexpected disappearance and continued absence of a person for an extended period, commonly seven years.

presumption of fact. See PRESCRIPTION.

presumption-of-fertility rule. See FERTILE-OCTOGENARIAN RULE.

presumption of general application. See PRESSION.

presumption-of-identity rule. The common-law rule that unless there is a specific, applicable statute in another state, a court will presume that the common law has developed elsewhere identically with how it has developed in the court’s own state, so that the court may apply its own state’s laws. • Today this rule applies primarily in Georgia. See Shorewood Packaging Corp. v. Commercial Union Ins., 865 presumption of innocence. The fundamental criminal-law principle that a person may not be convicted of a crime unless the government proves guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, without any burden placed on the accused to prove innocence.

presumption of intent. See PRESCRIPTION.

presumption of law. See PRESCRIPTION.

presumption of legitimacy. The presumption that the husband of a woman who gives birth is the father of the child.

presumption of natural and probable consequences. Criminal law. The presumption that mens rea may be derived from proof of the defendant’s conduct.

presumption of survivorship. The presumption that one of two or more victims of a common disaster survived the others, based on the supposed survivor’s youth, good health, or other reason rendering survivorship likely.

presumption of validity. Patents. The assumption that the holder of a patent is entitled to a statutory presumption of validity.

presumptive (pri-zamp-tiv), adj. 1. Giving reasonable grounds for belief or presumption. 2.
Based on a presumption. — presumptively, adv.

presumptive authority. See implied authority under AUTHORITY (1).

presumptive damages. See punitive damages under DAMAGES.

presumptive death. See DEATH.

presumptive evidence. See EVIDENCE.

presumptive heir. See heir presumptive under HEIR.

presumptive notice. See implied notice under NOTICE.

presumptive proof. See conditional proof under PROOF.

presumptive sentence. See SENTENCE.

presumptive title. See TITLE (2).

presumptive trust. See resulting trust under TRUST.

pretax, adj. Existing or occurring before the assessment or deduction of taxes <pretax income>.

pretax earnings. See EARNINGS.

preterlegal (pree-tar-leh-gal), adj. Rare. Beyond the range of what is legal; not according to law <preterlegal customs>.

pretermission (pree-tar-mish-on). 1. The condition of one who is pretermitted, as an heir of a testator. 2. The act of omitting an heir from a will.

pretermission statute. See pretermitted-heir statute.

pretermit (pree-tar-mit), vb. 1. To ignore or disregard purposely <the court pretermitted the constitutional question by deciding the case on procedural grounds>. 2. To neglect or overlook accidentally <the third child was pretermitted in the will>.

pretermitted child. See pretermitted heir under HEIR.

pretermitted defense. See defense (1).

pretermitted heir. See HEIR.

pretermitted-heir statute. A state law that grants a pretermitted heir the right to inherit a share of the testator’s estate, usu. by treating the heir as though the testator had died intestate. — Also termed pretermission statute.

pretermitted spouse. See pretermitted heir under HEIR.

pretext (pree-tekst), n. A false or weak reason or motive advanced to hide the actual or strong reason or motive. — pretextual (pree-teks-choo-al), adj.

pretextrue arrest. See ARREST.

pretium affectionis (pree-shee-am a-fek-shee-oh-nis). An enhanced value placed on a thing by the fancy of its owner, growing out of an attachment for the specific article and its associations; sentimental value. • This value is not taken as a basis for measuring damages.

pretium periculi (pree-shee-am pø-rik-yø-lı). The price of the risk, such as the premium paid on an insurance policy.

pretorial court (pri-tor-ee-əl). See COURT.

pretorial conference. An informal meeting at which opposing attorneys confer, usu. with the judge, to work toward the disposition of the case by discussing matters of evidence and narrowing the issues that will be tried. • The conference takes place shortly before trial and ordinarily results in a pretrial order. — Often shortened to pretrial. — Also termed pretrial hearing.

pretorial detention. See DETENTION.

pretorial discovery. See DISCOVERY.

pretorial diversion. See DIVERSION PROGRAM.

pretorial hearing. See PRETRIAL CONFERENCE.

pretorial intervention. 1. DIVERSION PROGRAM. 2. See deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

pretorial investigation. Military law. An investigation to decide whether a case should be recommended for forwarding to a general court-martial.

pretorial order. A court order setting out the claims and defenses to be tried, the stipulations of the parties, and the case’s procedural rules, as agreed to by the parties or mandated by the court at a pretrial conference.

prevail, vb. 1. To obtain the relief sought in an action; to win a lawsuit <the plaintiff prevailed in the Supreme Court>. 2. To be commonly accepted or predominant <it’s unclear which line of precedent will prevail>.

prevailing party. See PARTY (2).

prevarication (pri-var-a-kay-shan), n. The act or an instance of lying or avoiding the truth; equivocation. — prevaricate (pri-var-a-kayt), vb.

prevaricator (pri-var-a-kay-tar). [Latin] 1. A liar; an equivocator. 2. Roman law. One who betrays another’s trust, such as an advocate who aids the opposing party by betraying the client. — Also spelled (in sense 2) prævaricat-prevent, vb. To hinder or impede .

preventative custody. See CUSTODY (1).

prevention. Civil law. The right of one of several judges having concurrent jurisdiction to exercise that jurisdiction over a case that the judge is first to hear.

prevention doctrine. Contracts. The principle that each contracting party has an implied duty to not do anything that prevents the other party from performing its obligation. — Also termed prevention-of-performance doctrine.

preventive custody. See CUSTODY (1).

preventive detention. See DETENTION.

preventive injunction. See INJUNCTION.

preventive punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

previously taxed income. See INCOME.

price. The amount of money or other consideration asked for or given in exchange for something else; the cost at which something is bought or sold.

agreed price. The price for a sale, esp. of goods, arrived at by mutual agreement. Cf. open price.

asked price. The lowest price at which a seller is willing to sell a security at a given time. See SPREAD (2).

asking price. The price at which a seller lists property for sale, often implying a willingness to sell for less. — Also termed ask price; offering price.

at-the-market price. A retail price that store owners in the same vicinity generally charge.

bid price. The highest price that a prospective buyer is willing to pay for a security at a given time. See SPREAD (2).

call price. 1. The price at which a bond may be retired before its maturity. 2. See strike price.

ceiling price. 1. The highest price at which a buyer is willing to buy. 2. The highest price allowed by a government agency or by some other regulatory institution.

closing price. The price of a security at the end of a given trading day. — Also termed close.

exercise price. See strike price.

ex-works price. The price of goods as they leave the factory. See EX WORKS.

fixed price. A price that is agreed upon by a wholesaler and a retailer for the later sale or resale of an item. • Agreements to fix prices are generally prohibited by state and federal statutes.

floor price. The lowest price at which a seller is willing to sell.

liquidation price. A price that is paid for property sold to liquidate a debt. • Liquidation price is usu. below market price. — Also termed liquidation value.

list price. A published or advertised price of goods; retail price.

market price. The prevailing price at which something is sold in a specific market. See fair market value under VALUE.

mean trading price. Securities. The average of the daily trading price of a security determined at the close of the market each day during a 90-day period.

net price. The price of something, after deducting cash discounts.

offering price. See asking price.

open price. The price for a sale, esp. of goods, that has not been settled at the time of a sale’s conclusion. UCC § 2–305. Cf. agreed price.

put price. See strike price.

redemption price. 1. The price of a bond that has not reached maturity, purchased at the issuer’s option. 2. The price of shares when a mutual-fund shareholder sells shares back to the fund. — Also termed liquidating price; repurchase price.

reserve price. The price announced at an auction as the lowest that will be entertained. See WITH RESERVE; WITHOUT RESERVE.

sales price. The total amount for which property is sold, often including the costs of any services that are a part of the sale. • Under sales-tax statutes, the amount is typically valued in money even if the value is not received in money. — Also termed selling price.

spot price. The amount for which a commodity is sold in a spot market. See SPOT TRADING.

strike price. Securities. The price for which a security will be bought or sold under an option contract if the option is exercised. — Also termed striking price; exercise price; call price; put price. See OPTION.

subscription price. See subscription price.

suggested retail price. The sales price recommended to a retailer by a manufacturer of the product.

support price. A minimum price set by the federal government for a particular agricultural commodity.

target price. A price set by the federal government for particular agricultural commodities. • If the market price falls below the target price, farmers receive a subsidy from the government for the difference.

transfer price. The charge assigned to an exchange of goods or services between a corporation’s organizational units.

unit price. A price of a food product expressed in a well-known measure such as ounces or pounds.

upset price. The lowest amount that a seller is willing to accept for property or goods sold at auction.

wholesale price. The price that a retailer pays for goods purchased (usu. in bulk) from a wholesaler for resale to consumers at a higher price.

price amendment. Securities. A change in a registration statement, prospectus, or prospectus supplement affecting the offering price, the underwriting and selling discounts or commissions, the amount of proceeds, the conversion rates, the call prices, or some other matter relating to the offering price.

price/cost analysis. A technique of determining, for antitrust purposes, whether predatory pricing has occurred by examining the relationship between a defendant’s prices and either its average variable cost or its average total cost.

price discrimination. The practice of offering identical or similar goods to different buyers at different prices when the costs of producing the goods are the same. • Price discrimination can violate antitrust laws if it reduces competition. It may be either direct, as when a seller charges different prices to different buyers, or indirect, as when a seller offers special concessions (such as favorable credit terms) to some but not all buyers.

persistent price discrimination. A monopolist’s systematic policy of obtaining different rates of return from different sales groupings.

price-earnings ratio. The ratio between a stock’s current share price and the corporation’s earnings per share for the last year. • Some investors avoid stocks with high price-earnings ratios because those stocks may be overpriced. — Abbr. P/E ratio. Cf. earnings yield under YIELD.

price expectancy. See exhibition value.

price-fixing. The artificial setting or maintenance of prices at a certain level, contrary to the workings of the free market. • Price-fixing is usu. illegal per se under antitrust law.

“Price-fixing agreements may or may not be aimed at complete elimination of price competition. The group making those agreements may or may not have the power to control the market. But the fact that the group cannot control the market prices does not necessarily mean that the agreement as to prices has no utility to the members of the combination. The effectiveness of price-fixing agreements is dependent on many factors, such as competitive tactics, position in the industry, the formula underlying price policies. Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy.” United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 225–26 n.59, 60 S.Ct. 811, 845 n.59 (1940).

horizontal price-fixing. Price-fixing among competitors on the same level, such as retailers throughout an industry.

vertical price-fixing. Price-fixing among parties in the same chain of distribution, such as manufacturers and retailers attempting to control an item’s resale price.

price index. An index of average prices as a percentage of the average prevailing at some other time (such as a base year). See consumer price index; producer price index.

price leadership. A market condition in which an industry leader establishes a price that others in the field adopt as their own. • Price leadership alone does not violate antitrust laws without other evidence of an intent to create a monopoly.

price-level-adjusted mortgage. See mortgage.

price memorandum. Securities. A document created by an underwriter to explain how securities are priced for a public offering and, typically, to show estimates and appraisals that are not allowed as part of the offering documents.
price support. The artificial maintenance of prices (as of a particular commodity) at a certain level, esp. by governmental action (as by subsidy).

price war. A period of sustained or repeated price-cutting in an industry (esp. among retailers), designed to undersell competitors or force them out of business.

priest-penitent privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

primaee preces. See PRECES PRIMARIAE.

prima facie (pri-mə-fay-shə or fay-shə). adv. [Latin] At first sight; on first appearance but subject to further evidence or information <the deed is prima facie valid>.

prima facie, adj. Sufficient to establish a fact or raise a presumption unless disproved or rebutted .

prima facie case. 1. The establishment of a legally required rebuttable presumption. 2. A party’s production of enough evidence to allow the fact-trier to infer the fact at issue and rule in the party’s favor.

prima facie evidence. See EVIDENCE.

prima facie presumption. See rebuttable presumption under PRESCRIPTION.

prima facie privilege. See qualified immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

prima facie tort. See TORT.

primage (prə-mij). See HAT MONEY.

primary, n. See primary election under ELECTION.

primary activity. Labor law. Concerted action (such as a strike or picketing) directed against an employer with which a union has a dispute. Cf. SECONDARY ACTIVITY.

primary allegation. See ALLEGATION.

primary authority. See AUTHORITY (4).

primary beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

primary boycott. See BOYCOTT.

primary cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

primary committee. Bankruptcy. A group of creditors organized to help the debtor draw up a reorganization plan.

primary conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

primary election. See ELECTION.

primary evidence. See best evidence under EVIDENCE.

primary fact. See FACT.

primary insurance. See INSURANCE.

primary-jurisdiction doctrine. A judicial doctrine whereby a court tends to favor allowing an agency an initial opportunity to decide an issue in a case in which the court and the agency have concurrent jurisdiction.

primary lease. See HEADLEASE.

primary liability. See LIABILITY.

primary-line competition. See horizontal competition under COMPETITION.

primary-line injury. Antitrust. Under the price-discrimination provisions of the Robinson–Patman Act, the practice of charging below-cost, predatory prices in an attempt to eliminate the seller’s competition in the market. 15 USCA § 13(a). • A primary-line injury, which hinders or seeks to hinder competition among the seller’s competitors, is distinguishable from a secondary-line injury, which refers to discriminatory pricing that hinders or seeks to hinder competition among the seller’s customers, by favoring one customer over another in the prices the seller charges. Cf. SECONDARY-LINE INJURY.

“Liggett contends that Brown & Williamson’s discriminatory volume rebates to wholesalers threatened substantial competitive injury by furthering a predatory pricing scheme designed to purge competition from the economy segment of the cigarette market. This type of injury, which harms direct competitors of the discriminating seller, is known as a primary-line injury.” Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 220, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 2586 (1993).
primary market. See MARKET.

primary mortgage market. See MORTGAGE MARKET.

primary obligation. See OBLIGATION.

primary offering. See OFFERING.

primary plea. See primary allegation under ALLEGATION.

primary powers. The chief powers given by a principal to an agent to accomplish the agent's tasks. Cf. MEDIATE POWERS.

primary reserve ratio. See RESERVE RATIO.

primate (præ-mit). A chief ecclesiastic; an archbishop or bishop having jurisdiction over other bishops within a province.

prime, n. See prime rate under INTEREST RATE.

prime, vb. To take priority over <Watson's preferred mortgage primed Moriarty's lien>.

prime contractor. See general contractor under CONTRACTOR.

prime cost. See COST (1).

prime lending rate. See prime rate under INTEREST RATE.

prime maker. See MAKER.

prime minister. (often cap.) The chief executive of a parliamentary government; the head of a cabinet. — Abbr. PM.

primer (prim-or or pri-mar). [Law French] First; primary <primer seinin>.

prime rate. See INTEREST RATE.

primer election. A first choice; esp., the eldest coparcener's pick of land on division of the estate. See ELECTION.

primer fine (prim-or or pri-mar fn). [Latin] Hist. A fee payable to the Crown on the suing out of a writ of praecipe to begin a conveyance by fine. See FINE (1). — Also termed praefine.

primer seinin. See SEININ.

prime serjeant. See premier serjeant under SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

prime tenant. See TENANT.

primogeniture (pri-ma-jen-ə-char). 1. The state of being the firstborn child among siblings. 2. The common-law right of the firstborn son to inherit his ancestor's estate, usu. to the exclusion of his younger siblings. — Also termed (in sense 2) primogenitureship. See BOROUGH ENGLISH.

"We might note here, parenthetically, that the English preference for single-file male descent — that is, the system of descent known as primogeniture — was never cordially received in this country. Our statutes of descent and distribution uniformly provide for sons' and daughters' sharing the inheritance equally. Although this seems a fairer method than primogeniture, which was finally abolished in Britain with the 1925 reforms, the descent of property to an ever-expanding group of heirs can seriously complicate the clearing of old titles."

primo venienti (pri-moh ven-e-en-ti). [Latin] To the one first coming. • This refers to the former practice by estate executors of paying debts as they were presented without regard to whether the estate had enough assets to pay all the debts.

principal, adj. Chief; primary; most important.

principal, n. 1. One who authorizes another to act on his or her behalf as an agent. Cf. AGENT (1).

disclosed principal. A principal whose identity is revealed by the agent to a third party. • A disclosed principal is always liable on a contract entered into by the agent with the principal’s authority, but the agent is usu. not liable.
partially disclosed principal. A principal whose existence — but not actual identity — is revealed by the agent to a third party.

undisclosed principal. A principal whose identity is kept secret by the agent. • An undisclosed principal and the agent are both liable on a contract entered into by the agent with the principal’s authority.

2. One who commits or participates in a crime. Cf. ACCESSORY (2); ACCOMPlice (2).

"The student should notice that in criminal law the word ‘principal’ suggests the very converse of the idea which it represents in mercantile law. In the former, as we have seen, an accessory proposes an act, and the ‘principal’ carries it out. But in the law of contract, and in that of tort, the ‘principal’ only authorizes an act, and the ‘agent’ carries it out. Where the same transaction is both a tort and a crime, this double use of the word may cause confusion. For example, if, by an innkeeper’s directions, his chamber-maid steals jewels out of a guest’s portmanteau, the maid is the ‘principal’ in a crime, wherein her master is an accessory before the fact; whilst she is also the agent in a tort, wherein her master is the ‘principal.’" J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 89 (16th ed. 1952).

principal in the first degree. The perpetrator of a crime.

"By a principal in the first degree, we mean the actual offender — the man in whose guilty mind lay the latest blamable mental cause of the criminal act. Almost always, of course, he will be the man by whom this act itself was done. But occasionally this will not be so; for the felony may have been committed by the hand of an innocent agent who, having no blamable intentions in what he did, incurred no criminal liability by doing it. In such a case the man who instigates this agent is the real offender; his was the last mens rea that preceded the crime, though it did not cause it immediately but meditated." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 85–86 (16th ed. 1952).

principal in the second degree. One who helped the perpetrator at the time of the crime. — Also termed accessory at the fact. See ABETTOR.

"The distinction between principals in the first and second degrees is a distinction without a difference except in those rare instances in which some unusual statute has provided a different penalty for one of these than for the other. A principal in the first degree is the immediate perpetrator of the crime while a principal in the second degree is one who did not commit the crime with his own hands but was present and abetting the principal. It may be added, in the words of Mr. Justice Miller, that one may perpetrate a crime, not only with his own hands, but ‘through the agency of mechanical or chemical means, as by instruments, poison or powder, or by an animal, child, or other innocent agent’ acting under his direction.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 736 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting Beausoleil v. United States, 107 F.2d 292, 297 (D.C. Cir. 1939)).

3. One who has primary responsibility on an obligation, as opposed to a surety or indorser.

4. The corpus of an estate or trust. 5. The amount of a debt, investment, or other fund, not including interest, earnings, or profits.

principal action. See main demand under DEMAND (1).

principal contract. See CONTRACT.

principal covenant. See COVENANT (1).

principal creditor. See CREDITOR.

principal demand. See main demand under DEMAND (1).

principal fact. See FACT.

principal in the first degree. See PRINCIPAL (2). principal in the second degree. See PRINCIPAL (2). principalis (prin-se-pay-lis), adj. [Latin] Principal, as in principalis debitor ("principal debtor").

principal place of business. The place of a corporation’s chief executive offices, which is typically viewed as the “nerve center.”

principal right. See RIGHT.

principle, n. A basic rule, law, or doctrine.

principle of finality. See FINALITY DOCTRINE.

principle of legality. See LEGALITY (2). principle of nonintervention. See NONINTERVENTION. principle of retribution. See LEX TALIONIS. print, n. See FINGERPRINT.

Printers Ink Statute. A model statute drafted in 1911 and adopted in a number of states making it a misdemeanor to print an advertisement that contains a false or deceptive statement.
prior, adj. 1. Preceding in time or order <under this court’s prior order>. 2. Taking precedence .

prior, n. Criminal law. Slang. A previous conviction <because the defendant had two priors, the judge automatically enhanced his sentence>.

prior-appropriation doctrine. The rule that, among the persons whose properties border on a waterway, the earliest users of the water have the right to take all they can use before anyone else has a right to it. Cf. RIPARIAN-RIGHTS DOCTRINE.

prior art. See ART.

prior-claim rule. The principle that before suing for a tax refund or abatement, a taxpayer must first assert the claim to the Internal Revenue Service.

prior consistent statement. A witness’s earlier statement that is consistent with the witness’s trial testimony. • A prior consistent statement is not hearsay if it is offered to rebut a charge that the testimony was improperly influenced or fabricated. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B).

prior creditor. See CREDITOR.

prior inconsistent statement. A witness’s earlier statement that conflicts with the witness’s testimony at trial. • In federal practice, extrinsic evidence of an unsworn prior inconsistent statement is admissible — if the witness is given an opportunity to explain or deny the statement — for impeachment purposes only. Fed. R. Evid. 613(b), 801(d)(1)(A).

priori potenti (pri-or-i pa-ten-ti). [Latin “to the first person applying”) Wills & estates. The principle that when two or more persons are equally entitled to administer an estate, the court will appoint the person who applies first.

priority. 1. The status of being earlier in time or higher in degree or rank; precedence. 2. An established right to such precedence; esp., a creditor’s right to have a claim paid before other creditors of the same debtor receive payment. 3. The doctrine that, as between two courts, jurisdiction should be accorded the court in which proceedings are first begun.

priority-claim rule. See FIRST-TO-FILE RULE.

priority lien. See prior lien under LIEN.

priority of invention. The determination that one among several patent applications, for substantially the same invention, should receive the patent when the Patent and Trademark Office has declared interference. • This determination depends on the date of conception, the date of reduction to practice, and diligence.

priority of liens. The ranking of liens in the order in which they are perfected.

prior lien. See LIEN.

prior preferred stock. See STOCK.

prior restraint. A governmental restriction on speech or publication before its actual expression. • Prior restraints violate the First Amendment unless the speech is obscene, is defamatory, or creates a clear and present danger to society.

“The legal doctrine of prior restraint (or formal censorship before publication) is probably the oldest form of press control. Certainly it is one of the most efficient, since one censor, working in the watershed, can create a drought of information and ideas long before they reach the fertile plain of people’s minds. In the United States, the doctrine of prior restraint has been firmly opposed by the First Amendment to the Constitution, and by the Supreme Court, perhaps most notably in the case of Near v. Minnesota, decided in 1931. But the philosophy behind that doctrine lives zealously on, and shows no signs of infirmities of age.” David G. Clark & Earl R. Hutchinson, Mass Media and the Law 11 (1970).

prior-use bar. See PUBLIC-USE BAR.

prior-use doctrine. The principle that, without legislative authorization, a government agency may not appropriate property already devoted to a public use.

prisage (pri-zij). Hist. A royal duty on wine imported into England. • Prisage was replaced by butlerage in the reign of Edward I. Cf. BUTLERAGE.

prison. A state or federal facility of confinement for convicted criminals, esp. felons. — Also termed penitentiary; penal institution; adult correctional institution. Cf. JAIL.

prison breach. A prisoner’s forcible breaking and departure from a place of lawful confinement; the offense of escaping from confinement in a prison or jail. • Prison breach has traditionally been distinguished from escape by the presence of force; this distinction has been abandoned in some jurisdictions. — Also termed prison breaking. Cf. ESCAPE (2).

"Breach of prison by the offender himself, when committed for any cause, was felony at the common law; or even conspiring to break it. But this severity is mitigated by the statute de frangentibus prisonam, 1 Edw. II, which enacts that no person shall have judgment of life or member, for breaking prison, unless committed for some capital offence. So that to break prison, when lawfully committed for any treason or felony, remains still a felony as at the common law; and to break prison, when lawfully confined upon any other inferior charge, is still punishable as a high misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 130–31 (1769).

prison camp. A usu. minimum-security camp for the detention of trustworthy prisoners who are often employed on government projects.

prisoner. 1. A person who is serving time in prison. 2. A person who has been apprehended by a law-enforcement officer and is in custody, regardless of whether the person has yet been put in prison.

"While breach of prison, or prison breach, means breaking out of or away from prison, it is important to have clearly in mind the meaning of the word ‘prison.’ If an officer arrests an offender and takes him to jail the layman does not think of the offender as being ‘in prison’ until he is safely behind locked doors, but no one hesitates to speak of him as a ‘prisoner’ from the moment of apprehension. He is a prisoner because he is ‘in prison’ ... whether he were actually in the walls of a prison, or only in the stocks, or in the custody of any person who had lawfully arrested him...” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 566 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting 2 Hark. P.C. ch. 18, § 1 (6th ed. 1788)).

prisoner at the bar. An accused person who is on trial.

prisoner of conscience. Int'l law. A person who, not having used or advocated the use of violence, has been imprisoned by reason of a political, religious, or other conscientiously held belief or by reason of ethnic origin, sex, color, or language.

prisoner's dilemma. A logic problem — often used by law-and-economics scholars to illustrate the effect of cooperative behavior — involving two prisoners who are being separately questioned about their participation in a crime: (1) if both confess, they will each receive a 5-year sentence; (2) if neither confesses, they will each receive a 3-year sentence; and (3) if one confesses but the other does not, the confessing prisoner will receive a 1-year sentence while the silent prisoner will receive a 10-year sentence. See EXTERNALITY.

prist (prist). [Law French] Hist. Ready. • In oral pleading, this term was used to express a joiner of issue.

privacy, invasion of. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

privacy law. A federal or state statute that protects a person's right to be left alone or restricts public access to personal information such as tax returns and medical records. — Also termed privacy act.

privation (pri-vay-shan). 1. The act of taking away or withdrawing. 2. The condition of being deprived.

privatization (pri-va-ta-zay-shan). n. The act or process of converting a business or industry from governmental ownership or control to private enterprise. — privatize, vb.

privatum (pri-vay-tam). [Latin] Private. • This term appeared in phrases such as jus privatum ("private law").

privies (priv-eez). See PRIVY.

privigna (pri-vig-na), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A daughter of one's husband or wife by a previous marriage; a stepdaughter.

privignus (pri-vig-nas). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A son of one's husband or wife by a previous marriage; a stepson.

privilege. 1. A special legal right, exemption, or immunity granted to a person or class of persons; an exception to a duty.

  absolute privilege. A privilege that immunizes an actor from suit, no matter how wrongful the action might be, and even though it is done with an improper motive. Cf. qualified privilege.

  conditional privilege. See qualified privilege.

  deliberative-process privilege. A privilege permitting the government to withhold documents relating to policy formulation to encourage open and independent discussion among those who develop government policy.

  litigation privilege. A privilege protecting the attorneys and parties in a lawsuit from defamation claims arising from statements made in the course of the suit.

  parliamentary privilege. The right of a particular question, motion, or statement to take precedence over all other business before the legislative body.

  privilege from arrest. An exemption from arrest, as that enjoyed by members of Congress during legislative sessions. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6.

  qualified privilege. A privilege that immunizes an actor from suit only when the privilege is properly exercised in the performance of a legal or moral duty. — Also termed conditional privilege. Cf. absolute privilege.

  special privilege. A privilege granted to a person or class of persons to the exclusion of others and in derogation of the common right.

  testimonial privilege. A right not to testify based on a claim of privilege; a privilege that overrides a witness's duty to disclose matters within the witness's knowledge, whether at trial or by deposition.

  viatorial privilege (vi-0-tor-ee-al). A privilege that overrides a person's duty to attend court in person and to testify.

  work-product privilege. See WORK-PRODUCT RULE.

2. An affirmative defense by which a defendant acknowledges at least part of the conduct complained of but asserts that the defendant's conduct was authorized or sanctioned by law; esp., in tort law, a circumstance justifying or excusing an intentional tort. See JUSTIFICATION (2). Cf. IMMUNITY (2).

3. An evidentiary rule that gives a witness the option to not disclose the fact asked for, even though it might be relevant; the right to prevent disclosure of certain information in court, esp. when the information was originally communicated in a professional or confidential relationship.

  accountant-client privilege. The protection afforded to a client from an accountant's unauthorized disclosure of materials submitted to or prepared by the accountant.

  antimarital-facts privilege. See marital privilege (2).

  attorney-client privilege. The client's right to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications between the client and the attorney. — Also termed lawyer-client privilege; client's privilege.

  "There are a number of ways to organize the essential elements of the attorney-client privilege to provide for an orderly analysis. One of the most popular is Wigmore's schema: '(1) Where legal advice of any kind is sought (2) from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such, (3) the communications relating to that purpose (4) made in confidence (5) by the client (6) are at his instance permanently protected (7) from disclosure by himself or by the legal adviser, (8) except the privilege be waived.' Though this organization has its virtues, there is some question as to whether it completely states the modern privilege." 24 Charles Alan Wright & Kenneth W. Graham, Jr., Federal Practice and Procedure § 6473, at 103-04 (1986) (quoting § 8 John Henry Wigmore, Evidence § 2292, at 554 (John T. McNaughton rev., 1961)).

4. At the present time it seems most realistic to portray the attorney-client privilege as supported in part by its traditional utilitarian justification, and in part by the integral role it is perceived to play in the adversary system itself. Our system of litigation casts the lawyer in the role of fighter for the party whom he represents. A strong tradition of loyalty attaches to the relationship of attorney and client, and this tradition would be outraged by routine examination of the lawyer as to the client’s confidential disclosures regarding professional business. To the extent that the evidentiary privilege, then, is integrally related to an entire code of professional conduct, it is futile to envision drastic curtailment of the privilege without substantial modification of the underlying ethical system to which the privilege is merely ancillary.” John W. Strong, McCormick on Evidence § 87, at 121–22 (4th ed. 1992).

clergyman-penitent privilege. See priest-penitent privilege.

doctor-patient privilege. The right to exclude from evidence in a legal proceeding any confidential communication that a patient makes to a physician for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment, unless the patient consents to the disclosure. — Also termed physician-client privilege; patient-physician privilege.

editorial privilege. See journalist’s privilege (2).

executive privilege. A privilege, based on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, that exempts the executive branch of the federal government from usual disclosure requirements when the matter to be disclosed involves national security or foreign policy. Cf. executive immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

husband-wife privilege. See marital privilege.

informant’s privilege. The qualified privilege that a government can invoke to prevent disclosure of the identity and communications of its informants. • In exercising its power to formulate evidentiary rules for federal criminal cases, the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently declined to hold that the government must disclose the identity of informants in a preliminary hearing or in a criminal trial. McCray v. Illinois, 386 U.S. 300, 312, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1063 (1967). A party can usu. overcome the privilege if it can demonstrate that the need for the information outweighs the public interest in maintaining the privilege. — Also termed informer’s privilege.

joint-defense privilege. The rule that a defendant can assert the attorney-client privilege to protect a confidential communication made to a codefendant’s lawyer if the communication was related to the defense of both defendants. — Also termed common-interest doctrine.

journalist’s privilege. 1. A reporter’s protection, under constitutional or statutory law, from being compelled to testify about confidential information or sources. — Also termed reporter’s privilege; newsman’s privilege. See SHIELD LAW (1). 2. A publisher’s protection against defamation lawsuits when the publication makes fair comment on the actions of public officials in matters of public concern. — Also termed editorial privilege. See FAIR COMMENT.

judicial privilege. Defamation. The privilege protecting any statement made in the course of and with reference to a judicial proceeding by any judge, juror, party, witness, or advocate.

legislative privilege. Defamation. The privilege protecting (1) any statement made in a legislature by one of its members, and (2) any paper published as part of legislative business. — Also termed (in a parliamentary system) parliamentary privilege.

marital privilege. 1. The privilege allowing a spouse not to testify, and to prevent another from testifying, about confidential communications with the other spouse during the marriage. — Also termed marital-communications privilege. 2. The privilege allowing a spouse not to testify in a criminal case as an adverse witness against the other spouse, regardless of the subject matter of the testimony. — Also termed (in sense 2) privilege against adverse spousal testimony; antimari tal-facts privilege. 3. The privilege immunizing from a defamation lawsuit any statement made between husband and wife. — Also termed (in all senses) spousal privilege; husband-wife privilege.

national-security privilege. See state-secrets privilege.

newsman’s privilege. See journalist’s privilege (1).

official privilege. The privilege immunizing from a defamation lawsuit any statement made by one state officer to another in the course of official duty.

parliamentary privilege. See legislative privilege.

patient-physician privilege. See doctor-patient privilege.

peer-review privilege. A privilege that protects from disclosure the proceedings and reports of a medical facility’s peer-review committee, which reviews and oversees the patient care and medical services provided by the staff.

physician-client privilege. See doctor-patient privilege.

priest-penitent privilege. The privilege barring a clergy member from testifying about a confessor's communications. — Also termed clergyman-penitent privilege.

privileged subscription. See RIGHTS OFFERING.

privileged villeinage. See VILLEINAGE.

privelege from arrest. See PRIVILEGE (1).

Privileges and Immunities Clause. The constitutional provision (U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1) prohibiting a state from favoring its own citizens by discriminating against other states' citizens who come within its borders.

Privileges or Immunities Clause. The constitutional provision (U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1) prohibiting state laws that abridge the privileges or immunities of U.S. citizens. • The clause was effectively nullified by the Supreme Court in the Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 36 (1873). Cf. DUE PROCESS CLAUSE; EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE.

privelege tax. See TAX.

privilgium (priv-a-lee-jeem-ahm). [Latin] 1. Roman law. A law passed against or in favor of a specific individual. 2. Roman law. A special right, esp. one giving priority to a creditor. 3. Civil law. Every right or favor that is granted by the law but is contrary to the usual rule.

privity (priv-a-tee). 1. The connection or relationship between two parties, each having a legally recognized interest in the same subject matter (such as a transaction, proceeding, or piece of property); mutuality of interest <privi-ty of contract>.

horizontal privity. Commercial law. The legal relationship between a party and a non-party who is related to the party (such as a buyer and a member of the buyer's family).

privity of blood. 1. Privity between an heir and an ancestor. 2. Privity between coparceners.

privity of contract. The relationship between the parties to a contract, allowing them to sue each other but preventing a third party from doing so. • The requirement of privity has been relaxed under modern laws and doctrines of implied warranty and strict liability, which allow a third-party beneficiary or other foreseeable user to sue the seller of a defective product.

"To many students and practitioners of the common law privity of contract became a fetish. As such, it operated to deprive many a claimant of a remedy in cases where according to the mores of the time the claim was just. It has made many learned men believe that a chose in action could not be assigned. Even now, it is gravely asserted that a man cannot be made the debtor of another against his will. But the common law was gradually influenced by equity and by the law merchant, so that by assignment a debtor could become bound to pay a perfect stranger to himself, although until the legislature stepped in, the common-law courts characterized made use of a fiction and pretended that they were not doing that which they really were doing.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 335 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“It is an elementary principle of English law — known as the doctrine of ‘Privity of Contract’ — that contractual rights and duties only affect the parties to a contract, and this principle is the distinguishing feature between the law of contract and the law of property. True proprietary rights are ‘binding on the world’ in the lawyer’s traditional phrase. Contractual rights, on the other hand, are only binding on, and enforceable by, the immediate parties to the contract. But this distinction, fundamental though it be, wears a little thin at times. On the one hand, there has been a constant tendency for contractual rights to be extended in their scope so as to affect more and more persons who cannot be regarded as parties to the transaction. On the other hand, few proprietary rights are literally ‘binding on the world’.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 265 (3d ed. 1981).

“The doctrine of privity means that a person cannot acquire rights or be subject to liabilities arising under a contract to which he is not a party. It does not mean that a contract between A and B cannot affect the legal rights of C indirectly.” G.H. Treitel, The Law of Contract 538 (8th ed. 1991).

privity of estate. A mutual or successive relationship to the same right in property, as between grantor and grantee or landlord and tenant.

privity of possession. Privity between parties in successive possession of real property.
- The existence of this type of privity is often at issue in adverse-possession claims.

vertical privity. 1. Commercial law. The legal relationship between parties in a product’s chain of distribution (such as a manufacturer and a seller). 2. Privity between one who signs a contract containing a restrictive covenant and one who acquires the property burdened by it.

2. Joint knowledge or awareness of something private or secret, esp. as implying concurrence or consent <privity to a crime>.

privy (priv-ee), n., pl. A person having a legal interest of privity in any action, matter, or property; a person who is in privity with another.
- Traditionally, there were six types of privies: (1) privies in blood, such as an heir and an ancestor; (2) privies in representation, such as an executor and a testator or an administrator and an intestate person; (3) privies in estate, such as grantor and grantee or lessor and lessee; (4) privies in respect to a contract — the parties to a contract; (5) privies in respect of estate and contract, such as a lessor and lessee where the lessee assigns an interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues because the lessor does not accept the assignee; and (6) privies in law, such as husband and wife. Pl. privies.

Privy Council. In Britain, the principal council of the sovereign, composed of the cabinet ministers and other persons chosen by royal appointment to serve as privy councillors. • The functions of the Privy Council are now mostly ceremonial. See JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Privy Councillor. A member of the Privy Council.

privy purse. English law. The income set apart for the sovereign’s personal use.

privy seal. 1. A seal used in making out grants or letters patent before they are passed under the great seal. 2. (cap.) LORD PRIVY SEAL.

privy signet. Hist. The signet or seal used by the sovereign in making out grants and private letters.

privy verdict. See VERDICT.

prize. 1. Something of value awarded in recognition of a person’s achievement. 2. A vessel or cargo captured at sea or seized in port by the forces of a nation at war, and therefore liable to being condemned or appropriated as enemy property.

prize court. See COURT.

prize fighting. Fighting for a reward or prize; esp., professional boxing.

“Prize fighting ... was not looked upon with favor by the common law as was a friendly boxing match or wrestling match. On the other hand it was not punishable by the common law unless it was fought in a public place, or for some other reason constituted a breach of the peace.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 480 (3d ed. 1982).

prize goods. See GOODS.

prize law. The system of laws applicable to the capture of prize at sea, dealing with such matters as the rights of captors and the distribution of the proceeds.

prize money. 1. A dividend from the proceeds of a captured vessel, paid to the captors. 2. Money offered as an award.

PRO. abbr. PEER-REVIEW ORGANIZATION.

probable cause. A reasonable ground to suspect that a person has committed or is committing a crime or a place contains specific items connected with a crime. • Under the Fourth Amendment, probable cause — which amounts to more than a bare suspicion but less than evidence that would justify a conviction — must be shown before an arrest warrant or search warrant may be issued. — Also termed reasonable cause; sufficient cause; reasonable grounds. Cf. REASONABLE SUSPICION.

“Probable cause may not be established simply by showing that the officer who made the challenged arrest or search subjectively believed he had grounds for his action. As emphasized in Beck v. Ohio (379 U.S. 89, 85 S.Ct. 223 (1964)): ‘If subjective good faith alone were the test, the protection of the Fourth Amendment would evaporate, and the people would be “secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects” only in the discretion of the police.’ The probable cause test, then, is an objective one: for there to be probable cause, the facts must be such as would warrant a belief by a reasonable man.’ Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 2.3, at 140 (2d ed. 1992).

probable-cause hearing. See PRELIMINARY HEARING.

probable consequence. An effect or result that is more likely to follow its supposed cause than not to follow it.

probable-desistance test. Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, focusing on whether the defendant has exhibited dangerous behavior indicating a likelihood of committing the crime. See ATTEMPT (2).

probable evidence. See presumptive evidence under EVIDENCE.

probandum (proh-ban-dam), n. A fact to be proved. Pl. probanda. See fact in issue under FACT.

probata (proh-bay-ta). [Latin] pl. PROBATUM.

probate (proh-bayt), n. 1. The judicial procedure by which a testamentary document is established to be a valid will; the proving of a will to the satisfaction of the court. • Unless set aside, the probate of a will is conclusive upon the parties to the proceedings (and others who had notice of them) on all questions of testamentary capacity, the absence of fraud or undue influence, and due execution of the will. But probate does not preclude inquiry into the validity of the will’s provisions or on their proper construction or legal effect. — Also termed proof of will.

probate in common form. Hist. Probate granted in the registry, without any formal procedure in court, on the executor’s ex parte application. • This type of probate is revocable.

probate in solemn form. Hist. Probate granted in open court, as a final decree, when all interested parties have been given notice. • This type of probate is irrevocable for all parties who have had notice of the proceeding, unless a later will is discovered.

small-estate probate. An informal procedure for administering small estates, less structured than the normal process and usu. not requiring the assistance of an attorney.

2. Loosely, a personal representative’s actions in handling a decedent’s estate. 3. Loosely, all the subjects over which probate courts have jurisdiction. 4. Archaic. A nonresident plaintiff’s proof of a debt by swearing before a notary public or other officer that the debt is correct, just, and due, and by having the notary attach a jurat.
probate, vb. 1. To admit (a will) to proof. 2. To administer (a decedent’s estate). 3. To grant probation to (a criminal); to reduce (a sentence) by means of probation.

probate asset. See legal asset under ASSET.

plena probatio. See probatio plena.

probatio mortua (pra-bay-shue-oh morchoo-ə). [Latin] Dead proof; proof by an inanimate object such as a deed or other instrument.

probatio plena (pra-bay-shue-oh plee-na). [Latin] Civil law. Full proof; proof by two witnesses or a public instrument. — Also termed plena probatio.

probatio viva (pra-bay-shue-oh vi-va). [Latin] Living proof; that is, proof by the mouth of a witness.

probation. 1. A court-imposed criminal sentence that, subject to stated conditions, releases a convicted person into the community instead of sending the criminal to jail or prison. Cf. PAROLE.

shock probation. Probation that is granted after a brief stay in jail or prison. ● Shock probation is intended to awaken the defendant to the reality of confinement for failure to abide by the conditions of probation. This type of probation is discretionary with the sentencing judge and is usu. granted within 180 days of the original sentence. Cf. shock incarceration under INCARCERATION.

2. The act of judicially proving a will. See PROBATE.

probation before judgment. See deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

probationer. A convicted criminal who is on probation.

probation officer. A government officer who supervises the conduct of a probationer.

probation without judgment. See deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

probatio plena. See PROBATIO.

probatio semi-plena. See PROBATIO.

probatio viva. See PROBATIO.

probative (proh-ba-tiv), adj. Tending to prove or disprove. ● Courts can exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Fed. R. Evid. 403. — probativeness, n.

probative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

probative fact. See FACT.

probator (proh-bay-tor), n. Hist. An accused person who confesses to a crime but asserts that another also participated in the crime. ● The probator had to undertake to prove the supposed accomplice’s guilt.

probatum (proh-bay-tom), n. [Latin] Something conclusively established or proved; proof. Pl. probata. Cf. ALLEGATUM.

pro bono (proh boh-noh), adv. & adj. [Latin pro bono publico “for the public good”] Being or involving uncompensated legal services performed esp. for the public good <took the case pro bono> <50 hours of pro bono work each year>.

pro bono et malo (proh boh-noh et mal-oh). [Latin] For good and ill. See DE BONO ET MALO.

probus et legalis homo (proh-bas et la-gay-lis boh-moh). [Law Latin] A good and lawful man. • This phrase referred to a juror who was legally competent to serve on a jury. Pl. probi et legales homines.

proceedendo (proh-sa-den-doh). [Latin] A higher court’s order directing a lower court to determine and enter a judgment in a previously removed case.

proceedendo ad judicium. See DE PROCEEDENDO AD JUDICIUM.

procedural consolidation. See JOINT ADMINISTRATION.

procedural-default doctrine. The principle that a federal court lacks jurisdiction to review the merits of a habeas corpus petition if a state court has refused to review the complaint because the petitioner failed to follow reasonable state-court procedures.

procedural due process. See DUE PROCESS.

procedural law. The rules that prescribe the steps for having a right or duty judicially enforced, as opposed to the law that defines the specific rights or duties themselves. — Also termed adjective law. Cf. SUBSTANTIVE LAW.

procedural presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

procedural right. See RIGHT.

procedure. 1. A specific method or course of action. 2. The judicial rule or manner for carrying on a civil lawsuit or criminal prosecution. See CIVIL PROCEDURE; CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

proceeding. 1. The regular and orderly progression of a lawsuit, including all acts and events between the time of commencement and the entry of judgment. 2. Any procedural means for seeking redress from a tribunal or agency. 3. An act or step that is part of a larger action. 4. The business conducted by a court or other official body; a hearing. 5. Bankruptcy. A particular dispute or matter arising within a pending case — as opposed to the case as a whole.

"'Proceeding' is a word much used to express the business done in courts. A proceeding in court is an act done by the authority or direction of the court, express or implied. It is more comprehensive than the word 'action,' but it may include in its general sense all the steps taken or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action, including the pleadings and judgment. As applied to actions, the term 'proceeding' may include — (1) the institution of the action; (2) the appearance of the defendant; (3) all ancillary or provisional steps, such as arrest, attachment of property, garnishment, injunction, writ of ne exeat; (4) the pleadings; (5) the taking of testimony before trial; (6) all motions made in the action; (7) the trial; (8) the judgment; (9) the execution; (10) proceedings supplementary to execution, in code practice; (11) the taking of the appeal or writ of error; (12) the remittitur, or sending back of the record to the lower court from the appellate or reviewing court; (13) the enforcement of the judgment, or a new trial, as may be directed by the court of last resort.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 3-4 (2d ed. 1899).

adjudicatory proceeding. See adjudicatory hearing under HEARING.

administrative proceeding. See ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING.

collateral proceeding. A proceeding brought to address an issue incidental to the principal proceeding.

competency proceeding. A proceeding to assess a person’s mental capacity. • A competency hearing may be held either in a criminal context to determine a defendant’s competency to stand trial or as a civil proceeding to assess whether a person should be committed to a mental-health facility.

contempt proceeding. A judicial or quasi-judicial hearing conducted to determine whether a person has committed contempt.

core proceeding. See CORE PROCEEDING.

criminal proceeding. A proceeding instituted to determine a person’s guilt or innocence or to set a convicted person’s punishment; a criminal hearing or trial.

ex parte proceeding (eks pahr-tee). A proceeding in which not all parties are present or given the opportunity to be heard. — Also termed ex parte hearing.

in camera proceeding (in kam-a-ra). A proceeding held in a judge’s chambers or other private place.

informal proceeding. A trial conducted in a more relaxed manner than a typical court trial, such as an administrative hearing or a trial in small-claims court.

judicial proceeding. Any court proceeding.

non-core proceeding. See RELATED PROCEEDING.

related proceeding. See RELATED PROCEEDING.

special proceeding. 1. A proceeding that can be commenced independently of a pending action and from which a final order may be appealed immediately. 2. A proceeding involving statutory or civil remedies or rules rather than the rules or remedies ordinarily available under rules of procedure; a proceeding providing extraordinary relief.

summary proceeding. A nonjury proceeding that settles a controversy or disposes of a case in a relatively prompt and simple manner. — Also termed summary trial. Cf. plenary action under ACTION.

"Summary proceedings were such as were directed by Act of Parliament, there was no jury, and the person accused was acquitted or sentenced only by such person as statute had appointed for his judge. The common law was wholly a stranger to summary proceedings." A.H. Manchester, Modern Legal History of England and Wales, 1750–1950 (1960).

supplementary proceeding. 1. A proceeding held in connection with the enforcement of a judgment, for the purpose of identifying and locating the debtor’s assets available to satisfy the judgment. 2. A proceeding that in some way supplements another.

proceeds (proh-seedz), n. 1. The value of land, goods, or investments when converted into money; the amount of money received from a sale (the proceeds are subject to attachment). 2. Something received upon selling, exchanging, collecting, or otherwise disposing of collateral. UCC § 9–306(1). — Proceeds differ from other types of collateral because they constitute any collateral that has changed in form. For example, if a farmer borrows money and gives the creditor a security interest in the harvest, the harvested wheat is collateral. If the farmer then exchanges the harvest for a tractor, the tractor becomes the proceeds of the wheat.

net proceeds. The amount received in a transaction minus the costs of the transaction (such as expenses and commissions). — Also termed net balance.

process, n. 1. The proceedings in any action or prosecution (due process of law). 2. A summons or writ, esp. to appear or respond in court (service of process). — Also termed judicial process; legal process.

"Process is so denominated because it proceeds or issues forth in order to bring the defendant into court, to answer the charge preferred against him, and signifies the writs or judicial means by which he is brought to answer." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 338 (2d ed. 1826).

bailable process. A process instructing an officer to take bail after arresting a defendant. — The defendant’s discharge is required by law after the tender of suitable security.

civil process. A process that issues in a civil lawsuit.

compulsory process. A process, with a warrant to arrest or attach included, that compels a person to appear in court as a witness.

criminal process. A process (such as an arrest warrant) that issues to compel a person to answer for a crime.

final process. A process issued at the conclusion of a judicial proceeding; esp., a writ of execution.

irregular process. A process not issued in accordance with prescribed practice. — Whether the process is void or merely voidable depends on the type of irregularity. Cf. regular process.

mesne process (meeen). 1. A process issued between the commencement of a lawsuit and the final judgment or determination. 2. The procedure by which a contumacious defendant is compelled to plead.

original process. A process issued at the beginning of a judicial proceeding.

"Original process is any writ or notice by which a defendant is called upon to appear and answer the plaintiff’s declaration. The commencement of the suit at common law was formerly by original writ. Judicial process was by summons, attachment, arrest and outlawry.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 3, at 17 (Henry Winthrop Ballentine ed., 3d ed. 1922).

regular process. A process that issues lawfully according to prescribed practice. Cf. irregular process.

summary process. 1. An immediate process, issuing and taking effect without intermediate applications or delays. 2. A legal procedure used to resolve a controversy more efficiently and expeditiously than ordinary methods. 3. The legal documents achieving such a result. 4. A procedure for repossessing real property from a tenant upon default. See summary eviction under EVICTION. 5. See SHOW-CAUSE PROCEEDING.

trust process. In some states (particularly in New England), garnishment or foreign attachment.

void process. Legal process that, in some material way, does not comply with the required form.

3. Patents. A method, operation, or series of actions intended to achieve some end or result. Cf. MACHINE; MANUFACTURE.

"A process is a way of doing something. If it is a patentable process, it must be a new, useful, and nonobvious way of doing something. If the process is patentable, the result of that process — the something getting done — need not of itself be new, useful, or nonobvious. In other words, the result of an inventive process need not be an invention itself." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 24 (2d ed. 1990).

process, abuse of. See MALICIOUS ABUSE OF PROCESS.

process agent. See AGENT.

process by foreign attachment. See FACTORIZING PROCESS.

processioning. The survey and inspection of land boundaries, performed esp. in the former English colonies along the southeastern seaboard, and analogous to the English perambulation. process patent. See PATENT (3).

process server. A person authorized by law or by a court to formally deliver process to a defendant or respondent. See SERVICE (1).

processum continuando (pro-sees-am kan-tin-yoo-an-doh). [Latin "for continuing process"] Hist. A writ for the continuation of process after the death of a justice authorized to review cases by a commission of oyer and terminer.

procès-verbal (prohsay-vair-bahl). [French "official record of oral proceedings"] Civil & int'l law. A detailed, authenticated written report of a proceeding, esp. of an international conference; PROTOCOL (3). A procès-verbal may be cast in various forms, according to the style a country prefers.

(1) tangible personal property, (2) the result of fabrication or processing, and (3) an item that has passed through a chain of commercial distribution before ultimate use or consumption. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

defective product. A product that is unreasonably dangerous for normal use, as when it is not fit for its intended purpose, inadequate instructions are provided for its use, or it is inherently dangerous in its design or manufacture.

product defect. See DEFECT.

product-extension merger. See MERGER.

production burden. See BURDEN OF PRODUCTION.

production for commerce. The production of goods that an employer intends for interstate commerce. • This is one criterion by which an employer may be subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

production of suit. Common-law pleading. The plaintiff's burden to produce evidence to confirm the allegations made in the declaration.

productio sectae (pra-die-ksee-oh sek-tee). [Latin] See PRODUCTION OF SUIT.

product liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

product market. See MARKET.

products liability, n. 1. A manufacturer's or seller's tort liability for any damages or injuries suffered by a buyer, user, or bystander as a result of a defective product. • Products liability can be based on a theory of negligence, strict liability, or breach of warranty. 2. The legal theory by which liability is imposed on the manufacturer or seller of a defective product. 3. The field of law dealing with this theory. — Also termed product liability; (specif.) manufacturer's liability. — product-liability, adj. See LIABILITY.

"The law of products liability is that body of common and statutory law permitting money reparation for substandard conduct of others resulting in product-related injury to the injured party's person or property. Resistance to the description of products liability as a doctrine having receded, there is today a guiding tenet in the law of product-related injury that is the distillate of seventy years of decisional law. The birth of the doctrine can be dated at 1916, the publication of the immensely influen-strict products liability. Products liability arising when the buyer proves that the goods were unreasonably dangerous and that (1) the supplier was in the business of selling goods, (2) the goods were defective when they were in the seller’s hands, (3) the defect caused the plaintiff’s injury, and (4) the product was expected to and did reach the consumer without substantial change in condition.

prognosis (prog-noh-sis). 1. The process of forecasting the probable outcome of a present medical condition (such as a disease). 2. The forecast of such an outcome. Cf. DIAGNOSIS.

program trading. A form of computerized securities trading that usu. involves buying or selling large amounts of stocks while simultaneously selling or buying index futures in offsetting amounts.

progressive tax. See TAX.

pro hac vice (proh hak vee-chay or hak vt-see also hak vees). [Latin] For this occasion or particular purpose. • The phrase usu. refers to a lawyer who has not been admitted to practice in a particular jurisdiction but who is admitted there temporarily for the purpose of conducting a particular case. — Abbr. p.h.v. See admission pro hac vice pro hac vice under ADMISSION (2). For owner pro hac vice, see demise charter under CHARTER (4).

prohibit, vb. 1. To forbid by law. 2. To prevent or hinder.

prohibited degree. See DEGREE.

prohibition. 1. A law or order that forbids a certain action. 2. An extraordinary writ issued by an appellate court to prevent a lower court from exceeding its jurisdiction or to prevent a nonjudicial officer or entity from exercising a power. — Also termed (in sense 2) writ of prohibition.

"Prohibition is a kind of common-law injunction to prevent an unlawful assumption of jurisdiction .... It is a common-law injunction against governmental usurpation, as where one is called coram non judice (before a judge unauthorized to take cognizance of the affair), to answer in a tribunal that has no legal cognizance of the cause. It arrests the proceedings of any tribunal, board, or person exercising judicial functions in a manner or by means not within its jurisdiction or discretion." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 341, at 542 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

3. (cap.) The period from 1920 to 1933, when the manufacture, transport, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the United States was forbidden by the 18th Amendment to the Constitution. • The 18th Amendment was repealed by the 21st Amendment.

prohibitory injunction. See INJUNCTION.

prohibitory interdict. See INTERDICT (1).

pro illa vice (proh il-lah see). [Latin] For that turn.

pro indiviso (proh in-da-vi-zoh), adj. [Latin "as undivided"] (Of property) owned or possessed by several persons at the same time, without partition.

pro interesse suo (proh in-tar-es-ee soo s(y)loo-oh). [Latin] According to his interest; to the extent of his interest. • A third party, for example, may be allowed to intervene pro interesse suo.

project financing. See FINANCING.

projectio (pra-jek-shee-oh). [Latin] Alluvion created by the sea. See ALLUVION.

projector. See PROMOTER.

projet (proh-zhay). [French] A draft of a proposed measure, treaty, or convention.

pro legato (proh la-gay-toh). [Latin] As a legacy; by the title of a legacy. • This is a ground of usucaption. See USUCAPION.

prolocutor (proh-lok-ya-tar). 1. Eccles. law. The president or chair of a convocation. 2. Hist. The speaker of the British House of Lords. • This office now belongs to the Lord Chancellor.

pro majori cautela (proh ma-jor-ee kaw-tee-la). [Latin] For greater caution; by way of additional security. • This phrase usu. applies to an act done or to a clause put in an instrument as a precaution.

promise, n. 1. The manifestation of an intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified manner, conveyed in such a way that another is justified in understanding that a commitment has been made; a person’s assurance that the person will or will not do something. • A binding promise — one that the law will enforce — is the essence of a contract.

"By common usage, a promise is an expression leading another person justifiably to expect certain conduct on the part of the promisor. Such an expression is a promise, whether enforceable at law or not. It is indeed an essential element in every contract. Society does not guarantee the fulfillment of all expectations so induced." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 6 n.3 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"[Promise] means not only the physical manifestations of assurance by words or conduct, but also the moral duty to make good the assurance by performance. If by reason of other operative facts the promise is recognized as creating a legal duty, the promise is a contract." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1A, at 4 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

"It is well to make clear two points at the outset . . . . The first is that I do not believe that all promises are morally binding; accordingly, I use the term ‘promise’ without prejudging the question whether the promise creates an obligation. The second is that, where a promise does create an obligation, the reason for that may depend upon whether the promise was explicit or implied. There is thus, in my view, a fundamental distinction between explicit and implied promises, and when I use the word ‘promise’ without qualification, I normally mean an explicit promise." P.S. Atiyah, Promises, Morals, and Law 8 (1981).

2. The words in a promissory note expressing the maker’s intention to pay a debt. • A mere written acknowledgment that a debt is due is insufficient to constitute a promise. — promise, ub.

aleatory promise (ay-lee-eh-tor-ee). A promise conditional on the happening of a fortuitous event, or on an event that the parties believe is fortuitous.

alternative promise. A contractual promise to do one of two or more things, any one of which must satisfy the promisee for the promise to qualify as consideration.

"A promise in the alternative may be made because each of the alternative performances is the object of desire to the promisee. Or the promisee may desire one performance only, but the promisor may reserve an alternative which he may deem advantageous. In either type of case the promise is consideration if it cannot be kept without some action or forbearance which would be consideration if it alone were bargained for. But if the promisor has an unfettered choice of alternatives, and one alternative would not have been considered if separately bargained for, the promise in the alternative is not consideration." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 77 cmnt. b (1981).

bare promise. See naked promise.

collateral promise. A promise to guarantee the debt of another, made primarily without benefit to the party making the promise. • Unlike an original promise, a collateral promise must be in writing to be enforceable. See main-purpose rule.

c conditional promise. A promise that is conditioned on the occurrence of an event <she made a conditional promise to sell the gold on April 2 unless the price fell below $300 an ounce before that time>. • A conditional promise is not illusory as long as the condition is not entirely within the promisor’s control.

dependent promise. A promise to be performed by a party only when another obligation has first been performed by another party.

divisible promises. Promises that are capable of being divided into independent parts.

false promise. A promise made with no intention of carrying it out.

fictitious promise. See implied promise.

gratuitous promise. A promise made in exchange for nothing; a promise not supported by consideration. • A gratuitous promise is not ordinarily legally enforceable. — Also termed bare promise; naked promise.

illusory promise. A promise that appears on its face to be so insubstantial as to impose no obligation on the promisor; an expression cloaked in promissory terms but actually containing no commitment by the promisor. • For example, if a guarantor promises to make good on the principal debtor’s obligation “as long as I think it’s in my commercial interests,” the promisor is not really bound.

"An apparent promise which, according to its terms, makes performance optional with the promisor no matter what may happen, or no matter what course of conduct in other respects he may pursue, is in fact no promise. Such an expression is often called an illusory promise." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1A, at 5 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

implied promise. A promise created by law to render a person liable on a contract so as to avoid fraud or unjust enrichment. — Also termed fictitious promise.

"Under some circumstances the promise inferred is called an implied promise and in others it is referred to as a constructive promise. But whichever conclusion is reached, the result is the same. In other words an implied promise and a constructive promise are not treated differently. The theoretical difference between the two is that a promise implied from the conduct of the parties arises by construction of law, only when justice requires it under the circumstances." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4–15, at 234–38 (3d ed. 1987). promise implied in fact. See PROMISE.

promise in consideration of marriage. See PROMISE.

promise in restraint of trade. See PROMISE.

promise not to compete. See noncompetition covenant under COVENANT (1).

promisor (prom-is-or). One who makes a promise; esp., one who undertakes a contractual obligation.

promissory (prom-is-or). [Latin] Civil law. A promisor; specif., a party who undertakes to do a thing in response to the interrogation of the other party (the stipulator).

promissory estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

promissory fraud. See FRAUD.

promissory note. See NOTE (1).

promissory oath. See OATH.

promissory representation. See REPRESENTATION.

promissory warranty. See WARRANTY (3).

promoter. 1. A person who encourages or incites. 2. A founder or organizer of a corporation or business venture; one who takes the entrepreneurial initiative in founding or organizing a business or enterprise. — Formerly also termed projector.

"The complete judicial acceptance of the term 'promoter' is a matter of comparatively recent date. In some of the early cases, persons engaged in the formation of a corporation are spoken of as 'projectors.' Other cases of about the same period, though recognizing the obligations flowing therefrom, do not give any name to the relation in which such persons stand to the contemplated company. The word promoter, while undoubtedly employed in common parlance before that time, does not seem to have been used in any reported decision until after it had been used, and for the purposes of the act defined, in the Joint Stock Companies Act of 1844. . . . [A] person may be said to be a promoter of a corporation if before its organization, he directly or indirectly solicits subscriptions to its stock, or assumes to act in its behalf in the purchase of property, or in the securing of its charter; or otherwise promoting prostitution. See PANDERING.

promulgare (proh-mul-gair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To promulgate; to make (a law) publicly known after its enactment.

promulgate (pro-mul-gayt or prom-ahl-gayt), vb.
1. To declare or announce publicly; to proclaim.
2. To put (a law or decree) into force or effect.

promulgation (prom-ahl-gay-shan or proh-mul-). The official publication of a new law or regulation, by which it is put into effect.

promutuum (proh-mywoo-choo-om). [Latin "as if lent"] Civil law. A quasi-contract in which a person who received money or property in error agrees to return what was received to the person who paid it.

pro non scripto (proh non skrip-toh). [Latin] As not written; as though it had not been written.

pronatory (proh-noh-ta-ree), n. First notary.

pronounce, vb. To announce formally <pronounce judgment>.

pronunciation (pra-nan-see-ay-shan). Archaic. A sentence or decree.

proof, n. 1. The establishment or refutation of an alleged fact by evidence; the persuasive effect of evidence in the mind of a fact-finder. 2. Evidence that determines the judgment of a court. 3. An attested document that constitutes legal evidence.

affirmative proof. Evidence establishing the fact in dispute by a preponderance of the evidence.

conditional proof. A fact that amounts to proof as long as there is no other fact amounting to disproof. — Also termed presumptive proof.

double proof. 1. Bankruptcy. Proof of claims by two or more creditors against the same debt. • This violates the general rule that there can be only one claim with respect to a single debt. 2. Evidence. Corroborating government evidence (usu. by two witnesses) required to sustain certain convictions.

full proof. 1. Civil law. Proof by two witnesses or by public instrument. 2. Evidence that satisfies the minds of the jury of the truth of the fact in dispute beyond a reasonable doubt.

negative proof. Proof that establishes a fact by showing that its opposite is not or cannot be true. Cf. positive proof.

positive proof. Direct or affirmative proof. Cf. negative proof.

preliminary proof. Insurance. The first proof offered of a loss occurring under a policy, usu. sent in to the underwriters with a notification of the claim.

presumptive proof. See conditional proof.

proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Proof that precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support.

proof, burden of. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

proof brief. See BRIEF.

proof of acknowledgment. An authorized officer’s certification — based on a third party’s testimony — that the signature of a person (who usu. does not appear before the notary) is genuine and was freely made. — Also termed certificate of proof.

proof of claim. Bankruptcy. A creditor’s written statement that is submitted to show the basis and amount of the creditor’s claim. Pl. proofs of claim.

informal proof of claim. A proof of claim stating a creditor’s demand for payment and proof of claim

intent to hold the debtor’s bankruptcy estate liable, but that does not comply with the Bankruptcy Code’s form for proofs of claim. A late-filed proof of claim may be given effect if the creditor had timely filed an informal proof of claim.

proof of debt. The establishment by a creditor of a debt in some prescribed manner (as by affidavit) as a first step in recovering the debt from an estate or property; PROOF OF CLAIM.

proof of loss. An insured’s formal statement of loss required by an insurance company before it will determine whether the policy covers the loss.

proof of service. A document filed (as by a sheriff) in court as evidence that process has been successfully served on a party. — Also termed return of service. See SERVICE (1).

proof of will. See PROBATE (1).

propaganda. Int’l law. 1. The systematic dissemination of doctrine, rumor, or selected information to promote or injure a particular doctrine, view, or cause. 2. The ideas or information so disseminated.

“As early as the Middle Ages, both the Church and worldly powers had realised that public opinion was of importance in their struggles with each other. . . . [R]ulers thought it necessary to put their case before public opinion in neutral and hostile countries, though they did their best to prevent any ‘seditious’ material from abroad reaching their own loyal subjects. The position changed with the growth of democracy and of the demand for the popular control of foreign affairs. Then propaganda became an indispensable secondary weapon of power politics both in peace and war.” Georg Schwarzenberger, Power Politics: A Study of International Society 166-67 (2d ed. 1951).

proper, adv. & adj. See PRO PERSONA.

proper, n. See PRO SE.

proper care. See reasonable care under CARE.

proper lookout, n. The duty of a vehicle operator to exercise caution to avoid collisions with pedestrians or other vehicles.

proper party. See PARTY (2).

pro persona (proh par-soh-na), adv. & adj. [Latin] For one’s own person; on one’s own behalf . — Sometimes shortened to pro per. See PRO SE.

property. 1. The right to possess, use, and enjoy a determinate thing (either a tract of land or a chattel); the right of ownership <the institution of private property is protected from undue governmental interference>. 2. Any external thing over which the rights of possession, use, and enjoyment are exercised <the airport is city property>.

“In its widest sense, property includes all a person’s legal rights, of whatever description. A man’s property is all that is his in law. This usage, however, is obsolete at the present day, though it is common enough in the older books. . . . In a second and narrower sense, property includes not all a person’s rights, but only his proprietary as opposed to his personal rights. The former constitute his estate or property, while the latter constitute his status or personal condition. In this sense a man’s land, chattels, shares, and the debts due to him are his property, but not his life or liberty or reputation. . . . In a third application, which is that adopted [here], the term includes not even all proprietary rights, but only those which are both proprietary and in rem. The law of property is the law of proprietary rights in rem, the law of proprietary rights in personam being distinguished from it as the law of obligations. According to this usage a freehold or leasehold estate in land, or a patent or copyright, is property; but a debt or the benefit of a contract is not. . . . Finally, in the narrowest use of the term, it includes nothing more than corporeal property — that is to say, the right of ownership in a material object, or that object itself.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 423–24 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947). abandoned property. Property that the owner voluntarily surrenders, relinquishes, or disclaims. Cf. lost property; mislaid property.

absolute property. Property that one has full and complete title to and control over.

common property. 1. Property that is held jointly by two or more persons. 2. See common area.

community property. See community property.

corporeal property. 1. The right of ownership in material things. 2. Property that can be perceived, as opposed to incorporeal property; tangible property.

distressed property. Property that must be sold because of mortgage foreclosure or because it is part of an insolvent estate.

exempt property. See exempt property.

general property. Property belonging to a general owner. See general owner under owner.

income property. Property that produces income, such as rental property.

incorporeal property. 1. An in rem proprietary right that is not classified as corporeal property. • Incorporeal property is traditionally broken down into two classes: (1) jura in re aliena (encumbrances), whether over material or immaterial things, examples being leases, mortgages, and servitudes; and (2) jura in re propria (full ownership over an immaterial thing), examples being patents, copyrights, and trademarks. 2. A legal right in property having no physical existence. • Patent rights, for example, are incorporeal property. — Also termed incorporeal chattel; incorporeal thing.

intangible property. Property that lacks a physical existence. • Examples include bank accounts, stock options, and business goodwill. Cf. tangible property.

intellectual property. See intellectual property.

literary property. See literary property.

lost property. Property that the owner no longer possesses because of accident, negligence, or carelessness, and that cannot be located by an ordinary, diligent search. Cf. abandoned property; mislaid property.

marital property. Property that is acquired from the time when a marriage begins until one spouse files for divorce (assuming that a divorce decree actually results). • In equitable-distribution states, the phrase marital property is the rough equivalent of community property. See community property; equitable distribution.

maternal property. Property that comes from the mother of a party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock.

mislaid property. Property that has been voluntarily relinquished by the owner with an intent to recover it later — but that cannot now be found. Cf. abandoned property; lost property.

"A distinction is drawn between lost property and mislaid property. An article is 'mislaid' if it is intentionally put in a certain place for a temporary purpose and then inadvertently left there when the owner goes away. A typical case is the package left on the patron's table in a bank lobby by a depositor who put the package there for a moment while he wrote a check and then departed without remembering to take it with him. There is always a 'clue' to the ownership of property which is obviously mislaid rather than lost, because of the strong probability that the owner will know where to return for his chattel when he realizes he has gone away without it." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 310–11 (3d ed. 1982).

mixed property. Property with characteristics of both real property and personal property — such as heirlooms and fixtures.

movable property. See movable.

neutral property. See neutral property.

paternal property. Property that comes from the father of a party, and other ascendants of the paternal stock.

personal property. 1. Any movable or intangible thing that is subject to ownership and not classified as real property. — Also termed personalty; personal estate; movable estate; (in plural) things personal. Cf. real property. 2. Property not used in a taxpayer's trade or business or held for income production or collection.

private property. Property — protected from public appropriation — over which the owner has exclusive and absolute rights.

public property. State- or community-owned property not restricted to any one individual's use or possession.

qualified property. A temporary or special interest in a thing (such as a right to possess it), subject to being totally extinguished by the occurrence of a specified contingency over which the qualified owner has no control.

qualified-terminable-interest property. Property that passes by a QTIP trust from a deceased spouse to the surviving spouse and that (if the executor so elects) qualifies for the marital deduction provided that the spouse is entitled to receive income in payments made at least annually for life and that no one has the power to appoint the property to anyone other than the surviving spouse. • This property is included in the surviving spouse’s estate at death, where it is subject to the federal estate tax. See QTIP trust under TRUST.

real property. Land and anything growing on, attached to, or erected on it, excluding anything that may be severed without injury to the land. • Real property can be either corporeal (soil and buildings) or incorporeal (easements). — Also termed realty; real estate. Cf. personal property.

"Historically, the line between real and personal property stems from the types of assets administered on death respectively, in the king’s and in the church’s courts. The king’s courts, concerned with the preservation of the feudal structure, dealt with fees simple, fees tail and life estates. Estates for years, gradually evolving out of contracts made by feudally unimportant persons, clearly became interests in land but never fully attained the historical dignity of being ‘real property.’ The early economic unimportance of money, goods and things other than land permitted the church courts to take over the handling of all such assets on the death of the owner. When the development of trade and of capitalism caused assets of these types to assume great, and sometimes paramount, importance we found ourselves with the two important categories of property, namely ‘real’ and ‘personal’ property, each with its set of rules evolved from a different matrix. The pressure of modern society has been strongly for assimilation and the resultant elimination of this line, but this movement is far from complete attainment of its goal.” 1 Richard B. Powell, Powell on Real Property § 5.04, at 5-7 to 5-8 (Patrick J. Rohan ed., rev. ed. 1998).

scheduled property. Insurance. Property itemized on a list (usu. attached to an insurance policy) that records property values, which provide the basis for insurance payments in the event of a loss under an insurance policy.

separate property. See SEPARATE PROPERTY.

special property. Property that the holder has only a qualified, temporary, or limited interest in, such as (from a bailee’s standpoint) bailed property.

tangible personal property. Corporeal personal property of any kind; personal property that can be seen, weighed, measured, felt, or touched, or is in any way perceptible to the senses.

tangible property. Property that has physical form and characteristics. Cf. intangible property.

property, law of. See LAW OF PROPERTY.

propter impotensiam (proh-tar im-pa-ten-shih-em). [Latin] On account of helplessness. • This was formerly given as a ground for gaining a property interest in a wild animal, based on the animal’s inability to escape (as where, for example, a young bird could not yet fly away).

propter privilegium (proh-tar priv-a-leh-jeem). [Latin] On the account of privilege. • This describes a way of acquiring a property interest in a wild animal, based on the claimant’s exclusive right to hunt in a particular park or preserve.

pro quer. abbr. PRO QUERENTE.

pro rata (proh ray-ta or rah-ta or ra-ta), adv. Proportionately; according to an exact rate, measure, or interest <the liability will be assessed pro rata between the defendants>. — pro rata, adj. See ratable.

pro rata clause. An insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the “other insurance” section of the policy — that limits the insurer’s liability to payment of the portion of the loss that the face amount of the policy bears to the total insurance available on the risk. — Also termed pro rata distribution clause. Cf. escape clause; excess clause.

prorate (proh-rayt or proh-rayt), vb. To divide, assess, or distribute proportionately <prorate taxes between the buyer and the seller>. — proration, n.

pro re nata (proh ree nay-ta). [Latin “in the light of what has arisen”] A law or course of action adopted in response to a pressing exigency, rather than in conformity with established precedent.

“So far as may be, the state leaves the rule of right to be declared and constituted by the agreement of those concerned with it. So far as possible, it contented itself with executing the rules which its subjects have made for themselves. And in so doing it acts wisely. For, in the first place, the administration of justice is enabled in this manner to escape in a degree not otherwise attainable the disadvantages inherent in the recognition of rigid principles of law. Such principles we must have; but if they are established pro re nata by the parties themselves, they will possess a measure of adaptability to individual cases which is unattainable by the more general legislation of the state itself.” John Salmon, Jurisprudence 352 (Glauville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

prorogation (proh-ra-gay-shan). The act of putting off to another day; esp., the discontinuance of a legislative session until its next term.

proscription, n. 1. The act of prohibiting; the state of being prohibited. 2. A prohibition or restriction. — proscriptive, adj. Cf. prescription.

pro se (proh say or see), adv. & adj. [Latin] For oneself; on one’s own behalf; without a lawyer <the defendant proceeded pro se> . — Also termed pro persona; in propria persona.
pro se, n. One who represents oneself in a court proceeding without the assistance of a lawyer <the third case on the court's docket involving a pro se>. — Also termed pro per.

prosecute, vb. 1. To commence and carry out a legal action <because the plaintiff failed to prosecute its contractual claims, the court dismissed the suit>. 2. To institute and pursue a criminal action against (a person) <the notorious felon has been prosecuted in seven states>. 3. To engage in; carry on <the company prosecuted its business for 12 years before going bankrupt>. — prosecutory, adj.

prosecuting attorney. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

prosecution. 1. The commencement and carrying out of any action or scheme <the prosecution of a long, bloody war>. 2. A criminal proceeding in which an accused person is tried <the conspiracy trial involved the prosecution of seven defendants>. — Also termed criminal prosecution.

sham prosecution. A prosecution that seeks to circumvent a defendant’s double jeopardy protection by appearing to be prosecuted by another sovereignty, when it is in fact controlled by the sovereignty that already prosecuted the defendant for the same crime. • A sham prosecution is, in essence, a misuse of the dual-sovereignty rule. Under that rule, a defendant’s protection against double jeopardy does not provide protection against a prosecution by a different sovereignty. For example, if the defendant was first tried in federal court and acquitted, that fact would not forbid the state authorities from prosecuting the defendant in state court. But a sham prosecution — for example, a later state-court prosecution that is completely dominated or manipulated by the federal authorities that already prosecuted the defendant, so that the state-court proceeding is merely a tool of the federal authorities — will not withstand a double-jeopardy challenge. See DUAL-SOVEREIGNTY DOCTRINE.

3. The government attorneys who initiate and maintain a criminal action against an accused defendant <the prosecution rests>.

prosecution history. Patents. The complete record of proceedings in the Patent and Trademark Office from the initial application to the issued patent. — Also termed file wrapper.

prosecution-history estoppel. Patents. The doctrine preventing a patent holder from invoking the doctrine of equivalents if the holder, during the application process, surrendered certain claims or interpretations of the invention. — Also termed file-wrapper estoppel. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

prosecutor, n. 1. A legal officer who represents the government in criminal proceedings. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY; UNITED STATES ATTORNEY; ATTORNEY GENERAL.

public prosecutor. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

special prosecutor. A lawyer appointed to investigate and, if justified, seek indictments in a particular case. See independent counsel under COUNSEL.

2. A private person who institutes and carries on a legal action, esp. a criminal action. — Also termed (in sense 2) private prosecutor. — prosecutorial, adj.

prosecutorial discretion. See DISCRETION.

prosecutorial misconduct. A prosecutor’s improper or illegal act (or failure to act), esp. involving an attempt to persuade the jury to wrongly convict a defendant or assess an unjustified punishment. • If prosecutorial misconduct results in a mistrial, a later prosecution may be barred under the Double Jeopardy Clause.

prosequi (prə-skwər). vb. [Latin] To follow up or pursue; to sue or prosecute. See NOLLE PROSEQUI.

prosequitur (pra-sek-wa-tar or proh-). [Latin] He follows or pursues; he prosecutes.

prosocer (proh-so-sar). [Latin] Civil law. A father-in-law’s father; a spouse’s grandfather.

prosocerus (pro-sos-ə-rəs). [Latin] Civil law. A wife’s or husband’s grandmother.

pro socio (proh soh-shoo-oh). [Latin] As a partner. • This was the name of an action on behalf of a partner.

pro solido (proh sol-ə-doh). [Latin] For the whole; without division.

prospectant evidence. See EVIDENCE. prospective

prospective, adj. 1. Effective or operative in the future <prospective application of the new statute>. Cf. RETROACTIVE. 2. Anticipated or expected; likely to come about <prospective clients>.

prospective damages. See DAMAGES.

prospective heir. See HEIR.

prospective nuisance. See anticipatory nuisance under NUISANCE.

prospective statute. See STATUTE.

prospective waiver. See WAIVER (1).

prospectus (pro-spek-tas). A printed document that describes the main features of an enterprise (esp. a corporation’s business) and that is distributed to prospective buyers or investors; esp., a written description of a securities offering. • Under SEC regulations, a publicly traded corporation must provide a prospectus before offering to sell stock in the corporation. Pl. prospectuses. See REGISTRATION STATEMENT. Cf. TOMBSTONE.

newspaper prospectus. A summary prospectus that the SEC allows to be disseminated through advertisements in newspapers, magazines, or other periodicals sent through the mails as second-class matter (though not distributed by the advertiser), when the securities involved are issued by a foreign national government with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations.

preliminary prospectus. A prospectus for a stock issue that has been filed but not yet approved by the SEC. • The SEC requires such a prospectus to contain a notice — printed in distinctive red lettering — that the document is not complete or final. That notice, which is usu. stamped or printed in red ink, typically reads as follows: “The information here given is subject to completion or amendment. A registration statement relating to these securities has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. These securities cannot be sold — and offers to buy cannot be accepted — until the registration statement becomes effective. This prospectus does not constitute an offer to buy. And these securities cannot be sold in any state where the offer, solicitation, or sale would be unlawful before registration or qualification under the securities laws of that state.” — Also termed red-herring prospectus; red herring.

prostitution, n. 1. The act or practice of engaging in sexual activity for money or its equivalent; commercialized sex.

"Prostitution is not itself a crime in England or Scotland, although certain activities of prostitutes and those who profit from prostitution are prohibited, such as soliciting in a public place, procuring, letting premises for the purpose of prostitution and so forth. On the other hand, prostitution was, at least at one time, prohibited in all American jurisdictions." Reilin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 470 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act of debasing. — prostitute, vb. — prostitute, n.

pro tanto (proh tan-toh), adv. & adj. [Latin] To that extent; for so much; as far as it goes <the debt is pro tanto discharged> .

protected activity. Conduct that is permitted or encouraged by a statute or constitutional provision, and for which the actor may not legally be retaliated against. • For example, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act prohibits an employer from retaliating against an employee who opposes a discriminatory employment practice or helps in investigating an allegedly discriminatory employment practice. An employee who is retaliated against for engaging in one of those activities has a claim against the employer. 42 USC § 2000e-3(a).

protected person. See PERSON.

protecting power. Int’l law. A country responsible for protecting another country’s citizens during a conflict or a suspension of diplomatic ties between the citizens’ country and a third party. • After a protecting power is accepted by both belligerents, it works to ensure the proper treatment of nationals who are in a belligerent’s territory, esp. prisoners of war. If the parties cannot agree on a protecting power, the Red Cross is often appointed to this position.

protectionism. The protection of domestic businesses and industries against foreign competition by imposing high tariffs and restricting imports.
protection money. 1. A bribe paid to an officer as an inducement not to interfere with the criminal activities of the briber. • Examples include payments to an officer in exchange for the officer’s releasing an arrestee, removing records of traffic violations from a court’s files, and refraining from making a proper arrest. 2. Money extorted from a business owner by one who promises to “protect” the business premises, with the implied threat that if the owner does not pay, the person requesting the payment will harm the owner or damage the premises.

protection order. See RESTRAINING ORDER (1).

protective committee. A group of security holders or preferred stockholders appointed to protect the interests of their group when the corporation is liquidated or reorganized.

protective custody. See CUSTODY (1).

protective order. 1. A court order prohibiting or restricting a party from engaging in a legal procedure (esp. discovery) that unduly annoys or burdens the opposing party or a third-party witness. 2. RESTRAINING ORDER (1).

protective search. See SEARCH.

protective sweep. A police officer’s quick and limited search — conducted after the officer has lawfully entered the premises — based on a reasonable belief that such a search is necessary to protect the officer or others from harm.

protective tariff. See TARIFF (2).

protective trust. See TRUST.

protectorate (pra-tek-to-rat). 1. Int’l law. The relationship between a weaker nation and a stronger one when the weaker nation has transferred the management of its more important international affairs to the stronger nation. 2. Int’l law. The weaker or dependent nation within such a relationship. 3. (usu. cap.) The period in British history — from 1653 to 1659 — during which Oliver Cromwell and Richard Cromwell governed. 4. The British government in the period from 1653 to 1659.

pro tem. abbr. PRO TEMPOREM.

pro tempore (proh tem-pa-ree), adv. & adj. [Latin] For the time being; appointed to occupy a position temporarily .— Abbr. pro tem.

protest, n. 1. A formal statement or action expressing dissent or disapproval. 2. A notary public’s written statement that, upon presentation, a negotiable instrument was neither paid nor accepted. — Also termed initial protest; noting protest. Cf. NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

“Noting or initial protest is a memorandum made on [a dishonored] instrument, with the notary’s initials, date, and the amount of noting charges, together with a statement of the cause of dishonor, such as ‘no effects,’ ‘not advice,’ or ‘no account.’ This is done to charge the memory of the notary, and should be done on the day of dishonor.” Frederick M. Hinch, John’s American Notary and Commission of Deeds Manual § 442, at 281 (3d ed. 1922).

3. A formal statement, usu. in writing, disputing a debt’s legality or validity but agreeing to make payment while reserving the right to recover the amount at a later time. • The disputed debt is described as under protest. 4. Int’l law. A formal communication from one subject of international law to another objecting to conduct or a claim by the latter as violating international law. See SUBJECT OF INTERNATIONAL LAW. — protest, vb.

protestando (prob-to-stan-doh). [Law Latin] Protesting. • This emphatic word was used in a protestation to allege or deny something in an oblique manner.

protestation (prot-a-sta-shun). Common-law pleading. A declaration by which a party makes an oblique allegation or denial of some fact, claiming that it does or does not exist or is or is not legally sufficient, while not directly affirming or denying the fact.

“The practice of protestation of facts not denied arose where the pleader, wishing to avail himself of the right to contest in a future action some traversable fact in the pending action, passes it by without traverse, but at the same time makes a declaration collateral or incidental to his main pleading, imparting that the fact so passed over is untrue. The necessity for this arose from the rule that pleadings must not be double, and that every pleading is taken to admit such matters as it does not traverse. Such being its only purpose, it is wholly without effect in the action in which it occurs . . . .” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 207, at 358 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

protest certificate. A notarial certificate declaring (1) that a holder in due course has recruited the notary public to present a previously refused or dishonored negotiable instrument, (2) that the notary has presented the instrument to the person responsible for payment or acceptance (the drawee), (3) that the instrument was presented at a given time and place, and (4) that the drawee refused or dishonored the instrument. In former practice, the notary would issue a protest certificate, which could then be presented to the drawee and any other liable parties as notice that the holder could seek damages for the dishonored negotiable instrument. — Also termed notarial protest certificate. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

protest fee. A fee charged by a bank or other financial institution when an item (such as a check) is presented but cannot be collected.

prothonotary (pro-thon-a-ter-ee or proh-tha-noh-ta-ree), n. A chief clerk in certain courts of law. — Also termed protonotary. — prothonotarial, adj.

protocol. 1. A summary of a document or treaty. 2. A treaty amending and supplementing another treaty. 3. The formal record of the proceedings of a conference or congress. — Also termed procès-verbal. 4. The minutes of a meeting, usu. initiated by all participants after confirming accuracy. 5. The rules of diplomatic etiquette; the practices that nations observe in the course of their contacts with one another.

protonotary. See PROTHONOTARY.

protutor (proh-t[y]oo-tar). Civil law. A person who, though not legally appointed as a guardian, administers another’s affairs.

provat patet per recordum (proh-at pay-tet par ri-kor-dam). [Latin] As appears by the record.

provable, adj. Capable of being proved.

prove, vb. To establish or make certain; to establish the truth of (a fact or hypothesis) by satisfactory evidence.

prover. Hist. A person charged with a felony who attempts to obtain a pardon by confessing and naming accomplices.

prove up, vb. To present or complete the proof of (something) <deciding not to put a doctor on the stand, the plaintiff attempted to prove up his damages with medical records only>.

prove-up, n. The establishment of a prima facie claim. • A prove-up is necessary when a factual assertion is unopposed because even without opposition, the claim must be supported by evidence.

provided, conj. On the condition or understanding (that) <we will sign the contract provided that you agree to the following conditions>.

province, n. 1. An administrative district into which a country has been divided. 2. A sphere of activity of a profession such as medicine or law.

provincial synod. See SYNOD.

provision. 1. A clause in a statute, contract, or other legal instrument. 2. A stipulation made beforehand. See PROVISO.

public agency. See AGENCY (3).

public agent. See AGENT.

publican (pab-li-kan). Hist. A person authorized by license to keep a public house for consumption of alcoholic beverages on or off the premises.

public appointment. See APPOINTMENT (1).

publication, n. 1. Generally, the act of declaring or announcing to the public. 2. Copyright. The distribution of copies of a work to the public. • At common law, publication marked the dividing line between state and federal protection, but the Copyright Act of 1976 superseded most of common-law copyright and thereby diminished the significance of publication.

"The concept of publication was of immense importance under the 1909 Act. It became a legal word of art, denoting a process much more esoteric than is suggested by the lay definition of the term. That it thus evolved was due largely to the American dichotomy between common law and statutory copyright, wherein the act of publication constituted the dividing line between the two systems of protection [state and federal]." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 4.01, at 4–3 (Supp. 1997).

general publication. A distribution of copies not limited to a selected group, whether or not restrictions are placed on the use of the work. • A general publication was generally held to divest common-law rights in a work.

limited publication. A distribution of copies limited to a selected group at a time when copies are not available to persons not included in the group; a publication that communicates the contents of a work to a definitely selected group and for a limited purpose, without the right of diffusion, reproduction, distribution, or sale. — Also termed private publication.

3. Defamation. The communication of defamatory words to someone other than the person defamed.

"Publication means the act of making the defamatory statement known to any person or persons other than the plaintiff himself. It is not necessary that there should be any publication in the popular sense of making the statement public. A private and confidential communication to a single individual is sufficient. Nor need it be published in the sense of being written or printed; for we have seen that actions as well as words may be defamatory. A communication to the person defamed himself, however, is not a sufficient publication on which to found civil proceedings; though it is otherwise in the case of a criminal prosecution, because such a communication may provoke a breach of the peace. Nor does a communiocation between husband and wife amount to publication; domestic intercourse of this kind is exempt from the restrictions of the law of libel and slander. But a statement by the defendant to the wife or husband of the plaintiff is a ground of action." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 154 (17th ed. 1977).

"The publication of a libel might be in the form of a book, pamphlet or newspaper, but nothing of that nature is required. A letter sent to a single individual is sufficient." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 489 (3d ed. 1982).

4. Wills. The formal declaration made by a testator when signing the will that it is the testator's will.

public delict. See DELICT.

public disclosure of private facts. The public revelation of some aspect of a person's private life without a legitimate public purpose. • The disclosure is actionable in tort if the disclosure would be highly objectionable to a reasonable person. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

public document. See DOCUMENT.

public domain. 1. Government-owned land. 2. The realm of publications, inventions, and processes that are not protected by copyright or patent. • Things in the public domain can be appropriated by anyone without liability for infringement.

"[P]ublic domain is the status of an invention, creative work, commercial symbol, or any other creation that is not protected by any form of intellectual property. Public domain is the rule: intellectual property is the exception." 1 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 1.01[2], at 1–3 (3d ed. 1996).

public-duty doctrine. Torts. The rule that a governmental entity (such as a state or municipality) cannot be held liable for an individual plaintiff’s injury resulting from a governmental officer's or employee's breach of a duty owed to the general public rather than to the individual plaintiff. — Also termed public-duty rule. See SPECIAL-DUTY DOCTRINE.

public figure. A person who has achieved fame or notoriety or who has voluntarily become involved in a public controversy. • A public figure (or public official) suing for defamation must prove that the defendant acted with actual malice. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710 (1964). — Also termed public character.

limited-purpose public figure. A person who, having become involved in a particular public issue, has achieved fame or notoriety in relation to that particular issue.

public forum. Constitutional law. Public property where people traditionally gather to express ideas and exchange views. • To be constitutional, the government's regulation of a public forum must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest and

designated public forum. Public property that has not traditionally been open for public assembly and debate but that the government has opened for use by the public as a place for expressive activity, such as a public university facility or a publicly owned theater. • Unlike a traditional public forum, the government does not have to retain the open character of a designated public forum. Also, the subject matter of the expression permitted in a designated public forum may be limited to accord with the character of the forum; content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions are generally permissible. But any prohibition based on the content of the expression must be narrowly drawn to effectuate a compelling state interest, as with a traditional public forum. — Also termed limited public forum; nontraditional public forum.

traditional public forum. Public property that has by long tradition — as opposed to governmental designation — been used by the public for assembly and expression, such as a public street, public sidewalk, or public park. • To be constitutional, the government’s content-neutral restrictions of the time, place, or manner of expression must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, and leave open ample alternative channels of communication. Any government regulation of expression that is based on the content of the expression must meet the even higher constitutional test of being narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest.

public-function doctrine. See PUBLIC-FUNCTION TEST.

public-function rationale. See GOVERNMENTAL-FUNCTION THEORY.

public-function test. In a section 1983 suit, the doctrine that a private person’s actions constitute state action if the private person performs functions that are traditionally reserved to the state. — Also termed public-function doctrine; public-function theory.

public juris (pəb-li-st jōr-əs). [Latin] Of public right .

public interest. 1. The general welfare of the public that warrants recognition and protection. 2. Something in which the public as a whole has a stake; esp., an interest that justifies governmental regulation.

public-interest exception. The principle that an appellate court may consider and decide a moot case — although such decisions are generally prohibited — if (1) the case involves a question of considerable public importance, (2) the question is likely to arise in the future, and (3) the question has evaded appellate review.

public international law. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

public intoxication. See INTOXICATION.

public invitee. See INVITEE.

public land. See LAND.

public law. 1. The body of law dealing with the relations between private individuals and the government, and with the structure and operation of the government itself; constitutional law, criminal law, and administrative law taken together. Cf. PRIVATE LAW (1). 2. A statute affecting the general public. • Federal public laws are first published in Statutes at Large and are eventually collected by subject in the U.S. Code. — Abbr. Pub. L.; P.L. — Also termed public statute (abbr. p.s.); general statute. Cf. general law (1) under LAW. 3. Constitutional law.

public office. A position whose occupant has legal authority to exercise a government's sovereign powers for a fixed period.

public official. A person elected or appointed to carry out some portion of a government's sovereign powers.

public passage. A right held by the public to pass over a body of water, whether the underlying land is publicly or privately owned.

public person. A sovereign government, or a body or person delegated authority under it.

public policy. 1. Broadly, principles and standards regarded by the legislature or by the courts as being of fundamental concern to the state and the whole of society. • Courts sometimes use the term to justify their decisions, as when declaring a contract void because it is “contrary to public policy.” — Also termed policy of the law.

“The policy of the law, or public policy, is a phrase of common use in estimating the validity of contracts. Its history is obscure; it is most likely that agreements which tended to restrain trade or to promote litigation were the first to elicit the principle that the courts would look to the interests of the public in giving efficacy to contracts. Wagers, while they continued to be legal, were a frequent provocative of judicial ingenuity on this point, as is sufficiently shown by the case of Gilbert v. Sykes [16 East 150 (1812)] ... : but it does not seem probable that the doctrine of public policy began in the endeavor to elude their binding force. Whatever may have been its origin, it was applied very frequently, and not always with the happiest results, during the latter part of the eighteenth and the commencement of the nineteenth century. Modern decisions, however, while maintaining the duty of the courts to consider the public advantage, have tended more and more to limit the sphere within which this duty may be exercised.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 286 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. More narrowly, the principle that a person should not be allowed to do anything that would tend to injure the public at large.

public-policy limitation. Tax. A judicially developed principle that a person should not be allowed to deduct expenses related to an activity that is contrary to the public welfare. • This principle is reflected in the Internal Revenue Code's specific disallowance provisions (such as for kickbacks and bribes).

puffer. See BY-BIDDER.

puffing. 1. The expression of an exaggerated opinion — as opposed to a factual representation — with the intent to sell a good or service. • Puffing involves expressing opinions, not asserting something as a fact. Although there is some leeway in puffing goods, a seller may not misrepresent them or say that they have attributes that they do not possess. — Also termed puffery; sales puffery; dealer’s talk.

“‘Dealer’s puffing,’ so long as it remains in the realm of opinion or belief, will not support a conviction of false pretenses however extravagant the statements.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 369 (3d ed. 1982).

2. Secret bidding at an auction by or on behalf of a seller; BY-BIDDING.

PUHCA. abbr. PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY ACT.

punies (pyoo-neez). Slang. Punitive damages. See DAMAGES.

punishable, adj. 1. (Of a person) subject to a punishment <there is no dispute that Jackson remains punishable for these offenses>. 2. (Of a crime or tort) giving rise to a specified punishment . — punishability, n.

punishment, n. A sanction — such as a fine, penalty, confinement, or loss of property, right, or privilege — assessed against a person who has violated the law. — punish, vb. See SENTENCE.

“Punishment in all its forms is a loss of rights or advantages consequent on a breach of law. When it loses this quality it degenerates into an arbitrary act of violence that can produce nothing but bad social effects.” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 575 (2d ed. 1961).

“In the treatment of offenders there is a clear and unmistakable line of division between the function of the judge and that of the penologist. I should modify that: the law is clear only if it is first made clear in what sense the word ‘treatment’ is being used. For in this context the word can be used in two senses, one wide and the other narrow. Let me take the wide meaning first. The object of a sentence is to impose punishment. For ‘punishment’, a word which to many connotes nothing but retribution, the softer word ‘treatment’ is now frequently substituted; this is the wider meaning. The substitution is made, I suppose, partly as a concession to the school which holds that crime is caused by mental sickness, but more justifiably as a reminder that there are other methods of dealing with criminal tendencies besides making the consequences of crime unpleasant.” Patrick Devlin, The Judge 32-33 (1979).

capital punishment. See DEATH PENALTY (1).

corporal punishment. Physical punishment; punishment that is inflicted upon the body (including imprisonment).

cruel and unusual punishment. Punishment that is torturous, degrading, inhuman, grossly disproportionate to the crime in question, or otherwise shocking to the moral sense of the community. • Cruel and unusual punishment is prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

cumulative punishment. Punishment that increases in severity when a person is convicted of the same offense more than once.

deterrent punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to deter others from committing crimes by making an example of the offender so that like-minded people are warned of the consequences of crime.

excessive punishment. Punishment that is not justified by the gravity of the offense or the defendant’s criminal record. See excessive fine (1) under FINE (5).

infamous punishment. Punishment by imprisonment, usu. in a penitentiary. See infamous crime under CRIME.

nonjudicial punishment. Military law. A procedure in which a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice receives official punishment for a minor offense. In the Navy and Coast Guard, nonjudicial punishment is termed captain’s mast; in the Marine Corps, it is termed office hours; and in the Army and Air Force, it is referred to as Article 15. Nonjudicial punishment is not a court-martial.

preventive punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to prevent a repetition of wrongdoing by disabling the offender.

reformatory punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to change the character of the offender.

retributive punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to satisfy the community’s retaliatory sense of indignation that is provoked by injustice.

“The fact that it is natural to hate a criminal does not prove that retributive punishment is justified.” Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 60 (1967).

punitive, adj. Involving or inflicting punishment. Also termed punitory.

punitive articles. Military law. Articles 77–134 in the Uniform Code of Military Justice. These articles list the crimes in the military-justice system.

Any of the following: (1) a person directly or indirectly acting in concert with a distribution participant in connection with the acquisition or distribution of the securities involved; (2) an affiliate who directly or indirectly controls the purchases of those securities by a distribution participant, or whose purchases are controlled by such a participant, or whose purchases are under common control with those of such a participant; (3) an affiliate, who is a broker or a dealer (except a broker-dealer whose business consists solely of effecting transactions in “exempted securities,” as defined in the Exchange Act); (4) an affiliate (other than a broker-dealer) who regularly purchases securities through a broker-dealer, or otherwise, for its own account or for the account of others, or recommends or exercises investment discretion in the purchase or sale of securities (with certain specified exceptions). SEC Rule 10b–18(a)(2) (17 CFR § 240.10b–18(a)(2)).

bona fide purchaser. One who buys something for value without notice of another's claim to the item or of any defects in the seller's title; one who has in good faith paid valuable consideration for property without notice of prior adverse claims. — Abbr. BFP. — Also termed good-faith purchaser; purchaser in good faith; innocent purchaser.

bona fide purchaser for value. One who purchases legal title to real property, without actual or constructive notice of any infirmities, claims, or equities against the title. • Generally, a bona fide purchaser for value is not affected by the transferor's fraud against a third party, and has a superior right to the transferred property as against the transferor's creditor to the extent of the consideration that the purchaser has paid. — Also termed innocent purchaser for value.

good-faith purchaser. See bona fide purchaser.

innocent purchaser. See bona fide purchaser.

innocent purchaser for value. See bona fide purchaser for value.

purchaser for value. A purchaser who pays consideration for the property bought.

purchaser in good faith. See bona fide purchaser.

2. One who acquires real property by means other than descent or inheritance.

first purchaser. An ancestor who first acquired an estate that still belongs to the family.

pure accident. See unavoidable accident under ACCIDENT.

pure annuity. See nonrefund annuity under ANNUITY.

pure-comparative-negligence doctrine. The principle that liability for negligence is apportioned in accordance with the percentage of fault that the fact-finder assigns to each party and that a plaintiff's percentage of fault reduces the amount of recoverable damages but does not bar recovery. Cf. 50–PERCENT RULE. See comparative negligence under NEGLIGENCE; APPORTIONMENT OF LIABILITY.

pure easement. See easement appurtenant under EASEMENT.

pure obligation. See OBLIGATION.

pure plea. See PLEA (3).

pure race statute. See RACE STATUTE.

pure risk. See RISK.

pure speech. See SPEECH.

pure theory. The philosophy of Hans Kelsen, in which he contends that a legal system must be "pure" — that is, self-supporting and not dependent on extralegal values. • Kelsen's theory, set out in such works as General Theory of Law and the State (1945) and The Pure Theory of Law (1934), maintains that laws are norms handed down by the state. Laws are not defined in terms of history, ethics, sociology, or other external factors. Rather, a legal system is an interconnected system of norms, in which coercive techniques are used to secure compliance. The validity of each law, or legal norm, is traced to another legal norm. Ultimately, all laws must find their validity in the society's basic norm (grundnorm), which may be as simple as the concept that the constitution was validly enacted. See basic norm under NORM.

purgation (par-gay-shan). Hist. The act of cleansing or exonerating oneself of a crime or accusation by an oath or ordeal.

canonical purgation. Purgation by 12 oath-helpers in an ecclesiastical court. See COMPURGATION.

vulgar purgation. Purgation by fire, hot irons, battle, or cold water; purgation by means other than by oath-helpers. • Vulgar purgation was so called because at first it was not sanctioned by the church.

purgatory oath. See OATH.

purge, vb. To exonerate (oneself or another) of guilt <purged the defendant of contempt>.

purpart (por-paehr). A share of an estate formerly held in common; a part in a division. — Formerly also termed purparty; perparts.

The reasonable value of services; damages awarded in an amount considered reasonable to compensate a person who has rendered services in a quasi-contractual relationship. 2. A claim or right of action for the reasonable value of services rendered. 3. At common law, a count in an assumpsit action to recover payment for services rendered to another person. • Quantum meruit is still used today as an equitable remedy to provide restitution for unjust enrichment. It is often pleaded as an alternative claim in a breach-of-contract case so that the plaintiff can recover even if the contract is voided. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT.

quantum valebant (kwon-tam va-lee-bant or -bant). [Latin “as much as they were worth”] 1. The reasonable value of goods and materials. 2. At common law, a count in an assumpsit action to recover payment for goods sold and delivered to another. • Quantum valebant — although less common than quantum meruit — is still used today as an equitable remedy to provide restitution for another’s unjust enrichment.

quarantina habenda. See DE QUARANTINA HABENDA.

quarantine. 1. Hist. A period of 40 days, esp. for the isolation and detention of ships containing persons or animals suspected of having or carrying a dangerous communicable disease, in order to prevent the spread of the disease.

“Quarantine . . . . The name is drawn from the fact that the period was formerly commonly 40 Ital. quaranta) days. In 1423 Venice established a lazaretto or quarantine station on an island to check the growth of disease brought in by ships. In the sixteenth century quarantine became widespread and there developed the system of bills of health, certificates that the last port was free from disease; a clean bill entitled a ship to use the port without subjuction to quarantine.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1022 (1980).
2. Hist. A widow’s privilege to remain in her husband’s house for 40 days after his death while her dower is being assigned. • This right was enforced by a writ de quarantina habenda. See de QUARANTINA HABENDA. 3. The isolation of a person or animal afflicted with a communicable disease or the prevention of such a person or animal from coming into a particular area, the purpose being to prevent the spread of disease. • Federal, state, and local authorities are required to cooperate in the enforcement of quarantine laws. 42 USCA § 243(a).

"Power to make quarantine regulations is one of the most frequent powers conferred on boards of health. Such regulations constitute a proper exercise of the police power, provided they are not in conflict with federal regulations on the subject or that legislation by Congress is absent, and that they do not abridge rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment." 39 Am. Jur. 2d Health § 59, at 529-30 (1999).

4. A place where a quarantine is in force. — Also spelled quarentine; quarantene. — quar-antine, vb.

quare (kwair-ee). [Latin] Why; for what reason; on what account. • This was used in various common-law writs, esp. writs in trespass.

quare ejecti infra terminum (kwair-ee i-jeet sit in-fra tar-ma-nam), n. [Law Latin "why he ejected within the term"] Hist. A writ for a lessee who was prematurely ejected, when the ejector was not actually in possession but one claiming under the ejector was.

"For this injury the law has provided him with two remedies . . . the writ of ejectio firmae; . . . and the writ of quare ejecti infra terminum; which lies not against the wrongdoer or ejector himself, but his feoff or other person claiming under him. These are mixed actions, somewhat between real and personal; for therein are two things recovered, as well restitution of the term of years, as damages for the ouster or wrong." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1768).

quare impedit (kwair-ee im-pa-dit). [Latin "why he hinders"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ or action to enforce a patron’s right to present a person to fill a vacant benefice. — Also termed writ of quare impedit. See PRESENTATION; AD-VOWSON.

"The writ of quare impedit commands the disturbers, the bishop, the pseudo-patron, and his clerk, to permit the plaintiff to present a proper person (without specifying the particular clerk) to such a vacant church, which pertains to his patronage; and which the defendants, as he alleges, do obstruct: and unless they so do, then that they appear in court to shew the reason why they hinder him." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 248 (1768).

quare incumbravit (kwair-ee in-kam-bray-vit), n. [Law Latin "why he incumbered"] Hist. A writ or action to compel a bishop to explain why he encumbered the church when, within six months after the vacation of a benefice and after a ne admittas was received, the bishop conferred the benefice on his clerk while two other clerks were contending for the right of presentation in a quare impedit action. • The writ was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act of 1833, ch. 27.

quare intrusit (kwair-ee in-troo-sit), n. [Law Latin "why he thrust in"] Hist. A writ allowing a lord to recover the value of a marriage, when the lord offered a suitable marriage to a ward but the ward rejected it and married someone else. • It was abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act, 1660, ch. 24.

quare non permittit (kwair-ee non par-mit-it), n. [Law Latin "why he did not permit"] Hist. A writ for one who has a right to present to a church, against the proprietor.

quarantene. See QUARANTINE.

quare obstruxit (kwair-ee ob-struk-sit), n. [Law Latin "why he obstructed"] Hist. A writ for one who could not enjoy a privilege to pass through a neighbor’s land because the neighbor had obstructed the path.

quarrel. 1. An altercation or angry dispute; an exchange of recriminations, taunts, threats, or accusations between two persons. 2. Archaic. A complaint; a legal action.

"Quarrels are derived from querendo, and extends not only to actions as well real as personal, but also to the causes of actions and suits: so that by the release of all quarrels, not only actions depending in suit, but causes of action and suit also are released; and quarrels, controversies and debates, are words of one sense, and of one and the same signification, Coke, lib. 8, fol. 153." Termes de la Ley 330 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

quarta divi Pii (kwor-ta di-vi pí-1). [Latin "quarter of the deified Pius"] Roman law. The quarter portion of a testator’s estate required quash (kwa-hash), vb. 1. To annul or make void; to terminate <quash an indictment> <quash proceedings>. 2. To suppress or subdue; to crush out <quash a rebellion>.

quashal (kwa-hsh-al), n. The act of quashing something <quashal of the subpoena>.

quasi (kway-si or kwayzl also kwa-h-zee). [Latin “as if”] Seemingly but not actually; in some sense; resembling; nearly.

“QUASI. A Latin word frequently used in the civil law, and often prefixed to English words. It is not a very definite word. It marks the resemblance, and supposes a little difference, between two objects, and in legal phraseology the term is used to indicate that one subject resembles another, with which it is compared, in certain characteristics, but that there are also intrinsic and material differences between them. It negatives the idea of identity, but implies a strong superficial analogy, and points out that the conceptions are sufficiently similar for one to be classed as the equal of the other.” 74 C.J.S. Quasi, at 2 (1951).

quasi-admission. See ADMISSION (1).

quasi-affinity. See AFFINITY.

quasi-autonomous nongovernmental organization. A semipublic administrative body (esp. in the United Kingdom) having some members appointed and financed by, but not answerable to, the government, such as a tourist authority, a university-grants commission, a price-and-wage commission, a prison or parole board, or a medical-health advisory panel. ● This term is more commonly written as an acronym, quango (kwang-goh), without capital letters.

quasi in rem. See IN REM.

quasi-in-rem jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

quasi-insurer. See INSURER.

quasi-judicial, adj. Of, relating to, or involving an executive or administrative official’s adjudicative acts. • Quasi-judicial acts, which are valid if there is no abuse of discretion, often determine the fundamental rights of citizens. They are subject to review by courts.

"Quasi-judicial is a term that is... not easily definable. In the United States, the phrase often covers judicial decisions taken by an administrative agency — the test is the nature of the tribunal rather than what it is doing. In England quasi-judicial belongs to the administrative category and is used to cover situations where the administrator is bound by the law to observe certain forms and possibly hold a public hearing but where he is a free agent in reaching the final decision. If the rules are broken, the determination may be set aside, but it is not sufficient to show that the administration is biased in favour of a certain policy, or that the evidence points to a different conclusion." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 356 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

quasi-judicial act. 1. A judicial act performed by an official who is not a judge. 2. An act performed by a judge who is not acting entirely in a judicial capacity. See JUDICIAL ACT.

quasi-judicial power. See POWER.

quasi traditio (kwah-toor-trah-dee-toh). [Latin "as if transfer"] Roman law. A party’s acquisition of a servitude by using it with the informal permission or acquiescence of the owner.

"According to the civil law again a servitude — that is, a limited right of user in respect of a thing not one’s own, e.g. a usufruct or a right of way — could only be created by means of certain definite legal forms. The praetorian law, on the other hand, allowed a servitude to be created by a so-called quasi traditio servitutis; that is, it was satisfied if one party gave the other, without any form, permission to exercise the right of user in question." Rudolph Sohn, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 82 (James Crawford Leslie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

quasi-trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

quasi-usufruct. See USUFRUCT.

quatuor pedibus currit (kwah-toor-ped-eh-bus koor-it). [Law Latin] It runs upon four feet; it runs upon all fours. • The term commonly described a precedent that was extremely close to a point being decided. See ON ALL FOURS.

qu. cl. fr. abbr. QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

queen. 1. A woman who possesses, in her own right, the sovereignty and royal power in a monarchy. • Among the more famous English queens are Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth I, Queen Victoria, and Queen Elizabeth II. — Also termed queen regnant. 2. The wife of a reigning king. • She has some royal prerogatives (such as having her own officers), but is in many ways legally no different from the rest of the king’s subjects. — Also termed queen consort. 3. A queen who rules in place of the actual sovereign (e.g., if the sovereign is a child). — Also termed queen regent. 4. DOWAGER-QUEEN.

queen dowager. See DOWAGER-QUEEN.

queen mother. See DOWAGER-QUEEN.

Queen's Bench. Historically, the highest common-law court in England, presided over by the reigning monarch. • The jurisdiction of this court now lies with the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice; when a king begins to reign, the name automatically changes to King's Bench. — Abbr. Q.B. — Also termed Court of Queen's Bench. Cf. KING'S BENCH.

Queen's Bench Division. The English court, formerly known as the Queen's Bench or King's Bench, that presides over tort and contract actions, applications for judicial review, and some magistrate-court appeals. — Abbr. Q.B.D.

Queen's Counsel. In the United Kingdom, Canada, and territories that have retained the rank, an elite, senior-level barrister or advocate originally appointed to serve as counsel to the queen. — Also termed senior counsel. — Abbr. Q.C. Cf. KING'S COUNSEL.

Queen's evidence. See EVIDENCE.

Queen's prison. A prison established in 1842 in Southwark, to be used for debtors and criminals confined under authority of the superior courts at Westminster, the highest court of admiralty, and the bankruptcy laws. • It replaced the Queen's Bench Prison, Fleet Prison, and Marshalsea Prison but was closed in 1862.

Queen's proctor. A solicitor that represents the Crown in domestic-relations, probate, and admiralty cases. • For example, in a suit for divorce or nullity of marriage, the Queen's proctor might intervene to prove collusion between the parties. — Also termed (when a king reigns) King's proctor.

quem redditum reddit (kwem red-a-tam red-it), n. [Law Latin “which return he made”] Hist. A writ for a grantee of a rent (not a rent service) to force the tenant to consent to the transfer.

querela coram rege a concilio discutienda et terminanda (kwre-ree-la kor-am ree-jee ay kon-sil-ee-oh dis-ka-shen-da et tar-ma-nan-da), n. [Law Latin “a dispute to be discussed and resolved by the council in front of the king”] Hist. A writ ordering someone to appear before the king to answer to a trespass.

querela inofficiosi testamenti (kwre-ree-la in-a-fish-ee-oh-si tes-to-men-ti), n. [Latin “a dispute of an undutiful will”] Roman law. An action allowing a descendant, ascendant, or sibling who was unjustly disinherited or passed over by a parent’s will to have the will set aside as undutifully made.

“By far the most important is due to the querela inofficiosi testamenti. By this procedure, though the forms had been complied with, near relatives with obvious claims (the classes of those entitled having been gradually widened) might attack the will as contrary to natural duty (inofficiosum) and get it set aside.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 199 (2d ed. 1953).

querns (kweer-enz), n. [Latin fr. queri “to complain”] Hist. A plaintiff; the complaining party.

question-and-answer. 1. The portion of a deposition or trial transcript in which evidence is developed through a series of questions asked by the lawyer and answered by the witness. — Abbr. Q-and-A. 2. The method for developing evidence during a deposition or at trial, requiring the witness to answer the examining lawyer's questions, without offering unsolicited information. 3. The method of instruction used in many law-school classes, in which the professor asks questions of one or more students and then follows up each answer with another question. — Also termed Socratic method. See SOC-RATIC METHOD.

question of fact. 1. An issue that has not been predetermined and authoritatively answered by the law. • An example is whether a particular criminal defendant is guilty of an offense or whether a contractor has delayed unreasonably in constructing a building. 2. An issue that does not involve what the law is on a given point. 3. A disputed issue to be resolved by the jury in a jury trial or by the judge in a bench trial. — Also termed fact question. See FACT-FINDER. 4. An issue capable of being answered by way of demonstration, as opposed to a question of unverifiable opinion.

question of law. 1. An issue to be decided by the judge, concerning the application or interpretation of the law . 2. A question that the law itself has authoritatively answered, so that the court may not answer it as a matter of discretion <under the sentencing guidelines, the punishment for a three-time offender is a question of law>. 3. An issue about what the law is on a particular point; an issue in which parties argue about, and the court must decide, what the true rule of law is <both parties appealed on the question of law>. 4. An issue that, although it may turn on a factual point, is reserved for the court and excluded from the jury; an issue that is exclusively within the province of the judge and not the jury <whether a contractual ambiguity exists is a question of law>. — Also termed legal question; law question.

questman. Hist. 1. An instigator of a lawsuit or prosecution. 2. A person who was chosen to inquire into abuses, esp. those relating to weights and measures. 3. A churchwarden; sidesman. — Also termed questmonger.

questus est nobis (kwes-tas est noh-bis), n. [Law Latin “hath complained to us”] Hist. By 15 Edw., a writ against someone who continued a nuisance that existed before inheritance or purchase. • The former law provided recovery only against the party who had first caused the nuisance.

quia (kwi-a or kwee-a). [Latin] Hist. Because; whereas. • This term was used to point out the consideration in a conveyance.

Quia Emptores (kwi-a or kwee-a emp-tor-eez). [Latin “since purchasers”] Hist. A statute giving fee-simple tenants (other than those holding directly of the Crown) the power to alienate their land and bind the transferee to perform the same services for the lord as the transferee had been obliged to perform. • The statute, enacted in 1290, tended to concentrate feudal lordships in the Crown by eliminating multiple layers of fealty. 18 Edw., ch. 1. — Also termed Quia Emptores Terrarum.

“Edward I and his lords wished, for political reasons, to prevent the growth of subinfeudation, and in 1290 the Statute Quia Emptores was enacted. It took its name from the beginning of its preamble — ‘Since purchasers...’” L.B. Curzon, English Legal History 330 (2d ed. 1979).

quia timet (kwi-a ti-mat or kwee-a tim-et). [Latin “because he fears”] A legal doctrine that allows a person to seek equitable relief from future probable harm to a specific right or interest.

“Quia timet is the right to be protected against anticipated future injury that cannot be prevented by the present action. The doctrine of ‘quia timet’ permits equitable relief based on a concern over future probable injury to certain rights or interests, where anticipated future injury cannot be prevented by a present action at law, such as where there is a danger that a defense at law might be prejudiced or lost if not tried immediately.” 27A Am. Jur. 2d Equity § 93, at 561 (1996).

quia-timet injunction. See INJUNCTION.

quick asset. See ASSET.

quick-asset ratio. The ratio between an entity’s current or liquid assets (such as cash and accounts receivable) and its current liabilities. — Also termed quick ratio; acid-test ratio.

quit, vb. 1. To cease (an act, etc.); to stop <he didn't quit stalking the victim until the police intervened>. 2. To leave or surrender possession of (property) <the tenant received a notice to quit but had no intention of quitting the premises>.

qui tam action (kwəd tam). [Latin qui tam pro domino rege quam pro se ipso in hac parte sequitur “who as well for the king as for himself sues in this matter”] An action brought under a statute that allows a private person to sue for a penalty, part of which the government or some specified public institution will receive. — Also termed popular action. — Often shortened to qui tam (Q.T.).

quitclaim, n. 1. A formal release of one’s claim or right. 2. See quitclaim deed under DEED.

quitclaim, vb. 1. To relinquish or release (a claim or right). 2. To convey all of one’s interest in (property), to whatever extent one has an interest; to execute a quitclaim deed.

quitclaim deed. See DEED.

quit rent. Hist. A payment to a feudal lord by a freeholder or copyholder, so called because upon payment the tenant goes “quit and free” (discharged) of all other services. — Also spelled quitrent. — Also termed quietus redditus.

quitittance. 1. A release or discharge from a debt or obligation. 2. The document serving as evidence of such a release. See ACQUITTANCE.

quo ad (kwəd-ad). [Latin] As regards; with regard to <with a pledge, the debtor continues to possess quo ad the world at large>.

quo ad hoc (kwəd-ad hoκ). [Latin] As to this; with respect to this; so far as this is concerned.

- A prohibition quo ad hoc is a prohibition of certain things among others, such as matters brought in an ecclesiastical court that should have been brought in a temporal court.

quo ad sacra (kwəd-sa kra). [Latin] As to sacred things; for religious purposes.

- This term often referred to property that was located so far from the parish to which it belonged that it was annexed quo ad sacra to another parish, allowing the inhabitants to attend the closer parish’s services. But the land continued to belong to the original parish for all civil purposes.

quo animo (kwəd an-moh), adv. [Latin] With what intention or motive. See ANIMUS.

quocumque modo velit, quocumque modo possit (kwəd-kam-kwee moh-doh vel-it, kwoh-kam-kwee moh-doh pahs-it). [Latin] In any way he wishes; in any way he can.

quod billa cassetur (kwod bil-a ka-see-tar), n. [Latin “that the bill be quashed”] The common-law form of a judgment sustaining a plea in abatement that proceeds from a bill instead of from an original writ. See CASSETUR BILLA.

quod clericici non eligantur in officio ballivi, etc. (kwod kler-ə-si non el-ə-gan-tar in ə-fish-ee-oh bal-li-vi), n. [Law Latin “that clerks are not chosen in the office of a bailiff, etc.”] Hist. A writ exempting a clerk, who was to be appointed as a bailiff, beadle, reeve, or other officer, from serving in the office.

quod computet (kwod kom-pyə-tet). [Law Latin “that he account”] The first judgment in an action of account, requiring the defendant to give an accounting before auditors. — Also termed judgment quod computet.

- “In this action, if the plaintiff succeeds, there are two judgments: the first is, that the defendant do account (quod computet) before auditors appointed by the court; and, when such account is finished, then the second judgment is, that he do pay the plaintiff so much as he is found in arrear.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 163 (1768).

quod cum (kwod kom). [Law Latin] For that; whereas.

- In common-law pleading, this phrase introduced explanations for the claims alleged, as in assumpsit actions.

quod ei deforceat (kwod ee-i di-for-see-at), n. [Law Latin “that he defores him”] Hist. A writ allowed by St. Westm. 2, 13 Edw., ch. 4 for the owners of a particular estate (such as a life estate or fee tail) who had lost land unwittingly by default in a possessory action. • Up to that time, only owners in fee simple could recover property after such a default.

- This phrase was used in old reports to indicate that an argument or point made by counsel was approved or allowed by the court.

quod jussu (kwod jas-lyoo). [Latin “which was done by order”] Roman law. An action by one who contracted with a son or slave upon the authorization of the father or master, to compel the father or master to honor the agreement.

quod non fuit negatum (kwod non f[y]oo-it ni-gay-tam). [Law Latin] Hist. Which was not denied. • This phrase usu. signifies that an argument or proposal is not denied or controverted by the court.

quod nota (kwod noh-ta). [Latin] Hist. Which note; which mark. • This is a reporter’s note directing attention to a point or rule.

quod partes replacient (kwod pahr-teez ri-plas-i-tont), n. [Law Latin “that the parties do replead’’] Hist. The judgment ordering repleader when an issue is formed on so immaterial a point that the court does not know for whom to give a judgment. • The parties must then reconstruct their pleadings.

quod partitio fiat (kwod pahr-tish-ee-oh fi-at). [Latin “that partition be made’’] Hist. In a partition suit, a judgment granting the partition.

quod permittat (kwod p[ar]-mit-it), n. [Latin “that he permit’’] Hist. A writ to prevent an interference in the exercise of a right, such as a writ for the heir of someone disseised of a common of pasture against the heir of the disseisor.

quod permittat prosternere (kwod p[ar]-mit-it proh-star-na-ree), n. [Law Latin “that he permit to abate’’] Hist. A writ to abate a nuisance, similar in nature to a petition of a right.

“This is a writ commanding the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate, quod permittat prosternere, the nuisance complained of; and, unless he so permits, to summon him to appear in court, and show cause why he will not. And this writ lies as well for the alien of the party first injured, as against the alien of the party first injuring; as hath been determined by all the judges. And the plaintiff shall have judgment herein to abate the nuisance, and to recover damages against the defendant.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 222 (1768).

quod recuperet (kwod ri-[k]yoo-por-it), n. [Law Latin “that he do recover’’] Hist. The ordinary judgment for a plaintiff in an action at law. • The judgment might be either final or interlocutory depending on whether damages had been ascertained at the time the judgment was rendered. — Also termed judgment quod recuperet.

quod si contingat (kwod si kon-ting-at). [Law Latin] Hist. That if it happen. • These words were used to create a condition in a deed.

quo jure (kwoh joor-ee). [Law Latin “by what right’’] Hist. A writ for someone holding land to which another claimed a common, to compel the latter to prove title.

quominus (kwoh-ma-nas or kwoh-mi-nas). [Latin quo minus “by which the less’’] Hist. A 14th-century Exchequer writ alleging that the plaintiff had lent the defendant a sum of money and that the plaintiff was unable to repay a debt of similar amount to the Crown because of the debt to the defendant. • In effect, the plaintiff pleaded the fiction that he was a debtor or the king who could not repay that debt because of the defendant’s failure to repay him. — Also termed writ of quominus.

quorum, n. The minimum number of members (usu. a majority) who must be present for a body to transact business or take a vote. Pl. quorums.

quota. 1. A proportional share assigned to a person or group; an allotment <the university’s admission standards included a quota for in-state residents>. 2. A quantitative restriction; a minimum or maximum number <Faldo met his sales quota for the month>.

export quota. A restriction on the products that can be sold to foreign countries. • In the United States, export quotas can be established by the federal government for various purposes, including national defense, price support, and economic stability.

import quota. A restriction on the volume of a certain product that can be brought into the country from a foreign country. • In the United States, the President may establish a quota on an item that poses a threat of serious injury to a domestic industry.

quotation. 1. A statement or passage that is reproduced, attributed, and cited. 2. The amount stated as a stock’s or commodity’s current price. 3. A contractor’s estimate for a given job. — Sometimes shortened to quote.

quavis modo (kwō-vis moh-doh). [Latin] In whatever manner.

quo warranto (kwō wa-ran-toh also kwō wahr-an-toh). [Law Latin "by what authority"] 1. A common-law writ used to inquire into the authority by which a public office is held or a franchise is claimed. • Also termed writ of quo warranto. 2. An action by which the state seeks to revoke a corporation’s charter. • The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are applicable to proceedings for quo warranto “to the extent that the practice in such proceedings is not set forth in statutes of the United States and has therefore conformed to the practice in civil actions.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 81(a)(2).

“Sometimes the term ‘quo warranto’ is used to describe not only the proceedings under the common-law writ of quo warranto, but also proceedings under an information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto or similar statutory remedies.” 74 C.J.S. Quo Warranto § 1(e), at 177 (1951).

race act. See RACE STATUTE.

race-notice statute. A recording law providing that the person who records first, without notice of prior unrecordered claims, has priority. • About half the states have race-notice statutes. — Also termed race-notice act; notice-race statute. Cf. RACE STATUTE; NOTICE STATUTE.

race statute. A recording act providing that the person who records first, regardless of notice, has priority. • Only Louisiana and North Carolina have race statutes. — Also termed pure race statute; race act. Cf. NOTICE STATUTE; RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

race to the courthouse. 1. Bankruptcy. The competition among creditors to make claims on assets, usu. motivated by the advantages to be gained by those who act first in preference to other creditors. • Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code, as well as various other provisions, is intended to prevent a race to the courthouse and instead to promote equality among creditors. 2. Civil procedure. The competition between disputing parties, both of whom know that litigation is inevitable, to prepare and file a lawsuit in a favorable or convenient forum before the other side files in one that is less favorable or less convenient. • A race to the courthouse may result after one party informally accuses another of breach of contract or intellectual-property infringement. When informal negotiations break down, both want to resolve the matter quickly, usually to avoid further business disruption. While the accuser races to sue for breach of contract or infringement, the accused seeks a declaratory judgment that no breach or infringement has occurred. See ANTICIPATORY FILING.

rachet (rah-shah), n. [French] 1. Repurchase; redemption. 2. Ransom.

racheter (rah-sha-tay), vb. [French] 1. To repurchase or buy back. 2. To ransom.

rack, n. Hist. An instrument of torture on which a person was slowly stretched, formerly used to interrogate someone charged with a crime.

racket, n. 1. An organized criminal activity; esp., the extortion of money by threat or violence. 2. A dishonest or fraudulent scheme or business.

Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. A law designed to attack organized criminal activity and preserve marketplace integrity by investigating, controlling, and prosecuting persons who participate or conspire to participate in racketeering. • Enacted in 1970, the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) applies only to activity involving interstate or foreign commerce. 18 USC §§ 1961–1968. Since then, many states have adopted laws (sometimes called “little RICO” acts) based on the federal statute. The federal and most state RICO acts provide for enforcement not only by criminal prosecution but also by civil lawsuit, in which the plaintiff can sue for treble damages.

“Before criminal or civil liability can attach under RICO, it must be shown that the two or more acts of racketeering alleged in the criminal indictment or civil complaint constitute a pattern of racketeering activity on the part of the culpable person. The statutory definition of pattern ‘requires at least two’ predicate acts occurring within ten years of each other, with one of them occurring after October 15, 1970. More broadly put, the pattern of racketeering activity is a scheme of unlawful conduct with a nexus to both the culpable person and the enterprise.” David R. McCormack, Racketeering Influenced Corrupt Organizations § 1.04, at 1–20 (1998).

racketeering, n. 1. A system of organized crime traditionally involving the extortion of money from businesses by intimidation, violence, or other illegal methods. 2. A pattern of illegal activity (such as bribery, extortion, fraud, and murder) carried out as part of an enterprise (such as a crime syndicate) that is owned or controlled by those engaged in the illegal activity. • The modern sense (sense 2) derives from the federal RICO statute, which greatly broadened the term's original sense to include such activities as mail fraud, securities fraud, and the collection of illegal gambling debts.

ransom, vb. 1. To obtain the release of a captive (a captive) by paying a demanded price. 2. To release a captive upon receiving such a payment. 3. To hold and demand payment for the release of a captive.

ransom bill. Int'l law. A contract by which a vessel or other property captured at sea during wartime is ransomed in exchange for release and a conducts to a friendly destination. — Also termed ransom bond.

rap, n. Slang. 1. Legal responsibility for a criminal act <he took the rap for his accomplices>. 2. A criminal charge . 3. A criminal conviction; esp., a prison sentence .

rape, n. 1. At common law, unlawful sexual intercourse committed by a man with a woman not his wife through force and against her will. • The common-law crime of rape required at least a slight penetration of the penis into the vagina. Also at common law, a husband could not be convicted of raping his wife. 2. Unlawful sexual activity (esp. intercourse) with a person (usu. a female) without consent and usu. by force or threat of injury. • Most modern state statutes have broadened the definition along these lines. Marital status is now usu. irrelevant, and sometimes so is the victim’s gender. — Also termed (in some statutes) unlawful sexual intercourse; sexual assault; sexual battery; sexual abuse. Cf. sexual assault under ASSAULT.

"[Another] offence, against the female part also of his majesty’s subjects, but attended with greater aggravations than that of forcible marriage, is the crime of rape, raptus mulierum, or the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 210 (1769).

"If force is to be declared an element of the crime [of rape] it becomes necessary to resort to the fiction of ‘constructive force’ to take care of those cases in which no force is needed beyond what is involved in the very act of intercourse itself. A better analysis is to recognize that the requirement of force is simply a means of demonstrating that the unlawful violation of the woman was without her consent and against her will. Therefore, evidence of serious force need not be shown in many cases. Hence the better view is that ‘force’ is not truly speaking an element of the crime itself, but if great force was not needed to accomplish the act the necessary lack of consent has been disproved in other than exceptional situations. The courts today frequently state the position that a woman’s resistance need not be ‘more than her age, strength, the surrounding facts, and all attending circumstances’ make reasonable.’” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 211–12 (3d ed. 1982).

date rape. Rape committed by someone known to the victim, esp. by the victim’s social companion. — Also termed acquaintance rape.

marital rape. A husband’s sexual intercourse with his wife by force or without her consent. • Marital rape was not a crime at common law, but under modern statutes the marital exemption no longer applies, and in most jurisdictions a husband can be convicted of raping his wife.

statutory rape. Unlawful sexual intercourse with a person under the age of consent (as defined by statute), regardless of whether it is against that person’s will. • Generally, only an adult may be convicted of this crime. A person under the age of consent cannot be convicted. — Also termed rape under age. See AGE OF CONSENT.

"Carnal knowledge of a child is frequently declared to be rape by statute and where this is true the offense is popularly known as ‘statutory rape,’ although not so designated in the statute.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 198 (3d ed. 1982).

3. Archaic. The act of seizing and carrying off a person (esp. a woman) by force; abduction. 4. The act of plundering or despoiling a place. 5. Hist. One of the six administrative districts into which Sussex, England was divided, being smaller than a shire and larger than a hundred.

RAR. abbr. REVENUE AGENT’S REPORT.

rasure (ray-zhar). 1. The scraping or shaving of a document’s surface to remove the writing from it; erasure. 2. Obliteration.

ratable (ray-ta-bal), adj. 1. Proportionate <ratable distribution>. 2. Capable of being estimated, appraised, or appor tioned <because hundreds of angry fans ran onto the field at the same time, blame for the goalpost’s destruction is not ratable>. 3. Taxable <the government assessed the widow’s ratable estate>. See PRO RATA.

ratchet theory. Constitutional law. The principle that Congress — in exercising its enforcement power under the 14th Amendment — can increase, but cannot dilute, the scope of 14th Amendment guarantees as previously defined by the Supreme Court. ● Thus, the enab ling clause works in only one direction, like a ratchet.

rate, n. 1. Proportional or relative value; the proportion by which quantity or value is adjusted <rate of inflation>. 2. An amount paid or charged for a good or service <the rate for a business-class fare is $550>.

class rate. A single rate applying to the transportation of several articles of the same general character.

confiscatory rate. A utility rate so low that the utility company cannot realize a reasonable return on its investment.

freight rate. A rate charged by a carrier for the transportation of cargo, usu. based on the weight, volume, or quantity of goods but sometimes also on the goods’ value or the mileage.

joint rate. A single rate charged by two or more carriers to cover a shipment of goods over a single route.

union rate. The wage scale set by a union as a minimum wage to be paid and usu. expressed as an hourly rate or piecework rate.

3. interest rate <the rate on the loan increases by 2% after five years>. 4. English law. A sum assessed or payable to the local government in the place where a ratepayer dwells or has property. See RATEPAYER. — rate, vb.

rate base. The investment amount or property value on which a company, esp. a public utility, is allowed to earn a particular rate of return.

rate of interest. See INTEREST RATE.

rate of return. The annual income from an investment, expressed as a percentage of the investment. See RETURN (5).

fair rate of return. The amount of profit that a public utility is permitted to earn, as determined by a public utility commission.

internal rate of return. Accounting. A discounted-cash-flow method of evaluating a long-term project, used to determine the actual return on an investment. — Abbr. IRR.

ratepayer. English law. A person who pays local taxes; a person liable to pay rates. See RATE (4).

ratification, n. 1. Confirmation and acceptance of a previous act, thereby making the act valid from the moment it was done <the board of directors’ ratification of the president’s resolution>. 2. Contracts. A person’s binding adoption of an act already completed but either not done in a way that originally produced a legal obligation or done by a third party having at the time no authority to act as the person’s agent <an adult’s ratification of a contract signed during childhood is necessary to make the contract enforceable>.

"Ratification may take place by express words indicating an intention to confirm the contract. These words may consist of a new express promise, or such words as ‘I do ratify and confirm.’ A mere acknowledgment that the contract was in fact made and that it has not been performed is not sufficient as a ratification. It is sometimes said that a ratification is ineffective unless made with knowledge of the possession of a legal power to disaffirm, but the cases holding the contrary seem to have the better reason." — William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 179-80 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Int’l law. The final establishment of consent by the parties to a treaty to be bound by it, usu. including the exchange or deposit of instruments of ratification <the ratification of the nuclear-weapons treaty>. — ratify, vb. Cf. CONFIRMATION.

ratiæbicio (rat-æ-ho-bish-e-oh), n. [Latin fr. ratum habere “to hold ratified”] Civil law. Ratification or approval, esp. by a principal of an agent’s transaction.

ratio decidendi (ray-shée-oh des-a-den-di), n. [Latin “the reason for deciding”] 1. The principle or rule of law on which a court’s decision is founded <many poorly written judicial opinions do not contain a clearly ascertainable ratio decidendi>. 2. The rule of law on which a later court thinks that a previous court founded its decision; a general rule without which a case must have been decided otherwise <this opinion recognizes the Supreme Court’s ratio decidendi in the school desegregation cases>. Often shortened to ratio. Pl. rationes decisionis (ray-shée-oh-neez des-a-den-di). Cf. OBI TER DICTUM; HOLDING.

"The phrase ‘the ratio decidendi of a case’ is slightly ambiguous. It may mean either (1) the rule that the judge who decided the case intended to lay down and apply to the facts, or (2) the rule that a later court conceives it to have had the power to lay down." Glanville Williams, Learning the Law 75 (11th ed. 1982).

"There are . . . two steps involved in the ascertainment of the ratio decidendi . . . . First, it is necessary to determine all the facts of the case as seen by the judge; secondly, it is necessary to discover which of those facts were treated as material by the judge." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 65–66 (4th ed. 1991).

ratio legis (ray-shée-oh lee-jes), n. [Latin] The reason or purpose for making a law <the Senator argued that the rapid spread of violent crime was a compelling ratio legis for the gun-control statute>. Also termed ratio juris.

rationabile estoverium (rash-[-ee]-o-nay-ba lee es-ta-veer-ee-am), n. [Law Latin “reasonable necessities”] Hist. Alimony.

rationabilia divis. See DE RATIONABILIBUS DIVISIS.

rationabili parte bonorum. See DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM.

rational-basis test. Constitutional law. A principle whereby a court will uphold a law as valid under the Equal Protection Clause if it bears a reasonable relationship to the attainment of some legitimate governmental objective. Also termed rational-purpose test; rational-relationship test; minimal scrutiny; minimum scrutiny. Cf. STRICT SCRUTINY; INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

rationes (ray-shee-oh-neez or rash-ee-oh-neez),
n. [Latin “reasons”] Hist. The pleadings in a suit.

ratio scripta (ray-shee-oh skrip-ta), n. [Latin] Roman law. Written reason.

rattening (rat-ning). Hist. The practice of taking away tools, destroying machinery, and the like in an attempt either to compel a worker to join a union or to enforce a company’s compliance with union rules. • Rattening was formerly a common labor-union tactic in England, and it was a criminal offense.

ravishment, n. Archaic. 1. Forcible seizure and carrying off of another person (esp. a woman); abduction. 2. RAPE (1). • In this sense the term is widely considered inappropriate for modern usage, given its romantic connotations (in other contexts) of ecstasy and delight. — ravish, vb.

re (ree or ray), prep. Regarding; in the matter of; in RE. • The term is often used as a signal or introductory title announcing the subject of business correspondence.

rea (ree-a), n. [Latin] In civil and canon law, a female defendant. Pl. reae.

reacquired stock. See treasury stock under STOCK.

readjustment, n. Voluntary reorganization of a financially troubled corporation by the shareholders themselves, without a trustee’s or a receiver’s intervention. — readjust, vb.

ready, willing, and able. (Of a prospective buyer) legally and financially capable of consummating a purchase.

"READY, WILLING, AND ABLE" — A phrase referring to a prospective buyer of property who is legally capable and financially able to consummate the deal. Traditionally, the broker earns a commission upon procuring a ‘ready, willing, and able’ buyer on the listing terms, regardless of whether the seller actually goes through with the sale. The ‘ready and willing’ means, generally, that the broker must in fact produce a buyer who indicates that he or she is prepared to accept the terms of the seller and is willing to enter into a contract for sale. The buyer is not ‘ready and willing’ when he or she enters into an option with the seller, but the buyer is ‘ready and willing’ when the option is exercised. The buyer is not ‘ready and willing’ when the offer is subject to any new conditions, such as making the closing date an unreasonably long period, for example, one year from the offer. • The ‘able’ requires that the buyer be financially able to comply with the terms of the sale in both initial cash payment and any necessary financing. The broker is not required to show that the purchaser has actual cash or assets to pay off the mortgage. But the broker is required to reveal the identity of the buyer if requested by the seller." John W. Reilly, The Language of Real Estate 326 (4th ed. 1993).

reaffirmation, n. 1. Approval of something previously decided or agreed to; renewal <the Supreme Court’s reaffirmation of this principle is long overdue>. 2. Bankruptcy. An agreement between the debtor and a creditor by which the debtor promises to repay a prepetition debt that would otherwise be discharged at the conclusion of the bankruptcy <the debtor negotiated a reaffirmation so that he could keep the collateral>. • There are two main requirements for a reaffirmation to be enforceable: (1) the agreement must contain a clear and conspicuous provision stating that the debtor may rescind the reaffirmation agreement anytime before discharge or within 60 days after the agreement is filed with the court; and (2) for a debtor who is not represented by counsel, the court must determine that the reaffirmation is in the debtor’s best interest and does not impose an undue hardship. 11 USCA § 524(c). — Also termed (in sense 2) reaffirmation agreement. — reaffirm, vb.

reaffirmation hearing. Bankruptcy. A hearing at which the debtor and a creditor present a reaffirmation of a dischargeable debt for the court’s approval. • The reaffirmation hearing is usu. held simultaneously with the discharge hearing. See DISCHARGE HEARING.

real, adj. 1. Of or relating to things (such as lands and buildings) that are fixed or immovable <real property> . 2. Civil law. Of, relating to, or attached to a thing (whether movable or immovable) rather than a person . 3. Actual; genuine; true <real authority>. 4. (Of money, income, etc.) measured in terms of purchasing power rather than nominal value; adjusted for inflation <real wages>.

real-estate investment trust. A company that invests in and manages a portfolio of real estate, with the majority of the trust's income distributed to its shareholders. • Such a trust may qualify for special income-tax treatment if it distributes 95% of its income to its shareholders. — Abbr. REIT. See investment company under COMPANY. Cf. REAL-ESTATE MORTGAGE TRUST.

umbrella-partnership real-estate investment trust. A REIT that controls and holds most of its properties through an umbrella limited partnership, as a result of which the trust can acquire properties in exchange for the limited-partnership interests in the umbrella while triggering no immediate tax obligations for certain sellers. • This is a structure that many REITs now use. — Abbr. UPREIT.

real-estate-mortgage investment conduit. An entity that holds a fixed pool of mortgages or mortgage-backed securities (such as collateralized mortgage obligations), issues interests in itself to investors, and receives favorable tax treatment by passing its income through to those investors. • Real-estate-mortgage investment conduits were created by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. They can be organized as corporations, partnerships, or trusts. To qualify for tax-exempt status, the entity must meet two requirements: (1) almost all of the entity's assets must be real-estate mortgages (though a few other cash-flow-maintaining assets are allowed); and (2) all interests in the entity must be classified as either regular interests (which entitle the holder to principal and interest income through debt or equity) or residual interests (which provide contingent income). — Abbr. REMIC.

real-estate mortgage trust. A real-estate investment trust that buys and sells mortgages rather than real property. — Abbr. REMT. Cf. REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

real estate owned. Property acquired by a lender, usu. through foreclosure, in satisfaction of a debt. — Abbr. REO.

reapportionment, n. Realignment of a legislative district’s boundaries to reflect changes in population. ● The U.S. Supreme Court has required federal reapportionment. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 3. — Also termed redistricting. — reapportion, vb. Cf. GERRYMANDERING.

reargument, n. The presentation of additional arguments, which often suggest that a controlling legal principle has been overlooked, to a court (usu. an appellate court) that has already heard initial arguments. — reargue, vb. Cf. REHEARING.

rearrest. See ARREST.

reasonable, adj. 1. Fair, proper, or moderate under the circumstances <reasonable pay>. 2. According to reason <your argument is reasonable but not convincing>.

“...It is extremely difficult to state what lawyers mean when they speak of ‘reasonableness.’ In part the expression refers to ordinary ideas of natural law or natural justice, in part to logical thought, working upon the basis of the rules of law.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 183 n.(u) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“...In one sense the word [reasonable] describes the proper use of the reasoning power, and in another it is no more than a word of assessment. Reasoning does not help much in fixing a reasonable or fair price or a reasonable or moderate length of time, or in estimating the size of a doubt. Lawyers say a reasonable doubt, meaning a substantial one; the Court of Appeal has frowned upon the description of a reasonable doubt as one for which rea-

3. (Of a person) having the faculty of reason . 4. Archaic. Human <criminal homicide is traditionally called the unlawful killing of a “reasonable person”>. — reasonableness, n.

reasonable accommodation. 1. An action taken to adapt or adjust for a disabled person, done in a way that does not impose an undue hardship on the party taking the action. ● Under the Americans with Disabilities Act, an employer must make reasonable accommodations for an employee’s disability. Examples of reasonable accommodations that have been approved by the courts include providing additional unpaid leave, modifying the employee’s work schedule, and reassigning the employee to a vacant position. 2. An action taken to adapt or adjust for an employee’s religious need or practice, done in a way that does not impose an undue hardship on the employer.

reasonable care. See CARE.

reasonable cause. See PROBABLE CAUSE.

reasonable diligence. See due diligence (1) under DILIGENCE.

reasonable doubt. The doubt that prevents one from being firmly convinced of a defendant’s guilt, or the belief that there is a real possibility that a defendant is not guilty. ● “Beyond a reasonable doubt” is the standard used by a jury to determine whether a criminal defendant is guilty. In deciding whether guilt has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the jury must begin with the presumption that the defendant is innocent. See BURDEN OF PERSUA-SION.

“...Reasonable doubt ... is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It is not a mere possible doubt; because every thing relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge.” Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (S Cush.) 295, 320 (1850) (per Lemuel Shaw, J.).

“The graveness of Lord Goddard’s objection to the formula of ‘reasonable doubt’ seems to have been the muddle occasionally created by an impromptu effort to explain to a jury the meaning of this phrase. A simple solution would be to refrain from explaining it, relying on the common sense of the jury. As Barton J. said in an reasonable-expectation doctrine. Insurance. The rule that resolves an insurance-policy ambiguity in favor of the insured's reasonable expectations.

reasonable force. See FORCE.

reasonable grounds. See PROBABLE CAUSE.

reasonable-inference rule. An evidentiary principle providing that a jury, in deciding a case, may properly consider any reasonable inference drawn from the evidence presented at trial.

reasonable man. See REASONABLE PERSON.

reasonable medical probability. In proving the cause of an injury, a standard requiring a showing that the injury was more likely than not caused by a particular stimulus, based on the general consensus of recognized medical thought. — Also termed reasonable medical certainty.

reasonable notice. See NOTICE.

reasonable person. 1. A hypothetical person used as a legal standard, esp. to determine whether someone acted with negligence. • The reasonable person acts sensibly, does things without serious delay, and takes proper but not excessive precautions. — Also termed reasonable man; prudent person; ordinarily prudent person; reasonably prudent person. See reasonable care under CARE.

"The reasonable man connotes a person whose notions and standards of behaviour and responsibility correspond with those generally obtained among ordinary people in our society at the present time, who seldom allows his emotions to overbear his reason and whose habits are moderate and whose disposition is equable. He is not necessarily the same as the average man — a term which implies an amalgamation of counter-balancing extremes." R.F.V. Houston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 56 (17th ed. 1977).

"In the antique phraseology which has been repeated since the time of Lord Coke the actus reus of murder (and therefore of any criminal homicide) was declared to be unlawfully killing a reasonable person who is in being and under the King's peace, the death following within a year and a day. In this sentence the word 'reasonable' does not mean 'sane', but 'human'. In criminal law, a lunatic is a person for all purposes of protection, even when not so treated for the assessment of liability." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 102 (16th ed. 1952).

reasonable suspicion. A particularized and objective basis, supported by specific and articulable facts, for suspecting a person of criminal activity. • A police officer must have a reasonable suspicion to stop a person in a public place. See STOP AND FRISK. Cf. PROBABLE CAUSE.

reasonable time. 1. Contracts. The time needed to do what a contract requires to be done, based on subjective circumstances. • If the contracting parties do not fix a time for performance, the law will usu. presume a reasonable time. 2. Commercial law. The time during which the UCC permits a party to accept an offer, inspect goods, substitute conforming goods for rejected goods, and the like.

reasonable use. See USE (1).

reasonable-use theory. Property. The principle that owners of riparian land may make reasonable use of their water if this use does not affect the water available to lower riparian owners.

reasonably prudent person. See REASONABLE PERSON.

reason to know. Information from which a person of ordinary intelligence — or of the superior intelligence that the person may have — would infer that the fact in question exists or that there is a substantial enough chance of its existence that, if the person is exercising reasonable care, the person's action would be based on the assumption of its possible existence.

reassurance. See REINSURANCE.

rebate, n. A return of part of a payment, serving as a discount or reduction. — rebate, vb.

rebellion. 1. Open, organized, and armed resistance to an established government or ruler. 2. Open resistance or opposition to an authority. or tradition. 3. Hist. Disobedience of a legal command or summons.

rebus sic stantibus (ree-bas sik stan-ta-bas). [Law Latin “things standing thus”] Civil & int’l law. The principle that all agreements are concluded with the implied condition that they are binding only as long as there are no major changes in the circumstances. See CLAUSA REBUS SIC STANTIBUS.

rebut, vb. To refute, oppose, or counteract (something) by evidence, argument, or contrary proof <rebut the opponent’s expert testimony> <rebut a presumption of negligence>.

rebuttable presumption. See PRESCRIPTION.

rebuttal, n. 1. In-court contradiction of an adverse party’s evidence. 2. The time given to a party to present contradictory evidence or arguments. Cf. CASE-IN-CHIEF.

rebuttal evidence. See EVIDENCE.

rebuttal witness. See WITNESS.

rebutter. 1. Common-law pleading. The defendant’s answer to a plaintiff’s surrejoinder; the pleading that followed the rejoinder and surrejoinder, and that might in turn be answered by the surrebutter. 2. One who rebuts.

recall, n. 1. Removal of a public official from office by popular vote. 2. A manufacturer’s request to consumers for the return of defective products for repair or replacement. 3. Revocation of a judgment for factual or legal reasons. — recall, vb.

recall election. See ELECTION.

recant (ri-kant), vb. 1. To withdraw or renounce (prior statements or testimony) formally or publicly <the prosecution hoped the eyewitness wouldn’t recant her corroborating testimony on the stand>. 2. To withdraw or renounce prior statements or testimony formally or publicly <under grueling cross-examination, the witness recanted>. — recantation, n.

recapitalization, n. An adjustment or recasting of a corporation’s capital structure — that is, its stocks, bonds, or other securities — through amendment of the articles of incorporation or merger with a parent or subsidiary. • An example of recapitalization is the elimination of unpaid preferred dividends and the creation of a new class of senior securities. — recapitalize, vb. Cf. REORGANIZATION (2).

leveraged recapitalization. Recapitalization whereby the corporation substitutes debt for equity in the capital structure, usu. to make the corporation less attractive as a target for a hostile takeover. — Also termed leveraging up.

recaption. 1. At common law, lawful seizure of another’s property for a second time to secure the performance of a duty; a second distress. See DISTRESS. 2. Peaceful retaking, without legal process, of one’s own property that has been wrongfully taken.

recapture, n. 1. The act or an instance of retaking or reacquiring; recovery. 2. The lawful taking by the government of earnings or profits exceeding a specified amount; esp., the government’s recovery of a tax benefit (such as a deduction or credit) by taxing income or property that no longer qualifies for the benefit. 3. Int’l law. The retaking of a prize or booty so that the property is legally restored to its original owner. See POSTLIMINIUM (2). — recapture, vb.

recapture clause. 1. A contract provision that limits prices or allows for the recovery of goods if market conditions greatly differ from what the contract anticipated. 2. A commercial-lease provision that grants the landlord both a percentage of the tenant’s profits above a fixed amount of rent and the right to terminate the lease — and thus recapture the property — if those profits are too low.

receipt, n. 1. The act of receiving something <my receipt of the document was delayed by two days>. 2. A written acknowledgment that something has been received <keep the receipt for the gift>.

accountable receipt. A receipt coupled with an obligation.

warehouse receipt. See WAREHOUSE RECEIPT.

3. (usu. pl.) Something received; INCOME <post the daily receipts in the ledger>. receipt, vb. 1. To acknowledge in writing the receipt of (something, esp. money) <the bill must be receipted>. 2. To give a receipt for (something, esp. money) <the bookkeeper receipted the payments>.

receptor (ri-see-tar). A person who receives from a sheriff another’s property seized in garnishment and agrees to return the property upon demand or execution.

receivable, adj. 1. Capable of being admitted or accepted. 2. Awaiting receipt of payment <accounts receivable>. 3. Subject to a call for payment .

receivable, n. See account receivable under ACCOUNT.

receiver. A disinterested person appointed by a court, or by a corporation or other person, for the protection or collection of property that is the subject of diverse claims (for example, because it belongs to a bankrupt or is otherwise being litigated). Cf. liquidator.

ancillary receiver. One who is appointed as a receiver in a particular area to assist a foreign receiver in collecting the assets of an insolvent corporation or other entity.

"An ancillary receiver of a corporation or unincorporated association may be appointed (a) by a competent court of a state in which there are assets of the corporation or unincorporated association at the time of the commencement of the action for the appointment of such receiver, or (b) in the case of a corporation, by a competent court of the state of incorporation. . . . The purpose of such an ancillary receivership is to aid the foreign primary receivership in the collection and taking charge of assets of the estate being administered." 66 Am. Jur. 2d Receivers § 436, at 239 (1973).

receiver general. A public official in charge of a government’s receipts and treasury. Pl. receivers general.

receivership. 1. The state or condition of being in the control of a receiver. 2. The position or function of being a receiver appointed by a court or under a statute. 3. A proceeding in which a court appoints a receiver.

dry receivership. A receivership in which there is no equity available to pay general creditors.

receiving state. The country to which a diplomatic agent or consul is sent by the country represented by that agent. Cf. sending state.

receiving stolen property. The criminal offense of acquiring or controlling property known to have been stolen by another person. • Some jurisdictions require the additional element of wrongful intent. In some jurisdictions it is a felony, but in others it is either a felony or a misdemeanor depending on the value of the property. — Also termed receiving stolen goods. See fence.

recess (ree-ses), n. 1. A brief break in judicial proceedings <the court granted a two-hour recess for lunch>. Cf. continuance (3). 2. An interval between sittings of the same legislative body <Congress took a monthlong recess>. — recess (ri-ses), vb.

recession. A period characterized by a sharp slowdown in economic activity, declining employment, and a decrease in investment and consumer spending. Cf. depression.

Recht (rekt). [German “right”] 1. Law generally. 2. A body of law. 3. A right or claim.

Rechtsphilosophi (rekts-fa-los-a-fee). See ethical jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

recidivate (ri-sid-a-vayt), vb. To return to a habit of criminal behavior; to relapse into crime.

recidivation. Archaic. See RECIDIVISM. recidivism (ri-sid-ə-viz-əm), n. A tendency to relapse into a habit of criminal activity or behavior. — Also termed (archaically) recidivation. — recidivous, recidivist, adj.

recidivist (ri-sid-ə-vist), n. One who has been convicted of multiple criminal offenses, usu. similar in nature; a repeat offender <propo- nents of prison reform argue that prisons don’t cure the recidivist>. — Also termed habitual offender; habitual criminal; repeater; career criminal.

reciprocal (ri-sip-rə-kal), adj. 1. Directed by each toward the other or others; mutual. 2. Bilateral . 3. Corresponding; equivalent.

reciprocal contract. See bilateral contract under CONTRACT.

reciprocal dealing. A business arrangement in which a buyer having greater economic power than a seller agrees to buy something from the seller only if the seller buys something in return. • Reciprocal dealing usu. violates anti-trust laws. — Also termed reciprocal-dealing arrangement. Cf. TYING ARRANGEMENT.

reciprocal exchange. An association whose members exchange contracts and pay premiums through an attorney-in-fact for the purpose of insuring themselves and each other. • A reciprocal exchange can consist of individuals, partnerships, trustees, or corporations, but the exchange itself is unincorporated. — Also termed interinsurance exchange; reciprocal insurance exchange; reciprocal interinsurance exchange. See reciprocal insurance under INSURANCE.

reciprocal insurance. See INSURANCE.

reciprocal insurance exchange. See RECIPRO- CAL EXCHANGE.

reciprocal interinsurance exchange. See RE- CIPROCAL EXCHANGE.

reciprocal negative easement. See EASEMENT.

reciprocal trade agreement. An agreement between two countries providing for the exchange of goods between them at lower tariffs and better terms than exist between one of the countries and other countries.

reciprocal trust. See TRUST.

reciprocal will. See mutual will under WILL.

reciprocity (res-ə-pros-i-tē). 1. Mutual or bi- lateral action <the Arthurs stopped receiving social invitations from friends because of their lack of reciprocity>. 2. The mutual concession of advantages or privileges for purposes of commercial or diplomatic relations <Texas and Louisiana grant reciprocity to each other’s citizens in qualifying for in-state tuition rates>.

recision. See RESCSSION.

recission. See RESCSSION.

recital. 1. An account or description of some fact or thing <the recital of the events leading up to the accident>. 2. A preliminary statement in a contract or deed explaining the background of the transaction or showing the existence of particular facts <the recitals in the settlement agreement should describe the underlying dispute>. — recite, vb.

“The parties may wish to begin the agreement with a statement of their intentions. Often they do this through recitals, which were traditionally introduced by ‘whereas,’ but can simply state the background without this formality.” Scott J. Barnham, Contract Drafting Guidebook § 8.4, at 158 (2d ed. 1992).

reckless, adj. Characterized by the creation of a substantial and unjustifiable risk of harm to others and by a conscious (and sometimes de- liberate) disregard for or indifference to that risk; heedless; rash. • Reckless conduct is much more than mere negligence: it is a gross deviation from what a reasonable person would do. — recklessly, adv. See RECKLESSNESS. Cf. WANTON.

“Intention cannot exist without foresight, but foresight can exist without intention. For a man may foresee the possible or even probable consequences of his conduct and yet not desire them to occur; none the less if he persists on his course he knowingly runs the risk of bringing about the unwished result. To describe this state of mind the word ‘reckless’ is the most appropriate. The words ‘rash’ and ‘rashness’ have also been used to indicate this same attitude.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 28 (16th ed. 1982).

reckless disregard. 1. Conscious indifference to the consequences (of an act). 2. Defamation. Serious indifference to truth or accuracy of a publication. • “Reckless disregard for the truth” is the standard in proving the defendant’s actual malice toward the plaintiff in a libel action.
reckless driving. The criminal offense of operating a motor vehicle in a manner that shows conscious indifference to the safety of others.

reckless endangerment. The criminal offense of putting another person at substantial risk of death or serious injury. ● This is a statutory, not a common-law, offense.

reckless homicide. See HOMICIDE.

reckless knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.

reckless negligence. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

recklessness, n. 1. Conduct whereby the actor does not desire harmful consequence but nonetheless foresees the possibility and consciously takes the risk. ● Recklessness involves a greater degree of fault than negligence but a lesser degree of fault than intentional wrongdoing. 2. The state of mind in which a person does not care about the consequences of his or her actions. — Also termed heedlessness. Cf. WANTONNESS.

"The ordinary meaning of the word [recklessness] is a high degree of carelessness. It is the doing of something which in fact involves a grave risk to others, whether the doer realizes it or not. The test is therefore objective and not subjective." R.F.V. Houstoun, Salmont on the Law of Torts 194 (17th ed. 1977).

"An abiding difficulty in discussing the legal meaning of recklessness is that the term has been given several different shades of meaning by the courts over the years. In the law of manslaughter, 'reckless' was long regarded as the most appropriate adjective to express the degree of negligence needed for a conviction: in this sense, it meant a high degree of carelessness. In the late 1950s the courts adopted a different meaning of recklessness in the context of mens rea, referring to D's actual awareness of the risk of the prohibited consequence occurring: we shall call this 'common-law recklessness.' Controversy was introduced into this area in the early 1980s, when the House of Lords purported to broaden the meaning of recklessness so as to include those who failed to give thought to an obvious risk that the consequence would occur . . . ." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 194 (1993).

reclamation (rek-la-may-shan), n. 1. The act or an instance of improving the value of economically useless land by physically changing the land, such as irrigating a desert. 2. Commercial law. A seller's limited right to retrieve goods delivered to a buyer when the buyer is insolvent. UCC § 2-702(2). 3. The act or an instance of obtaining valuable materials from waste materials. — reclaim, vb.

reclusion (ri-kloo-zhan). Civil law. Incarceration as punishment for a crime; esp., solitary confinement or confinement at hard labor in a penitentiary.

recognition, n. 1. Confirmation that an act done by another person was authorized. See RATIFICATION. 2. The formal admission that a person, entity, or thing has a particular status; esp., a nation's act in formally acknowledging the existence of another nation or national government. 3. Tax. The act or an instance of accounting for a taxpayer's realized gain or loss for the purpose of income-tax reporting. Cf. NONRECOGNITION PROVISION; REALIZATION (2). 4. An employer's acknowledgment that a union has the right to act as a bargaining agent for employees. 5. Int'l law. Official action by a country acknowledging, expressly or by implication, de jure or de facto, the legality of the existence of a government, a country, or a situation such as a change of territorial sovereignty. 6. See RULE OF RECOGNITION. — recognize, vb.

recognition clause. Real estate. A clause providing that, when a tract of land has been subdivided for development, the ultimate buyers of individual lots are protected if the developer defaults on the mortgage. ● Such a clause is typically found in a blanket mortgage or a contract for deed.

recognition picketing. See PICKETING.

recognition strike. See STRIKE.

recognitor (ri-kog-na-tar), n. 1. Hist. A member of a jury impaneled on an assize or inquest. See RECOGNITION. 2. Rare. RECOGNIZOR.

recognizance (ri-kog-na-zants). 1. A bond or obligation, made in court, by which a person promises to perform some act or observe some condition, such as to appear when called, to pay a debt, or to keep the peace. ● Most commonly, a recognizance takes the form of a bail bond that guarantees an unjailed criminal defendant's return for a court date <the defendant was released on his own recognizance>. See RELEASE ON RECOGNIZANCE.

"Recognizances are aptly described as 'contracts made with the Crown in its judicial capacity.' A recognizance is a writing acknowledged by the party to it before a judge or officer having authority for the purpose, and enrolled in a court of record. It usually takes the form of a promise, with penalties for the breach of it, to keep the peace, to be of good behavior, or to appear at the assizes." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 80-81 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).
recognizance

"A recognizance is an acknowledgment of an obligation in court by the recognizor binding him to make a certain payment subject to the condition that on the performance of a specified act the obligation shall be discharged." 1 Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts 6, at 18 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

personal recognizance. The release of a defendant in a criminal case in which the court takes the defendant's word that he or she will appear for a scheduled matter or when told to appear. ● This type of release dispenses with the necessity of the person's posting money or having a surety sign a bond with the court.

2. See bail bond under BOND (2).

recognized gain. See GAIN (3).

recognized loss. See LOSS.

recognized market. See MARKET.

recognizee (ri-kog-na-zee). A person in whose favor a recognizance is made; one to whom someone is bound by a recognizance.

recognizer (ri-kog-na-zor). A person who is obligated under a recognizance; one who is bound by a recognizance.

"A recognizance is an acknowledgment upon record of a former debt, and he who so acknowledges such debt to be due is termed the recognizor, and he to whom or for whose benefit he makes such acknowledgment is termed the recognizes." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 8 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

recollection, n. 1. The action of recalling something to the mind, esp. through conscious effort. 2. Something recalled to the mind. — recollect, vb. See PAST RECOLLECTION RECORDED; PRESENT RECOLLECTION REFRESHED.

recompensable. See COMPENSABLE.

recompense (rek-am-pents), n. Repayment, compensation, or retribution for something, esp. an injury or loss. — recompense, vb.

reconciliation (rek-an-sil-ee-ay-shan), n. 1. Restoration of harmony between persons or things that had been in conflict . 2. Family law. Voluntary resumption, after a separation, of full marital relations between spouses <the court dismissed the divorce petition after the parties' reconciliation>. 3. Accounting. An adjustment of accounts so that they agree, esp. by allowing for outstanding items. — reconcile (rek-on-sil), vb.

reconciliation statement. An accounting or financial statement in which discrepancies are adjusted.

reconstruction, n. 1. Civil law. The renewal of a lease. — Also termed relocation. Cf. TACTIC RELOCATION. 2. Int'l law. The forcible return of aliens (esp. illegal aliens, destitute or diseased aliens, or alien criminals who have served their punishment) to their country of origin. — Also termed (in sense 2) renvoy. — reconduct, vb.

reconsideration. The action of discussing or taking something up again <legislative reconsideration of the measure>.

reconsignment. A change in the terms of a consignment while the goods are in transit. See CONSIGNMENT.

reconstruction. 1. The act or process of rebuilding, re-creating, or reorganizing something <an expert in accident reconstruction>. 2. Patents. A rebuilding of a broken, worn-out, or otherwise inoperative patented article in such a way that a new article is created, thus resulting in an infringement <the replacement of the machine’s essential parts was an infringing reconstruction rather than a permissible repair>. 3. (cap.) The process by which the Southern states that had seceded during the Civil War were readmitted into the Union during the years following the war (i.e., from 1865 to 1877) <the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution are a lasting legacy of Reconstruction>.

recontinuance. 1. Resumption or renewal. 2. The recovery of an incorporeal hereditament that had been wrongfully deprived.

reconversion. Civil law. The act or process of making a counterclaim. See COUNTERCLAIM.

reconvension. See DEMAND (1).

reconvensional demand. See DEMAND (1).

reconversion. The notional or imaginary process by which an earlier constructive conversion — meaning a change of personal into real property, or real into personal property — is annulled and taken away, and the converted property restored to its original quality. See equitable conversion under CONVERSION (1). reconveyance, n. The restoration or return of something (esp. an estate or title) to a former owner or holder. — reconvey, vb.

record, n. 1. A documentary account of past events, usu. designed to memorialize those events; information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that, having been stored in an electronic or other medium, is retrievable in perceivable form. UCC § 2A-102(a)(34).

defective record. 1. A record that fails to conform to requirements of appellate rules. 2. A flawed real-estate title resulting from a defect on the property’s record in the registry of deeds.

public record. A record that a governmental unit is required by law to keep, such as land deeds kept at a county courthouse. • Public records are generally open to view by the public. Cf. public document under DOCUMENT.

silent record. Criminal procedure. A record that fails to disclose that a defendant voluntarily and knowingly entered a plea, waived a right to counsel, or took any other action affecting his or her rights.

2. The official report of the proceedings in a case, including the filed papers, a verbatim transcript of the trial or hearing (if any), and tangible exhibits. See DOCKET (1).

recorda (ri-kor-da). Hist. In England, records that contained the judgments and pleadings in actions tried before the barons of the Exchequer. Cf. ORIGINALIA.

record agent. See INSURANCE AGENT.

recordal. See RECORDATION.

recordare (ree-kor-dair-ee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to bring up on appeal a judgment of a justice of the peace.

recordari facias loquelm (ree-kor-dair-i fay-shee-as la-kwee-lam), n. [Law Latin “you cause the plaint to be recorded”] Hist. In England, a writ by which a suit or plaint in replevin could be removed from a county court to a superior court (esp. to one of the courts of Westminster Hall). — Abbr. re. fa. lo. See PLAIN (1).

recordation (rek-ar-day-shan), n. The act or process of recording an instrument, such as a deed or mortgage, in a public registry. • Recordation generally perfects a person’s interest in the property against later purchasers (including later mortgagees), but the effect of recordation depends on the type of recording act in effect. — Also termed recordal.

record date. See DATE.

recorded recollection. See PAST RECOLLECTION RECORDED.

recorder. 1. Hist. A magistrate with criminal jurisdiction in some British cities or boroughs. 2. A municipal judge with the criminal jurisdiction of a magistrate or a police judge and sometimes also with limited civil jurisdiction. 3. A municipal or county officer who keeps public records such as deeds, liens, and judgments.

court recorder. A court official who records court activities using electronic recording equipment, usu. for the purpose of preparing a verbatim transcript. Cf. COURT REPORTER (1).

recorder of deeds. See REGISTER OF DEEDS.

recorder’s court. A court having jurisdiction over felony cases. • This court exists in only a few jurisdictions, such as Michigan, where the recorder’s court hears felony cases arising within the Detroit city limits.

recording act. A law that establishes the requirements for recording a deed or other property interest and the standards for determining priorities between persons claiming interests in the same property (usu. real property). • Recording acts — the three main types of which are the notice statute, the race statute, and the race-notice statute — are designed to protect bona fide purchasers from earlier unrecorded interests. — Also termed recording statute. See NOTICE STATUTE; RACE STATUTE; RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

A minor officer serving the Crown at the hundred level; a bailiff or deputy-sheriff. 3. An overseer of a manor, parish, or the like. — Also spelled revee. — Also termed greve.

“All the freeholders, unless relieved by special exemption, ‘owed suit’ at the hundred-moot, and the reeve of the hundred presided over it. In Anglo-Saxon times, the reeve was an independent official, and the hundred-moot was not a preliminary stage to the shire-moot at all…. But after the Conquest the hundred assembly, now called a court as all the others were, lost its importance very quickly. Pleas of land were taken from it, and its criminal jurisdiction limited to one of holding suspects in temporary detention. The reeve of the hundred became the deputy of the sheriff, and the chief purpose of holding the hundred court was to enable the sheriff to hold his tourn and to permit a ‘view of frankpledge,’ i.e., an inspection of the person who ought to belong to the frankpledge system.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 174–75 (1936).

rehabilitation, n. 1. Criminal law. The process of seeking to improve a criminal’s character and outlook so that he or she can function in society without committing other crimes <rehabilitation is a traditional theory of criminal punishment, along with deterrence and retribution>. Cf. DETERRENCE; RETRIBUTION (1). 2. Evidence. The restoration of a witness’s credibility after the witness has been impeached <the inconsistencies were explained away during the prosecution’s rehabilitation of the witness>. 3. Bankruptcy. The process of reorganizing a debtor’s financial affairs — under Chapter 11, 12, or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code — so that the debtor may continue to exist as a financial entity, with creditors satisfying their claims from the debtor’s future earnings <the corporation’s rehabilitation was successful>. — Also termed debtor rehabilitation. Cf. LIQUIDATION (4). — rehabilitate, vb. — rehabilitative, adj.

rehabilitative alimony. See ALIMONY.

rehearing. A second or subsequent hearing of a case or an appeal, usu. held to consider an error or omission in the first hearing <the appellant, dissatisfied with the appellate court’s ruling, filed a petition for rehearing>. — Abbr. reh’g. Cf. REARGUMENT.

reh’g. abbr. REHEARING.

rei (ree-1). pl. REUS.

reif (ree-f), Scots law. Robbery.

reification (ree-a-fi-kay-shan), n. 1. Mental conversion of an abstract concept into a material thing. 2. Civil procedure. Identification of the disputed thing in a nonpersonal action and attribution of an in-state situs to it for jurisdictional purposes. 3. Commercial law. Embodiment of a right to payment in a writing (such as a negotiable instrument) so that a transfer of the writing also transfers the right. — reify (ree-a-fi or ray-), vb.

rei interventus (ree-i in-tar-ven-tas), n. [Latin “things intervening”] Actions or efforts by one party to a contract with the consent of the other party, so that the one party has made a partial performance and the other cannot repudiate without being in breach.

reimbursement, n. 1. Repayment. 2. Indemnification. — reimburse, vb.

reimbursement alimony. See ALIMONY.

reinscription, n. Civil law. A second or renewed recordation of a mortgage or other title document. — reinscribe, vb.

reinstate, vb. To place again in a former state or position; to restore <the judge reinstated the judgment that had been vacated>. — reinstatement, n.

reinsurance. Insurance of all or part of one insurer’s risk by a second insurer, who accepts the risk in exchange for a percentage of the original premium. — Also termed reinsurance.

“The term ‘reinsurance’ has been used by courts, attorneys, and textwriters with so little discrimination that much confusion has arisen as to what that term actually connotes. Thus, it has so often been used in connection with transferred risks, assumed risks, consolidations and mergers, excess insurance, and in other connections that it now lacks a clean-cut field of operation. Reinsurance, to an insurance lawyer, means one thing only — the ceding by one insurance company to another of all or a portion of its risks for a stipulated portion of the premium, in which the liability of the reinsurer is solely to the reinsured, which is the ceding company, and in which contract the ceding company retains all contact with the excess reinsurance. Reinsurance in which a reinsurer assumes liability only for an amount of insurance that exceeds a specified sum. See excess insurance under insurance.

facultative reinsurance. Reinsurance of an individual risk at the option (the “faculty”) of the reinsurer.

flat reinsurance. Reinsurance (esp. of marine insurance) that cannot be canceled or modified.

treaty reinsurance. Reinsurance under a broad agreement of all risks in a given class as soon as they are insured by the direct insurer.

reinsurance treaty. A contract of reinsurance (usu. long-term) covering different classes or lines of business of the reinsured (such as professional liability, property, etc.) and obligating the reinsurer in advance to accept the cession of covered risks. • Rather than receive individual notice of each specific claim covered, the treaty reinsurer will generally receive periodic reports providing basic information on the losses paid. — Also termed treaty of reinsurance. See bordereau. Cf. facultative certificate.

reinsured, n. An insurer that transfers all or part of a risk it underwrites to a reinsurer, usu. along with a percentage of the original premium. — Also termed cedent; cedant.

reinsurer. An insurer that assumes all or part of a risk underwritten by another insurer, usu. in exchange for a percentage of the original premium.

reinvestment. 1. The addition of interest earned on a monetary investment to the principal sum. 2. A second, additional, or repeated investment; esp., the application of dividends or other distributions toward the purchase of additional shares (as of a stock or a mutual fund).

reissuable note. See NOTE (1).

reissue. 1. An abstractor’s certificate certifying to the correctness of an abstract. • A reissue is an important precaution when the abstract comprises an original abstract brought down to a certain date and then several continuations or extensions showing matters that have occurred since the date of the original abstract. 2. See reissue patent under Patent (3).

relative-convenience doctrine reissue patent. See Patent (3).

REIT (reet). abbr. REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

rejection. 1. A refusal to accept a contractual offer. 2. A refusal to accept tendered goods as contractual performance. • Under the UCC, a buyer’s rejection of nonperforming goods must be made within a reasonable time after tender or delivery, and notice of the rejection must be given to the seller. — reject, vb. Cf. repudiation; rescission; revocation.

rejoinder, n. Common-law pleading. The defendant’s answer to the plaintiff’s reply (or replication). — rejoin, vb.

related good. Trademarks. A good that infringes a trademark because it appears to come from the same source as the marked good, despite not competing with the marked good. • For example, a cutting tool named “McKnife” might infringe the “McDonald’s” trademark as a related good.

related proceeding. Bankruptcy. A proceeding that involves a claim that will affect the administration of the debtor’s estate (such as a tort action between the debtor and a third party), but that does not arise under bankruptcy law and could be adjudicated in a state court. • A related proceeding must be adjudicated in federal district court unless the parties consent to bankruptcy-court jurisdiction or unless the district court refers the matter to the bankruptcy court or to state court. — Also termed noncore proceeding. Cf. core proceeding.

relation back, n. 1. The doctrine that an act done at a later time is considered to have occurred at an earlier time. • For example, in federal civil procedure, an amended pleading relates back, for purposes of the statute of limitations, to the time when the original pleading was filed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c). 2. A judicial application of that doctrine. — relate back, vb.

relative, n. A person connected with another by blood or affinity; a kinsman.

collateral relative. A relative who is not in the direct line of inheritance, such as a cousin.

relative-convenience doctrine. The principle that an injunction or other equitable relief may be denied if it would cause one party great inconvenience but the other party little or no inconvenience.

relative power. See POWER.

relator. 1. The real party in interest in whose name a state or an attorney general brings a lawsuit. See EX REL. 2. The applicant for a writ, esp. a writ of mandamus, prohibition, or quo warranto. 3. A person who furnishes information on which a civil or criminal case is based; an informer.

relaxatio (ree-lak-say-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. An instrument by which one relinquishes a right or claim to another; a release.

release, n. 1. Liberation from an obligation, duty, or demand; the act of giving up a right or claim to the person against whom it could have been enforced <the employee asked for a release from the noncompete agreement>. — Also termed discharge; surrender. 2. The relinquishment or concession of a right, title, or claim. 3. A written discharge, acquittance, or receipt <Jones signed the release before accepting the cash from Hawkins>. 4. A written authorization or permission for publication <the newspaper obtained a release from the witness before printing his picture on the front page>. 5. The act of conveying an estate or right to another, or of legally disposing of it <the release of the easement on February 14>. 6. A deed or document effecting a conveyance <the legal description in the release was defective>. See deed of release under DEED. 7. The action of freeing or the fact of being freed from restraint or confinement <he became a model citizen after his release from prison>. 8. A document giving formal discharge from custody <after the sheriff signed the release, the prisoner was free to go>. — release, vb.

conditional release. 1. A discharge from an obligation based on some condition, the failure of which defeats the release. 2. An early discharge of a prison inmate, who is then subject to the rules and regulations of parole.

partial release. A release of a portion of a creditor’s claims against property; esp., a mortgagee’s release of specified parcels covered by a blanket mortgage.

release clause. Real estate. 1. A blanket-mortgage provision that enables the mortgagor to obtain a partial release of a specific parcel of land from the mortgage upon paying more than the pro rata portion of the loan. • Mortgagors commonly include a clause that disallows a partial release if the mortgagor is in default on any part of the mortgage. 2. A purchase-agreement provision that allows a seller who has accepted an offer containing a contingency to continue to market the property and accept other offers. • If the seller accepts another buyer’s offer, the original buyer typically has a specified time (such as 72 hours) to waive the contingency (such as the sale of the buyer’s present house) or to release the seller from the agreement.

releasee. 1. One who is released, either physically or by contractual discharge. 2. One to whom an estate is released.

release of mortgage. A written document that discharges a mortgage upon full payment by the borrower and that is publicly recorded to show that the borrower has full equity in the property.

release on recognizance. The pretrial release of an arrested person who promises, usu. in writing but without supplying a surety or posting bond, to appear for trial at a later date. — Also termed release on own recognizance. — Abbr. ROR.

release to uses. Conveyance of property, by deed of release, by one party to a second party for the use of the first party or a third party. See deed of release under DEED; STATUTE OF USES.

releasor. One who releases property or a claim to another. — Also spelled releaser.

relegatio (rel-a-gay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin relegare “to send away”] Roman law. Temporary or permanent banishment of a citizen or condemned criminal without the full loss of the person’s civil rights or property. Cf. DEPORTATIO.

"Relegatio. The expulsion of a citizen ordered either by an administrative act of a magistrate or by judgment in a criminal trial. In the latter case the relegatio was sometimes combined with additional punishments, such as confiscation of the whole or of a part of the property of the condemned person, loss of Roman citizenship, con-relegation, n. 1. Banishment or exile, esp. a temporary one. 2. Assignment or delegation. — relegate, vb.

relevance. The fact, quality, or state of being relevant; relation or pertinence to the issue at hand. — Also termed relevancy.

relevancy. See RELEVANCE.

relevant, adj. Logically connected and tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue; having appreciable probabilistic value — that is, rationally tending to persuade people of the probability or possibility of some alleged fact. Cf. MATERIAL.

“The word ‘relevant’ means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that according to the common course of events one either taken by itself or in connection with other facts proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or non-existence of the other.” James Fitzjames Stephen, A Digest of the Law of Evidence 2 (4th ed. 1861).

relinquishment, n. The abandonment of a right or thing. — relinquish, vb.

reliqua (rel-ə-kwa). [Latin] Civil law. The remainder of a debt after balancing or liquidating an account; money left unpaid.

relitigate, vb. To litigate (a case or matter) again or anew <relitigate the issue in federal court>. — relitigation, n.

relocation. 1. Removal and establishment of someone or something in a new place. 2. Mining law. Appropriation of a new tract of land for a mining claim, as by an owner who wishes to change the boundaries of the original tract or by a stranger who wishes to claim an abandoned or forfeited tract. 3. Civil law. RECONDUCTION (1). Cf. TACTIC RELOCATION.

rem. See IN REM.

remainder. Property. 1. A future interest arising in a third person — that is, someone other than the creator of the estate or the creator's heirs — who is intended to take after the natural termination of the preceding estate. • For example, if a grant is "to A for life, and then to B," B's future interest is a remainder. Cf. EXECUTORY INTEREST; REVERSION; POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

"Whether a remainder is vested or contingent depends upon the language employed. If the conditional element is incorporated into the description of, or the gift to, the remainder-man, then the remainder is contingent; but if, after words giving a vested interest, a clause is added divesting it, the remainder is vested. Thus, on a devise to A for life, remainder to his children, but if any child dies in the lifetime of A, his share to go to those who survive, the share of each child is vested, subject to be divested by his death. But on a devise to A for life, remainder to such of his children as survive him, the remainder is contingent." John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 66 (1886).

2. The property in a decedent's estate that is not otherwise specifically devised or bequeathed in a will.

"Under the names of 'remainders' and 'executor limitations,' various classes of interests in land could be created in expectancy, either at the Common Law or under the Statute of Uses. The differences between the two classes were highly technical; and the learning involved in acquiring a knowledge of the rules of determining them [is] quite out of proportion to the value obtained." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 263 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

accelerated remainder. A remainder that has passed to the remainderman, as when the gift to the preceding beneficiary fails.

alternative remainder. A remainder in which the disposition of property is to take effect only if another disposition does not take effect.

charitable remainder. A remainder, usu. from a life estate, that is given to a charity; for example, "to Jane for life, and then to the American Red Cross."

contingent remainder. A remainder that is either given to an unascertained person or made subject to a condition precedent. • An example is "to A for life, and then, if B has married before A dies, to B." — Also termed executor remainder; remainder subject to a condition precedent.

"Unlike a vested remainder, a contingent remainder is either subject to a condition precedent (in addition to the natural expiration of a prior estate), or owned by unascertainable persons, or both. But the contingent remainder, like the vested remainder, 'waits patiently' for possession. It is so created that it can become a present estate (if ever it does) immediately upon, and no sooner than, the natural expiration of particular estates that stand in front of it and were created simultaneously with it." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 73 (2d ed. 1984).

cross-remainder. A future interest that results when particular estates are given to two or more persons in different parcels of land, or in the same land in undivided shares, and the remainders of all the estates are made to vest in the survivor or survivors. • Two examples of devises giving rise to cross-remainders are (1) "to A and B for life, with the remainder to the survivor and her heirs," and (2) "Blackacre to A and Whiteacre to B, with the remainder of A's estate to B on A's failure of issue, and the remainder of B's estate to A on B's failure of issue." • If no tenants or issue survive, the remainder vests in a third party (sometimes known as the ulterior remainder). Each tenant in common has a reciprocal, or cross, remainder in the share of the others. This type of remainder could not be created by deed unless expressly stated. It could, however, be implied in a will.

"By a will also an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course . . . . So also, where a devise of black-acre to A and of white-acre to B in tail, and if they both die without issue, then to C in fee: here A and B have cross remainders by implication, and on the failure of either's issue, the other or his issue shall take the whole; and C's remainder over shall be postponed till the issue of both shall fail." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 381 (1766).

defeasible remainder. A vested remainder that will be eliminated if a condition subsequent occurs. • An example is "to A for life, and then to B, but if B ever sells liquor on the land, then to C." — Also termed remainder subject to divestment.

executed remainder. See vested remainder.

executory remainder. See contingent remainder.

indefeasible remainder. A vested remainder that is not subject to a condition subsequent. — Also termed indefeasibly vested remainder.

remainder subject to a condition precedent. See contingent remainder.

remainder subject to divestment. See defeasible remainder.

remainder subject to open. A vested remainder that is given to one person but that may later have to be shared with others. • An example is "to A for life, and then equally to all of B's children." — Also termed remainder subject to partial divestment.

vested remainder. A remainder that is given to an ascertained person and that is not subject to a condition precedent. • An example is "to A for life, and then to B." — Also termed executed remainder.

remainder bequest. See residuary bequest under bequest.

remainderer. See remainderman.

remainder interest. The property that passes to a beneficiary after the expiration of an intervening income interest. • For example, if a grantor places real estate in trust with income to A for life and remainder to B upon A's death, then B has a remainder interest.

remainderman. A person who holds or is entitled to receive a remainder. — Also termed remainderer; remainderperson; remainder.

remainder subject to a condition precedent. See contingent remainder under remainder.

remainder subject to divestment. See defeasible remainder under remainder.

remainder subject to open. See remainder.

remainder subject to partial divestment. See remainder subject to open under remainder.

remainor. See remainderman.

remake rights. Copyright. The rights to produce one or more additional movies or screenplays based on what is substantially the same story as is contained in the original movie or screenplay for which the rights have been granted.

remand (ri-mand also ree-mand), n. 1. The act or an instance of sending something (such as a case, claim, or person) back for further action. 2. An order remanding a case, claim, or person.

fourth-sentence remand. In a claim for social-security benefits, a court's decision affirming, reversing, or modifying the decision of the Commissioner of Social Security. • This type of remand is called a fourth-sentence remand because it is based on the fourth sentence of 42 USCA § 405(g): "The court shall have power to enter, upon the pleadings and transcript of the record, a judgment affirming, modifying, or reversing the decision of the Commissioner of Social Security, with or without remanding the cause for a rehearing." See Melkonyan v. Sullivan, 501 U.S. 89, 111 S.Ct. 2157 (1991).

sixth-sentence remand. In a claim for social-security benefits, a court's decision that the claim should be reheard by the Commissioner of Social Security because new evidence is available, which was not available before, that might change the outcome of the proceeding. • This type of remand is called a sixth-sentence remand because it is based on the sixth sentence of 42 USCA § 405(g): "The court may, on motion of the Commissioner of Social Security made for good cause shown before the Commissioner files the Commissioner's answer, remand the case to the Commissioner of Social Security for further action remand (ri-mand), vb. 1. To send (a case or claim) back to the court or tribunal from which it came for some further action <the appellate court reversed the trial court’s opinion and remanded the case for new trial>. Cf. REMOVAL (2). 2. To recommit (an accused person) to custody after a preliminary examination <the magistrate, after denying bail, remanded the defendant to custody>.

remanent pro defectu emptorum (rem-a-nant proh di-fek-tlyo empt-or-am). [Latin] Hist. Remains unsold for want of buyers. • This language was used in a return of a writ of execution when the sheriff could not sell the seized property.

remanet (rem-a-net). 1. A case or proceeding whose hearing has been postponed. 2. A remainder or remnant.

remargining, n. Securities. The act or process of depositing additional cash or collateral with a broker when the equity in a margin account falls to an insufficient level. — remargin, vb. See margin account under ACCOUNT.

remediable, adj. Capable of being remedied, esp. by law <remediable wrongs>. — remediability, n.

remedial, adj. 1. Affording or providing a remedy; providing the means of obtaining redress . 2. Intended to correct, remove, or lessen a wrong, fault, or defect . 3. Of or relating to a means of enforcing an existing substantive right; procedural .

remedial action. Environmental law. An action intended to bring about or restore long-term environmental quality; esp., under CERCLA, a measure intended to permanently alleviate pollution when a hazardous substance has been released or might be released into the environment, so as to prevent or minimize any further release of hazardous substances and thereby minimize the risk to public health or to the environment. 42 USCA § 9601(24); 40 CFR § 300.6. — Also termed remedy. Cf. CERCLA; REMOVAL ACTION.

remedial enforcement. See secondary right under RIGHT.

remedial law. 1. A law providing a means to enforce rights or redress injuries. 2. A law passed to correct or modify an existing law; esp., a law that gives a party a new or different remedy when the existing remedy, if any, is inadequate.

remedial promise. See PROMISE.

remedial statute. See STATUTE.

remedial trust. See constructive trust under TRUST.

remedies. The field of law dealing with the means of enforcing rights and redressing wrongs.

remedy, n. 1. The means of enforcing a right or preventing or redressing a wrong; legal or equitable relief. 2. REMEDIAL ACTION. — remedy, vb. Cf. RELIEF.

“A remedy is anything a court can do for a litigant who has been wronged or is about to be wronged. The two most common remedies are judgments that plaintiffs are entitled to collect sums of money from defendants and orders to defendants to refrain from their wrongful conduct or to undo its consequences. The court decides under the substantive law whether the litigant has been wronged; it conducts its inquiry in accordance with the procedural law. The law of remedies falls somewhere between substance and procedure, distinct from both but overlapping with both.” Douglas Laycock, Modern American Remedies 1 (1985).

adequate remedy at law. A legal remedy (such as an award of damages) that provides sufficient relief to the petitioning party, thus preventing the party from obtaining equitable relief.

administrative remedy. A nonjudicial remedy provided by an administrative agency. • Ordinarily, if an administrative remedy is available, it must be exhausted before a court will hear the case. See EXHAUSTION OF REMEDIES.
concurrent remedy. One of two or more legal actions available to redress a wrong.

cumulative remedy. A remedy available to a party in addition to another remedy that still remains in force.

equitable remedy. A nonmonetary remedy, such as an injunction or specific performance, obtained when monetary damages cannot adequately redress the injury. See irreparable injury rule.

extrajudicial remedy. A remedy not obtained from a court, such as repossession. — Also termed self-help remedy.

extraordinary remedy. A remedy — such as a writ of mandamus or habeas corpus — not available to a party unless necessary to preserve a right that cannot be protected by a standard legal or equitable remedy.

judicial remedy. A remedy granted by a court; esp., a tort remedy that is either ordinary (as in an action for damages) or extraordinary (as in an equitable suit for an injunction).

legal remedy. A remedy available in a court of law, as distinguished from a remedy available only in equity. • After the merger of law and equity, this distinction became no longer legally relevant.

provisional remedy. 1. A restraining order or injunctive relief pending the disposition of an action; a temporary remedy, such as attachment, incidental to the primary action and available to a party while the action is pending. 2. An equitable proceeding before judgment to provide for the postjudgment safety and preservation of property.

remedy over. A remedy that arises from a right of indemnification or subrogation. • For example, if a city is liable for injuries caused by a defect in a street, the city has a “remedy over” against the person whose act or negligence caused the defect.

self-help remedy. See extrajudicial remedy.

specific remedy. A remedy for breach of contract whereby the injured party is awarded the very performance that was contractually promised, as when the court orders a defaulting seller of goods to deliver the specified goods to the buyer (as opposed to paying damages).

speedy remedy. A remedy (such as a restraining order) that, under the circumstances, can be pursued expeditiously before the aggrieved party has incurred substantial detriment.

substitutional remedy. A remedy for breach of contract intended to give the promisee something as a replacement for the promised performance, as when the court orders a defaulting seller of goods to pay the buyer damages (as opposed to delivering the goods).

remedy, mutuality of. See mutuality of remedy.

rémeré (ray-may-ray), n. [French] The right of repurchase.

REMIC (rem-ik or ree-mik). abbr. REAL-ESTATE MORTGAGE INVESTMENT CONDUIT.

remise (ri-miz), vb. To give up, surrender, or release (a right, interest, etc.); the quitclaim deed provides that the grantor remises any rights in the property.

remission. 1. A cancellation or extinguishment of all or part of a financial obligation; a release of a debt or claim.

conventional remission. Civil law. A remission expressly granted to a debtor by a creditor having capacity to alienate.

tacit remission. Civil law. A remission arising by operation of law, as when a creditor surrenders an original title to the debtor.

2. A pardon granted for an offense. 3. Relief from a forfeiture or penalty. 4. A diminution or abatement of the symptoms of a disease.

remit, vb. 1. To pardon or forgive; the wife could not remit her husband’s infidelity. 2. To abate or slacken; to mitigate; the receipt of money damages remitted the embarrassment of being fired. 3. To refer (a matter for decision) to some authority, esp. to send back (a case) to a lower court; the appellate court remitted the case to the trial court for further factual determinations. • See remand. 4. To send or put back to a previous condition or position; a landlord’s breach of a lease does not justify the tenant’s refusal to pay rent; instead, the tenant is remitted to the right to recover damages. 5. To transmit (as money); upon receiving the demand letter, she promptly remitted the amount due. — remissible (for senses 1–4), adj. — remittable (for sense 5), adj.

remittance. 1. A sum of money sent to another as payment for goods or services. 2. An instrument (such as a check) used for sending money. 3. The action or process of sending money to another person or place. remittance advice. See ADVICE.

remittance. One to whom payment is sent.

remitter. 1. The principle by which a person having two titles to an estate, and entering on it by the later or more defective title, is deemed to hold the estate by the earlier or more valid title. 2. The act of sending back a case to a lower court. 3. One who sends payment to someone else. — Also spelled (in sense 3) remitter.

remitting bank. See BANK.

quit rent. See QUIT RENT.

rent charge. The right to receive an annual sum from the income of land, usu. in perpetuity, and to retake possession if the payments are in arrears. — Also spelled rent-charge; rentcharge. — Also termed fee-farm rent.

“Rent-charge is a rent with liberty to distrain. As when a man seised of land granted by a deed poll, or by indenture, a yearly rent going out of the same land to another in fee or fee-tail, or for a term of life, etc. with clause of distress, or maketh a seoffment in fee by indenture, reserving to himself a certain yearly rent, with clause of distress.” Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 155 (1799).

“A rentcharge is an annual or periodic payment charged upon, and payable by the owner of, land. Unlike a rent service, in the case of a rentcharge there is no tenure or privy of estate between the parties. The owner of a rentcharge has no tenurial relationship with the land upon which it is charged. A rentcharge is a species of incorporeal property, but, unlike an easement, is incorporeal property in gross, being enjoyed by the owner personally and not in the capacity of proprietor of land.” Peter Butt, Land Law 330 (2d ed. 1988).

rent-seck. A rent reserved by deed but without any clause of distress. — Also spelled rent-seck. — Also termed dry rent.

rent service. A rent with some corporeal service incident to it (as by fealty) and with a right of distress.

3. Civil law. A contract by which one party conveys to another party a tract of land or other immovable property, to be held by the other party as owner and in perpetuity, in exchange for payment of an annual sum of money or quantity of fruits. See FRUIT. — Also termed rent of lands. 4. The difference between the actual return from a commodity or service and the cost of supplying it; the difference between revenue and opportunity cost. — rent, vb.

rent strike. A refusal by a group of tenants to pay rent until grievances with the landlord are heard or settled.

renunciation (ri-nan-see-ay-shan), n. 1. The express or tacit abandonment of a right without transferring it to another. 2. Criminal law. Complete and voluntary abandonment of criminal purpose — sometimes coupled with an attempt to thwart the activity's success — before a crime is committed. • Renunciation can be an affirmative defense to attempt, conspiracy, and the like. Model Penal Code § 5.01(4). — Also termed withdrawal; abandonment. 3. Wills & estates. The act of waiving a right under a will and claiming instead a statutory share. See RIGHT OF ELECTION. — renounce, vb. — renunciative, renunciatory, adj.

renvoi (ren-voy), n. [French “sending back”] 1. The doctrine under which a court in resorting to foreign law adopts as well the foreign law's conflict-of-laws principles, which may in turn refer the court back to the law of the forum. 2. The problem arising when one state's rule on conflict of laws refers a case to the law of another state, and that second state's conflict-of-law rule refers the case either back to the law of the first state or to a third state. See CONFLICT OF LAWS. 3. RECONDUCTION (2).

REO. abbr. REAL ESTATE OWNED.

reo absent (ree-oh ab-sten-tee). [Latin] The defendant being absent; the absence of the defendant.

reorganization, n. 1. Bankruptcy. A financial restructuring of a corporation, esp. in the re-payment of debts, under a plan created by a trustee and approved by a court. See CHAPTER 11.

haircut reorganization. A restructuring of the indebtedness that remains after a creditor forgives a portion of the debtor's obligation.
2. Tax. A restructuring of a corporation, as by a merger or recapitalization, in order to improve its tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code. The Code classifies the various types of reorganizations with different letters. IRC (26 USCA) § 368(a)(1). Cf. Recapitalization.

A reorganization. A reorganization that involves a merger or consolidation under a specific state statute.

B reorganization. A reorganization in which one corporation exchanges its voting shares for another corporation’s voting shares.

C reorganization. A reorganization in which one corporation exchanges its voting shares for substantially all the assets of another corporation.

D reorganization. A reorganization in which the corporation transfers some or all of its assets to another corporation that is controlled by the transferee or its shareholders, and then the stock of the transferee corporation is distributed.

E reorganization. A reorganization that involves a recapitalization.

F reorganization. A reorganization that involves a mere change in the identity, form, or place of organization of a corporation.

G reorganization. A reorganization that involves a transfer of all or part of the corporation’s assets to another corporation in a bankruptcy or similar proceeding.

reorganization bond. See adjustment bond under BOND (3).

reorganization plan. Bankruptcy. A plan of restructuring submitted by a corporation for approval by the court in a Chapter 11 case. See CHAPTER 11.

rep. abbr. 1. REPORT. 2. REPORTER. 3. REPRESENTATIVE. 4. REPUBLIC.

reparable injury. See INJURY.

reparation (rep-a-ray-shan). 1. The act of making amends for a wrong. 2. (usu. pl.) Compensation for an injury or wrong, esp. for wartime damages or breach of an international obligation.

reparative injunction. See INJECTION.

repeal, n. Abrogation of an existing law by legislative act. — repeal, vb.

express repeal. Repeal effected by specific declaration in a new statute.

implied repeal. Repeal effected by irreconcilable conflict between an old law and a new law. — Also termed repeal by implication.

repealer. 1. A legislative act abrogating an earlier law. 2. One who repeals.

repealing clause. A statutory provision that repeals an earlier statute.

repeater. See RECIDIVIST.

repeat offender. See OFFENDER.

repetition. Civil law. A demand or action for restitution or repayment. See SOLUTIO INDEBITI.

repetitum narium (ri-pet-a-tam nay-mee-am). [Law Latin] Hist. A second, repeated, or reciprocal distress; WITHERNAM.

repetundae (rep-a-ton-dee). [Latin] Roman law. 1. Money or things that can be reclaimed by a person who was forced to give them to a public official as a bribe. 2. The illegal act of forcing someone to give money or things as a bribe; extortion.

replacement cost. See COST (1).

replacement-cost depreciation method. See DEPRECIATION METHOD.

replacement insurance. See INSURANCE.

replead, vb. 1. To plead again or anew; to file a new pleading, esp. to correct a defect in an earlier pleading. 2. To make a repleader.

repleader (ree-plee-dar). Common-law pleading. A court order or judgment — issued on the motion of a party who suffered an adverse verdict — requiring the parties to file new pleadings because of some defect in the original pleadings. — Also termed judgment of repleader.

replegiare (ri-plee-jee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To take back on pledge or surety; to replevy.

repleivable (ri-plev-ee-a-bal), adj. Capable of being replevied; recoverable by replevin <replevable property. — Also spelled relevisible (ri-plev-a-sa-bal). Cf. irreplevable.

replevin (ri-plev-in), n. 1. An action for the repossessing of personal property wrongfully taken or detained by the defendant, whereby the plaintiff gives security for and holds the property until the court decides who owns it. 2. A writ obtained from a court authorizing the retaking of personal property wrongfully taken or detained. — Also termed (in sense 2) writ of replevin. Cf. detinue; trover.

“Replevin is a remedy ground and granted upon a distress, being a re-deliverance of the thing distrained to remain with the first possessor, on security or pledges given by him to try the right with the distrainer, and to answer him in a course of law.” The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 165 (3d ed. 1833).

“The action of replevin lies, where specific personal property has been wrongfully taken and is wrongfully detained, to recover possession of the property, together with damages for its detention. To support the action it is necessary: (a) That the property shall be personal. (b) That the plaintiff, at the time of suit, shall be entitled to the immediate possession. (c) That (at common law) the defendant shall have wrongfully taken the property (replevin in the cepit). But, by statute in most states, the action will now also lie where the property is wrongfully detained, though it was lawfully obtained in the first instance (replevin in the detinet). (d) That the property shall be wrongfully detained by the defendant at the time of suit.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 49, at 120 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

personal replevin. At common law, an action to replevy a person out of prison or out of another’s custody. • Personal replevin has been largely superseded by the writ of habeas corpus as a means of investigating the legality of an imprisonment. See habeas corpus.

replevin in cepit (in see-pit). An action for the repossessing of property that is both wrongfully taken and wrongfully detained.

replevin in detinet (in det-i-net). An action for the repossessing of property that is rightfully taken but wrongfully detained.

replevin bond. See bond (2).

replevisable. See relevisable.

replevisor (ri-plev-a-sar). The plaintiff in a replevin action.

replevy (ri-plev-ee), n. Archaic. Replevin.

replevy, vb. 1. To recover possession of (goods) by a writ of replevin. 2. To recover (goods) by replevin. 3. Archaic. To bail (a prisoner).

replevy bond. See replevin bond under bond (2). repliant (ri-pli-ont). A party who makes a replication (i.e., a common-law reply). — Also spelled replicant.

replicare (rep-la-kair-e), vb. [Latin] Hist. To reply; to answer a defendant’s plea.

replicatio (rep-la-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. The plaintiff’s answer to the defendant’s exception or plea; a replication.

replication (rep-la-kay-shan). A plaintiff’s or complainant’s reply to a defendant’s plea or answer; REPLY (2).

anticipatory replication. Equity pleading. The denial in an original bill of defensive matters that the defendant might rely on. • A defendant who relies on the anticipated defense must traverse the anticipatory matter in addition to setting up the defense.

general replication. Equity pleading. A replication that consists of a general denial of the defendant’s plea or answer and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill.

replication de injuria. Common-law pleading. A traverse occurring only in the replication whereby the plaintiff is permitted to traverse the whole substance of a plea consisting merely of legal excuse, when the matter does not involve a title or interest in land, authority of law, authority of fact derived from the opposing party, or any matter of record. — Also termed replication de injuria sua propria, absque tali causa.

replication per fraudem. Common-law pleading. A replication asserting that the discharge pleaded by the defendant was obtained by fraud.

special replication. Equity pleading. A replication that puts in issue a new fact to counter a new matter raised in the defendant’s plea or answer.

reply, n. 1. Civil procedure. In federal practice, the plaintiff’s response to the defendant’s counterclaim (or, by court order, to the defendant’s or a third party’s answer). Fed. R. Civ. P. 7(a). 2. Common-law pleading. The plaintiff’s response to the defendant’s plea or answer. • The reply is the plaintiff’s second pleading, and it is followed by the defendant's rejoinder. — Also termed (in sense 2) replication. — reply, vb.

reply brief. See BRIEF.

repo (ree-poh.) 1. REPOSSESSION. 2. REPURCHASE AGREEMENT.

report, n. 1. A formal oral or written presentation of facts <according to the treasurer's report, there is $300 in the bank>.

insider report. A monthly report that must be filed with the SEC when more than 10% of a company's stock is traded.

2. A written account of a court proceeding and judicial decision <the law clerk sent the court's report to counsel for both sides>.

official report. (usu. pl.) The governmentally approved set of reported cases within a given jurisdiction.

"It may justly be said that all reports are in a sense 'official,' or that to use the term 'official reports' as referring to any particular series of reports is a misnomer, for it is certainly misleading. The mere fact that each state authorizes or requires publication of reports of its Supreme Court decisions, and, to insure such publication, agrees to purchase a stated number of each volume of the reports, cannot be said to give such a series pre-eminence as an 'official' publication." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 33 (3d ed. 1914).

3. (usu. pl.) A published volume of judicial decisions by a particular court or group of courts <U.S. Reports>. • Generally, these decisions are first printed in temporary paperback volumes, and then printed in hardbound reporter volumes. Law reports may be either official (published by a government entity) or unofficial (published by a private publisher). Court citations frequently include the names of both the official and unofficial reports. — Also termed reporter; law report; law reporter. Cf. ADVANCE SHEETS. 4. (usu. pl.) A collection of administrative decisions by one or more administrative agencies. — Abbr. rep. — report, vb.

reporter. 1. A person responsible for making and publishing a report; esp., a lawyer-consultant who prepares drafts of official or semi-official writings such as court rules or Restatements <the reporter to the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules explained the various amendments>. 2. REPORTER OF DECISIONS. 3. REPORT (3) <Supreme Court Reporter>. — Abbr. rep.; rptr.

"It may not come amiss to remark that the National Report System is usually spoken of as the 'Reporters,' and one of the component parts of that system is in like manner spoken of as a 'Reporter.' Wherever, in this or the succeeding chapters of this work, the word is used with a capital, it refers to one or more of the parts of the National Reporter System. When the word 'reporter' is used without capitalization, it refers to the person who reports or edits the cases in any series of reports to which reference is being made." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 37 (3d ed. 1914).

reporter of decisions. The person responsible for publishing a court's opinions. • The reporter of decisions often has duties that include verifying citations, correcting spelling and punctuation, and suggesting minor editorial improvements before judicial opinions are released or published. — Often shortened to reporter. — Also termed court reporter.

reporter's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

reporter's record. See TRANSCRIPT.

reporter's syllabus. See HEADNOTE.

reporting company. A company that, because it issues publicly traded securities, must comply with the reporting requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

report of proceedings. See TRANSCRIPT.

reports, n. See REPORT.

repose (ri-pohz), n. 1. Cessation of activity; temporary rest. 2. A statutory period after which an action cannot be brought in court, even if it expires before the plaintiff suffers any injury. See STATUTE OF REPPOSE.

repository (ri-poz-a-tor-ee). A place where something is deposited or stored; a warehouse or storehouse.

repossession, n. The act or an instance of retaking property; esp., a seller's retaking of goods sold on credit when the buyer has failed to pay for them. — Often shortened to repo. — repossession, vb. Cf. FORECLOSURE.

representation, n. 1. A presentation of fact — either by words or by conduct — made to induce someone to act, esp. to enter into a contract <the buyer relied on the seller's repre-representation that the roof did not leak>. Cf. MISREPRESENTATION.

"Representation ... may introduce terms into a contract and affect performance; or it may induce a contract and so affect the intention of one of the parties, and the formation of the contract. ... At common law, ... if a representation did not afterwards become a substantive part of the contract, its untruth (save in certain excepted cases and apart always from fraud) was immaterial. But if it did, it might be one of two things: (1) it might be regarded by the parties as a vital term going to the root of the contract (when it is usually called a 'condition'); and in this case its untruth entitles the injured party to repudiate the whole contract; or (2) it might be a term in the nature only of an independent subsidiary promise (when it is usually called a 'warranty'), which is indeed a part of the contract, but does not go to the root of it; in this case its untruth only gives rise to an action ex contractu for damages, and does not entitle the injured party to repudiate the whole contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 218, 222 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

affirmative representation. A representation asserting the existence of certain facts pertaining to a given subject matter.

false representation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

material representation. A representation that relates directly to the matter in issue or that actually causes an event to occur (such as a party’s relying on the representation in entering into a contract). • Material representation is a necessary element of an action for fraud.

promissory representation. A representation about what one will do in the future; esp., a representation made by an insured about what will happen during the time of coverage, stated as a matter of expectation and amounting to an enforceable promise.

2. The act or an instance of standing for or acting on behalf of another, esp. by a lawyer on behalf of a client <Clarence Darrow’s representation of Mr. Scopes>. 3. The fact of a litigant’s having such a close alignment of interests with another person that the other is considered as having been present in the litigation <the named plaintiff provided adequate representation for the absent class members>. See ADEQUATE REPRESENTATION. 4. The assumption by an heir of the rights and obligations of his or her predecessor <each child takes a share by representation>. See PER Stirpes. — represent, vb.

representation, estoppel by. See estoppel by representation under ESTOPPEL.

representation election. See ELECTION.

representative, n. 1. One who stands for or acts on behalf of another <the owner was the football team’s representative at the labor negotiations>. See AGENT.

accredited representative. A person with designated authority to act on behalf of another person, group, or organization, usu. by being granted that authority by law or by the rules of the group or organization <as an officer of the union, she was the accredited representative of the employees in the wage dispute>.

class representative. A person who sues on behalf of a group of plaintiffs in a class action. — Also termed named plaintiff. See CLASS ACTION.

independent personal representative. See personal representative.

lawful representative. 1. A legal heir. 2. An executor or administrator. 3. Any other legal representative.

legal-personal representative. 1. When used by a testator referring to personal property, an executor or administrator. 2. When used by a testator referring to real property, one to whom the real estate passes immediately upon the testator’s death. 3. When used concerning the death of a seaman, the public administrator, executor, or appointed administrator in the seaman’s state of residence.

personal representative. A person who manages the legal affairs of another because of incapacity or death, such as the executor of an estate. — Also termed independent personal representative; legal representative.

registered representative. A person approved by the SEC and stock exchanges to sell securities to the public. — Also termed customer’s man; customer’s person.

2. A member of a legislature, esp. of the lower house <one senator and one representative attended the rally>. — Abbr. rep.

representative action. 1. CLASS ACTION. 2. DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

representative capacity. The position of one standing or acting for another, esp. through delegated authority <an agent acting in a representative capacity for the principal>.

representee. One to whom a representation is made.

"First, where the representor can show that he was not negligent, he will not be liable under the 1967 Act; and secondly, where the representee wants to claim damages at the contractual rate, for loss of his bargain, it may be that the Misrepresentation Act will not suffice.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 165 (3d ed. 1981).

repressor. One who makes a representation.

‘[I]t is arguable that even where a contracting party does not intend to guarantee the accuracy of what he says, the other party is at least entitled to assume that due care has been taken by the repressor.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 309 (3d ed. 1981).

repressive tax. See sin tax under TAX.

reprove (ri-préev), n. Temporary postponement of the execution of a criminal sentence, esp. a death sentence. — reprove, vb. Cf. COMMUTATION (2); PARDON.

“The term reprove is derived from reprendre, to keep back, and signifies the withdrawing of the sentence for an interval of time, and operates in delay of execution.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 757 (2d ed. 1826).

reprimand, n. In professional responsibility, a form of disciplinary action — imposed after trial or formal charges — that declares the lawyer’s conduct improper but does not limit his or her right to practice law. — reprimand, vb.

private reprimand. A reprimand that is not published but instead communicated only to the lawyer, or that is published without identifying the lawyer by name.

public reprimand. A reprimand that is published, usu. in a bar journal or legal newspaper.

reprisal (ri-prí-zal). 1. (often pl.) Int’l law. The use of force, short of war, against another country to redress an injury caused by that country.

“‘Reprisals’ is a word with a long history, and modern writers are not agreed on the meaning which should be given to it today. Literally and historically it denotes the seizing of property or persons by way of retaliation. Reprisals when they are taken today are taken by a state, but some writers would still limit the word to acts of taking or withholding the property of a foreign state or its nationals, for example by an embargo, whilst others would abandon the historical associations and use it to denote any kind of coercive action not amounting to war whereby a state attempts to secure satisfaction from another for some wrong which the latter has committed against it.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 321-22 (5th ed. 1955).

general reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation directs all its military officers and citizens to redress an injury caused by another nation. • An example is a command to seize the property of the offending nation wherever it is found.

negative reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation refuses to perform an obligation to another nation, such as the fulfillment of a treaty.

positive reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation forcibly seizes another nation’s property or persons.

special reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation authorizes an aggrieved private citizen to redress an injury caused by another nation. • An example is an authorization for a private citizen to seize a particular vessel of the offending nation. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

2. (often pl.) Int’l law. An act of forceful retaliation for injury or attack by another country; formerly, in war, the killing of prisoners in response to an enemy’s war crimes (now unlawful). Cf. RETORSION. 3. Any act or instance of retaliation, as by an employer against a complaining employee.

reprise (ri-príz), n. An annual deduction, duty, or payment out of a manor or estate, such as an annuity.

reprobation (rep-ra-bay-shan). The act of raising an objection or exception, as to the competency of a witness or the sufficiency of evidence. — reprobate (rep-ra-bayt), vb. — reprobationary (rep-ra-bay-sha-ner-ee), reprobative (rep-ra-bay-tiv), adj.

reprobator (rep-ra-bay-tar). Scots law. Hist. A proceeding to disqualify a witness or to invalidate the testimony of an objectionable witness. — Also termed action of reprobator.

reproduction right. A copyright holder’s exclusive right to make copies or phonorecords of the protected work. • Unauthorized copying constitutes infringement.

reproductive rights. A person’s rights relating to the control of his or her procreative activities; specif., the cluster of civil liberties relating to pregnancy, abortion, and sterilization, esp. the personal bodily rights of women in their decision whether to become pregnant or bear a child. • The phrase includes the idea of being able to make reproductive decisions free from discrimination, coercion, or violence. Human-rights scholars increasingly consider reproductive rights to be protected by international human-rights law.
republic, n. A system of government in which the people hold sovereign power and elect representatives who exercise that power. • It contrasts on the one hand with a pure democracy, in which the people or community as an organized whole wield the sovereign power of government, and on the other with the rule of one person (such as a king, emperor, czar, or sultan). — Abbr. rep. — republican, adj. Cf. DEMOCRACY.

republication, n. 1. The act or an instance of publishing again or anew. 2. Wills & estates. Reestablishment of the validity of a previously revoked will by repeating the formalities of execution or by using a codicil. • The result is to make the old will effective from the date of republication. — Also termed (in sense 2) revivification. — republish, vb. Cf. REVIVAL (2).

repudiate, vb. 1. To reject or renounce (a duty or obligation); esp., to indicate an intention not to perform (a contract). 2. Hist. To divorce or disown (one’s wife).

repudiatee (ri-pyoo-dee-a-tee). A party to a contract that has been repudiated by the other party.

repudiation (ri-pyoo-dee-ay-shon), n. A contracting party’s words or actions that indicate an intention not to perform the contract in the future; a threatened breach of contract. — repudiatory (ri-pyoo-dee-a-tor-ee), repudiable (ri-pyoo-dee-a-bal), adj. Cf. REJECTION; RESCISSION.

“A repudiation is (a) a statement by the obligee to the obligor indicating that the obligor will commit a breach that would of itself give the obligee a claim for damages for total breach under § 243, or (b) a voluntary affirmative act which renders the obligor unable or apparently unable to perform without such a breach.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 250 (1981).

“Unfortunately, the terminology adopted by lawyers in this field has been neither uniform nor consistent, owing primarily to the historical difference between common law and equity, each originating in a different Court. Thus, whereas common lawyers tend to talk of repudiating a contract, equity lawyers talk of rescinding or setting aside a contract. Further inconsistency arises from the special terminology used in relation to certain special contracts. For instance, in a contract of sale of goods, we talk of the buyer rejecting the goods rather than repudiating the contract, although this usually amounts to the same thing. Further confusion arises from the fact that lawyers use the word ‘repudiation’ indiscriminately to mean rightful and wrongful repudiation, and it may not always be clear, at any rate to the beginner, which they mean. However, the main difficulty is the divergence between common law and equity, and this divergence is so deep-rooted that lawyers still feel that repudiation and rescission are different things. Thus most books on the law of Contract discuss the right to repudiate the contract for breach of condition in a section on Remedies, while they treat of the right to rescind a contract in the section on Misrepresentation. Indeed, so different are repudiation and rescission believed to be, that serious confusion is caused in the law of sale of goods by the fact that the Sale of Goods Act regulates the former but not the latter.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 294 (3d ed. 1981).

anticipatory repudiation. Repudiation of a contractual duty before the time for performance, giving the injured party an immediate right to damages for total breach, as well as discharging the injured party’s remaining duties of performance. • This type of repudiation occurs when the promisor unequivocally disavows any intention to perform when the time for performance comes. Once the repudiation occurs, the nonrepudiating party has three options: (1) treat the repudiation as an immediate breach and sue for damages; (2) ignore the repudiation, urge the repudiator to perform, wait for the specified time of performance, and sue if the repudiating party does not perform; and (3) cancel the contract. — Also termed renunciation. See anticipatory breach under BREACH OF CONTRACT.

The first Restatement lists three actions that constitute anticipatory repudiation: “(a) a positive statement to the promise or other person having a right under the contract, indicating that the promisor will not or cannot substantially perform his contractual duties; (b) transferring or contracting to transfer to a third person an interest in specific land, goods, or in any other thing essential for the substantial performance of his contractual duties; (c) any voluntary affirmative act which renders substantial performance of his contractual duties impossible, or apparently impossible.” Restatement of Contracts § 318 (1932).

total repudiation. An unconditional refusal by a party to perform the acts required by a contract. • This type of repudiation justifies the other party in refraining from performance.

repudiator (ri-pyoo-dee-ay-tar). One who repudiates; esp., a party who repudiates a contract.

repugnancy (ri-pog-nan-see). An inconsistency or contradiction between two or more parts of a legal instrument (such as a contract or statute).

repugnant (ri-pog-nant), adj. Inconsistent or irreconcilable with; contrary or contradictory to <the court’s interpretation was repugnant to the express wording of the statute>.

repugnant verdict. See VERDICT.
repurchase, n. The act or an instance of buying something back or again; esp., a corporation's buying back of some or all of its stock at market price. — repurchase, vb. See redemption.

repurchase agreement. A short-term loan agreement by which one party sells a security to another party but promises to buy back the security on a specified date at a specified price. — Often shortened to repo.

repurchase price. See redemption price under price.

reputation, n. The esteem in which a person is held by others. • Evidence of reputation may be introduced as proof of character whenever character evidence is admissible. Fed. R. Evid. 405. — reputational, adj.

reputational evidence. See reputation evidence under evidence.

reputation evidence. See evidence.

reputed manor. See manor.

request for admission. Civil procedure. In pretrial discovery, a party's written factual statement served on another party who must admit, deny, or object to the substance of the statement. • Ordinarily, many requests for admission appear in one document. The admitted statements — along with any statements not denied or objected to — will be treated by the court as established, and therefore do not have to be proved at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36. — Abbrev. RFA. — Also termed request for admissions; request to admit.

request for instructions. Procedure. During trial, a party's written request that the court instruct the jury on the law as set forth in the request. Fed. R. Civ. P. 51. — Abbrev. RFI. — Also termed request to charge.

request for production. Procedure. In pretrial discovery, a party's written request that another party provide specified documents or other tangible things for inspection and copying. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34. — Abbrev. RFP. — Also termed notice to produce; demand for document inspection.

request to admit. See request for admission.

request to charge. See request for instructions.

required-records doctrine. The principle that the privilege against self-incrimination does not apply when one is being compelled to produce business records that are kept in accordance with government regulations and that involve public aspects. • Some courts have held that certain medical records and tax forms fall within this doctrine and are thus not protected by the privilege against self-incrimination.

required reserve. See reserve.

requirements contract. See contract.

requisition (rek-wa-zish-an), n. 1. An authoritative, formal demand . 2. A governmental seizure of property <the state's requisition of the shopping center during the weather emergency>. See taking. — requisition, vb.

requisitionist. One who makes a formal demand (as for the performance of an obligation or the return of a fugitive). See requisition (1).

requisitory letter. See letter of requisition.

rere-county (reer-kown-tee). Hist. A subsidiary English county court held by the sheriff on the day after the regular county court. — Also spelled rere county; rier county.

res (rays or reez or rez), n. [Latin "thing"] 1. An object, interest, or status, as opposed to a person <jurisdiction of the res — the real property in Colorado>. 2. The subject matter of a trust; corpus (2) <the stock certificate is the res of the trust>. Pl. res.

res accessoria (rays ak-sea-or-ee-a). [Latin] Civil law. An accessory thing; a thing that is related to a principal thing.

res adjudicata (rays a-joo-di-kay-ta or -kah-ta). See res judicata.

resale, n. 1. The act of selling goods or property — previously sold to a buyer who breached the sales contract — to someone else. UCC § 2–706. 2. A retailer's selling of goods, previously purchased from a manufacturer or wholesaler, to consumers. — resell, vb.
resale-price maintenance. A form of price-fixing in which a manufacturer forces or persuades several different retailers to sell the manufacturer’s product at the same price, thus preventing competition. • Resale-price maintenance is per se illegal under antitrust law. But a manufacturer is permitted to suggest a retail price as long as it does not compel retailers to sell at that price. See vertical price-fixing under PRICE-FIXING.

reseit (ri-seet). Hist. The admittance of an interested third party to plead in a case between two others; intervention.

rescind (ri-sind), vb. 1. To abrogate or cancel (a contract) unilaterally or by agreement. 2. To make void; to repeal or annul <rescind the legislation>. — rescindable, adj.

recissio (ri-sis[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] Civil law. Annullment or voiding of something; rescission.

rescission (ri-sizh-an), n. 1. A party’s unilateral unmaking of a contract for a legally sufficient reason, such as the other party’s material breach. • Rescission is generally available as a remedy or defense for a nondefaulting party and restores the parties to their precontractual positions. 2. An agreement by contracting parties to discharge all remaining duties of performance and terminate the contract. — Also termed (in sense 2) agreement of rescission; mutual rescission; abandonment. — Also spelled recission; recision. — rescissory (ri-sis-o-ree or ri-siz-), adj. Cf. REJECTION; REPUDIATION.

"The [UCC] takes cognizance of the fact that the term ‘rescission’ is often used by lawyers, courts and businessmen in many different senses; for example, termination of a contract by virtue of an option to terminate in the agreement, cancellation for breach and avoidance on the grounds of infancy or fraud. In the interests of clarity of thought — as the consequences of each of these forms of discharge may vary — the Commercial Code carefully distinguishes three circumstances. ‘Rescission’ is utilized as a term of art to refer to a mutual agreement to discharge contractual duties. ‘Termination’ refers to the discharge of duties by the exercise of a power granted by the agreement. ‘Cancellation’ refers to the putting an end to the contract by reason of a breach by the other party. Section 2-720, however, takes into account that the parties do not necessarily use these terms in this way." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21-2, at 864-65 (3d ed. 1987).

equitable rescission. Rescission that is decreed by a court of equity.

legal rescission. Rescission that is effected by the agreement of the parties.

rescissory damages. See DAMAGES.

res communes (rays ka-myoo-nee). [Latin "common things"] Civil law. Things common to all; things that cannot be owned or appropriated, such as light, air, and the sea.

res corporales (rays kor-pa-ray-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Corporeal things; tangible things that are perceptible to the senses.

rescous (res-kas). 1. RESCUE (2). 2. RESCUE (3).

rescript (ree-skrip-t), n. 1. A judge’s written order to a court clerk explaining how to dispose of a case. 2. An appellate court’s written decision, usu. unsigned, that is sent down to the trial court. 3. A Roman emperor’s or a Pope’s written answer to a legal inquiry or petition. Cf. PRECES. 4. A duplicate or counterpart; a rewriting.

rescue, n. 1. The act or an instance of saving or freeing someone from danger or captivity. 2. The forcible and unlawful freeing of a person from arrest or imprisonment. — Also termed rescous.

"A rescue signifies a forcible setting at liberty, against law, of a person duly arrested. It is necessary, that the rescuer should have knowledge that the person whom he sets at liberty has been apprehended for a criminal offence, if he be in the custody of a private person; but if he be under the care of an officer, then he is to take notice of it at his peril." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 62 (2d ed. 1826).

3. The forcible retaking by the owner of goods that have been lawfully distrained. — Also termed rescous. Cf. REPOSSESSION. 4. Int’l law. The retaking of a prize by persons captured with it, so that the property is legally restored to its original owner. See POSTLIMINIUM (2). — rescue, vb.

rescue clause. See SUE-AND-LABOR CLAUSE.

rescue doctrine. Torts. The principle that a tortfeasor who negligently endangered a person is liable for injuries to someone who reasonably attempted to rescue the person in danger. ● The rationale for this doctrine is that an attempted rescue of someone in danger is always foreseeable. Thus, if the tortfeasor is negligent toward the rescuer, the tortfeasor is also negligent toward the rescuer. Cf. EMERGENCY DOCTRINE; GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE.

rescussu. See DE RESCUSSU.

res derelicta (rays der'-ə-lık-tə). [Latin] A thing thrown away or forsaken by its owner; abandoned property.

res dominans (rays dom'-ə-nanz). [Latin] The dominant property entitled to enjoy a servitude. See dominant estates under ESTATE.

research and development. An effort (as by a company or business enterprise) to create or improve products or services, esp. by discovering new technology or advancing existing technology. — Abbr. R and D; R & D.

reseiser (ri-see-zar). Hist. The taking of lands by the monarch in a case in which a general livery or ouster le main was previously misused.

resentencing, n. The act or an instance of imposing a new or revised criminal sentence. — resentence, vb.

reservation. 1. The creation of a new right or interest (such as an easement), by and for the grantor, in real property being granted to another. Cf. EXCEPTION (3).

implied reservation. An implied easement that reserves in a landowner an easement across a portion of sold land, such as a right-of-way over land lying between the seller’s home and the only exit. ● An implied reservation arises only if the seller could have expressly reserved an easement, but for some reason failed to do so. See implied easement under EASEMENT.

“If the implied easement is in favor of the conveyee and is appurtenant to the tract conveyed, it is called an implied grant; if the implied easement is in favor of the conveyor and is appurtenant to the tract retained, it is called an implied reservation.” Ralph E. Boyer et al., The Law of Property 311 (4th ed. 1991).

2. The establishment of a limiting condition or qualification; esp., a nation’s formal declaration, upon signing or ratifying a treaty, that its willingness to become a party to the treaty is conditioned on certain additional terms that will limit the effect of the treaty in some way.

3. A tract of public land set aside for a special purpose; esp., a tract of land set aside for use by an American Indian tribe. — Also termed (in sense 3) reserve.

reservation of rights. See NONWAIVER AGREEMENT.

reserve, n. 1. Something retained or stored for future use; esp., a fund of money set aside by a bank or an insurance company to cover future liabilities.

amortization reserve. An account created for bookkeeping purposes to extinguish an obligation gradually over time.

bad-debt reserve. A reserve to cover losses on uncollectible accounts receivable.

legal reserve. The minimum amount of liquid assets that a bank or an insurance company must maintain by law to meet depositors’ or claimants’ demands.

loss reserve. 1. An insurance company’s reserve that represents the estimated value of future payments, as for losses incurred but not yet reported. 2. A bank’s reserve set aside to cover possible losses, as from defaulting loans.

mean reserve. In insurance, the average of the beginning reserve (after the premium has been paid for the policy year) and the ending reserve of the policy year.

policy reserve. An insurance company’s reserve that represents the difference between net premiums and expected claims for a given year. ● This type of reserve is kept esp. by life-insurance companies.

required reserve. The minimum amount of money, as required by the Federal Reserve Board, that a bank must hold in the form of vault cash and deposits with regional Federal Reserve Banks.

sinking-fund reserve. A reserve used to pay long-term debt. See sinking fund under FUND (1).

unearned-premium reserve. An insurance company’s reserve that represents premiums that have been received in advance but not yet applied to policy coverage. ● If a policyholder cancels coverage before the policy expires but has already paid a premium for the full policy period, the insurance company refunds the policyholder out of this reserve.

2. RESERVATION (3). 3. See net value under VALUE. — reserve, vb.
reserve account. See impound account under ACCOUNT.

reserve bank. See member bank under BANK.

Reserve Board. See FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD OF GOVERNORS.

reserve clause. A clause in a professional athlete’s contract restricting the athlete’s right to change teams, even after the contract expires. ● Reserve clauses are uncommon in modern professional sports. Cf. FREE AGENCY.

reserved easement. See EASEMENT.

reserved point of law. See POINT OF LAW.

reserved power. See POWER.

Reserved Power Clause. See TENTH AMENDMENT.

reserved surplus. See appropriated surplus under SURPLUS.

reserve price. See PRICE.

reserve ratio. The Federal Reserve Board’s measurement of a member bank’s required reserves. See required reserve under RESERVE.

primary reserve ratio. The ratio between a bank’s required reserves (cash in vault plus deposits with Federal Reserve Banks) and its demand and time deposits.

secondary reserve ratio. The ratio between a bank’s government securities and its demand and time deposits.

reset, n. Scots law. 1. The act or an instance of receiving stolen goods with the intent of depriving the owner of them. 2. Archaic. The harboring or sheltering of a criminal or outlaw. — reset, vb.

resettlement, n. 1. The settlement of one or more persons in a new or former place. 2. The reopening of an order or decree for the purpose of correcting a mistake or adding an omission.

res fungibles (rays fan-jib-a-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Fungible things; things that are commercially interchangeable.

res gestae (rays jes-tee also jes-ti), n. pl. [Latin “things done”] The events at issue, or other events contemporaneous with them. ● In evidence law, words and statements about the res gestae are usu. admissible under a hearsay exception (such as present sense impression or excited utterance). Where the Federal Rules of Evidence or state rules fashioned after them are in effect, the use of res gestae is now out of place. See Fed. R. Evid. 803(1), (2). — Also termed res gesta.

“The Latin expression ‘res gestae’ or ‘res gesta,’ literally ‘things done’ or ‘thing transacted,’ has long served as a catchword . . . [T]he phrase has frequently served both to let in utterances which in strictness were not admissible and to exclude utterances which might well have been admitted. And frequently also its indefiniteness has served as a basis for rulings where it was easier for the judge to invoke this imposing catchword than to think through the real question involved. The phrase is antiquated. By modern judges it is being gradually discarded. It is superfluous, and serves only to obscure the logic of the rules. It should be left to oblivion.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 279 (1935).

“The res gestae embraces not only the actual facts of the transaction and the circumstances surrounding it, but the matters immediately antecedent to and having a direct causal connection with it, as well as acts immediately following it and so closely connected with it as to form in reality a part of the occurrence.” State v. Pouquette, 221 P.2d 404, 416–17 (Nev. 1950).

res gestae witness. See WITNESS.

res habiles (rays hab-a-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Things that may be acquired by prescription.

resiant (rez-ee-ant), adj. Archaic. Continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident.

resiant, n. Archaic. A resident.

residence. 1. The act or fact of living in a given place for some time . 2. The place where one actually lives, as distinguished from a domicile <she made her residence in Oregon>. ● Residence usu. just means bodily presence as an inhabitant in a given place; domicile usu. requires bodily presence plus an intention to make the place one’s home. A person thus may have more than one residence at a time but only one domicile. Sometimes, though, the two terms are used synonymously. Cf. Domicile. 3. The place where a corporation or other enterprise does business or is registered to do business <Pantheon Inc.’s principal residence is in Delaware>. 4. A house or other fixed abode; a dwelling .

residency. 1. A place of residence, esp. an official one <the diplomat’s residency>. 2. The fact or condition of living in a given place <one year’s residency to be eligible for in-state tuition>.

resident, n. A person who has a residence in a particular place. • A resident is not necessarily either a citizen or a domiciliary. Cf. CITIZEN; DOMICILIARY.

resident agent. See registered agent under AGENT.

resident alien. See ALIEN.

residential cluster. Land-use planning. An area of land developed as a unit with group housing and open common space. Cf. PLANNED-UNIT DEVELOPMENT.

residential community treatment center. See HALFWAY HOUSE.

residua (ri-zij-oo-a). pl. RESIDUUM.

residual, adj. Of, relating to, or constituting a residue; remaining; leftover  .

residual, n. 1. A leftover quantity; a remainder. 2. (often pl.) A disability remaining after an illness, injury, or operation. 3. (usu. pl.) A fee paid to a composer or performer for each repeated broadcast (esp. on television) of a film, program, or commercial.

residual estate. See residuary estate under ESTATE.

residual value. See salvage value under VALUE.

residuary (ri-zij-oo-er-ee), adj. Of, relating to, or constituting a residue; residual .

residuary, n. Wills & estates. 1. See residuary estate under ESTATE. 2. See residuary legatee under LEGATEE.

residuary bequest. See BEQUEST.

residuary clause. Wills & estates. A testamentary clause that disposes of any estate property remaining after the satisfaction of specific bequests and devises.

residuary devise. See DEVISE.

residuary devisee. See DEVISEE.

residuary estate. See ESTATE.

residuary legacy. See LEGACY.

residuary legatee. See LEGATEE.

residue. 1. Something that is left over after a part is removed or disposed of; a remainder. 2. See residuary estate under ESTATE.

residuum (ri-zij-oo-am). 1. That which remains; a residue. 2. See residuary estate under ESTATE. Pl. residua (ri-zij-oo-a).

residuum rule. Administrative law. The principle that an agency decision based partly on hearsay evidence will be upheld on judicial review only if the decision is founded on at least some competent evidence. • The residuum rule has generally been rejected by federal and state courts.

resignation, n. 1. The act or an instance of surrendering or relinquishing an office, right, or claim. 2. A formal notification of relinquishing an office or position. — resign, vb.

res immobiles (rays i-moh-ba-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Immovable things; chattels real. See IMMOBILIA.

res incorporales (rays in-kor-pa-ray-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Incorporeal things; intangible things that are not perceptible to the senses. See incorporeal thing under THING.

res integra (rays in-ta-gra also in-teg-ra). [Latin “an entire thing”] See RES NOVA.

res inter alios acta (rays in-tar ay-lee-ohs ak-ta). [Latin “a thing done between others”] 1. Contracts. The common-law doctrine holding that a contract cannot unfavorably affect the rights of a person who is not a party to the contract. 2. Evidence. The rule prohibiting the admission of collateral facts into evidence.

res ipsa loquitur (rays ip-sa loh-kwa-tar). [Latin “the thing speaks for itself”] 1. Torts. The doctrine providing that, in some circumstances, the mere fact of an accident’s occurrence raises an inference of negligence so as to establish a prima facie case. — Often shortened to res ipsa. — Also termed res ipsa.
res ipsa loquitur

“The phrase ‘res ipsa loquitur’ is a symbol for the rule that the fact of the occurrence of an injury, taken with the surrounding circumstances, may permit an inference or raise a presumption of negligence, or make out a plaintiff’s prima facie case, and present a question of fact for defendant to meet with an explanation. It is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant on the accident are of such a nature as to justify a jury, in light of common sense and past experience, in inferring that the accident was probably the result of the defendant’s negligence, in the absence of explanation or other evidence which the jury believes.” Stuart M. Speiser, The Negligence Case: Res Ipsa Loquitur § 1-2, at 5–6 (1972).

“It is said that res ipsa loquitur does not apply if the cause of the harm is known. This is a dark saying. The application of the principle nearly always presupposes that some part of the causal process is known, but what is lacking is evidence of its connection with the defendant’s act or omission. When the fact of control is used to justify the inference that defendant’s negligence was responsible it must of course be shown that the thing in his control in fact caused the harm. In a sense, therefore, the cause of the harm must be known before the maxim can apply.” H.L.A. Hart & Tony Honore, Causation in the Law 419–20 (2nd ed. 1985).

“Res ipsa loquitur is an appropriate form of circumstantial evidence enabling the plaintiff in particular cases to establish the defendant’s likely negligence. Hence the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, properly applied, does not entail any covert form of strict liability. . . . The doctrine implies that the court does not know, and cannot find out, what actually happened in the individual case. Instead, the finding of likely negligence is derived from knowledge of the causes of the type or category of accidents involved.” Restatement (Third) of Torts § 15 cmt. a (Discussion Draft 1999).

2. Criminal law. A test used to determine whether a defendant has gone beyond preparation and committed an attempt, based on whether the defendant’s act itself indicated to an observer what the defendant intended to do. — Also termed (in sense 2) equivocality.

resisting arrest. The crime of obstructing or opposing a police officer who is making an arrest. — Also termed resisting lawful arrest.

resisting unlawful arrest. The act of opposing a police officer who is making an unlawful arrest. • Most jurisdictions have accepted the Model Penal Code position prohibiting the use of force to resist an unlawful arrest when the person arrested knows that a police officer is making the arrest. But some jurisdictions allow an arrestee to use nondeadly force to prevent the arrest.

res judicata (rays joo-di-kay-ta or -kah-ta). [Latin “a thing adjudicated”] 1. An issue that has been definitively settled by judicial decision. 2. An affirmative defense barring the same parties from litigating a second lawsuit on the same claim, or any other claim arising from the same transaction or series of transactions and that could have been — but was not — raised in the first suit. • The three essential elements are (1) an earlier decision on the issue, (2) a final judgment on the merits, and (3) the involvement of the same parties, or parties in privity with the original parties. Restatement (Second) of Judgments §§ 17, 24 (1982). — Also termed res adjudicata; claim preclusion. Cf. COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

“Res judicata’ has been used in this section as a general term referring to all of the ways in which one judgment will have a binding effect on another. That usage is and doubtless will continue to be common, but it lumps under a single name two quite different effects of judgments. The first is the effect of foreclosing any litigation of matters that never have been litigated, because of the determination that they should have been advanced in an earlier suit. The second is the effect of foreclosing relitigation of matters that have once been litigated and decided. The first of these, preclusion of matters that were never litigated, has gone under the name, ‘true res judicata,’ or the names, ‘merger’ and ‘bar.’ The second doctrine, preclusion of matters that have once been decided, has usually been called ‘collateral estoppel.’ Professor Allan Vestal has long argued for the use of the names ‘claim preclusion’ and ‘issue preclusion’ for these two doctrines [Vestal, Rationale of Preclusion, 9 St. Louis U. L.J. 29 (1964)], and this usage is increasingly employed by the courts as it is by Restatement Second of Judgments.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 100A, at 722–23 (5th ed. 1994).

res litigiosae (rays li-tij-ee-oh-see). [Latin] Civil law. Things that are in litigation; property or rights that are the subject of a pending action.

res mancipi (rays man-so-pl). [Latin “things of mancipium”] Roman law. Property that can be transferred only by a formal ceremony of mancipation. — Also termed mancipi res; things mancipi. See MANCIPATION.

res nee mancipi (rays nek man-so-pl). [Latin “things not of mancipium”] Roman law. Property that can be transferred without a formal ceremony of mancipation. — Also termed things nee mancipi.

res nullius (rays na-ll-as). [Latin “thing of no one”] A thing that can belong to no one; an ownerless chattel. resolution. 1. A formal expression of an opinion, intention, or decision by an official body or assembly (esp. a legislature).

concurrent resolution. A resolution passed by one house and agreed to by the other. • It expresses the legislature’s opinion on a subject but does not have the force of law.

joint resolution. A legislative resolution passed by both houses. • It has the force of law and is subject to executive veto.

simple resolution. A resolution passed by one house only. • It expresses the opinion or affects the internal affairs of the passing house, but it does not have the force of law.

2. Formal action by a corporate board of directors or other corporate body authorizing a particular act, transaction, or appointment.

shareholder resolution. A resolution by shareholders, usu. to ratify the actions of the board of directors.

3. A document containing such an expression or authorization.

Resolution Trust Corporation. A federal agency established to act as a receiver for insolvent federal savings-and-loan associations and to transfer or liquidate those associations’ assets. • The agency was created when the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation was abolished in 1989. — Abbr. RTC. See FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION.

resolutive condition. See resolutory condition under CONDITION (2).

resolutory (ri-zahl-yaa-tor-ee), adj. Operating or serving to annul, dissolve, or terminate .

resolutory condition. See CONDITION (2).

resort, n. Something that one turns to for aid or refuge <the court of last resort>. — resort, vb.

RESPA (res-pa), abbr. REAL ESTATE SETTLEMENT PROCEDURES ACT.

respite (res-pit), n. 1. A period of temporary delay; an extension of time. 2. A temporary suspension of a death sentence; a reprieve. 3. A delay granted to a jury or court for further consideration of a verdict or appeal. 4. Civil law. An agreement between a debtor and several creditors for an extension of time to repay the various debts. — respite, vb.

forced respite. A respite in which some of the creditors are compelled by a court to give the same extension of time that the other creditors have agreed to.

voluntary respite. A respite in which all the creditors agree to the debtor’s proposal for an extension of time.

respondeat ouster (ri-spon-dee-at ow-star). [Latin “let him make further answer’’] A judgment or order that a party who made a dilatory plea that has been denied must now plead on the merits.

“In case of felony, if the plea be held bad, the judgment is respondeat ouster; or rather, as the defendant generally pleads over to the felony, the jury are charged again, and that at the same time with the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, to inquire of the second issue, and the trial proceeds as if no plea in bar had been pleaded.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 461 (2d ed. 1826).

respondeat superior (ri-spon-dee-at soo-peer-ee-or or sa-peer-ee-or). [Law Latin “let the superior make answer’’] Tort. The doctrine holding an employer or principal liable for the employee’s or agent’s wrongful acts committed within the scope of the employment or agency. — Also termed master-servant rule. See SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

“Most courts have made little or no effort to explain the result, and have taken refuge in rather empty phrases, such as ‘he who does a thing through another does it himself,’ or the endlessly repeated formula of ‘respondeat superior,’ which in itself means nothing more than ‘look to the man higher up.’” W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 69, at 500 (6th ed. 1984).

respondent. 1. The party against whom an appeal is taken; APPELLTEE. 2. The party against whom a motion or petition is filed. Cf. PETITIONER. 3. At common law, the defendant in an equity proceeding. 4. Civil law. One who answers for another or acts as another’s security.

respondent bank. See BANK.

respondentia (ree-spon-den-shhee-a or res-pon-). [Law Latin fr. Latin respondere “to answer”] A loan secured by the cargo on one’s ship rather than the ship itself. Cf. BOTTOMRY.

respondentia bond. See BOND (2).

respondere non debet (ri-spon-da-ree non deb-at). [Latin] Common-law pleading. The prayer of a plea in which the defendant insists that he or she does not have to answer — because of a privilege, for example.

responsum prudentium (ri-spon-sa proo-den-shoe-am). [Latin "the answers of the learned"] Hist. The opinions and judgments of eminent lawyers or jurists on questions of law addressed to them. • The responsum prudentium originally constituted part of the early Roman civil law. Roman citizens seeking legal advice, as well as magistrates and judges, often referred legal questions to leading jurists so as to obtain their opinions (responsa). The responsum of some leading jurists were collected, much in the manner of caselaw digests, and many of them passed into Justinian’s Digest. The phrase responsum prudentium gradually migrated to the common law, but today it is of primarily historical use. — Also spelled responsum prudentum.

"[T]he judex, or as we would now call him, the referee, might have no technical knowledge of law whatever. Under such conditions the unlearned judicial magistrates naturally looked for light and leading to the jurists who instructed them through their responsum prudentium, the technical name given to their opinions as experts, which were promptly recorded on tablets by their students or disciples." Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 90–91 (1908).

"In classical Latin responsum prudentium is the usual form, but most of the legal sources . . . have prudentum following the example of Blackstone (1765)." The Oxford English Dictionary (2d ed. 1989).

responsibility, n. 1. LIABILITY (1). 2. Criminal law. A person’s mental fitness to answer in court for his or her actions. See COMPETENCY. 3. Criminal law. Guilt. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) criminal responsibility. • responsible, adj.

"[As for] the ambiguities of the word ‘responsibility,’ . . . it is, I think, still important to distinguish two of the very different things this difficult word may mean. To say that someone is legally responsible for something often means only that under legal rules he is liable to be made either to suffer or to pay compensation in certain eventualities. The expression ‘he’ll pay for it’ covers both these things. In this the primary sense of the word, though a man is normally only responsible for his own actions or the harm he has done, he may also be responsible for the actions of other persons if legal rules so provide. Indeed in this sense a baby in arms or a totally insane person might be legally responsible — again, if the rules so provide; for the word simply means liable to be made to account or pay and we might call this sense of the word ‘legal accountability’. But the new idea — the programme of eliminating responsibility — is not, as some have feared, meant to eliminate legal accountability: persons who break the law are not just to be left free.

What is to be eliminated are enquiries as to whether a person who has done what the law forbids was responsible at the time he did it and responsible in this sense does not refer to the legal status of accountability. It means the capacity, so far as this is a matter of a man’s mind or will, which normal people have to control their actions and conform to law. In this sense of responsibility a man’s responsibility can be said to be ‘impaired’. " H.L.A. Hart, "Changing Conceptions of Responsibility," in Punishment and Responsibility 186, 196–97 (1968).

responsible broker-dealer. See BROKER.

responsive, adj. Giving or constituting a response; answering one witness’s testimony is not responsive to the question.

responsible pleading. See PLEADING (1).

responsible verdict. See VERDICT.

res privateae (rays pri-vay-tee). [Latin “private things”] Roman & civil law. Things that can be owned by individuals.

res publicae (rays pab-li-see). [Latin “public things”] Roman & civil law. Things that cannot be individually owned because they belong to the public, such as the sea, navigable waters, and highways.

res quotidianae (rays kwoh-tid-ee-ay-nee). [Latin] Civil law. Everyday matters; familiar points or questions.

res sanctae (rays sangk-tee). [Latin “sacred thing”] Roman law. The walls of a city. • The Romans considered maintenance of city walls so important that damage to a city’s walls was a capital offense.

res serviens (rays sar-vee-enz). [Latin] The servient property subject to a servitude. See servient estate under ESTATE.

rest, vb. 1. (Of a litigant) to voluntarily conclude a proceeding in a trial <after the police officer’s testimony, the prosecution rested>. 2. (Of a litigant) to voluntarily conclude a proceeding in a trial <the defense rested its case after presenting just two witnesses>.

Restatement. One of several influential treatises published by the American Law Institute, describing the law in a given area and guiding its development. • Although the Restatements are frequently cited in cases and commentary, they are not binding on the courts. Restatements have been published in the following areas of law: Agency, Conflict of Laws, Contracts, Foreign Relations Law of the United States, Judgments, Law Governing Lawyers, Property, Restitution, Security, Suretyship and Guaranty, Torts, Trusts, and Unfair Competition. — Also termed Restatement of the Law.

"We speak of the work which the organization should undertake as a restatement; its object should not only be to help make certain that is now uncertain and to simplify unnecessary complexities, but also to promote those changes which will tend better to adapt the laws to the needs of life. The character of the restatement which we have in mind can be best described by saying that it should be at once analytical, critical and constructive." Committee on the Establishment of a Permanent Organization for the Improvement of the Law (Elihu Root, chairman), Report Proposing the Establishment of an American Law Institute, 1 ALI Proc. 14 (1929).

restater. An author or reporter of a Restatement.

restaur (res-tor). 1. The recourse that insurers (esp. marine underwriters) have against each other according to the date of their insurance. 2. The recourse that marine insurers have against a ship’s master if a loss occurs through the master’s fault or negligence. 3. The recourse that one has against a guarantor or other person under a duty to indemnify. — Also spelled restor.

restitutio in integrum (res-ta-ti-oom-shee-oh in in-ta-gram). [Law Latin] Roman & civil law. Restoration to the previous condition or the status quo. • In Roman law, a praetor could accomplish this by annulling a contract or transaction that was strictly legally valid but inequitable and by restoring the parties to their previous legal relationship. The phrase is still sometimes used in American law (esp. in Louisiana) when a court annuls a contract and orders restitution on equitable grounds.

restitution, n. 1. Return or restoration of some specific thing to its rightful owner or status. 2. Compensation for benefits derived from a wrong done to another. 3. Compensation or reparation for the loss caused to another. • In senses 2 and 3, restitution is available in tort and contract law and is sometimes ordered as a condition of probation in criminal law. — restitutionary, adj.

"The term ‘restitution’ appears in early decisions, but general recognition probably began with the publication of the Restatement of Restitution [in 1937]. The term is not wholly apt since it suggests restoration to the success of a party to some benefit obtained from him. Usually this will be the case where relief is given, but by no means always. There are cases in which the successful party obtains restitution of something he did not have before, for example a benefit received by the defendant from a third person which justly should go to the plaintiff.” 1 George E. Palmer, The Law of Restitution § 1.1, at 4 (1978).

"‘Restitution’ is an ambiguous term, sometimes referring to the disgorging of something which has been taken and at times referring to compensation for injury done. Often, the result under either meaning of the term would be the same. If the plaintiff has been defrauded into paying $1,000 to the defendant, his loss and the defendant’s gain coincide. Where they do not coincide, as where the plaintiff is out of pocket more than the defendant has gained and the defendant’s conduct is tortious, the plaintiff will recover his loss in a quasi-contractual or equitable action for restitution. Unjust improvement as well as unjust enrichment is a ground for restitution. If the defendant is guilty of a non-tortious misrepresentation, the measure of recovery is not rigid but, as in other cases of restitution, such factors as relative fault, the agreed upon risks, and the fairness of alternative risk allocations not agreed upon and not attributable to the fault of either party need to be weighed." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9–23, at 376 (3d ed. 1987).

restitution damages. See DAMAGES.

restitutory interdict. See INTERDiCT (1).

restor. See RESTAUR.

restraining order. 1. A court order prohibiting or restricting a person from harassing, threatening, and sometimes even contacting or approaching another specified person. • This type of order is issued most commonly in cases of domestic violence. — Also termed protection order; protective order. 2. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER.

restraint, n. 1. Confinement, abridgment, or limitation  See PRIOR RESTRainment. 2. Prohibition of action; holding back the victim’s family exercised no restraint — they told the suspect exactly what they thought of him>. 3. RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

restraint of marriage. A condition (esp. in a gift or bequest) that nullifies the grant to which it applies if the grantee marries or re-maries. • Restraints of marriage are usu. void if they are general or unlimited in scope.

restraint of princes. Archaic. An embargo. • The phrase still occasionally appears in marine-insurance contexts. — Also termed restraint of princes and rulers; restraint of princes, rulers, and people. See EMBARGO.

restraint of trade. Antitrust. An agreement between or combination of businesses intended to eliminate competition, create a monopoly, artificially raise prices, or otherwise adversely affect the free market. • Restraints of trade are usu. illegal, but may be declared reasonable if they are in the best interests of both the parties and the public. — Often shortened to restraint. — Also termed conspiracy in restraint of trade. See PER SE RULE; RULE OF REASON.

horizontal restraint. A restraint of trade imposed by agreement between competitors at the same level of distribution. • The restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement. — Also termed horizontal agreement.

unreasonable restraint of trade. A restraint of trade that produces a significant anticompetitive effect and thus violates antitrust law.

vertical restraint. A restraint of trade imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution (as between manufacturer and retailer).

restraint on alienation. 1. A restriction, usu. in a deed of conveyance, on a grantee’s ability to sell or transfer real property; a provision that conveys an interest and that, even after the interest has become vested, prevents the owner from disposing of it at all or from disposing of it in particular ways or to particular persons. • Restraints on alienation are generally unenforceable as against public policy favoring the free alienability of land. — Also termed unreasonable restraint on alienation. 2. A trust provision that prohibits or penalizes alienation of the trust corpus.

restricted interpretation. See restrictive interpretation under INTERPRETATION.

restricted security. See SECURITY.

restricted stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

restricted surplus. See SURPLUS.

restriction. 1. A limitation or qualification. 2. A limitation (esp. in a deed) placed on the use or enjoyment of property. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4). 3. Military law. A deprivation of liberty involving moral and legal, rather than physical, restraint. • A military restriction is imposed as punishment either by a commanding officer’s nonjudicial punishment or by a summary, special, or general court-martial. Restriction is a lesser restraint because it permits the restricted person to perform full military duties. See nonjudicial punishment under PUNISHMENT.

restriction in lieu of arrest. A restriction in which a person is ordered to stay within specific geographical limits, such as a base or a ship, and is permitted to perform full military duties.

restrictive condition. See negative condition under CONDITION (2).

restrictive covenant. See COVENANT (4).

restrictive covenant in equity. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).

restrictive principle of sovereign immunity. The doctrine by which a foreign nation’s immunity does not apply to claims arising from the nation’s private or commercial acts, but protects the nation only from claims arising from its public functions. See COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION; JURE GESTIONIS; JURE IMPERII.

"[T]he [Foreign Sovereign] Immunities Act codified the so-called ‘restrictive’ principle of sovereign immunity, as recognized in international law. Under this doctrine, the immunity of a foreign state in the courts of the United States is ‘restricted’ to claims involving the foreign state’s public acts and does not extend to suits based on its commercial or private conduct.” 14A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3662, at 161–62 (3d ed. 1998).

retróman brevium (ri-tor-na bree-vee-am). [Law Latin] Hist. The return of a writ. • This was the indorsement on a writ by a sheriff or other officer, reporting on the writ’s execution.

retrorno habendo. See DE RETORNO HABENDO.

retorsion (ri-tor-shon). Int’l law. An act of lawful retaliation in kind for another nation’s unfriendly or unfair act. • Examples of retorsion include suspending diplomatic relations, expelling foreign nationals, and restricting travel rights. — Also spelled retortion. Cf. reprisal (2).

retraction, n. 1. The act of taking or drawing back <retraction of anticipatory repudiation before breach of contract>. 2. The act of recanting; a statement in recantation <retraction of a defamatory remark>. 3. Wills & estates. A withdrawal of a renunciation <because of her retraction, she took property under her uncle’s will>. See renunciation (3). — retract, vb.

retraxit (ri-trak-sit). [Latin “he has withdrawn’’] A plaintiff’s voluntary withdrawal of a lawsuit in court so that the plaintiff forfeits the right of action. • In modern practice, retraxit is called voluntary dismissal or dismissal with prejudice. See judgment of retraxit under judgment.

retreat rule. Criminal law. The doctrine holding that the victim of a murderous assault must choose a safe retreat instead of resorting to deadly force in self-defense, unless (1) the victim is at home or in his or her place of business (the so-called castle doctrine), or (2) the assailant is a person whom the victim is trying to arrest. • A minority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. no-retreat rule.

retrial, n. A new trial of an action that has already been tried. — retry, vb. See trial de novo.

retributive danger. See danger.

retributive punishment. See punishment.

retributivism (ri-trib-yo-to-viz-am). The legal theory by which criminal punishment is justified, as long as the offender is morally accountable, regardless of whether deterrence or other good consequences would result. • According to retributivism, a criminal is thought to have a debt to pay to society, which is paid by punishment. The punishment is also sometimes said to be society’s act of paying back the criminal for the wrong done. Opponents of retributivism sometimes refer to it as “vindictive theory.” Cf. hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM; UTILITARIAN-DETERRENCE THEORY.

maximalist retributivism. The classical form of retributivism, espoused by scholars such as Immanuel Kant, under which it is argued that society has a duty, not just a right, to punish a criminal who is guilty and culpable, that is, someone who has no justification or excuse for the illegal act.

minimalist retributivism. The more contemporary form of retributivism, which maintains that no one should be punished in the absence of guilt and culpability (that is, unless punishment is deserved), and that a judge may absolve the offender from punishment, wholly or partially, when doing so would further societal goals such as rehabilitation or deterrence.

retraitive, adj. (Of a statute, ruling, etc.) extending in scope or effect to matters that have occurred in the past. — Also termed retrospective. Cf. prospective (1). — reactivity, n.

“Retractivity” is a term often used by lawyers but rarely defined. On analysis it soon becomes apparent, moreover, that it is used to cover at least two distinct concepts: The first, which may be called ‘true reactivity,’ consists in the application of a new rule of law to an act or transaction which was completed before the rule was promulgated. The second concept, which will be referred to as ‘quasi-reactivity,’ occurs when a new rule of law is applied to an act or transaction in the process of completion. . . . [The] foundation of these concepts is the distinction between completed and pending transactions . . . .” T.C. Hartley, The Foundations of European Community Law 129 (1961).

retractive law. A legislative act that looks backward or contemplates the past, affecting acts or facts that existed before the act came into effect. • A retractive law is not unconstitutional unless it (1) is in the nature of an ex post facto law or a bill of attainder, (2) impairs the obligation of contracts, (3) divests vested rights, or (4) is constitutionally forbidden. — Also termed retrospective law.

retrcession. 1. The act of ceding something back (such as a territory or jurisdiction). 2. The return of a title or other interest in property back to its former or rightful owner. 3. The process of transferring all or part of a reinsured risk to another reinsurance company; reinsurance of reinsurance. • Subsequent retrocessions are referred to as first retrocession, second retrocession, and so on. 4. The amount of risk that is so transferred.

retrocessionaire. Reinsurance. A reinsurer of a reinsurer. See RETROCESSION.

retrocessional agreement. An agreement providing for reinsurance of reinsurance.

reverse-confusion doctrine. Intellectual property. The rule that it is unfair competition if the defendant's use of a title that is confusingly similar to the one used by the plaintiff leads the public to believe that the plaintiff's work is the same as the defendant's, or that it is derived from or associated in some manner with the defendant. • Under the conventional passing-off form of unfair competition, similarity of titles leads the public to believe that the defendant's work is the same as the plaintiff's work, or is in some manner derived from the plaintiff. But in reverse confusion, the unfair competition results from the confusion created about the origin of the plaintiff's work.

Rhodian law (roh-dee-an). The earliest known system or code of maritime law, supposedly dating from 900 BC. Rhodian law was purportedly developed by the people of the island Rhodes, located in the Aegean Sea and now belonging to Greece. The ancient inhabitants of Rhodes are said to have controlled the seas because of their commercial prosperity and naval superiority. Despite the uncertainties about its history, Rhodian law has often been cited as a source of admiralty and maritime law.

"A strong tradition says that a maritime code was promulgated by the Island of Rhodes, in the Eastern Mediterranean, at the height of its power; the ridiculously early date of 900 B.C. has even been assigned to this supposititious code — a date accepted uncritically by some legal scholars. But even the existence of such a code has been pretty well cast in doubt, and we know next to nothing of its contents, if it existed. It is interesting to note, however, that the root-principle of the highly distinctive maritime-law system of general average ... is clearly stated in Justinian's Digest, and that the Rhodian Law is invoked as authority." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 1–2, at 3–4 (2d ed. 1975).

ribbon-matching rule. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE.

Richard Roe. A fictitious name for a male party to a legal proceeding, used because the party's true identity is unknown or because his real name is being withheld; esp., the second of two such parties. Cf. JOHN DOE.

RICO (ree-koh). abbr. RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT.

rider. An attachment to some document, such as a legislative bill or an insurance policy, that amends or supplements the document.

riens passa per le fait (ryan pah-sah pair le fay). [Law French "nothing passed by the deed"] Hist. A plea by which a party seeks to avoid the operation of a deed that has been enrolled or acknowledged in court.

riens per descent (ryan pair day-sawn). [Law French "nothing by descent"] Hist. The plea of an heir who is sued for the ancestor's debt and who received no land or assets from the ancestor.

rier county. See RERE-COUNTY.

rigging the market. The practice of artificially inflating stock prices, by a series of bids, so that the demand for those stocks appears to be high and investors will therefore be enticed into buying the stocks. See MANIPULATION.

right, n. 1. That which is proper under law, morality, or ethics <know right from wrong>. 2. Something that is due to a person by just claim, legal guarantee, or moral principle <the right of liberty>. 3. A power, privilege, or immunity secured to a person by law <the right to dispose of one's estate>. 4. A legally enforceable claim that another will do or will not do a given act; a recognized and protected interest the violation of which is a wrong . 5. (often pl.) The interest, claim, or ownership that one has in tangible or intangible property  <publishing rights>.

"Right is a correlative to duty; where there is no duty there can be no right. But the converse is not necessarily true. There may be duties without rights. In order for a duty to create a right, it must be a duty to act or forbear. Thus, among those duties which have rights corresponding to them do not come the duties, if such there be, which call for an inward state of mind, as distinguished from external acts or forbearances. It is only to acts and forbearances that others have a right. It may be our duty to love our neighbor, but he has no right to our love." John Chipman Gray, The Nature and Sources of the Law 8–9 (2d ed. 1921).

"[T]he word 'right' is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified." American Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, 256 U.S. 350, 358, 41 S.Ct. 499, 500 (1921) (Holmes, J.).

absolute right. A right that belongs to every human being, such as the right of personal liberty; a natural right. Cf. relative right.

accessory right. A supplementary right that has been added to the main right that is vested in the same owner. For example, the right in a security is accessory to the right that is secured; a servitude is accessory to the ownership of the land for whose benefit the servitude exists. Cf. principal right.

accrued right. A matured right; a right that is ripe for enforcement (as through litigation).

acquired right. A right that a person does not naturally enjoy, but that is instead procured, such as the right to own property.

civil right. See CIVIL RIGHT.

conditional right. A right that depends on an uncertain event; a right that may or may not exist. • For example, parents have the conditional right to punish their child, the condition being that the punishment must be reasonable.

conjugal rights. See CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

equitable right. A right cognizable within a court of equity. • If a legal right and an equitable right conflict, the legal right ordinarily prevails over and destroys the equitable right even if the legal right arose after the equitable right. With the merger of law and equity in federal and most state courts, the procedural differences between legal and equitable rights have been largely abolished. Cf. legal right.

expectant right. A right that depends on the continued existence of present conditions until some future event occurs; a contingent right.

imperfect right. A right that is recognized by the law but is not enforceable. • Examples include time-barred claims and claims exceeding the local limits of a court's jurisdiction.

"[T]here are certain rights, sometimes called imperfect rights, which the law recognizes but will not enforce directly. Thus a statute-barred debt cannot be recovered in a court of law, but for certain purposes the existence of the debt has legal significance. If the debtor pays the money, he cannot later sue to recover it as money paid without consideration; and the imperfect right has the faculty of becoming perfect if the debtor makes an acknowledgment of the debt from which there can be inferred a promise to pay." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 286 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

imprescriptible right. A right that cannot be lost to prescription.

legal right. 1. A right created or recognized by law. 2. A right historically recognized by common-law courts. Cf. equitable right.

natural right. A right that is conceived as part of natural law and that is therefore thought to exist independently of rights created by government or society, such as the right to life, liberty, and property. See NATURAL LAW.

negative right. A right entitling a person to have another refrain from doing an act that might harm the person entitled.

patent right. A right secured by a patent.

perfect right. A right that is recognized by the law and is fully enforceable.

peripheral right. A right that surrounds or springs from another right.

personal right. 1. A right that forms part of a person's legal status or personal condition, as opposed to the person's estate. 2. See right in personam.

political right. The right to participate in the establishment or administration of government, such as the right to vote or the right to hold public office. — Also termed political liberty.

positive right. A right entitling a person to have another do some act for the benefit of the person entitled.

precarious right. A right enjoyed at the pleasure of another; a right that can be revoked at any time.

principal right. A right to which has been added a supplementary right in the same owner. Cf. accessory right.

private right. A personal right, as opposed to a right of the public or the state. Cf. public right.

property right. A right to specific property, whether tangible or intangible.

proprietary right. A right that is part of a person's estate, assets, or property, as opposed to a right arising from the person's legal status.

public right. A right belonging to all citizens and usu. vested in and exercised by a public office or political entity. Cf. private right.

real right. 1. Civil law. A right that is connected with a thing rather than a person.
   - Real rights include ownership, use, habitation, usufruct, predial servitude, pledge, and real mortgage.

   "The term 'real rights' (jura in re) is an abstraction unknown to classical Roman law. The classical jurists were preoccupied with the availability of remedies rather than the existence of substantive rights, and did not have a generic term to include all 'rights' which civilian scholars of following generations classified as 'real.' The expression (real rights') was first coined by medieval writers elaborating on the Digest in an effort to explain ancient procedural forms of action in terms of substantive rights." A.N. Yiamopoulos, Real Rights in Louisiana and Comparative Law, 23 La. L. Rev. 161, 163 (1963).

2. JUS IN RE. 3. See right in rem.

relative right. A right that arises from and depends on someone else's right, as distinguished from an absolute right. Cf. absolute right.

remedial right. The secondary right to have a remedy that arises when a primary right is broken.

right in rem (in rem). A right exercisable against the world at large. — Also termed real right; jus in rem. See IN REM.

"A right in rem need not relate to a tangible res. Thus a right that one's reputation should not be unjustifiably attacked is today described as a right in rem, since it is a right that avails against persons generally. This shows how far the conception has developed from the Roman notion of actio in rem, for one who sues to protect his reputation is not asking for judgment for a specific res. It should also be noticed that on breach of a right in rem, a right in personam arises against the aggressor." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 300 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

secondary right. A right prescribed by procedural law to enforce a substantive right, such as the right to damages for a breach of contract. — The enforcement of a secondary right is variously termed secondary enforcement, remedial enforcement, or sanctional enforcement. — Also termed remedial right; sanctioning right.

substantial right. An essential right that potentially affects the outcome of a lawsuit and is capable of legal enforcement and protection, as distinguished from a mere technical or procedural right.

substantive right (so-b-stan-tiv). A right that can be protected or enforced by law; a right of substance rather than form. Cf. procedural right.

vested right. A right that so completely and definitely belongs to a person that it cannot be impaired or taken away without the person's consent.

right against self-incrimination. A criminal defendant's or a witness's constitutional right — under the Fifth Amendment, but waivable under certain conditions — guaranteeing that a person cannot be compelled by the government to testify if the testimony might result in the person's being criminally prosecuted. — Although this right is most often asserted during a criminal prosecution, a person can also "plead the Fifth" in a civil, legislative, administrative, or grand-jury proceeding. — Also termed privilege against self-incrimination; right to remain silent. See SELF-INCrimINATION.

"The right against self-incrimination, protected by the Fifth Amendment, is central to the accusatorial system of criminal justice; together with the presumption of innocence, the right against self-incrimination ensures that the state must bear the burden of prosecution .... The right against self-incrimination is personal. It may be claimed only by the person who himself might be at risk for testifying. It may not be claimed on behalf of another ...." Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 481–82 (1992).

rightful, adj. 1. (Of an action) equitable; fair . 2. (Of a person) legitimately entitled to a position . 3. (Of an office or piece of property) that one is entitled to <her rightful inheritance>.

right of action. 1. The right to bring a specific case to court. 2. A right that can be enforced by legal action; a chose in action. Cf. cause of action. right of angry. See ANGRY.

right of approach. Int’l law. The right of a warship on the high seas to draw near another vessel to determine its nationality.

right of assembly. The constitutional right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — of the people to gather peacefully for public expression of religion, politics, or grievances. — Also termed freedom of assembly; right to assemble. Cf. FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION; unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY.

right of audience. A right to appear and be heard in a given court. • The term is chiefly used in England to denote the right of a certain type of lawyer to appear in a certain type of court.

right of common. See PROFIT A PRENDRE.

right of contribution. See CONTRIBUTION (1).

right of dissent and appraisal. See APPRAISAL REMEDY.

right of election. Wills & estates. A spouse’s statutory right to choose, upon the other spouse’s death, either the share under the deceased spouse’s will or a share of the estate as defined in the probate statute, which usu. amounts to what the spouse would have received if the deceased spouse had died intestate. — Also termed widow’s election. See ELECTION (2).

right of entry. 1. The right of taking or resuming possession of land or other real property in a peaceable manner. 2. POWER OF TERMINATION. 3. The right to go into another’s real property for a special purpose without committing trespass. • An example is a landlord’s right to enter a tenant’s property to make repairs. 4. The right of an alien to go into a jurisdiction for a special purpose. • An example is an exchange student’s right to enter another country to attend college.

right of entry for breach of condition. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of entry for condition broken. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of exoneration. See EQUITY OF EXONERATION.

right of first refusal. A potential buyer’s contractual right to meet the terms of a third party’s offer if the seller intends to accept that offer. • For example, if Beth has a right of first refusal on the purchase of Sam’s house, and if Sam intends to accept Terry’s offer to buy the house for $300,000, Beth can match this offer and prevent Terry from buying it. Cf. RIGHT OF PREEMPTION.

right of fishery. See FISHERY (1).

right of innocent passage. See INNOCENT PASSAGE.

right of petition. See RIGHT TO PETITION.

right of possession. The right to hold, use, occupy, or otherwise enjoy a given property; esp., the right to enter real property and eject or evict a wrongful possessor.

right of preemption. A potential buyer’s contractual right to have the first opportunity to buy, at a specified price, if the seller chooses to sell. • For example, if Beth has a right of preemption on Sam’s house for five years at $100,000, Sam can either keep the house for five years (in which case Beth’s right expires) or, if he wishes to sell during those five years, offer the house to Beth, who can either buy it for $100,000 or refuse to buy, but if she refuses, Sam can sell to someone else. — Also termed first option to buy. Cf. RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL.

right of privacy. 1. The right to personal autonomy. • The U.S. Constitution does not explicitly provide for a right of privacy, but the Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled that this right is implied in the “zones of privacy” created by specific constitutional guarantees. 2. The right of a person and the person’s property to be free from unwarranted public scrutiny or exposure. — Also termed right to privacy. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

right of publicity. The right to control the use of one’s own name, picture, or likeness and to prevent another from using it for commercial benefit without one’s consent.

right of redemption. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

right of reentry. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of rescission. See RIGHT TO RESCIND. right of revolution. The inherent right of a people to cast out their rulers, change their polity, or effect radical reforms in their system of government or institutions, by force or general uprising, when the legal and constitutional methods of making such changes have proved inadequate or are so obstructed as to be unavailable.

right of search. Int'l law. The right to stop, visit, and examine vessels on the high seas to discover whether they or the goods they carry are liable to capture; esp., a belligerent state's right to stop any merchant vessel of a neutral state on the high seas and to search as reasonably necessary to determine whether the ship has become liable to capture under the international law of naval warfare. • This right carries with it no right to destroy without full examination, unless those on a given vessel actively resist. — Also termed right of visit; right of visit and search; right of visitation; right of visitation and search. See Visit.

right of support. Property. 1. A landowner's right to have the land supported by adjacent land and by the underlying earth. 2. A servitude giving the owner of a house the right to rest timber on the walls of a neighboring house.

right of survivorship. A joint tenant's right to succeed to the whole estate upon the death of the other joint tenant. — Also termed jus ac-crescendi. See SURVIVORSHIP; joint tenancy under TENANCY.

right of termination. English law. A remedy involving the ending of contractual relations, accorded to a party to a contract when the other party breaches a duty that arises under the contract. • The right of termination is contrasted with a right to rescind, which arises when the other party breaches a duty that arises independently of the contract. — Also termed right to terminate.

right of transit passage. See TRANSIT PASSAGE.

right of visit. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visit and search. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visitation. 1. VISITATION RIGHT. 2. RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visitation and search. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right-of-way. 1. A person's legal right, established by usage or by contract, to pass through grounds or property owned by another. Cf. EASEMENT. 2. The right to build and operate a railway line or a highway on land belonging to another, or the land so used. 3. The right to take precedence in traffic.

right of wharfing out. Hist. A right to the exclusive use of submerged lands, as by establishing a permanent structure or wharf on the land to dock oceangoing vessels.

rights arbitration. See grievance arbitration under ARBITRATION.

rights-consciousness. See CLAIMS-CONSCIOUSNESS.

rights off. See EX RIGHTS.

rights offering. See OFFERING.

rights on. See CUM RIGHTS.

right to assemble. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

right to bear arms. The constitutional right of persons to own firearms.

right to choose. See FREEDOM OF CHOICE.

right-to-convey covenant. See covenant of sei-sin under COVENANT (4).

right to counsel. A criminal defendant's constitutional right, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, to representation by a court-appointed lawyer if the defendant cannot afford to hire one. — Also termed access to counsel. See ASSIS-TANCE OF COUNSEL.

right to die. The right of a terminally ill person to refuse life-sustaining treatment. — Also termed right to refuse treatment. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE.

right-to-know act. A federal or state statute requiring businesses (such as chemical manufacturers) that produce hazardous substances to disclose information about the substances both to the community where they are produced or stored and to employees who handle them. — Also termed right-to-know statute.
right to petition. The constitutional right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — of the people to make formal requests to the government, as by lobbying or writing letters to public officials. — Also termed right of petition; freedom of petition.

right to privacy. See RIGHT OF PRIVACY.

right to remain silent. See RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCrimination.

right to rescind. English law. The remedy accorded to a party to a contract when the other party breaches a duty that arises independently of the contract. • The right to rescind is contrasted with a right of termination, which arises when the other party breaches a duty that arises under the contract. — Also termed right of rescission.

right to terminate. See RIGHT OF TERMINATION.

right to travel. A person’s constitutional right — guaranteed by the Privileges and Immunities Clause — to travel freely between states.

right to vote. See SUFFRAGE.

right-to-work law. A state law that prevents labor-management agreements requiring a person to join a union as a condition of employment. See SHOP.

right-wrong test. See MCNAUGHTEN RULES.

rigid constitution. See CONSTITUTION.

rigor juris (rig-ar joor-is). [Latin] Strictness of law. Cf. GRATIA CURIAE.

rigor mortis (rig-ar mor-tis). The temporary stiffening of a body’s joints and muscles after death. • The onset of rigor mortis can vary from 15 minutes to several hours after death, depending on the body’s condition and on atmospheric factors.

ringing out. See RINGING UP.

ringing the changes. Fraud consisting in the offender’s using a large banknote to pay for a small purchase, waiting for the shopkeeper to put change on the counter, and then, by a series of maneuvers involving changes of mind — such as asking for some other article of little value or for smaller change for some of the money on the counter — creating a confused situation in which the offender picks up much more of the money than is really due.

ringing up. A method by which a group of commodities dealers discharge contracts for future delivery in advance by using offsets, cancellations, and price adjustments, thus saving the cost of actual delivery and change of possession. — Also termed ringing out.

riot, n. An unlawful disturbance of the peace by an assembly of usu. three or more persons acting with a common purpose in a violent or tumultuous manner that threatens or terrorizes the public. — riot, vb. — riotous, adj. Cf. unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY; CIVIL COMMISSION; ROUT.

"A riot is defined as an unlawful assembly (i.e. an assembly come together in pursuance of an unlawful purpose), consisting of at least three persons, which has begun to create a breach of the peace. At Common Law it is an indictable misdemeanour, punishable by a fine and imprisonment. But the statutory form of it, introduced by the Riot Act of 1714, is better known. By that statute, passed to deal with Jacobite disturbances, it was provided that the members of a riotous assembly of twelve or more persons which does not disperse within an hour after the reading by a magistrate of the proclamation contained in the Act, become guilty of felony, which, at the time of the passing of the Act, was a capital offence, and is, even now, punishable with imprisonment for life." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

"A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons acting together (a) in the commission of a crime by open force, or (b) in the execution of some enterprise, lawful or unlawful, in such a violent, turbulent and unauthorized manner as to create likelihood of public terror and alarm... When they come together for this purpose they are guilty of unlawful assembly. When they start on their way to carry out their common design they are guilty of roat. In the actual execution of their design they are guilty of riot." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

Riot Act. A 1714 English statute that made it a capital offense for 12 or more rioters to continue together for an hour after a magistrate has officially proclaimed that rioters must disperse. • This statute was not generally accepted in the United States and did not become a part of American common law. It did, however, become a permanent part of the English language in the slang phrase reading the Riot Act (meaning "to reprimand vigorously"), which originally referred to the official command for rioters to disperse.

riotous assembly. See ASSEMBLY.
riparian (ri-pair-ee-an or ri-), adj. Of, relating to, or located on the bank of a river or stream (or occasionally another body of water, such as a lake) <riparian land> . Cf. littoral.

riparian proprietor. A landowner whose property borders on a stream or river.

riparian right. (often pl.) The right of a landowner whose property borders on a body of water or watercourse. • Such a landowner traditionally has the right to make reasonable use of the water. — Also termed water right.

riparian-rights doctrine. The rule that owners of land bordering on a waterway have equal rights to use the water passing through or by their property. Cf. prior-appropriation doctrine.

ripeness, n. 1. The circumstance existing when a case has reached, but has not passed, the point when the facts have developed sufficiently to permit an intelligent and useful decision to be made. 2. The requirement that this circumstance must exist before a court will decide a controversy. — ripen, vb. — ripe, adj. See justiciability. Cf. mootness doctrine; prematurity (1).

rising of court. Archaic. 1. A court’s final adjournment of a term. 2. A recess or temporary break in a court’s business, as at the end of the day.

risk, n. 1. The chance of injury, damage, or loss; danger or hazard <many feel that skydiving is not worth the risk>. See assumption of the risk. 2. Liability for injury, damage, or loss if it occurs <the consumer-protection statute placed the risk on the manufacturer instead of the buyer>. 3. Insurance. The chance or degree of probability of loss to the subject matter of an insurance policy <the insurer undertook the risk in exchange for a premium>. Cf. peril (2). 4. Insurance. The amount that an insurer stands to lose <the underwriter took steps to reduce its total risk>. 5. Insurance. A person or thing that an insurer considers a hazard; someone or something that might be covered by an insurance policy <she’s a poor risk for health insurance>. 6. Insurance. The type of loss covered by a policy; a hazard from a specified source <this homeowner’s policy covers fire risks and flood risks>. — risk, vb.

assignable risk. One who is a poor risk for insurance but whom an insurance company is forced to insure because of state law. • For example, an accident-prone driver is an assigned risk in a state with a compulsory motor-vehicle-insurance statute.

classified risk. In life and health policies, the risk created by a policyholder’s substandard health or other peril.

noninsurable risk. A risk for which insurance will not be written because the risk is too uncertain to be the subject of actuarial analysis.

pure risk. A risk that always results in a loss.

speculative risk. A risk that can result in either a loss or a gain.

risk arbitrage. See arbitrage.

risk-averse, adj. (Of a person) uncomfortable with volatility or uncertainty; not willing to take risks; very cautious .

risk-benefit test. See risk-utility test.

risk capital. See capital.

risk-capital test. Securities. A test of whether a transaction constitutes the sale of a security (and is thus subject to securities laws) based on whether the seller is soliciting risk capital with which to develop a business venture. Cf. capital-risk test.

risk factor. Insurance. In life-insurance rate-making, the estimated cost of present and future claims, based on a mortality table. • The risk factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See premium rate. Cf. interest factor; mortality factor.

risk management. The procedures or systems used to minimize accidental losses, esp. to a business.

risk of jury doubt. See burden of persuasion.

risk of loss. The danger or possibility that a party will have to bear the costs and expenses for the damage, destruction, or inability to locate goods or other property.

risk of nonpersuasion. See burden of persuasion.
risk-utility test. A method of imposing product liability on a manufacturer if the evidence shows that a reasonable person would conclude that the benefits of a product's particular design versus the feasibility of an alternative safer design did not outweigh the dangers inherent in the original design. — Also termed danger-utility test; risk-benefit test. Cf. CONSUMER-CONTEMPLATION TEST.

RL/C. See revolving letter of credit under LETTER OF CREDIT.

robbery, n. The illegal taking of property from the person of another, or in the person's presence, by violence or intimidation; aggravated larceny. — rob, vb. See LARCENY; THEFT. Cf. BURGLARY.

“Robbery is larceny from the person by violence or intimidation. It is a felony both at common law and under modern statutes. Under some of the new penal codes robbery does not require an actual taking of property. If force or intimidation is used in the attempt to commit theft this is sufficient.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 343 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated robbery. Robbery committed by a person who either carries a dangerous weapon — often called armed robbery — or inflicts bodily harm on someone during the robbery.

armed robbery. Robbery committed by a person carrying a dangerous weapon, regardless of whether the weapon is revealed or used. • Most states punish armed robbery as an aggravated form of robbery rather than as a separate crime.

conjoint robbery (kan-joyn). A robbery committed by two or more persons.

highway robbery. 1. Robbery committed against a traveler on or near a public highway. 2. Figuratively, a price or fee that is unreasonably high; excessive profit or advantage.

simple robbery. Robbery that does not involve an aggravating factor or circumstance.

robe. (often cap.) The legal or judicial profession <eminent members of the robe>.

Robinson–Patman Act. A federal statute (specif., an amendment to the Clayton Act) prohibiting price discrimination that hinders competition or tends to create a monopoly. 15 USCA § 13. See ANTITRUST LAW; CLAYTON ACT.

rocket docket. 1. An accelerated dispute-resolution process. 2. A court or judicial district known for its speedy disposition of cases. 3. A similar administrative process, in which disputes must be decided within a specified time (such as 60 days).

rogatory letter (rog-a-tor-ee). See LETTER OF REQUEST.

roll, n. 1. A record of a court's or public office's proceedings. 2. An official list of the persons and property subject to taxation. — Also termed (in sense 2) tax roll; tax list; assessment roll. Cf. TAXPAYERS' LISTS.

rolled-up plea. See PLEA (3).

rollover, n. 1. The extension or renewal of a short-term loan; the refinancing of a maturing loan or note. 2. The transfer of funds (such as IRA funds) to a new investment of the same type, esp. so as to defer payment of taxes. — roll over, vb.

rollover mortgage. See renegotiable-rate mortgage under MORTGAGE.

Roman–Dutch law. A system of law in Holland from the mid-15th century to the early 19th century, based on a mixture of Germanic customary law and Roman law as interpreted in medieval lawbooks. • This law forms the basis of modern South African law, the law of several other countries in southern Africa, and the law of Sri Lanka.

Romanesque law. See CIVIL LAW (1).

Romanist, n. One who is versed in or practices Roman law; a Roman-law specialist.

Roman law. 1. The legal system of the ancient Romans, forming the basis of the modern civil law. — Also termed civil law. 2. CIVIL LAW (1).

“The Roman law is the body of rules that governed the social relations of many peoples in Europe, Asia, and Africa for some period between the earliest prehistoric times and 1453 A.D. This date should perhaps be extended to 1900 A.D., or even to the present time, and we might include America in the territory concerned.... Yet the essential fact is that no present-day community ... consciously applies as binding upon its citizens the rules of Roman law in their unmodified form. That law is an historical fact. It would have only a tepid historical interest ... if it were not for the circumstance that, before it became a purely historical fact, it was worked into the foundation and framework of what is called the civil law....” Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 1 (1927).

“Roman law is not only the best-known, the most highly developed, and the most influential of all legal systems of the past; apart from English law, it is also the only one whose entire and unbroken history can be traced from early and primitive beginnings to a stage of elaborate perfection in the hands of skilled specialists." Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 5 (1951).

root. Civil law. A descendant.

root of title. The recorded land transaction, usu. at least 40 years old, that is used to begin a title search. See CHAIN OF TITLE; TITLE SEARCH.

ROR. abbr. RELEASE ON RECOGNIZANCE.

Roth IRA. See INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNT.

round lot. See LOT (3).

rout (rowt), n. The offense that occurs when an unlawful assembly makes some move toward the accomplishment of its participants' common purpose. Cf. RIOT.

"The word 'rout' comes from the same source as the word 'route.' It signifies that three or more who have gathered together in unlawful assembly are 'on their way.' It is not necessary for guilt of this offense that the design be actually carried out, nor that the journey be made in a tumultuous manner." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

Royal Marriages Act. A 1772 statute (12 Geo. 3, ch. 1) forbidding members of the royal family from marrying without the sovereign’s permission, except on certain conditions.

"Royal Marriages Act .... An Act occasioned by George III's fear of the effect on the dignity and honour of the royal family of members thereof contracting unsuitable marriages, two of his brothers having done so ...... It provided that marriages of descendants of George II, other than the issue of princesses who marry into foreign families, should not be valid unless they had the consent of the King in Council, or, if the parties were aged over 25, they had given 12 months' notice to the Privy Council, unless during that time both Houses of Parliament expressly declare disapproval of the proposed marriage."

royalty. 1. A payment made to an author or inventor for each copy of a work or article sold under a copyright or patent.

reasonable royalty. A royalty that a licensee would be willing to pay the inventor while still making a reasonable profit from use of the patented invention.

2. A share of the product or profit from real property, reserved by the grantor of a mineral lease, in exchange for the lessee's right to mine or drill on the land. — Also termed (in sense 2) override.

haulage royalty. A royalty paid to a landowner for moving coal via a subterranean passageway under the landowner’s land from a mine located on an adjacent property. • The payment is calculated at a certain amount per ton of coal.

mineral royalty. A right to a share of income from mineral production.

overriding royalty. A royalty retained by a mineral lessee when the property is subleased.

shut-in royalty. Oil & gas. A payment made by an oil-and-gas lessee to the lessor to keep the lease in force when a well capable of producing is not utilized because there is no market for the oil or gas. • Generally, without such a payment, the lease will terminate at the end of the primary term unless actual production has begun.

rptr. abbr. REPORTER.

R.S. See revised statutes under STATUTE.

RTC. abbr. RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION.

rubber check. See bad check under CHECK.

rubric (ruo-brik). 1. The title of a statute or code <the rubric of the relevant statute is the Civil Rights Act of 1964>. 2. A category or designation <assignment of rights falls under the rubric of contract law>. 3. An authoritative rule, esp. for conducting a public worship service <the rubric dictates whether the congregation should stand or kneel>. 4. An introductory or explanatory note; a preface . 5. An established rule, custom, or law <what is the rubric in the Northern District of Texas regarding appearance at docket call?>.

rule, n. 1. Generally, an established and authoritative standard or principle; a general norm mandating or guiding conduct or action in a given type of situation.

general rule. A rule applicable to a class of cases or circumstances.

special rule. A rule applicable to a particular case or circumstance only.

2. A regulation governing a court’s or an agency’s internal procedures.
rule, vb. 1. To command or require; to exert control <the dictator ruled the country>. 2. To decide a legal point <the court ruled on the issue of admissibility>.

rule, the. An evidentiary and procedural rule by which all witnesses are excluded from the courtroom while another witness is testifying <invoking "the rule">. ● The phrase "the rule" is used chiefly in the American South and Southwest, but it is a universal practice to exclude witnesses before they testify.

Rule 10b-5. The SEC rule that prohibits deceptive or manipulative practices (such as material misrepresentations or omissions) in the buying or selling of securities. — Also termed anti-fraud rule.

Rule 11. Civil procedure. 1. In federal practice, the procedural rule requiring the attorney of record or the party (if not represented by an attorney) to sign all pleadings, motions, and other papers filed with the court and — by this signing — to represent that the paper is filed in good faith after an inquiry that is reasonable under the circumstances. ● This rule provides for the imposition of sanctions, upon a party’s or the court’s own motion, if an attorney or party violates the conditions stated in the rule. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. 2. In Texas practice, the procedural rule requiring agreements between attorneys or parties concerning a pending suit to be in writing, signed, and filed in the court’s record or made on the record in open court. Tex. R. Civ. P. 11.

rule absolute. See decree absolute under DECREE.

rule against accumulations. See ACCUMULATIONS, RULE AGAINST.

rule against perpetuities. Property. The rule prohibiting a grant of an estate unless the interest must vest, if at all, no later than 21 years after the death of some person alive when the interest was created. — Sometimes written Rule Against Perpetuities; Rule against Perpetuities.

"The true form of the Rule against Perpetuities is believed to be this: — NO INTEREST SUBJECT TO A CONDITION PRECEDENT IS GOOD, UNLESS THE CONDITION MUST BE FULFILLED, IF AT ALL, WITHIN TWENTY-ONE YEARS AFTER SOME LIFE IN BEING AT THE CREATION OF THE INTEREST." John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 144 (1886).

Rule in Wild's Case. Property. The rule constraining a grant to "A and A's children" as a fee tail if A's children do not exist at the effective date of the instrument, and as a joint tenancy if A's children do exist at the effective date. ● The rule has been abolished along with the fee tail in most states.

"Another scholar who spent a substantial part of an academic lifetime attempting to bring order and add sense to the rule [against perpetuities], W. Barton Leach, described the rule as a 'technically-ridden legal nightmare' and a 'dangerous instrumentality in the hands of most members of the bar.' " Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 178 (2d ed. 1984) (quoting Leach, Perpetuities Legislation, Massachusetts Style, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1349 (1954)).

"The Rule Against Perpetuities is a rule against remoteness of vesting. A contingent future interest is invalid under the orthodox rule if, at the time of the creation of the interest, the circumstances are such that the contingency may go unresolved for too long a time. The Rule is not concerned with the duration of interests, that is, the length of time that they endure. It is not a rule against suspension of the power of alienation, nor a rule against restraints on alienation. It is not a rule that directly limits the duration of trusts . . . . The orthodox rule is satisfied if all contingent future interests are so created that they must vest, if they vest at all, within the perpetuities period." Robert J. Lynn, The Modern Rule Against Perpetuities 9 (1966).

"The common law Rule Against Perpetuities (modified by statute in some states) provides that no interest is valid unless it must vest within 21 years after lives in being when the interest was created. The rule is something of a misnomer. It does not limit the duration of a condition in a bequest, but rather limits the testator's power to earmark gifts for remote descendants." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 18.7, at 394 (2d ed. 1977).

rule in Heydon's case. See MISCHIEF RULE.

Rule in Shelley's Case. Property. The rule that if — in a single grant — a freehold estate is given to a person and a remainder is given to the person's heirs, the remainder belongs to the named person and not the heirs, so that the person is held to have a fee simple absolute. ● The rule, which dates from the 14th century but draws its name from the famous 16th-century case, has been abolished in most states. Wolfe v. Shelley, 76 Eng. Rep. 206 (K.B. 1581).

"[T]he rule in Shelley's Case, the Don Quixote of the law, which, like the last knight errant of chivalry, has long survived every cause that gave it birth and now wanders aimlessly through the reports, still vigorous, but equally useless and dangerous." Stamper v. Stamper, 28 S.E. 20, 22 (N.C. 1897).

Rule in Wild's Case. Property. The rule constraining a grant to "A and A's children" as a fee tail if A's children do not exist at the effective date of the instrument, and as a joint tenancy if A's children do exist at the effective date. ● The rule has been abolished along with the fee tail in most states.
rulemaking, n. The process used by an administrative agency to formulate, amend, or repeal a rule or regulation. — Also termed administrative rulemaking. — rulemaking, adj. Cf. ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATION; INFORMAL AGENCY ACTION.

formal rulemaking. Agency rulemaking that, when required by statute or the agency's discretion, must be on the record after an opportunity for an agency hearing, and must comply with certain procedures, such as allowing the submission of evidence and the cross-examination of witnesses. Cf. informal rulemaking.

informal rulemaking. Agency rulemaking in which the agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comments on the regulation, after which the regulation can take effect without the necessity of a formal hearing on the record. — Informal rulemaking is the most common procedure followed by an agency in issuing its substantive rules. — Also termed notice-and-comment rulemaking. See NOTICE-AND-COMMENT PERIOD. Cf. formal rulemaking.

rule nisi. See decree nisi under DEGREE.

rule of capture. 1. The doctrine that if the donee of a general power of appointment manifests an intent to assume control of the property for all purposes and not just for the purpose of appointing it to someone, the donee captures the property and the property goes to the donee's estate. — One common way for the donee to show an intent to assume control for all purposes is to include provisions in his or her will blinding the appointing property with the donee's own property. 2. Property. The principle that wild animals belong to the person who captures them, regardless of whether they were originally on another person's land. 3. Water law. The principle that a surface landowner can extract and appropriate all the groundwater beneath the land by drilling or pumping, even if doing so drains away groundwaters to the point of drying up springs and wells from which other landowners benefit. — This doctrine has been widely abolished or limited by legislation. 4. Oil & gas. The principle that the owner of a mineral right covering migratory (sometimes termed "fugacious") substances can extract and appropriate them by drilling or pumping, subject to the prior or contemporaneous capture of the same minerals by another mineral-rights holder into the same subterranean mineral deposit elsewhere. — Also termed doctrine of capture; law of capture.

rule of completeness. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

rule of construction. See canon of construction under CANON (1).

rule of court. A rule governing the practice or procedure in a given court <federal rules of court>. See LOCAL RULE.

rule of decision. A rule, statute, body of law, or prior decision that provides the basis for deciding or adjudicating a case.

rule of four. The convention that for certiorari to be granted by the U.S. Supreme Court, four justices must vote in favor of the grant. See CERTIORARI.

rule of inconvenience. The principle of statutory interpretation holding that a court should not construe a statute in a way that will jeopardize an important public interest or produce a serious hardship for anyone, unless that interpretation is unavoidable.

rule of interpretation. See canon of construction under CANON (1).

rule of justice. A jurisprudential principle that determines the sphere of individual liberty in the pursuit of individual welfare, so as to confine that liberty within limits that are consistent with the general welfare of humankind.

rule of law. 1. A substantive legal principle <under the rule of law known as respondeat superior, the employer is answerable for all wrongs committed by an employee in the course of the employment>. 2. The supremacy of regular as opposed to arbitrary power <citizens must respect the rule of law>. — Also termed supremacy of law. 3. The doctrine that every person is subject to the ordinary law within the jurisdiction <all persons within the United States are within the American rule of law>. 4. The doctrine that general constitutional principles are the result of judicial decisions determining the rights of private individuals in the courts <under the rule of law, Supreme Court caselaw makes up the bulk of what we call "constitutional law">. 5. Loosely, a legal ruling; a ruling on a point of law <the ratio decidendi of a case is any rule of law reached by the judge as a necessary step in the decision>.

rule of lenity (len-a-tee). The judicial doctrine holding that a court, in construing an ambiguous criminal statute that sets out multiple or inconsistent punishments, should resolve the ambiguity in favor of the more lenient punishment. — Also termed lenity rule.

rule of marshaling assets. An equitable doctrine that requires a senior creditor, having two or more funds to satisfy its debt, to first dispose of the fund not available to a junior creditor. It prevents the inequity that would result if the senior creditor could choose to satisfy its debt out of the only fund available to the junior creditor and thereby exclude the junior creditor from any satisfaction. — Also termed rule of marshaling securities; rule of marshaling remedies.

rule of marshaling liens. See inverse-order-of-alienation doctrine.

rule of marshaling remedies. See rule of marshaling assets.

rule of marshaling securities. See rule of marshaling assets.

rule of necessity. A rule requiring a judge or other official to hear a case, despite bias or conflict of interest, when disqualification would result in the lack of any competent court or tribunal.

rule of optional completeness. The rule of evidence providing that when a party introduces part of a writing or an utterance at trial, the opposing party may require that the remainder of the passage be read to establish the full context. The rule has limitations: first, no utterance can be received if it is irrelevant, and second, the remainder of the utterance must explain the first part. In many jurisdictions, the rule applies to conversations, to an opponent’s admissions, to confessions, and to all other types of writings — even account books. But the Federal Rules of Evidence limit the rule to writings and recorded statements. Fed. R. Evid. 106. In most jurisdictions, including federal, the remainder is admissible unless its admission would be unfair or misleading. — Also termed rule of completeness; doctrine of completeness; doctrine of optional completeness; completeness doctrine; optional-completeness rule; optional-completeness doctrine.

rule of rank. A doctrine of statutory construction holding that a statute dealing with things or persons of an inferior rank cannot be by any general words be extended to things or persons of a superior rank. Blackstone gives the example of a statute dealing with deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion. According to Blackstone, this statute is held not to extend to bishops, even though they have spiritual promotion, because deans are the highest persons named, and bishops are of a higher order. Cf. ejusdem generis; expressio unius est exclusio alterius; noscitur a sociis.

rule of reason. Antitrust. The judicial doctrine holding that a trade practice violates the Sherman Act only if the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, based on economic factors. See sherman antitrust act; restraint of trade. Cf. per se rule.

rule of recognition. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, a legal system’s fundamental rule, by which all other rules are identified and understood. In The Concept of Law (1961), Hart contends that a society’s legal system is centered on rules. There are primary rules of obligation, which prescribe how a person should act in society, and secondary rules, by which the primary rules are created, identified, changed, and understood. A “rule of recognition” is a secondary rule, and serves to instruct citizens on when a pronouncement or societal principle constitutes a rule of obligation. Cf. rules of change; basic norm under norm.

“...This rule [the rule of recognition] may amount to no more than specifying a list of primary rules carved on a public monument. Or it may actually be a complete set of rules.” — Martin F. Golding, Philosophy of Law 44 (1975).

rule of right. The source of a right; the rule that gives rise to a right.

rule of 72. A method for determining how many years it takes to double money invested at a compound interest rate. For example, at a compound rate of 6%, it takes 12 years (72 divided by 6) for principal to double.

rule of 78. A method for computing the amount of interest that a borrower saves by paying off a loan early, when the interest payments are higher at the beginning of the loan period. For example, to determine how much interest is saved by prepaying a 12-month loan after 6 months, divide the sum of the digits for the remaining six payments (21) by the sum of the digits for all twelve payments (78) and multiply that percentage by the total interest. — Also termed rule of the sum of the digits.
rule of the last antecedent rule of the last antecedent. An interpretative principle by which a court determines that qualifying words or phrases modify the words or phrases immediately preceding them and not words or phrases more remote, unless the extension is necessary from the context or the spirit of the entire writing. • For example, an application of this rule might mean that, in the phrase Texas courts, New Mexico courts, and New York courts in the federal system, the words in the federal system might be held to modify only New York courts and not Texas courts or New Mexico courts. — Also termed doctrine of the last antecedent; doctrine of the last preceding antecedent.

rule of the sum of the digits. See RULE OF 78.

rules of change. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, the fundamental rules by which a legal system’s other rules are altered. • In Hart’s theory, a legal system’s primary rules are subject to identification and change by secondary rules. Among those rules are “rules of change,” which prescribe how laws are altered or repeated. Cf. RULE OF RECOGNITION.

rules of court. See COURT RULES.

Rules of Decision Act. A federal statute (28 USCA § 1652) providing that a federal court, when exercising diversity jurisdiction, must apply the substantive law of the state in which the court sits. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

rules of navigation. The principles and regulations that govern the steering and sailing of vessels to avoid collisions. • Examples include the new International Rules governing conduct on the high seas and the Inland Rules governing navigation on the inland waters of the United States and U.S. vessels on the Canadian waters of the Great Lakes. 33 USCA §§ 1602–1608, 2001(a).

rule to show cause. See SHOW-CAUSE PROCEEDING.

ruling, n. The outcome of a court’s decision either on some point of law or on the case as a whole. — Also termed legal ruling. — rule, vb. Cf. JUDGMENT; OPINION (1).

“A distinction is sometimes made between rules and rulings. Whether or not a formal distinction is declared, in common usage ‘legal ruling’ (or simply ‘ruling’) is a term ordinarily used to signify the outcome of applying a legal test when that outcome is one of relatively narrow impact. The immediate effect is to decide an issue in a single case. This meaning contrasts, for example, with the usual meaning of ‘legal rule’ (or simply ‘rule’). The term ‘rule’ ordinarily refers to a legal proposition of general application. A ‘ruling’ may have force as precedent, but ordinarily it has that force because the conclusion it expresses (for example, ‘objection sustained’) explicitly depends upon and implicitly reiterates a ‘rule’ — a legal proposition of more general application . . . .” Robert E. Keeton, Judging 67–68 (1990).

ruling case. See LEADING CASE (3).

ruling letter. See DETERMINATION LETTER.

run, vb. 1. To expire after a prescribed period <the statute of limitations had run, so the plaintiff’s lawsuit was barred>. 2. To accompany a conveyance or assignment of (land) <the covenant runs with the land>. 3. To apply <the injunction runs against only one of the parties in the dispute>.

runner. 1. A law-office employee who delivers papers between offices and files papers in court. 2. One who solicits personal-injury cases for a lawyer.

running account. See ACCOUNT.

running days. See LAW DAYS.

running objection. See continuing objection under OBJECTION.

running policy. See floating policy under INSURANCE POLICY.
s. abbr. 1. STATUTE. 2. SECTION (1). 3. (usu. cap.) SENATE.

S-1. An SEC form that a company usu. must file before listing and trading its securities on a national exchange. • Used primarily by first-time issuers of securities, this form is the basic, full-length registration statement that requires a great deal of information about the issuer and the securities being sold. The SEC has also adopted modified forms for smaller enterprises, such as Forms SB-1 and SB-2. — Also termed Form S-1.

Sabbath-breaking. The violation of laws or rules on observing the Sabbath; esp., the violation of a blue law.

Sabbath law. See BLUE LAW.

sabotage (sab-ə-tahzh), n. 1. The destruction, damage, or knowingly defective production of materials, premises, or utilities used for national defense or for war. 18 USC § 2151 et seq. 2. The willful and malicious destruction of an employer’s property or interference with an employer’s normal operations, esp. during a labor dispute. — sabotagen, vb.

saboteur (sab-ə-tør), n. A person who commits sabotage.

sacer (sas-ər), adj. [Latin “sacred; forfeited to a god”] Roman law. (Of an outlaw or a wrong-doer) punished by being placed outside the law’s protection. See CONSECRATIO CAPITIS; OUTLAWRY.

sachbaro. See SAGIBARO.

Sache (zahk-ə). [German] A thing; an article or matter. See THING.

sacramentales (sak-ra-men-tay-leez), n. pl. [Law Latin fr. Latin sacramentum “oath-takers”] Hist. Compurgators; people who take an oath swearing to a defendant’s innocence. Sing. sacramentalis. sacramentum (sak-ra-men-tam), n. [Latin “an oath”] Roman law. 1. A procedure for remedying a wrong; one of the legis actiones proceedings, used in both in rem and in personam actions when no other remedy was prescribed.

“Sacramentum . . . . Where it took the form of an action in rem, the proceedings were as follows: the plaintiff secured the presence of the defendant in Court, the XII Tables entitling him, if the defendant refused to come, to bring him by force, and the object in dispute (e.g. the slave) had also to be there. The plaintiff then, holding a wand . . . in one hand, seized the object with the other and claimed ownership . . . Thereupon the defendant went through exactly the same ceremony, and used the same words . . . . The plaintiff next asked for the defendant’s title , . . . , the defendant’s reply being a general assertion of ownership . . . Whereupon the plaintiff denied the right, and challenged the defendant to a bet . . . and the defendant made a like challenge . . . The praetor then — (a) Awarded possession of the slave to one of the parties pending the trial . . . (b) Required the person so given possession to give security . . . and (c) Required both parties to give security . . . .” R.W. Longe, Roman Private Law 388-90 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

2. The deposit of money made by both parties to the sacramentum and given to the winning party after the case was determined.

“[T]he money staked as a wager . . . was known as sacramentum. The word evidently has a religious significance. The sum of the wager, forfeited by the party found to be in the wrong, was actually devoted to religious purposes, later went to the public chest. But there is reason to think that at a still earlier period the word sacramentum meant, not a thing staked as a wager on the result of litigation, but an oath by each party as to the justice of his cause, involving a penalty to be paid to the offended deity if the oath was found to be false.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 422–23 (4th ed. 1956).

3. An oath of allegiance given by a soldier upon enlistment.

sacramentum decisionis (sak-ra-men-tam di-sızh-ee-oh-nis). [Latin “the oath of decision”] Civil law. The offer by one party to accept the opposing party’s oath as decisive of the issues involved in a lawsuit.

“The defendant or person accused was . . . to make oath of his own innocence, and to produce a certain number of compurgators, who swore they believed his oath. Somewhat similar also to this is the sacramentum decisionis, or the voluntary and decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to the suit, not being able to prove his charge, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary: which the adversary was bound to accept, or tender the same proposal back again; otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 342 (1768).

sacrilege (sak-ra-lij). 1. The act or an instance of desecrating or profaning a sacred thing. 2. Hist. Larceny of sacred objects, as from a church.

"In the later Empire the conception of sacrilegium was somewhat distorted and those ‘who through ignorance or negligence confound, violate and offend the sanctity of a divine law’ . . . were considered guilty of sacrilegium. ‘Divine’ is here used in the sense of imperial, issued by the emperor . . . . Thus sacrilegium and sacrilegus became rather general terms applied to the neglect or violation of imperial orders or enactments." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedia Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

sacrilégus (so-kril-ar-gos). [Latin “sacrilégious”] Roman law. (A person) guilty of sacrilegium. See SACRILEGIO.

sacristy (sak-ri-stee). See VESTRY (1).

saevitia (si-vish-ee-a). [Latin fr. saevus “cruel”] Hist. Cruelty in a marriage, as a result of which cohabitation is dangerous enough to justify a decree of separation.

safe, adj. Not exposed to danger; not causing danger <driving at a safe limit of speed>.

safe-berth clause. See SAFE-PORT CLAUSE.

safe-conduct. Int’l law. 1. A privilege granted by a belligerent allowing an enemy, a neutral, or some other person to travel within or through a designated area for a specified purpose. 2. A document conveying this privilege.

"Safe-conduct . . . The grantee is inviolable so long as he complies with the conditions imposed on him or necessitated by the circumstances of the case. Unless stated, a safe-conduct does not cover goods or luggage. They may be given also for ships and for goods. To be effective under international law the grant must have been arranged between belligerents." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1098 (1980).

safe-deposit box. A lockbox stored in a bank’s vault to secure a customer’s valuables. • It usu. takes two keys (one held by the bank and one held by the customer) to open the box. — Often shortened to deposit box. — Also termed safety-deposit box.

safe-deposit company. See DEPOSITORY (1).

safe harbor. 1. An area or means of protection. 2. A provision (as in a statute or regulation) that affords protection from liability or penalty. • SEC regulations, for example, provide a safe harbor for an issuer’s business forecasts that are made in good faith.

safekeeping. Under the Securities Investors Protection Act, the holding of a security on behalf of the investor or broker that has paid for it. 15 USCA § 78lll(2).

safe-port clause. A clause in a voyage or time charter expressly providing that the ship must go to a safe port nominated or ordered by the charterer. • The ship can refuse an order to proceed to an unsafe port; compliance with the order exposes the charterer to liability for damage to the vessel resulting from entering an unsafe port. — Also termed safe-berth clause.

Safety Appliance Act. A federal law regulating the safety of equipment used by railroads in interstate commerce. 49 USCA §§ 20301 et seq.

safety-deposit box. See SAFE-DEPOSIT BOX.

safety engineering. The inspection and study of potentially dangerous conditions, usu. in an industrial environment, so that precautionary measures can be taken.

safe workplace. A place of employment in which all dangers that should reasonably be removed have been removed; a place of employment that is reasonably safe given the nature of the work performed. See OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH ADMINISTRATION.

said, adj. Aforesaid; above-mentioned. The adjective said is obsolete in legal drafting, its last bastion being patent claims. But even in that context the word is giving way to the ordinary word the, which if properly used is equally precise. See aforesaid.

"The word 'said' is used by many practitioners rather than 'the' to refer back to previously recited elements, sometimes to a previously cited anything. This practice is unobjectionable, although perhaps overly legalistic. If 'said's' or 'theses' are used, one should be consistent in the usage and not alternate between those words in repetitions of the same element or among different elements." Robert C. Faber, Landis on Mechanics of Patent Claim Drafting § 23, at 50 (3d ed. 1990).

sailor's will. See soldier's will under will.

sake and soke (sayk / sohk). Hist. A lord's right to hold court and compel attendance. Also spelled sak and soc (sak / sok).

salable (say-lə-bal or sayl-ə-bal), adj. Fit for sale in the usual course of trade at the usual selling price; MERCHANTABLE. — salability (say-lə-bil-ə-tee or sayl-ə-bil-ə-tee), n.

salable value. See fair market value under value.

salarium (sa-lər-ee-am), n. [Latin "salt money"] 1. Roman law. An allowance, esp. for living expenses, given to persons in noble professions (such as teachers or doctors) who were not allowed to sue for fees. 2. Roman law. Wages for persons engaged in military service on an emergency basis. The regular soldier's pay is a stipendium. 3. Hist. The rent or profits of a hall or house.

salary. An agreed compensation for services — esp. professional or semiprofessional services — usu. paid at regular intervals on a yearly basis, as distinguished from an hourly basis. Salaried positions are usu. exempt from the requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act (on overtime and the like) but are subject to state regulation. Cf. wage.

accrued salary. A salary that has been earned but not yet paid.

sale, n. 1. The transfer of property or title for a price. 2. The agreement by which such a transfer takes place.

absolute sale. A sale in which possession and title to the property pass to the buyer immediately upon the completion of the bargain. Cf. conditional sale.

approval sale. See sale on approval.

auction sale. See auction.

average gross sales. The amount of total sales divided by the number of sales transactions in a specific period.

bona fide sale. A sale made by a seller in good faith, for valuable consideration, and without notice of a defect in title or any other reason not to hold the sale.

bootstrap sale. 1. A sale in which the purchase price is financed by earnings and profits of the thing sold; esp., a leveraged buyout. See buyout. 2. A seller's tax-saving conversion of a business's ordinary income into a capital gain from the sale of corporate stock.

bulk sale. See bulk transfer.

cash-against-documents sale. See documentary sale.

cash sale. 1. A sale in which cash payment is concurrent with the receipt of the property sold. 2. A securities transaction on the stock-exchange floor requiring cash payment and same-day delivery.

compulsory sale. The forced sale of real property in accordance with either an eminent-domain order or an order for a judicial sale arising from nonpayment of taxes.

conditional sale. 1. A sale in which the buyer gains immediate possession but the seller retains title until the buyer performs a condition, esp. payment of the full purchase price. See conditional sales contract under contract. 2. A sale accompanied by an agreement to resell upon specified terms. Cf. absolute sale.

consignment sale. A sale of an owner's property (such as clothing or furniture) by a third party entrusted to make the sale. See consignment.

consumer-credit sale. A sale in which the seller extends credit to the consumer. A consumer-credit sale includes a lease in which the lessee's rental payments equal or exceed the retail value of the item rented.

credit sale. A sale of goods to a buyer who is allowed to pay for the goods at a later time.

distress sale. 1. A form of liquidation in which the seller receives less for the goods than what would be received under normal sales conditions; esp., a going-out-of-business sale. 2. A foreclosure or tax sale.
dock sale. A sale in which a purchaser takes possession of the product at the seller's shipping dock, esp. for transportation outside the state.

documentary sale. A sale in which the buyer pays upon the seller's tender of documents of title covering the goods, plus a sight draft requiring the buyer to pay "at sight." • This type of sale typically occurs before delivery of the goods, which might be en route when the buyer pays. — Also termed cash-against-documents sale.

exclusive sale. A sale made by a broker under an exclusive-agency listing. See exclusive-agency listing under listing.

execution sale. A forced sale of a debtor's property by a government official carrying out a writ of execution. — Also termed forced sale; judgment sale; sheriff's sale. See execution.

executory sale. A sale agreed upon in principle but with a few minor details remaining.

fair sale. A foreclosure sale or other judicial sale conducted with fairness toward the rights and interests of the affected parties.

fire sale. 1. A sale of merchandise at reduced prices because of fire or water damage. 2. Any sale at greatly reduced prices, esp. due to an emergency. • Fire sales are often regulated to protect the public from deceptive sales practices.

forced sale. 1. See execution sale. 2. A hurried sale by a debtor because of financial hardship or a creditor's action. Cf. voluntary sale.

foreclosure sale. The sale of mortgaged property, authorized by a court decree or a power-of-sale clause, to satisfy the debt. See foreclosure.

fraudulent sale. A sale made to defraud the seller's creditors by converting into cash property that should be used to satisfy the creditors' claims.

gross sales. Total sales (esp. in retail) before deductions for returns and allowances. — Also termed sales in gross.

installment sale. See installment sale.

isolated sale. An infrequent or one-time sale that does not carry an implied warranty of merchantability.

judgment sale. See execution sale.

judicial sale. A sale conducted under the authority of a judgment or court order, such as an execution sale. — Also termed sheriff's sale.

lumping sale. A court-ordered sale in which several distinct pieces of property are sold together for a single sum.

memorandum sale. A conditional sale in which the buyer takes possession but does not accept title until approving the property.

net sale. The amount of money remaining from a sale, after deducting returns, allowances, rebates, discounts, and other expenses.

present sale. Under the UCC, a sale accomplished by the making of a contract. UCC § 2–106(1).

private sale. An unadvertised sale negotiated and concluded directly between the buyer and seller, not through an agent.

public sale. A sale made after public notice, as in an auction or sheriff's sale.

retail installment sale. See installment sale.

sale and leaseback. See leaseback.

sale and return. See sale or return.

sale as is. A sale in which the buyer accepts the property in its existing condition unless the seller has misrepresented its quality. — Also termed sale with all faults.

sale by sample. A sale in which the parties understand that the goods exhibited constitute the standard with which the goods not exhibited correspond to which all deliveries should conform. • Any sample that is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods will conform to the sample or model. — Also termed sample sale.

sale in gross. 1. A sale of a tract of land made with no guarantee about the exact amount or size of the land being sold. 2. (pl.) See gross sales.

sale on approval. A sale in which completion hinges on the buyer's satisfaction, regardless of whether the goods conform to the contract. • Title and risk of loss remain with the seller until the buyer approves. UCC § 2–326(1)(a). — Also termed approval sale.

sale on credit. A sale accompanied by delivery of possession, but with payment deferred to a later date.

sale or return. A sale in which the buyer may return the goods to the seller, regardless of whether they conform to the contract, if the goods were delivered primarily for resale. • This transaction is a type of consignment in which the seller (usu. a distributor) sells goods to the buyer (often a retailer), who then tries to resell the goods, but a buyer who cannot resell is allowed to return them to the seller. Title and risk of loss are with the buyer until the goods are returned. UCC § 2–326(1)(b). — Also termed sale and return.

sale per averstionem (par a-ver-zhee-oh-nem). Civil law. A conveyance of all immovable property that falls within the boundaries stated in a purchase agreement, as opposed to a specified amount of acreage. ● The sales price will not be modified because of a surplus or shortage in the amount of property that is exchanged, because the boundary description is the binding definition of the property conveyed. La. Civ. Code art. 2495.

sales in gross. See gross sales.

sale with all faults. See sale as is.

sale with right of redemption. A sale in which the seller reserves the right to retake the goods by refunding the purchase price.

sample sale. See sale by sample.

sheriff's sale. 1. See execution sale. 2. See judicial sale.

short sale. A sale of a security that the seller does not own or has not contracted for at the time of sale, and that the seller must borrow to make delivery. ● Such a sale is usu. made when the seller expects the security's price to drop. If the price does drop, the seller can make a profit on the difference between the price of the shares sold and the lower price of the shares bought to pay back the borrowed shares.

short sale against the box. A short sale of a security by a seller who owns enough shares of the security to cover the sale but borrows shares anyway because the seller wants to keep ownership a secret or because the owned shares are not easily accessible. ● Delivery may be made with either the owned or the borrowed shares, so it is less risky than an ordinary short sale. The phrase against the box refers to the owned shares that are in safekeeping; formerly, the “box” was a container used to store stock certificates.

similar sales. Eminent domain. Sales of like property in the same locality and time frame, admissible in a condemnation action to determine the marketable value of the particular property at issue.

simulated sale. A sale in which no price or other consideration is paid or intended to be paid, and in which there is no intent to actually transfer ownership. ● Simulated sales are usu. done in an attempt to put property beyond the reach of creditors. — Also termed simulated transaction.

sale per averstionem. See SALE.

tax sale. A sale of property because of non-payment of taxes. See tax deed under DEED.

voluntary sale. A sale made freely with the seller's consent. Cf. forced sale.

wash sale. A sale of securities made at about the same time as a purchase of the same securities (such as within 30 days), resulting in no change in beneficial ownership. ● A loss from a wash sale is usu. not tax-deductible. And securities laws prohibit a wash sale made to create the false appearance of market activity. — Also termed wash transaction.

sale and leaseback. See LEASEBACK.

sale and return. See sale or return under SALE.

sale as is. See SALE.

sale by sample. See SALE.

sale in gross. See SALE.

sale note. See NOTE (1).

sale-of-business doctrine. The outmoded rule holding that the transfer of stock incident to the sale of a business does not constitute a transfer of securities. ● This doctrine was rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court in Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681, 105 S.Ct. 2297 (1985), and its companion case, Gould v. Ruefenacht, 471 U.S. 701, 105 S.Ct. 2308 (1985).

sale of land. A transfer of title to real estate from one person to another by a contract of sale. ● A transfer of real estate is often referred to as a conveyance rather than a sale.

sale on approval. See SALE.

sale on credit. See SALE.

sale or exchange. 1. Tax. A voluntary transfer of property for value (as distinguished from a gift) resulting in a gain or loss recognized for federal tax purposes. 2. A transfer of property; esp., a situation in which proceeds of a sale are to be vested in another estate of the same character and use.

sale or return. See SALE.

sales agreement. A contract in which owner-ship of property is presently transferred, or will be transferred in the future, from a seller to a buyer for a fixed sum. UCC § 2-106(1).

sales-assessment-ratio study. A method for calculating the assessment level for taxable property in a jurisdiction, by comparing the assessed value and the actual sales price of a statistically reliable sample of the property in the jurisdiction, to determine the percentage by which the assessed values are above or below the sales prices.

sales finance company. See FINANCE COMPANY.

sales in gross. See gross sales under SALE.

sales invoice. See INVOICE.

sales journal. A book used to record sales of merchandise on account.

sales load. See LOAD.

sales mix. The relative combination of individu-al-product sales to total sales.

sale with all faults. See sale as is under SALE.

sale with right of redemption. See SALE.

Salic law (sal-ik or say-lik). An influential early medieval Frankish code of law that originated with the Salian Franks and that deals with a variety of civil property and family issues but is primarily a penal code listing the punishments for various crimes. • Salic law is the principal compilation of the early Germanic laws known collectively as leges barbarorum ("laws of the barbarians"). Salic law also designated a rule barring females from the line of succession to the throne, as a result of which references to Salic law have sometimes referred only to the code provision excluding women from inheriting certain lands (which probably existed only because military duties were connected with the inheritance). In the late 19th century, Oliver Wendell Holmes revived scholarly interest in Salic law by referring to it throughout The Common Law (1881). — Also termed Salique law; law Salique (so-leeek or sal-ik); lex Salica (leks sal-ə-kə).

salting, n. Labor law. A union tactic that involves a paid union employee going to work for a targeted nonunion employer with the intention of organizing the workforce. • The union agent (known as a salt) is considered an employee of the nonunion company and is protected by the National Labor Relations Act.

salus (sal-us), n. [Latin] Health; prosperity; safety.

salvage (sal-vij), n. 1. The rescue of imperiled property. 2. The property saved or remaining after a fire or other loss, sometimes retained by an insurance company that has compensated the owner for the loss. 3. Compensation allowed to a person who, having a duty to do so, helps save a ship or its cargo. — salvage, vb.

"When some special and extraordinary assistance is rendered, whereby a ship, the persons on it, or its cargo, are saved, the persons rendering such successful assistance, who are called salvors, are entitled to a compensation, which is called salvage." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 168 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

"Salvage is a reward payable either by the shipowner or by the owners of goods carried in the ship to persons who save the ship or cargo from shipwreck, capture or other loss. The right to salvage is an ancient rule of maritime law and is not based on contractual rights. The actual amount payable is, as a rule, assessed by the Court. Sometimes an express agreement, fixing an amount, is made before the assistance is rendered, but this is not a question of salvage in the strict sense, which always implies service by persons who are under no obligation to render it." 2 E.W.Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 98 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

salvage charges. Insurance. Costs necessarily incurred in salvage.

salvage loss. See LOSS.

salvager. See SALVOR.

salvage service. The aid or rescue given, either voluntarily or by contract, to a vessel in need of assistance because of present or apprehended danger. • Although salvage may involve towing, it is distinguished from towing service, which is rendered merely to expedite a voyage, not to respond to dangerous circumstances.

salvage value. See VALUE.
salvo (sal-vo). [Latin fr. salvus “safe”] Hist. 1. Saving; excepting. • This term was used in deeds. 2. Safely.

salvo conductu. See DE SALVO CONDUCTU.

salvo jure (sal-vo joor-ee). [Latin “the rule being safe”] Without prejudice to.

salvor (sal-var), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A person who saves a vessel and its cargo from danger or loss; a person entitled to salvage. — Also termed salvager.

“A ‘salvor’ is a person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of the ship. To be a salvor, one must have the intention and capacity to save the distressed property involved, but need not have an intent to acquire it.” 68 Am. Jur. 2d Salvage § 2, at 270 (1993).

salvus plegius (sal-vas plee-je-ee-as). [Law Latin] Hist. A safe pledge; a satisfactory pledge. See PLEDGE.

SAM. See shared-appreciation mortgage under MORTGAGE.

same, pron. The very thing just mentioned or described; it or them <two days after receiving the goods, Mr. Siviglio returned same>.

same-actor inference. Employment law. The doctrine that when an employee is hired and fired by the same person, and the termination occurs a reasonably short time after the hiring, the termination will be presumed not to be based on a discriminatory reason.

same-elements test. See LEGAL-ELEMENTS TEST.

same-evidence test. Criminal law. A test of whether the facts alleged in a given case are essentially identical to those alleged in a previous case. • If they are the same, the Fifth Amendment’s prohibition against double jeopardy will bar the later action, which is essentially a second prosecution for the same offense. This principle was first announced in Blockburger v. United States, 284 U.S. 299, 52 S.Ct. 180 (1932). — Also termed Blockburger test; actual-evidence test. See same offense under OFFENSE (1); DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

same invention. Patents. 1. A second invention claiming the identical subject matter as a previ-ous invention. 2. Within a reissue statute, the invention described in the original patent.

same-invention double patenting. See DOUBLE PATENTING (1).

same offense. See OFFENSE (1).

same-sex harassment. See HARASSMENT.

sample sale. See sale by sample under SALE.

sanctio (sangk-shee-oh). [Latin fr. sanctio “to ordain, confirm, or forbid under penalty”] Roman law. A particular clause in a statute imposing a penalty on any violation of that statute. • Despite its appearance, this term does not derive from the Latin sanctus, meaning “holy.”

“Sanctio (lege). A clause in a statute which strengthens its efficacy by fixing a penalty for its violation, by forbidding its derogation through a later enactment, or by releasing from responsibility any one who by acting in accordance with the statute violated another law. The purpose of the sanction clause was to settle the relation between the new statute and former and future legislation. Thus the sanctio could also state that a previous statute remained fully or partially in force without being changed by the new one.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

sanction (sangk-shan), n. 1. Official approval or authorization <the committee gave sanction to the proposal>. 2. A penalty or coercive measure that results from failure to comply with a law, rule, or order .

“Without adequate sanctions the procedure for discovery would often be ineffectual. Under Rule 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, ... any party or person who seeks to evade or thwart full and candid discovery incurs the risk of serious consequences, which may involve imprisonment for contempt of court, an order that designated facts be taken to be established, an order refusing the delinquent party the right to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, striking out pleadings or parts of pleadings, rendering judgment by default, dismissal of the action or a claim therein, or assessment of expenses and attorney’s fees. Sanctions are intended to prompt a party to respond.” SA Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2281, at 598–95 (2d ed. 1994).

criminal sanction. A sanction attached to a criminal conviction, such as a fine or restitution. — Also termed penal sanction.

“A criminal sanction ... is a legally authorized post-conviction deprivation suffered by a human being through governmental action. By using the words ‘post-conviction’ in that definition, criminal sanctions are thus limited to those imposed upon defendants in criminal proceedings who, by reason or in consequence of a judgment entered upon a verdict of guilty found by a jury, or judge sitting without a jury (the latter having been legally waived), or upon a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, stand convicted.” A Treatise on the Law of Crimes § 2.00, at 66 (Marian Quinn Barnes ed., 7th ed. 1967).

death-penalty sanction. Civil procedure. A court’s order dismissing the suit or entering a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff because of extreme discovery abuses by a party or because of a party’s action or inaction that shows an unwillingness to participate in the case. • Such a sanction is rarely ordered, and is usu. preceded by orders of lesser sanctions that have not been complied with or that have not remedied the problem.

shame sanction. A criminal sanction designed to stigmatize or disgrace a convicted offender, and often to alert the public about the offender’s conviction. • A shame sanction usu. publicly associates the offender with the crime that he or she committed. An example is being required to post a sign in one’s yard stating, “Convicted Child Molester Lives Here.” — Also termed shame sentence; shamming sanction; shaming sentence; scarlet-letter punishment; scarlet-letter sentence.

3. Int’l law. An economic or military coercive measure taken by one or more countries toward another to force it to comply with international law <U.N. sanctions against a renegade nation>.

sanction, vb. 1. To approve, authorize, or support <the court will sanction the trust disposition if it is not against public policy>. 2. To penalize by imposing a sanction <the court sanctioned the attorney for violating the gag order>.

sanctionable, adj. (Of conduct or action) meriting sanctions; likely to be sanctioned.

sanctions tort. A means of recovery for another party’s discovery abuse, whereby the judge orders the abusive party to pay a fine to the injured party for the discovery violation. • This is not a tort in the traditional sense, but rather a form of punishment that results in monetary gain for the injured party.

sanctity of contract. The principle that the parties to a contract, having duly entered into it, must honor their obligations under it.

“[Sanctity of contract] is merely another facet of freedom of contract, but the two concepts cover, to some extent, different grounds. The sanctity of contractual obligations is merely an expression of the principle that once a contract is freely and voluntarily entered into, it should be held sacred, and should be enforced by the Courts if it is broken. No doubt this very sanctity was an outcome of freedom of contract, for the reason why contracts were held sacred was the fact that the parties entered into them of their own choice and volition, and settled the terms by mutual agreement.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 12 (3d ed. 1981).

sanctuary. 1. A safe place, esp. where legal process cannot be executed; asylum.

“In medieval England, as elsewhere in Europe, there were a number of ecclesiastical places where the king’s writ did not run. The underlying theory was that consecrated places should not be profaned by the use of force, but the result in practice was that thieves and murderers could take refuge and thereby gain immunity even against the operation of criminal justice. This was the privilege called ‘sanctuary.’ In the case of parochial churches, the sanctuary lasted for forty days only. Before the expiration of this period, the fugitive had to choose whether to stand trial or ‘abjure’ the realm .... This was only permitted if he made a written confession to the coroner, which resulted in the forfeiture of his property as on conviction; his life only was spared ....” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 685 (3d ed. 1990).

2. A holy area of a religious building; esp., the area in a church where the main altar is located.

sandbagging, n. A trial lawyer’s remaining cagily silent when a possible error occurs at trial, with the hope of preserving an issue for appeal if the court does not correct the problem. • Such a tactic does not usu. preserve the issue for appeal because objections must be promptly made to alert the trial judge of the possible error.

S & L. abbr. SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

sandpapering, n. A lawyer’s general preparation of a witness before a deposition or trial. Cf. HORSESHEDDING.

sandwich lease. See LEASE.

sane, adj. Having a relatively sound and healthy mind; capable of reason and of distinguishing right from wrong.

sanitary code. A set of ordinances regulating the food and healthcare industries.

sanity. The state or condition of having a relatively sound and healthy mind. Cf. INSANITY.

sanity hearing. 1. An inquiry into the mental competency of a person to stand trial. 2. A proceeding to determine whether a person should be institutionalized.

sans ce que (sanz see kə or sawn só ka). [Law French] See ABSQUE HOC.

sans jour (sawn zhoor or sanz joor). [Law French] Hist. Without day; SINE DIE. See ALLER SANS JOUR.

sans recours (sawn ra-koor or sanz ri-kuur). See WITHOUT REcourse.

sap, n. A club, a blackjack, a hose containing rocks in the middle, or any other object generally used as a bludgeon.

SAR. abbr. 1. STOCK-APPRECIATION RIGHT. 2. SUSPICIOUS-ACTIVITY REPORT.

sasine. See SEISIN.

satellite litigation. 1. One or more lawsuits related to a major piece of litigation that is being conducted in another court <the satellite litigation in state court prevented the federal judge from ruling on the issue>. 2. Peripheral skirmishes involved in the prosecution of a lawsuit <the plaintiffs called the sanctions “satellite litigation,” drummed up by the defendants to deflect attention from the main issues in the case>.

satellite state. See CLIENT STATE.

satisdare (sat-is-dair-e), vb. [Latin fr. satis “sufficient” + dare “to give”] Roman law. To give security in the form of satisdatio. See SATISDATIO.

satisdatio (sat-is-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. satisdare] Roman law. Security given by a person, such as a debtor, through a surety.

satisfaction, n. 1. The giving of something with the intention, express or implied, that it is to extinguish some existing legal or moral obligation. • Satisfaction differs from performance because it is always something given as a substitute for or equivalent of something else, while performance is the identical thing promised to be done. — Also termed satisfaction of debt. 2. The fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the payment in full of a debt. 3. SATISFACTION PIECE. 4. Wills & estates. The payment by a testator, during the testator’s lifetime, of a legacy provided for in a will; ADVANCEMENT. 5. Wills & estates. A testamentary gift intended to satisfy a debt owed by the testator to a creditor. — satisfy, vb. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

satisfaction contract. See CONTRACT.

satisfaction of judgment. 1. The complete discharge of obligations under a judgment. 2. The document filed and entered on the record indicating that a judgment has been paid.

“Generally, a satisfaction of a judgment is the final act and end of a proceeding. Satisfaction implies or manifests an expression of finality as to all questions of liability and damages involved in the litigation. Once satisfaction occurs, further alteration or amendment of a final judgment generally is barred. Satisfaction of a judgment, when entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent, and operates as an extinguishment of the judgment debt.” 47 Am. Jur. 2d Judgments § 1006, at 443 (1996).

satisfaction of lien. 1. The fulfillment of all obligations made the subject of a lien. 2. The document signed by the lienholder releasing the property subject to a lien.

satisfaction of mortgage. 1. The complete payment of a mortgage. 2. A discharge signed by the mortgagee or mortgage holder indicating that the property subject to the mortgage is released or that the mortgage debt has been paid and the mortgage conditions have been fully satisfied.
satisfaction piece. A written statement that one party (esp. a debtor) has discharged its obligation to another party, who accepts the discharge. — Also termed certificate of discharge; satisfaction.

satisfactory evidence. See EVIDENCE.

satisfactory proof. See satisfactory evidence under EVIDENCE.

satisfied term. See TERM (4).

Saturday-night special. 1. A handgun that is easily obtained and concealed. 2. Corporations. A surprise tender offer typically held open for a limited offering period (such as one week) to maximize pressure on a shareholder to accept. • These tender offers are now effectively prohibited by section 14(e) of the Williams Act. 15 USCA § 78n(e).

save, vb. 1. To preserve from danger or loss <save a ship in distress>. 2. To lay up; to hoard <save money>. 3. To toll or suspend (the operation, running, etc.) of something <save a statute of limitations>. 4. To except, reserve, or exempt (a right, etc.) <to save vested rights>. 5. To lessen or avoid (a cost, resource, etc.) <save labor>.

save harmless. See HOLD HARMLESS.

save-harmless agreement. See HOLD-HARMLESS AGREEMENT.

save-harmless clause. See INDEMNITY CLAUSE.

"Saver default is the same as to excuse a default. And this is properly when a man having made default in court, comes afterwards, and alleges a good cause why he did it, as imprisonment at the same time, or the like." Termes de la Ley 352 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

saving clause. 1. A statutory provision exempting from coverage something that would otherwise be included. • A saving clause is generally used in a repealing act to preserve rights and claims that would otherwise be lost. 2. SAVING-TO-SUITORS CLAUSE. 3. SEVERABILITY CLAUSE. — Also termed savings clause.

savings account. A savings-bank depositor's account usu. bearing interest or containing conditions (such as advance notice) to the right of withdrawal.

savings-account trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

savings-and-loan association. A financial institution — often organized and chartered like a bank — that primarily makes home-mortgage loans but also usu. maintains checking accounts and provides other banking services. — Often shortened to S & L. — Also termed loan association; thrift institution; thrift. Cf. BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

"The thrift institutions, mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions, originally were created to meet needs for saving, credit and loans of people whose resources and income were modest. Commercial banks, merchants, money lenders, and pawn shops often did not serve this demand for loans or savings as well, or with interest rates as favorable to poor individuals, and families. During the last two centuries, thrift institutions were gradually developed, therefore, by social reformers, philanthropic benefactors, religious and fraternal organizations, trade unions, employers, and thrift entrepreneurs (in most countries of the world) as a collateral type of banking or financial intermedation." William A. Love, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 298 (1997).

savings bank. See BANK.

savings-bank trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

savings bond. See BOND (3).

savings clause. See SAVING CLAUSE.

savings note. See NOTE (1).

saving-to-suitors clause. Maritime law. A federal statutory provision that allows a party to bring suit in either state or federal court, but requires both courts to apply federal substantive law. — Also termed saving clause. 28 USCA § 1333(1).

savor, vb. To partake of the character of or bear affinity to (something). • In traditional legal idiom, an interest arising from land is said to "savor of the realty." — Also spelled savour.
S.B. See senate bill under BILL (3).

SBA. abbr. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION.

SBIC. abbr. SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT COMPANY.

sc. abbr. SCILICET.

S.C. abbr. 1. SUPREME COURT. 2. Same case. • In former practice, when put between two citations, the abbreviation indicated that the same case is reported in both places.

scab. A person who works under conditions contrary to a union contract; esp., a worker who crosses a union picket line to replace a union worker during a strike. — Also termed strikebreaker.

scabini (skab-i-ni). [Law Latin] Hist. Judges or the judge's assessors in the court held by the count; magistrates. • The term was found in a charter from the wardens of Lynn in Norfolk, during the reign of Henry VIII. But even earlier than that, the title was used in Charlemagne's empire (the French equivalent being édevins) and later Germanized as Schöffnen.

scalamin (skay-lam), n. [Latin] Hist. Scale. • Ad scalamin was the method of paying money to the Exchequer, in which sixpence was added to each twenty shillings to compensate for a deficiency in weight, although no scales were actually used.

scale, n. 1. A progression of degrees; esp., a range of wage rates. 2. A wage according to a range of rates. 3. An instrument for weighing. 4. Hist. In the practice of the English Supreme Court of Judicature, the fee charged by a solicitor for a particular type of case. • Unless the court ordered otherwise, the lower scale applied to all causes and matters assigned by the Judicature Acts to the King's Bench, or the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty divisions; to all actions for debt, contract, or tort; and to almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the Chancery division and in which the amount in controversy was less than £1,000. The higher scale applied in all other cases, and in actions falling under one of the lower-scale classes if the principal relief sought was injunctive.

scale order. See ORDER (4).

scale tolerance. The nominal variation of the mass or weight of the same goods on different scales.

scaling law. Hist. A statute establishing a process for adjusting value differences between depreciated paper money and specie. • Statutes of this type were necessary when paper depreciated after both the American Revolution and the Civil War.

scalping, n. 1. The purchase of a security by an investment adviser before the adviser recommends that a customer buy the same security. • This practice is usu. considered unethical because the customer's purchase will increase the security's price, thus enabling the investment adviser to sell at a profit. 2. The excessive markup or markdown on a transaction by a market-maker. • This action violates NASD guidelines. 3. The practice of selling something (esp. a ticket) at a price above face value once it becomes scarce (usu. just before a high-demand event begins). — scalp, vb.

scandal. 1. Disgraceful, shamefull, or degrading acts or conduct. 2. Slander. See SCANDALOUS MATTER.

"Scandal consists in the allegation of anything which is unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear, or is contrary to decency or good manners, or which charges some person with a crime not necessary to be shown in the cause, to which may be added that any unnecessary allegation, bearing cruelly upon the moral character of an individual, is also scandalous. The matter alleged, however, must be not only offensive, but also irrelevant to the cause, for however offensive it be, if it be pertinent and material to the cause the party has a right to plead it. It may often be necessary to charge false representations, fraud and immorality, and the pleading will not be open to the objection of scandal, if the facts justify the charge." Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 50-51 (1916).

scandalous matter. Civil procedure. A matter that is both grossly disgraceful (or defamatory) and irrelevant to the action or defense. • A federal court — upon a party's motion or on its own — can order a scandalous matter struck from a pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Cf. IMPERTINENT MATTER.

scandalum magnatum (skan-da-lam magnay-tam). [Law Latin] Hist. Actionable slander of powerful people; specif., defamatory comments regarding persons of high rank, such as peers, judges, or state officials.

"Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm, which are called scandalum magnatum, are held to be still more heinous; and, though they be such as would not be actionable in the case of a common person, yet when spoken in diacrate of such high and respectable characters, they amount to an atrocious injury: which is redressed by an action on the case founded on many ancient statutes; as well on behalf of the crown, to inflict the punishment of imprisonment on the slanderer, as on behalf of the party, to recover damages for the injury sustained." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 123–24 (1768).

scarlet-letter punishment. See shame sanction under SANCTION.

scatter-point analysis. A method for studying the effect that minority-population changes have on voting patterns, involving a plotting of the percentage of votes that candidates receive to determine whether voting percentages increase or decrease as the percentages of voters of a particular race increase or decrease.

scènes à faire (sen ah fair). [French “scenes for action’’] In copyright law, standard or general themes that are common to a wide variety of works and are therefore not copyrightable.

schedule, n. A written list or inventory; esp., a statement that is attached to a document and that gives a detailed showing of the matters referred to in the document <Schedule B to the title policy lists the encumbrances on the property>. — schedule, vb. — scheduled, adj.

scheduled injury. See INJURY.

scheduled property. See PROPERTY.

scheme. 1. A systemic plan; a connected or orderly arrangement, esp. of related concepts <legislative scheme>. 2. An artful plot or plan, usu. to deceive others .

schism (siz-am or skiz-am). 1. A breach or rupture; a division, esp. among members of a group, as of a union. 2. A separation of beliefs and doctrines by persons of the same organized religion, religious denomination, or sect.

“It has been held that the civil courts are not concerned with mere schisms stemming from disputations over matters of religious doctrine, not only because such questions are essentially ecclesiastical rather than judicial, but also because of the separation between the church and the state... However, it has also been held that the situation is different in the case of self-governing congressional churches, for here the courts do not hesitate to assume jurisdiction when a schism affects property rights, for in this form... each local congregation is independent and autonomous and there is no recourse within the denomination.” 66 Am. Jur. 2d Religious Societies § 51, at 804 (1973).

school, n. 1. An institution of learning and education, esp. for children.

“Although the word ‘school’ in its broad sense includes all schools or institutions, whether of high or low degree, the word ‘school’ frequently has been defined in constitutions and statutes as referring only to the public common schools generally established throughout the United States... When used in a statute or other contract, ‘school’ usually does not include universities, business colleges, or other institutions of higher education unless the intent to include such institutions is clearly indicated.” 68 Am. Jur. 2d Schools § 1, at 356 (1993).

district school. A public school contained in and maintained by a school district. See SCHOOL DISTRICT.

private school. A school maintained by private individuals, religious organizations, or corporations, funded, at least in part, by fees or tuition, and open only to pupils selected and admitted based on religious affiliations or other particular qualifications.

public school. An elementary, middle, or high school established under state law, regulated by the local state authorities in the various political subdivisions, funded and maintained by public taxation, and open and free to all children of the particular district where the school is located. — Also termed common school.

2. The collective body of students under instruction in an institution of learning. 3. A group of people adhering to the same philosophy or system of beliefs.

school board. An administrative body, made up of a number of directors or trustees, responsible for overseeing public schools within a city, county, or district. Cf. BOARD OF EDUCATION.

school bond. See BOND (3).

school district. A political subdivision of a state, created by the legislature and invested with local powers of self-government, to build, maintain, fund, and support the public schools within its territory and to otherwise assist the state in administering its educational responsibilities.

consolidated school district. A public-school district in which two or more existing schools have consolidated into a single district.

school land. See LAND.

science of legislation. See LAW REFORM.
sciendum est (st-en-dam est). [Latin] Roman law. It is to be known or understood. • This phrase often introduced a particular topic or explanation.

scienter (st-en-tar or see-ter), n. [Latin “knowingly”] 1. A degree of knowledge that makes a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission; the fact of an act’s having been done knowingly, esp. as a ground for civil damages or criminal punishment. See KNOWLEDGE; MENS REA. 2. A mental state consisting in an intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud. • In this sense, the term is used most often in the context of securities fraud. The Supreme Court has held that to establish a claim for damages under Rule 10b–5, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with scienter. Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 96 S.Ct. 1375 (1976).

scientific evidence. See EVIDENCE.

scientific knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.

scientific method. An analytical technique by which a hypothesis is formulated and then systematically tested through observation and experimentation.

sci. fa. abbr. SCIRE FACS.

sci. abbr. SCILICET.

scilicet (sil-a-set or -sit). [fr. Latin scire licet “that you may know”] That is to say; namely; VIDE LICET. • Like videlicet, this word is used in pleadings and other instruments to introduce a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms. It has never been quite as common, however, as videlicet. — Abbr. sc.; scil.; (erroneously) ss.

scintilla (sin-til-a). A spark or trace <the standard is that there must be more than a scintilla of evidence>. Pl. scintillas (sin-til-az).

scintilla juris (sin-til-a joor-is). [Law Latin “a spark of right”] Hist. A fragment of law or right. • This refers to a figurative expression in the law of uses providing a trace of seizin rights to remain in the feoffees sufficient to allow contingent uses to be executed under the Statute of Uses. It was abolished in the Law of Property Amendment Act of 1860. See STATUTE OF USES.

scintilla-of-evidence rule. A common-law doctrine holding that if even the slightest amount of relevant evidence exists on an issue, then a motion for summary judgment or for directed verdict cannot be granted and the issue must go to the jury. • Federal courts do not follow this rule, but some states apply it. — Also termed scintilla rule.

scire facias (st-ree fay-shee-az). [Law Latin “you are to make known, show cause”] A writ requiring the person against whom it is issued to appear and show cause why some matter of record should not be annulled or vacated, or why a dormant judgment against that person should not be revived. — Abbr. sci. fa.

amicable scire facias to revive a judgment. A written agreement in which a person agrees to a revival of an action is sought agrees to the entry of an adverse judgment.

scire facias ad audiendum errores (st-ree fay-shee-az ad aw-dee-en-dam e-ror-rez). [Law Latin “that you cause to know to hear errors”] Hist. A common-law writ allowing a party who had assigned error to compel the opposing party to plead. • It was abolished in 1875.

scire facias ad disprobandum debitum (st-ree fay-shee-az ad dis-proh-ban-dam deb-tum). [Law Latin “that you cause to know to disprove the debt”] Hist. A writ allowing a defendant in a foreign attachment against the plaintiff to disprove or avoid the debt recovered by the plaintiff, within a year and a day from the time of payment.

scire facias ad rehabetam terram (st-ree fay-shee-az ad re-hea-ben-dam ter-am). n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know to recover the land”] Hist. A writ allowing a judgment debtor to recover lands taken in execution after the debtor has satisfied the judgment.

scire facias quare restitutionem non (st-ree fay-shee-az kwair-ee res-ta-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nam non). n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know why restitution not”] Hist. A writ for restitution after an execution on a judgment is levied but not paid and the judgment is later reversed on appeal.

scire facias sur mortgage (st-ree fay-shee-az sar mor-gee). n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know on mortgage”] Hist. A writ ordering a defaulting mortgagor to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed and the property sold in execution.

scire facias sur municipal claim (st-ree fay-shee-az sar myoo-nis-a-pal klaym), n.

[Law Latin “that you cause to know on municipal claim”] Hist. A writ compelling the payment of a municipal claim out of the property to which a municipal lien is attached.

scire feci (st-ree fee-si). [Latin “I have caused to know”] Hist. The sheriff’s return to a writ of scire facias, indicating that notice was given to the parties against whom the writ was issued.

scire fieri inquiry (st-ree fi-ar-ri), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to ascertain the location of a testator’s property from an executor, when the sheriff returned nulla bona to a writ of execution fieri facias de bonis testatoris. See FIERI FACIAS.

scofflaw (skof-law). A person who treats the law with contempt; esp., one who avoids various laws that are not easily enforced <some scofflaws carry mannequins in their cars in order to drive in the carpool lane>.

scold, n. Hist. A person who regularly breaks the peace by scolding people, increasing discord, and generally being a public nuisance to the neighborhood. • This behavior was formerly punishable in various ways, including having an iron bridle fitted to the person’s mouth. — Also termed common scold; objurgatrix. See BRANKS.

scope note. In a digest, a precis appearing after a title and showing concisely what subject matter is included and what is excluded.

“In the Century and Decennial Digests, though not in the various digests of the Key-Number Series, there is printed immediately following each topic title a couple of paragraphs which are called the Scope-Note. The first paragraph of this scope-note shows very briefly the character of the subject-matter included under the title. The second paragraph shows the ‘Exclusions’ — i.e., what related matter has been excluded in order to conform to the plan of the Digest — and directs the reader to the proper title under which such related matter may be found. Consequently a little study of the scope-note will oftentimes repay the searcher for a few moments’ time consumed in so doing.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 116 (3d ed. 1914).

scope of a patent. Patents. The invention limits protected under a patent, determined by methods based on established principles of patent law.

scope of authority. Agency. The reasonable power that an agent has been delegated or might foreseeably be delegated in carrying out the principal’s business. See SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT; RESPONDENT SUPERIOR.

scope of employment. The range of reasonable and foreseeable activities that an employee engages in while carrying out the employer’s business. See RESPONDENT SUPERIOR. Cf. ZONE OF EMPLOYMENT.

scorched-earth defense. Corporations. An antitakeover tactic by which a target corporation sells its most valuable assets or divisions in order to reduce its value after acquisition and thus try to defeat a hostile bidder’s tender offer. See CROWN JEWEL.

S corporation. See CORPORATION.

scot. Hist. A payment; esp., a customary tax.

scotal (skot-al). Hist. An extortionary practice by which forest officers forced people to patronize the officers’ alehouses, often in exchange for the officers’ IGNORING forest offenses. • This practice was prohibited in 1217 by the Charter of the Forest, ch. 7. — Also spelled scotale (skot-ayl).

scot and lot. Hist. 1. The customary payment of a share of taxes based on one’s ability. 2. A municipal tax on the right to vote.

Scotch marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

Scotch marriage. See NOT PROVEN.

scottare (ska-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To pay a tax.

scrambling possession. See POSSESSION.

scrap value. See salvage value under VALUE.

scratching the ticket. A party member’s rejection of a candidate on a regular party ticket by canceling the candidate’s name or by voting for one or more nominees of the opposing political party.

scrawl. See SCROLL (3).

screening grand jury. See GRAND JURY.

screening mechanism. See ETHICAL WALL. scriba (skrī-ba), n. [Latin] Roman law. A court or office clerk; a scribe; a secretary. ● In England, the scriba regis was the king’s secretary.

scribere est agere (skrī-ba-ree est aj-o-ree). [Latin] Hist. To write is to act.

“But now it seems clearly to be agreed, that, by the common law and the statute of Edward III, words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. For they may be spoken in heat, without any intention . . . If the words be set down in writing, it argues more deliberate intention; and it has been held that writing is an overt act of treason; for scribere est agere. But even in this case the bare words are not the treason, but the deliberate act of writing them.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 80 (1789).

scrip. 1. A document that entitles the holder to receive something of value. 2. Paper money issued for temporary use.

scrip dividend. See DIVIDEND.

script. 1. An original or principal writing. 2. Handwriting.

scrivener (skrīv-a-nar). A writer; esp., a professional drafter of contracts or other documents.

money scrivener. A money broker; one who obtains money for mortgages or other loans.

scrivener’s error. See clerical error under ERROR (2).

scrivener’s exception. An exemption from the attorney-client privilege whereby the privilege does not attach if the attorney is retained solely to perform a ministerial task for the client, such as preparing a statutory-form deed.

scroll, n. 1. A roll of paper; a list. 2. A draft or outline to be completed at a later time. 3. A written mark; esp., a character affixed to a signature in place of a seal. — Also termed scrawl.

scruit-roll (skroo-at-rol). Hist. The record of bail accepted in a habeas corpus case.

scrutator (skroo-ta-tor), n. [Latin fr. scrutari “to search”] Hist. A bailiff or officer who enforces the king’s water rights, as by supervising wreckage, flotsam, and jetsam; a customs officer.

S.Ct. abbr. 1. SUPREME COURT. 2. Supreme Court Reporter.

scutage (skyoo-tij), n. [fr. Latin scutum “a shield”] Hist. 1. A monetary payment levied by the king on barons as a substitute for some or all of the knights to be supplied to the king by each baron. ● This payment seems to date from the 12th century, Henry II (1154–1189) having levied five scutages in the first 11 years of his reign. 2. A fee paid by a tenant-in-chief by knight-service in lieu of serving in a war. 3. A tax on a knight’s estate to help furnish the army. — Also termed escuage.

“Scutage . . . . . Shield-money, in mediaeval feudal law, a payment in lieu of military service, paid by a tenant-in-chief in respect of the service of knights which he owed to the Crown. His personal obligation to serve could not be discharged by scutage but only by fine. Payment of scutage, though known in France and Germany, was most highly developed in England where it became a general tax on knights’ estates at rates which by the thirteenth century were standardized. King John demanded frequent and heavy scutages and Magna Carta forbade the levying of scutage without the consent of a general council. Scutage was divided between the King and the tenants-in-chief who gave personal service in the campaign. It became obsolete by the fourteenth century.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1121 (1960).

scutagio habendo. See DE SCUTAGIO HABENDO.

sea. 1. The ocean <on the sea>. 2. A large landlocked part of the ocean; a large body of salt water smaller than a regular ocean <the Mediterranean Sea>. 3. The ocean swell . 4. An extremely large or extended quantity .

high seas. The seas or oceans beyond the jurisdiction of any country. ● Under international law, the high seas traditionally began three miles from the coast, but under the 1982 U.N. Convention on the Law of the Sea, coastal shores now have a 200–mile exclusive economic zone. — Also termed open seas; main sea.
“Outside territorial waters the law of no one country applies, since the high seas are free.” R.H. Gravenor, Conflict of Laws 584 (7th ed. 1974).

main sea. Archaic. The open ocean; high seas.

navigable sea. See navigable sea.

territorial sea. See territorial waters under WATER.

seabed. The sea floor; the ground underlying the ocean, over which nations may assert sovereignty, esp. if underlying their territorial waters.

sea brief. See SEA LETTER.

seagoing vessel. See VESSEL.

seal, n. 1. An impression or sign that has legal consequence when applied to an instrument. 2. A fastening that must be broken before access can be obtained.

“The use of the seal in England seems to have begun after the Norman Conquest, spreading from royalty and a few of the nobility to those of lesser rank. Originally a seal often consisted of wax bearing the imprint of an individualized signet ring, and in the seventeenth century Lord Coke said that wax without impression was not a seal. But in the United States the courts have not required either wax or impression. Impressions directly on the paper were recognized early and are still common for notarial and corporate seals, and gummed wafers have been widely used. In the absence of statute decisions have divided on the effectiveness of the written or printed word ‘seal,’ the printed initials ‘L.S.’ (locus sigill, meaning place of the seal), a scroll made with a pen (often called a ‘scroll’) and a recital of sealing. Most states in which the seal is still recognized now have statutes giving effect to one or more such devices.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 96 cmt. a (1981).

“The time-honoured form of seal was a blob of wax at the foot of the document, bearing an imprint of some kind, often a crest or motto. The use of wax was not, however, necessary for a seal, and any mark or impression on the paper was sufficient as long as it was made with the intention of affixing a seal. Recent English cases have been willing to find the necessary intention in circumstances where courts in the past would almost certainly have declined; so much so that it may now be the common law that a document purporting to be executed as a deed but lacking actual sealing will be regarded as sealed as long as it contains a printed or written indication of where the mark or impression constituting the seal should be placed if it were to be affixed.” Peter Butt, Land Law 481–82 (2d ed. 1988).

corporate seal. A seal adopted by a corporation for executing and authenticating its corporate and legal instruments.

great seal. 1. The official seal of the United States, of which the Secretary of State is the custodian. — Also termed seal of the United States. 2. The official seal of a particular state. — Also termed seal of the state; state seal. 3. The official seal of Great Britain, of which the Lord Chancellor is the custodian.

notary seal. See NOTARY SEAL.

private seal. A corporate or individual seal, as distinguished from a public seal.

public seal. A seal used to certify documents belonging to a public authority or government bureau.

quarter seal. A seal (originally a quarter section of the great seal) maintained in the Scotch chancery to be used on particular grants from the Crown. See great seal (3).

seal of the state. See great seal (2).

seal of the United States. See great seal (1).

state seal. See great seal (2).

seal, vb. 1. To authenticate or execute (a document) by use of a seal. 2. To close (an envelope, etc.) tightly; to prevent access to (a document, record, etc.).

sea law. See MARITIME LAW.

sealed bid. See BID (2).

sealed-container rule. Products liability. The principle that a seller is not liable for a defective product if it receives the product from the manufacturer and sells it without knowing of the defect or having a reasonable opportunity to inspect the product.

sealed contract. See contract under seal under CONTRACT.

sealed instrument. At common law and under some statutes, an instrument to which the bound party has affixed a personal seal, usu. recognized as providing indisputable evidence of the validity of the underlying obligations. • The common-law distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has been abolished by many states, and the UCC provides that the laws applicable to sealed instruments do not apply to contracts for the sale of goods or negotiable instruments. UCC § 2–203. See contract under seal under CONTRACT; SPECIALTY.

“At common law, the seal served to render documents indisputable as to the terms of the underlying obligation, thereby dispensing with the necessity of witnesses; the sealed instrument was considered such reliable evidence that it actually became the contract itself — called a ‘specialty’ — the loss of which meant loss of all rights of the obligee against the obligor. The seal also had many other consequences at common law, some of which have been retained in jurisdictions which still recognize the seal... In states where the seal is still recognized, its primary legal significance is often the application of a longer statute of limitations to actions on sealed instruments.” 69 Am. Jur. 2d Seals § 2, at 617–18 (1993).

sealed testament. See mystic will under WILL.

sealed verdict. See VERDICT.

sealed will. See mystic will under WILL.

sea letter. Hist. A manifest issued during a war by authorities of a port where a neutral vessel is fitted, certifying the vessel’s nationality, specifying the nature of and destination of the vessel’s cargo, and allowing the vessel to sail under the neutral flag of its owner. • The last sea letter was issued at the Port of New York in 1806, and the use of sea letters was discontinued by proclamation of President James Madison. — Also termed sea brief; sea pass; passport.

sealing records. The act or practice of officially preventing access to particular (esp. juvenile-criminal) records, in the absence of a court order. See EXPUNGEMENT.

seal of the state. See great seal (2) under SEAL.

seal of the United States. See great seal (1) under SEAL.

seaman. Maritime law. A person who assists in the navigation and operation of a vessel at sea; a sailor or mariner, esp. one below the rank of officer. • Seamen’s injuries are covered under the Jones Act. — Also termed mariner. See JONES ACT. Cf. STEVEDORE.

"The Jones Act plaintiff must be a ‘seaman’ who is injured (or killed) ‘in the course of his employment.’ The ‘course of... employment’ requirement at least excluded passengers, guests, trespassers, pirates (unless of course the pirate was suing his own employer) and so on. Who else might be excluded (or included) was, as a matter of initial construction, impossible to say. After a half-century of litigation the answer to the riddle is not apparent. The Supreme Court has alternated between giving the term ‘seaman’ an exceedingly broad construction and giving it a much narrower one. Consequently defendants have been encouraged to argue, in all but the most obvious cases, that plaintiff is not a Jones Act seaman and that the action must be dismissed. Thus there has always been, there continues to be, and presumably there will go on being a substantial volume of depressing litigation of this type.” Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 6-21, at 328 (2d ed. 1975).

"The traditional seaman is a member of the crew of a merchant vessel... However, vessels are not limited in their functions to the transportation of goods over water. The performance by a vessel of some other mission, such as operating as a cruise ship, necessitates the presence aboard ship of employees who do not ‘man, reef and steer’ the vessel... Exploration for oil and gas on navigable waters has led to further expansion of the concept of a ‘seaman.’ In 1959, in the celebrated case of Offshore Oil Co. v. Robinson, 266 F.2d 769 (5th Cir. 1959), the Fifth Circuit held that floating drilling structures are ‘vessels’ and that the amphibious oil workers aboard them are entitled to the seaman’s remedies against their employers and the operators of the ‘vessels’ on which they are employed.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 178–80 (2d ed. 1988).

able-bodied seaman. An experienced seaman who is qualified for all seaman’s duties and certified by an inspecting authority. — Abbr. AB; ABS. — Also termed able seaman; bluewater seaman.

merchant seaman. A sailor employed by a private vessel, as distinguished from one employed in public or military service.

ordinary seaman. A seaman who has some experience but who is not proficient enough to be classified as an able-bodied seaman. — Abbr. OS; OD.

seaman’s will. See soldier’s will under WILL.

sea pass. See SEA LETTER.

search, n. 1. An examination of a person’s body, property, or other area that the person would reasonably be expected to consider as private, conducted by a law-enforcement officer for the purpose of finding evidence of a crime. • Because the Fourth Amendment prohibits unreasonable searches (as well as seizures), a search cannot ordinarily be conducted without probable cause. — search, vb.

"It must be recognized that whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has ‘seized’ that person. And it is nothing less than sheer tortuosity of the English language to suggest that a careful exploration of the outer surfaces of a person’s clothing all over his or her body in an attempt to find weapons is not a ‘search.’” Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 16, 88 S.Ct. 1866, 1877 (1968) (Warren, J.).

administrative search. A search of public or commercial premises carried out by a regulatory authority for the purpose of enforcing compliance with health, safety, or security regulations. • The probable cause required for an administrative search is less stringent than that required for a search incident to a criminal investigation. — Also termed regulatory search; inspection search.
border search. A search conducted by immigration or customs officials at the border of a country to detect and prevent illegal entries of people or things. • A border search requires no warrant.

checkpoint search. A search anywhere on a military installation.

consent search. A warrantless search conducted after the person who is to be searched or who has authority over the property to be searched voluntarily gives consent.

"The voluntariness of a consent to search is 'to be determined from the totality of all the circumstances.' [Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S.Ct. 2041 (1973).] Among the factors to be considered in determining the effectiveness of an alleged consent to search are whether the defendant (1) has minimal schooling or was of low intelligence; (2) was mentally ill or intoxicated; (3) was under arrest at the time the consent was given; (4) was overpowered by officers, handcuffed, or similarly subject to physical restriction; (5) has seized from him by the police the keys to the premises thereafter searched; (6) employed evasive conduct or attempted to mislead the police; (7) denied guilt or the presence of any incriminatory objects in his premises; (8) earlier gave a valid confession or otherwise cooperated, as by instigating the search, or at least the investigation leading to the search; or (10) was refused his request to consult with counsel. The presence of some of these factors is not controlling, however, as each case must stand or fall on its own special facts." Jerold H. Israel & Wayne R. LaFave, Criminal Procedure in a Nutshell 141–42 (5th ed. 1993).

constructive search. A subpoena of a corporation’s records.

"[I]t is settled that the so-called ‘constructive search’ involved in an administrative subpoena of corporate books or records constitutes a search or ‘seizure’ within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Searches and Seizures § 44, at 674 (1993).

exigent search (eks-jənt). A warrantless search carried out in response to a sudden emergency. • This type of search is often performed to preserve evidence or to ensure the safety of the arresting officers.

illegal search. See unreasonable search.

inventory search. A complete search of an arrestee’s person before being booked into jail. • All possessions found are typically held in police custody.

no-knock search. A search of property by the police without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry. • A no-knock search warrant may be issued under limited circumstances, as when a prior announcement would lead to the destruction of the objects searched for, or would endanger the safety of the police officer or another person.

private search. A search conducted by a private person rather than by a law-enforcement officer. • Items found during a private search are generally admissible in evidence if the person conducting the search was not acting at the direction of a law-enforcement officer.

protective search. A search of a detained suspect and the area within the suspect’s immediate control, conducted to protect the arresting officer’s safety (as from a concealed weapon) and often to preserve evidence. • A protective search can be conducted without a warrant. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034 (1969). — Also termed search incident to arrest; Chimel search (sha-mel).

regulatory search. See administrative search.

shakedown search. A usu. random and warrantless search for illicit or contraband material (such as weapons or drugs) in a prisoner’s cell. — Often shortened to shakedown.

strip search. A search of a person conducted after that person’s clothes have been removed, the purpose usu. being to find any contraband the person might be hiding.

unreasonable search. A search conducted without probable cause or other considerations that would make it legally permissible. — Also termed illegal search.

voluntary search. A search in which no duress or coercion was applied to obtain the defendant’s consent. See consent search.

zone search. A search of a crime scene (such as the scene of a fire or explosion) by dividing it up into specific sectors.

2. An examination of public documents or records for information; esp., TITLE SEARCH. 3. Int’l law. The wartime process of boarding and examining the contents of a merchant vessel for contraband. • A number of treaties regulate the manner in which the search must be conducted. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

search-and-seizure warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

search book. A lawbook that contains no statements of the law but instead consists of lists or tables of cases, statutes, and the like, used simply to help a researcher find the law. • Most indexes, other than index-digests, are search books.

search incident to arrest. See protective search under SEARCH (1). search warrant. A judge’s written order authorizing a law-enforcement officer to conduct a search of a specified place and to seize evidence. — Also termed search-and-seizure warrant. See WARRANT (1).

anticipatory search warrant. A search warrant based on an affidavit showing probable cause that evidence of a certain crime (such as illegal drugs) will be located at a specific place in the future.

blanket search warrant. 1. A single search warrant that authorizes the search of more than one area. 2. An unconstitutional warrant that authorizes the seizure of everything found at a given location, without specifying which items may be seized.

no-knock search warrant. A search warrant that authorizes the police to enter premises without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry because a prior announcement would lead to the destruction of the objects searched for or would endanger the safety of the police or another person. See no-knock search under SEARCH.

sea reeve (see reev). Hist. An officer appointed to watch the shore and enforce a lord’s maritime rights, including the right to wreckage.

sea rover. 1. A person who roves the sea for plunder; a pirate. 2. A pirate vessel. seasonable, adj. Within the time agreed on; within a reasonable time <seasonable performance of the contract>.

seasonal employment. See EMPLOYMENT.

seat, n. 1. Membership and privileges in an organization; esp., membership on a securities or commodities exchange <her seat at the exchange dates back to 1998>. 2. The center of some activity <the seat of government>.

seated land. See LAND.

seat of government. The nation’s capital, a state capital, a county seat, or other location where the principal offices of the national, state, and local governments are located.

seaward. See CUSTOS MARIS.

seaworthy, adj. (Of a vessel) properly equipped and sufficiently strong and tight to resist the perils reasonably incident to the voyage for which the vessel is insured. • An implied condition of marine-insurance policies, unless otherwise stated, is that the vessel will be seaworthy. — seaworthiness, n.

seaworthy vessel. See VESSEL.

section. 1. A distinct part or division of a writing, esp. a legal instrument. — Abbr. §; sec.; s. 2. Real estate. A piece of land containing 640 acres, or one square mile. • Traditionally, public lands in the United States were divided into 640-acre squares, each one called a “section.” — Also termed section of land.

half section. A piece of land containing 320 acres, laid off either by a north-and-south or by an east-and-west line; half a section of land.

quarter section. A piece of land containing 160 acres, laid off by a north-south or east-west line; one quarter of a section of land, formerly the amount usu. granted to a homesteader. — Often shortened to quarter.

section 8(f) agreement. Labor law. A labor contract that is negotiated between an employer in the construction business and a union that cannot demonstrate that it represents a majority of the employees at the time the contract is executed. 29 USCA § 158(f). • This is an exception to the general rule that an employer need only negotiate with a union that can demonstrate majority status. It was enacted in part because of the nature of the construction industry, in which the employers may have several different jobs in different parts of the country, the jobs are typically completed in a relatively short time, and the workforce is often transient. Since the workforce often does not have sufficient ties to a particular employer to petition for a certification election, section 8(f) agreements are directed toward providing a certain level of protection in recognition of that fact. But section 8(f) agreements are not equivalent to collective-bargaining agreements. For example, the employer can legally repudiate the agreement at any time, and the employees may not legally picket to enforce the agreement. The main protection such an agreement provides is a monetary obligation, which can be enforced, if necessary, in federal court. And if the union achieves majority status, the section 8(f) agreement will essentially become a fully enforceable collective-bargaining agreement.

securitize, vb. To convert (assets) into negotiable securities for resale in the financial market, allowing the issuing financial institution to remove assets from its books, to improve its capital ratio and liquidity while making new loans with the security proceeds. — securitized, adj. — securitization, n.

security, n. 1. Collateral given or pledged to guarantee the fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the assurance that a creditor will be repaid (usu. with interest) any money or credit extended to a debtor. 2. A person who is bound by some type of guaranty; SURETY. 3. The state of being secure, esp. from danger or attack. 4. An instrument that evidences the holder’s ownership rights in a firm (e.g., a stock), the holder’s creditor relationship with a firm or government (e.g., a bond), or the holder’s other rights (e.g., an option). • A security indicates an interest based on an investment in a common enterprise rather than direct participation in the enterprise. Under an important statutory definition, a security is any interest or instrument relating to finances, including a note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in a profit-sharing agreement, collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any of these things. A security also includes any put, call, straddle, option, or privilege on any security, certificate of deposit, group or index of securities, or any such device entered into on a national securities exchange, relating to foreign currency. 15 USCA § 77b(1). Cf. SHARE (2); STOCK (4).

*Securities differ from most other commodities in which people deal. They have no intrinsic value in themselves — they represent rights in something else. The value of a bond, note or other promise to pay depends on the financial condition of the promise. The value of a share of stock depends on the profitability or future prospects of the corporation or other entity which issued it; its market price depends on how much other people are willing to pay for it, based on their evaluation of those prospects." — David L. Ratner, Securities Regulation in a Nutshell 1 (4th ed. 1992).

“What do the following have in common: scotch whiskey, self-improvement courses, cosmetics, earthworms, beavers, muskrats, rabbits, chinchillas, fishing boats, vacuum cleaners, cemetery lots, cattle embryos, master recording contracts, animal feeding programs, pooled litigation funds, and fruit trees? The answer is that they have all been held to be securities within the meaning of federal or state securities statutes. The vast range of such unconventional investments that have fallen within the ambit of the securities laws’ coverage is due to the broad statutory definition of ‘security’ …”. — Thomas Lee Hazen, Treatise on the Law of Securities Regulation § 1.5, at 28-29 (3d ed. 1995).

adjustment security. A stock or bond that is issued during a corporate reorganization. • The security holders’ relative interests are readjusted during this process.

assessable security. A security on which a charge or assessment covering the obligations of the issuing company is made. • Bank and insurance-company stock may be assessable.

asset-backed security. A debt security (such as a bond) that is secured by assets that have been pooled and secured by the assets from the pool.

bearer security. An unrestricted security payable to the holder. Cf. bearer bond under BOND (3).

certificated security. A security that is a recognized investment vehicle, belongs to or is divisible into a class or series of shares, and is represented on an instrument payable to the bearer or a named person.

collateral security. A security, subordinate to and given in addition to a primary security, that is intended to guarantee the validity or convertibility of the primary security.

consolidated security. (usu. pl.) A security issued in large enough numbers to provide the funds to retire two or more outstanding issues of debt securities.

conversion security. The security into which a convertible security may be converted, usu. common stock.

certificable security. A security (usu. a bond or preferred stock) that may be exchanged by the owner for another security, esp. common stock from the same company, and usu. at a fixed price on a specified coupon security. A security with detachable interest coupons that the holder must present for payment as they mature. • Coupon securities are usu. in denominations of $1,000, and they are negotiable.

debt security. A security representing funds borrowed by the corporation from the holder of the debt obligation; esp., a bond, note, or debenture. • Generally, a debt security is any security that is not an equity security. See BOND (3).

divisional security. A special type of security issued to finance a particular project.

equity security. A security representing an ownership interest in a corporation, such as a share of stock, rather than a debt interest, such as a bond; any stock or similar security, or any security that is convertible into stock or similar security or carrying a warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase stock or a similar security, and any such warrant or right.

exempt security. A security that need not be registered under the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 and is exempt from the margin requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

fixed-income security. A security that pays a fixed rate of return, such as a bond with a fixed interest rate or a preferred stock with a fixed dividend.

government security. A security issued by a government, a government agency, or a government corporation; esp., a security (such as a Treasury bill) issued by a U.S. government agency, with the implied backing of Congress. • Also termed government-agency security; agency security.

heritable security. Scots law. A debt instrument secured by a charge on heritable property. See heritable bond under BOND (2).

high-grade security. A security issued by a company of sound financial condition and having the ability to maintain good earnings (e.g., a utility company security).

hybrid security. A security with features of both a debt instrument (such as a bond) and an equity interest (such as a share of stock). • An example of a hybrid security is a convertible bond, which can be exchanged for shares in the issuing corporation and is subject to stock-price fluctuations.

investment security. An instrument issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer.

junior security. A security that is subordinate to a senior security.

landed security. A mortgage or other encumbrance affecting land.

letter security. See restricted security.

listed security. A security accepted for trading on a securities exchange. • The issuing company must have met the SEC’s registration requirements and complied with the rules of the particular exchange. • Also termed listed stock. See DELISTING.

long-term security. 1. A new securities issue with an initial maturity of ten years or more. 2. On a balance sheet, a security with a remaining maturity of one year or more.

low-grade security. A security with low investment quality. • Low-grade securities usu. offer higher yields to attract capital. See junk bond under BOND (3).

marginable security. A security that can be bought on margin. • Also termed margin stock. See MARGIN.

margined security. A security that is bought on margin and that serves as collateral in a margin account. See MARGIN.

marketable security. A security that the holder can readily sell on a stock exchange or an over-the-counter market.

mortgage-backed security. A security (esp. a pass-through security) backed by mortgages.

municipal security. See municipal bond under BOND (3).

noncallable security. A security that cannot be redeemed, or bought back, at the issuer’s option. • Also termed (specif.) noncallable bond.

nonmarketable security. 1. A security that cannot be sold on the market (such as government bonds) and can be redeemed only by the holder. 2. A security that is not of investment quality.

outstanding security. A security that is held by an investor and has not been redeemed by the issuing corporation.

pass-through security. A security that passes through payments from debtors to investors. • Pass-through securities are usu. assembled and sold in packages to investors by private lenders who deduct a service fee.
before passing the principal and interest payments through to the investors.

personal security. 1. An obligation for the repayment of a debt, evidenced by a pledge or note binding a natural person, as distinguished from property. 2. A person's legal right to enjoy life, health, and reputation.

public security. A negotiable or transferable security that is evidence of government debt.

real security. The security of mortgages or other liens or encumbrances upon land. See COLLATERAL.

redeemable security. Any security, other than a short-term note, that, when presented to the issuer, entitles the holder to receive a share of the issuer's assets or the cash equivalent. — Also termed callable security.

registered security. 1. A security whose owner is recorded in the issuer's books. • The issuer keeps a record of the current owners for purposes of sending dividends, proxies, and the like. 2. A security that is to be offered for sale and for which a registration statement has been submitted. — Also termed (specif.) registered stock.

restricted security. A security that is not registered with the SEC and therefore may not be sold publicly unless specified conditions are met. • A restricted security is usu. acquired in a nonpublic transaction in which the buyer gives the seller a letter stating the buyer's intent to hold the stock as an investment rather than resell it. — Also termed restricted stock; letter security; letter stock; unregistered security.

senior security. A security of a class having priority over another class as to the distribution of assets or the payment of dividends. 15 USCA § 77r(d)(4).

shelf security. A security that is set aside for shelf registration.

short-term security. A bond or note that matures and is payable within a brief period (often one year).

speculative security. A security that, as an investment, involves a risk of loss greater than would usu. be involved; esp., a security whose value depends on proposed or promised future promotion or development, rather than on present tangible assets or conditions.

structured security. (usu. pl.) A security whose cash-flow characteristics depend on one or more indexes, or that has an embedded forward or option, or a security for which an investor's investment return and the issuer's payment obligations are contingent on, or highly sensitive to, changes in the value of the underlying assets, indices, interest rates, or cash flows. SEC Rule 434(h) (17 CFR § 230.434(h)).

uncertificated security. A share or other interest in property or an enterprise, or an obligation of the issuer that is not represent-ed by an instrument but is registered on the issuer's books. UCC § 8-102(a)(18). • This term was called uncertificated security in previous versions of the UCC.

unlisted security. An over-the-counter security that is not registered with a stock exchange. — Also termed unlisted stock.

unregistered security. See restricted security.

voting security. See voting stock under STOCK.

when-issued security. A security that can be traded even though it has not yet been issued. • Any transaction that takes place does not become final until the security is issued.

worthless security. A security that has lost its value, for which a loss (usu. capital) is allowed for tax purposes. IRC (26 USCA) § 165.

zero-coupon security. A security (esp. a bond) that is issued at a large discount but pays no interest.

security agreement. An agreement that creates or provides for an interest in specified real or personal property to guarantee the performance of an obligation.

Security Council. A body of the United Nations, consisting of five permanent members (China, France, Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States) and ten additional members elected at stated intervals, charged with the responsibility of maintaining international peace and security, and esp. of preventing or halting wars by diplomatic, economic, or military action.

security deposit. See DEPOSIT (3).

security for costs. Money, property, or a bond given to a court by a plaintiff or an appellant to secure the payment of court costs if that party loses.

security grade. See SECURITY RATING. security grading. See SECURITY RATING.

security interest. A property interest created by agreement or by operation of law to secure performance of an obligation (esp. repayment of a debt). • Although the UCC limits the creation of a security interest to personal property, the Bankruptcy Code defines the term to mean "a lien created by an agreement." 11 USCA § 101(51).

perfected security interest. A security interest that has completed the statutory requirements for achieving priority over other security interests that are subject to the same requirements.

purchase-money security interest. A security interest that is created when a buyer uses the lender’s money to make the purchase and immediately gives the lender security (UCC § 9-107); a security interest that is either (1) taken or retained by the seller of the collateral to secure all or part of its price or (2) taken by a person who by making advances or incurring an obligation gives value to enable the debtor to acquire rights in or the use of collateral if that value is in fact so used. • If a buyer’s purchase of a boat, for example, is financed by a bank that loans the amount of the purchase price, the bank’s security interest in the boat that secures the loan is a purchase-money security interest. — Abbr. PMSI. — Also termed purchase-money interest.

unperfected security interest. A security interest held by a creditor who has not established priority over any other creditor. • The only priority is over the debtor.

security rating. 1. The system for grading or classifying a security by financial strength, stability, or risk. • Firms such as Standard and Poor’s and Moody’s grade securities. — Also termed security grade; security grading; security rate. 2. The classification that a given security is assigned to under this system.

secus (see-kas). [Latin] Otherwise; to the contrary.

sedato animo (si-day-toh an-o-moh). [Latin] With stated or settled purpose.

se defendendo (see def-en-den-doh), adv. [Law Latin] In self-defense; in defending oneself <homicide se defendendo>.

"Homicide se defendendo is of two kinds. (1) Such, as tho it excuseth from death, yet it excuseth not the forfeiture of goods, . . . (2) Such as wholly acquests from all kinds of forfeiture." 1 Hale P.C. 478.

sedentary work. See WORK.

sede plena (see-dee plee-na). [Latin] Hist. The see being filled. • This term indicated that a bishop’s see was not vacant.

sedes (see-deez), n. [Latin “a seat’”] 1. Roman law. A private residence. 2. Roman law. Judicial office; the bench. 3. Hist. A see; a bishop’s dignity.

sedge flat. A tract of land below the high-water mark.

sedition, n. An agreement, communication, or other preliminary activity aimed at inciting treason or some lesser commotion against public authority; advocacy aimed at inciting or producing — and likely to incite or produce — imminent lawless action. • At common law, sedition included defaming a member of the royal family or the government. The difference between sedition and treason is that the former is committed by preliminary steps, while the latter entails some overt act for carrying out the plan. But of course, if the plan is merely for some small commotion, even accomplishing the plan does not amount to treason. — seditious, adj. Cf. TREASON.

“Sedition — This, perhaps the very vaguest of all offenses known to the Criminal Law, is defined as the speaking or writing of words calculated to excite disaffection against the Constitution as by law established, to procure the alteration of it by other than lawful means, or to incite any person to commit a crime to the disturbance of the peace, or to raise discontent or disaffection, or to promote ill-feeling between different classes of the community. A charge of sedition is, historically, one of the chief means by which Government, especially at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century, strove to put down hostile critics. It is evident that the vagueness of the charge is a danger to the liberty of the subject, especially if the Courts of Justice can be induced to take a view favourable to the Government." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

seditious conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

seditious libel. See LIBEL.

seditious speech. See SPEECH.
sed non allocatur (sed non al-o-kay-tor). [Law Latin] Hist. But it is not allowed or upheld. This phrase was formerly used to indicate the court’s disagreement with the arguments of counsel.

sed per curiam (sed par kyoor-ee-am). [Latin] But by the court. This phrase is used to introduce: (1) a statement made by the court disagreeing with counsel’s arguments; or (2) the opinion of the whole court when different from the opinion of the single judge immediately before quoted.

sed quaere (sed kweer-ee). [Latin] But inquire; examine this further. This remark indicates that the correctness of a particular statement is challenged.

seduction. The offense that occurs when a man entices a woman of previously chaste character to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, or bribes, or other means not involving force. Many states have abolished this offense for persons over the age of legal consent. Traditionally, the parent has an action to recover damages for the loss of the child’s services. But in measuring damages, the jury may consider not just the loss of services but also the distress and anxiety that the parent has suffered in being deprived of the child’s comfort and companionship. Though seduction was not a crime at common law, many American states made it a statutory crime until the late 20th century.

sed vide (sed vi-dee). [Latin] But see. This remark, followed by a citation, directs the reader’s attention to an authority or a statement that conflicts with or contradicts the statement or principle just given. Also termed but see.

see, n. The area or district of a bishop’s jurisdiction (e.g., the see of Canterbury).

seed money. Start-up money for a business venture. Also termed front money; front-end money.

segregation, n. 1. The act or process of separating. 2. The unconstitutional policy of separating people on the basis of color, nationality, religion, or the like. — segregate, v.b. — segregative, adj.

de facto segregation. Segregation that occurs without state authority, usu. on the basis of socioeconomic factors.

de jure segregation. Segregation that is permitted by law.

punitive segregation. The act of removing a prisoner from the prison population for placement in separate or solitary confinement, usu. for disciplinary reasons.

seignor (seen-yor), n. [Law French] Hist. An owner of something; a lord of a fee or manor. Also spelled seigneur (seen- or sayn-yor); seignior. See SEIGNIORY.

seignior in gross (seen-yor in grohs), n. A lord having no manor but enjoying the other rights of lordship.

seignioresse (seen-yor-es or -is), n. [Law French] Hist. A female superior; a lady.

seigniory (seen-yor-ee), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. The rights and powers of a lord; esp., a grantor’s retained right to have the grantee perform services in exchange for the transfer of land. 2. A lord’s dominions; a feudal or manor lordship; esp., land held subject to such a retained right in the grantor. Also spelled seignory.

seigniory in gross (seen-yor-ee in grohs). See reputed manor under MANOR.

seignory. See SEIGNIORY.

seise (seez), vb. To invest with seisin or establish as a holder in fee simple; to put in possession <he became seised of half a section of farmland near Tulia>.

seisin (see-zin), n. Possession of a freehold estate in land; ownership. Also spelled seizin. Also termed vesture; seisin; (in Scots law) saisine.

"Originally, seisin meant simply possession and the word was applicable to both land and chattels. Prior to the fourteenth century it was proper to speak of a man as being seised of land or seised of a horse. Gradually, seisin and possession became distinct concepts. A man could be said to be in possession of chattels, or of lands wherein he had an estate for years, but he could not be said to be seised of them. Seisin came finally to mean, in relation to land, possession under claim of a freehold estate therein. The tenant for years had possession but not seisin; seisin was in the reversioner who had the fee. And although the word ‘seisin’ appears in modern statutes with a fair degree of frequency, it is usually treated as synonymous

constructive seisin. See seisin in law.

covenant of seisin. See COVENANT (4).

customary seisin. See quasi seisin.

equitable seisin. See seisin in law.

legal seisin. See seisin in law.

livery of seisin. See livery of seisin.

primer seisin (prim-ar or pr-t-mar see-zin). Hist. A right of the Crown to receive, from the heir of a tenant who died in possession of a knight’s fee, one year’s profits of the inherited estate (or half a year’s profits if the estate was in reversion); FIRST FRUITS (1).

quasi-seisin. A copyholder’s possession of lands, the freehold possession being in the lord. — Also termed customary seisin.

seisin in deed. Actual possession of a freehold estate in land, by oneself or by one’s tenant or agent, as distinguished from legal possession. — Also termed seisin in fact; actual seisin.

seisin in fact. See actual seisin.

seisin in law. The right to immediate possession of a freehold estate in land, as when an heir inherits land but has not yet entered it. — Also termed legal seisin; constructive seisin; equitable seisin.

seisina (see-zin-a), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Seisin.

seisina habenda (see-zin-a ha-ben-da). See DE SEISINA HABENDA.

seisin in fact. See actual seisin under SEISIN.

seize, vb. 1. To forcibly take possession (of a person or property). 2. To place (someone) in possession. 3. To be in possession (of property). See SEISIN; SEIZURE.

seizure, n. The act or an instance of taking possession of a person or property by legal right or process; esp., in constitutional law, a confiscation or arrest that may interfere with a person’s reasonable expectation of privacy.

select committee. See special committee under COMMITTEE.

select council. See COUNCIL.

selecti judices (si-lek-ti joo-di-seez). [Latin] Roman law. Jurors on the official panel prepared by the praetor, who for a specific trial were drawn by lot subject to challenge and sworn to office in a similar manner to modern juries.

selective disclosure. The act of divulging part of a privileged communication, or one of several privileged communications, usu. because the divulged portion is helpful to the party giving the information, while harmful portions of the communication are withheld. • Such a disclosure can result in a limited waiver of the privilege for all communications on the same subject matter as the divulged portion.

selective enforcement. The practice of law-enforcement officers who use wide or even unfettered discretion about when and where to carry out certain laws; esp., the practice of singling a person out for prosecution or punishment under a statute or regulation because the person is a member of a protected group or because the person has exercised or is planning to exercise a constitutionally protected right. — Also termed selective prosecution. Cf. VINDICTIVE PROSECUTION.

"The chief of police of a New England town once declared to the press that he believed in a strict curfew law, "selectively enforced." ‘Selective enforcement’ in this case means that the policeman decides for himself who ought to be sent home from the street; legislative candour would suggest that if this is the intention it ought to be expressed in the law itself, instead of being concealed behind words that are 'strict' and categorical." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 42 (1968).

selective incorporation. See INCORPORATION.

selective prosecution. See SELECTIVE ENFORCEMENT.

selective prospectivity. A court’s decision to apply a new rule of law in the particular case in which the new rule is announced, but to apply the old rule in all other cases pending at the time the new rule is announced or in which the facts predate the new rule’s announcement.

Selective Service System. An executive agency charged with maintaining records of all persons eligible for military service. — Abbr. SSS.

selectman. A municipal officer elected annually in some New England towns to transact business and perform some executive functions.

self-applying, adj. (Of a statute, ordinance, etc.) requiring no more for interpretation than self-applying

a familiarity with the ordinary meanings of words.

self-authentication. See AUTHENTICATION.

self-criminal. See SELF-INCRIMINATION.

self-critical-analysis privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

self-dealing, n. Participation in a transaction that benefits oneself instead of another who is owed a fiduciary duty. • For example, a corporate director might engage in self-dealing by participating in a competing business to the corporation’s detriment. — self-deal, vb. Cf. FAIR DEALING.

self-defense, n. 1. The use of force to protect oneself, one’s family, or one’s property from a real or threatened attack. • Generally, a person is justified in using a reasonable amount of force in self-defense if he or she believes that the danger of bodily harm is imminent and that force is necessary to avoid this danger. — Also termed defense of self. Cf. ADEQUATE PROVOCATION.

“The law of self-defense, as it is applied by the courts, turns on two requirements: the force must have been necessary, and it must have been reasonable.” Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 114 (1991).

imperfect self-defense. The use of force by one who makes an honest but unreasonable mistake that force is necessary to repel an attack. • In some jurisdictions, such a self-defender will be charged with a lesser offense than the one committed.

perfect self-defense. The use of force by one who accurately appraises the necessity and the amount of force to repel an attack. 2. Int’l law. The right of a state to defend itself against a real or threatened attack. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) self-defence. — self-defender, n.

“Self-defence, properly understood, is a legal right, and as with other legal rights the question whether a specific state of facts warrants its exercise is a legal question. It is not a question on which a state is entitled, in any special sense, to be a judge in its own cause.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 319 (5th ed. 1955).

self-destruction. See SUICIDE.

self-determination contract. See CONTRACT.

self-determination election. See GLOBE ELECTION.

self-employed retirement plan. See KEOGH PLAN.

self-employment tax. See TAX.

self-executing, adj. (Of an instrument) effective immediately without the need of any type of implementing action <the wills had self-executing affidavits attached>. • Legal instruments may be self-executing according to various standards. For example, treaties are self-executing under the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution (Article VI, § 2) if textually capable of judicial enforcement and intended to be enforced in that manner.

self-help, n. An attempt to redress a perceived wrong by one’s own action rather than through the normal legal process. • The UCC and other statutes provide for particular self-help remedies (such as repossession) if the remedy can be executed without breaching the peace. UCC § 9–503. — Also termed self-redress; extrajudicial enforcement.

“Notice to the debtor is generally not required prior to self-help repossession of collateral by the creditor upon default, although the provision for self-help repossession has been held to violate due process requirements in some instances, and states under the Uniform Consumer Credit Code require particular notice requirements. Furthermore, while the UCC generally does not require notice to the debtor upon self-help repossession of the collateral upon the debtor’s default, the agreement between the parties may require such notice prior to repossession.” 68A Am. Jur. 2d Secured Transactions § 608, at 466 (1993).

self-help remedy. See extrajudicial remedy under REMEDY.

self-incrimination. The act of indicating one’s own involvement in a crime or exposing oneself to prosecution, esp. by making a statement. — Also termed self-crimination; self-inculpation. See RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCrimINATION.

Self-Incrimination Clause. The clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution barring the government from compelling criminal defendants to testify against themselves.

self-induced frustration. See FRUSTRATION.

self-induced intoxication. See voluntary intoxication under INTOXICATION.

self-insurance. See INSURANCE.
self-insured retention. Insurance. The amount of an otherwise-covered loss that is not covered by an insurance policy and that usu. must be paid before the insurer will pay benefits <the defendant had a $1 million CGL policy to cover the loss, but had to pay a self-insured retention of $100,000, which it had agreed to so that the policy premium would be lower>. — Abbrev. SIR. Cf. DEDUCTIBLE.

self-killing. See SUICIDE.

self-liquidating mortgage. See amortized mortgage under MORTGAGE.

self-murder. See SUICIDE.

self-policing privilege. See self-critical-analysis privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

self-proved will. See WILL.

self-proving affidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

self-redress. See SELF-HELP.

self-serving declaration. See DECLARATION (6).

self-settled trust. See TRUST.

self-slaughter. See SUICIDE.

self-stultification. The act or an instance of testifying about one’s own deficiencies. See STULTIFY.

sell, vb. To transfer (property) by sale.

seller. 1. A person who sells or contracts to sell goods; a vendor. UCC § 2–103(1)(d). 2. Generally, a person who sells anything; the transferor of property in a contract of sale.

seller’s market. See MARKET.

seller’s option. See OPTION.

selling agent. The real-estate broker’s representative who sells the property, as opposed to the agent who lists the property for sale. Cf. LISTING AGENT.

selling price. See sales price under PRICE.

sell-off, n. A period when heavy pressure to sell causes falling stock-market prices.

sell order. See ORDER (4).

semble (sem-bal). [Law French] It seems; it would appear <semble that the parties’ intention was to create a binding agreement>. ● This term is used chiefly to indicate an obiter dictum in a court opinion or to introduce an uncertain thought or interpretation. — Abbrev. sem.; semb.

seminatria (si-mes-tree-ə), n. [Latin “half-yearly matters”] Roman law. The collected decisions of Roman emperors, issued every six months. — Also spelled semenstra.

semi-matrimonium (sem-1 ma-tra-moh-nee-am), n. [Latin] A half-marriage.

seminary. 1. An educational institution, such as a college, academy, or other school. 2. The building in which the institution performs its functions.

seminiaufragium (sem-i-naw-fray-jee-am), n. [Latin] Hist. A half-shipwreck, as when goods are cast overboard in a storm or when a damaged ship’s repair costs are more than the ship’s worth.

semi-skilled work. See WORK.

semper (sem-par). [Latin] Always. ● This term introduces several Latin maxims, such as semper in dubiis benigniora praerenda sunt (“in doubtful cases, the more favorable constructions are always to be preferred”).

senage (see-nij). [French] Money paid for syndodes; tribute-money. See SYNODAL.

senate. 1. The upper chamber of a bicameral legislature. 2. (cap.) The upper house of the U.S. Congress, composed of 100 members — two from each state — who are elected to six-year terms. — Abbrev. S.

senate bill. See BILL (3).

senator. A person who is a member of a senate.

senatorial courtesy. 1. The tradition that the President should take care in filling a high-level federal post (such as a judgeship) with a person agreeable to the senators from the nominee's home state, lest the senators defeat confirmation.

“The risk of a deadlock is minimized by [the President's] consulting informally with the Senators from the State in which the office lies, if they are members of his own political party. Actually this amounts in most instances to his taking the advice of these two Senators as to a selection. A nomination approved by them is practically certain of final confirmation by the Senate as a whole. The arrangement is a 'log-rolling' one, which has been dignified by the name of 'senatorial courtesy.' If you will help me to get the appointments I want in my State, I will help you get the appointments you want in your State.” — Herbert W. Horwell, The Usages of the American Constitution 129 (1926).

2. Loosely, civility among senators .

senatus (si-nay-tas), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. The senate; the great national council of Roman statesmen and dignitaries. 2. The meeting place for the Roman senate.

senatus consultum (si-nay-tas kan-sal-ta), [Latin] Roman law. Advice from the Roman Senate, which had no legal weight (though it was usu. followed) until the end of the second century A.D., when it became the official expression of the imperial will.

“Senatus consultum. — In the regal and republican periods the Senate enjoyed no legislative power. It was an advisory body, nominated by the King, and at first purely patrician. Later it ... included patricians and plebeians ... its chief duty still being to tender advice to the magistrates ... The theory still was, till the time of Hadrian, that senatus consultum were directions to the magistrates, who were now in fact, if not in name, bound to give effect to them, till by a process of gradual usurpation senatus consultum came to be direct legislation.” — R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 12-13 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

senatus consultum Macedonianum (si-nay-tas kan-sal-tom mas-a-doh-nee-ay-nam), n. [Latin “Macedo's Decree”] Roman law. A senate decree, first given under Claudius and renewed by Vespasian, to protect children from making unconscionable loans with creditors in expectation of their father's death, by making actions to recover such loans unlawful. — Also termed Macedonian Decree.

“In the principate of Vespasian, 69-79 A.D., a senatus consultum was passed which forbade loans to a filius-familias. It was called the senatus consultum — Macedonianum, after one Macedo, a usurer who had made such a loan and thereby instigated a hard-pressed debtor to kill his father in order to enter into his inheritance. To prevent tragic possibilities like these, the senatus consultum declared that no action would lie to recover money lent to a filius-familias.” — Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 188-89 (1927).

“The senatus consultum Macedonianum reads as follows: "Whereas Macedo's borrowings gave him an added incentive to commit a crime to which he was naturally predisposed and whereas those who lend money on terms which are dubious, to say the least, often provide evil men with the means of wrongdoing, it has been decided, in order to teach pernicious moneylenders that a son's debt cannot be made good by waiting for his father's death, that a person who has lent money to a son-in-power is to have no claim or action even after the death of the person in whose power he was."” — Digest of Justinian 14.6.1 (Ulpian, Ad Sabiniun 49).

senatus consultum ultimae necessitatis (si-nay-tas kan-sal-tom al-ta-nee na-se-si-l-ay-tis). [Latin] Roman law. A decree of the senate of the last necessity. — This decree usu. preceded the nomination of a leader with absolute power in a time of emergency. — Also termed senatus consultum ultimum.

senatus consultum Velleianum (si-nay-tas kan-sal-tom vel-ce-ay-nam). [Latin “Velleian Decree”] Roman law. A senate decree, probably of A.D. 46, to protect women from making unconscionable guarantees, suretyship undertakings, or debt assumptions for their husbands and for others generally, by making actions to enforce such undertakings unlawful.

sending state. The country from which a diplomatic agent or consul is sent abroad. Cf. RECEIVING STATE.

senescallus (sen-as-kal-ás), n. [Law Latin] See SENESCHAL. seneschal (sen-esh-al), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. A French title of office, equivalent to a steward in England. — A seneschal was originally a duke's lieutenant or a lieutenant to other dignities of the kingdom. 2. The steward of a manor. — Also termed senescallus. senility. Mental feebleness or impairment caused by old age. • A senile person (in the legal, as opposed to the popular, sense) is incompetent to enter into a binding contract or to execute a will. — Also termed senile dementia (see-nil di-men-shee-a).

senior, adj. 1. (Of a debt, etc.) first; preferred, as over junior obligations. 2. (Of a person) older than someone else. 3. (Of a person) higher in rank or service. 4. (Of a man) elder, as distinguished from the man’s son who has the same name.

senior interest. See interest (2).

seniority. 1. The preferential status, privileges, or rights given an employee based on the employee’s length of service with an employer. • Employees with seniority may receive additional or enhanced benefit packages and obtain competitive advantages over fellow employees in layoff and promotional decisions. 2. The status of being older or senior.

seniority system. Employment law. Any arrangement that recognizes length of service in making decisions about job layoffs and promotions or other advancements.

senior judge. See judge.

senior lien. See lien.

senior mortgage. See mortgage.

senior partner. See partner.

senior security. See security.

senior status. The employment condition of a judge who, having taken semireirement, continues to perform certain judicial duties that the judge is willing and able to undertake.

sensitivity training. Instructional sessions for management and employees designed to counteract the callous treatment of others, esp. women and minorities, in the workplace.

sensus (sen-sas). [Latin] Hist. Sense; meaning; signification. • The word appears in its inflected form in phrases such as malo sensu (“an evil sense”), mittiori sensu (“in a milder sense”), and sensu honesto (“in an honest sense”).

sentence, n. The judgment that a court formally pronounces after finding a criminal defendant guilty; the punishment imposed on a criminal wrongdoer . — sentence, vb.

accumulative sentences. See consecutive sentences.

aggregate sentence. A sentence that arises from a conviction on multiple counts in an indictment.

concurrent sentences. Two or more sentences of jail time to be served simultaneously. • For example, if a defendant receives concurrent sentences of 5 years and 15 years, the total amount of jail time is 15 years.

conditional sentence. A sentence of confinement if the defendant fails to perform the conditions of probation.

consecutive sentences. Two or more sentences of jail time to be served in sequence. • For example, if a defendant receives consecutive sentences of 20 years and 5 years, the total amount of jail time is 25 years. — Also termed cumulative sentences; accumulative sentences.

death sentence. A sentence that imposes the death penalty. — Also termed judgment of blood. See death penalty.

defered sentence. A sentence that will not be carried out if the defendant meets certain requirements, such as complying with conditions of probation.

determinate sentence. A sentence for a fixed length of time rather than for an unspecified duration. — Also termed definite sentence; definitive sentence; fixed sentence; flat sentence; straight sentence.

fixed sentence. 1. See determinate sentence. 2. See mandatory sentence.

flat sentence. See determinate sentence.

general sentence. An undivided, aggregate sentence in a multicount case; a sentence that does not specify the punishment imposed for each count. • General sentences are prohibited.

indeterminate sentence. 1. A sentence of an unspecified duration, such as one for a term of 10 to 20 years. 2. A maximum prison term that the parole board can reduce, through statutory authorization, after the inmate has served the minimum time required by law. — Also termed indefinite sentence. See indefinite sentencing.

intermittent sentence. A sentence consisting of periods of confinement interrupted by periods of freedom. — Also termed (when served on weekends) weekend sentence.

life sentence. A sentence that imprisons the convicted criminal for life — though in some jurisdictions the prisoner may become eligible for release on good behavior, rehabilitation, or the like.

mandatory sentence. A sentence set by law with no discretion for the judge to individualize punishment. — Also termed mandatory penalty; mandatory punishment; fixed sentence.

maximum sentence. The highest level of punishment provided by law for a particular crime.

minimum sentence. The least amount of time that a defendant must serve in prison before becoming eligible for parole.

multiple sentences. Concurrent or consecutive sentences, if a defendant is found guilty of more than one offense.

nominal sentence. A criminal sentence in name only; an exceedingly light sentence.

noncustodial sentence. A criminal sentence (such as probation) not requiring prison time.

presumptive sentence. An average sentence for a particular crime (esp. provided under sentencing guidelines) that can be raised or lowered based on the presence of mitigating or aggravating circumstances.

split sentence. A sentence in which part of the time is served in confinement — to expose the offender to the unpleasantness of prison — and the rest on probation.

straight sentence. See determinate sentence.

suspended sentence. A sentence postponed so that the defendant is not required to serve time unless he or she commits another crime or violates some other court-imposed condition. — A suspended sentence, in effect, is a form of probation. — Also termed withheld sentence.

weekend sentence. See intermittent sentence.

sentence cap. Military law. A pretrial plea agreement in a court-martial proceeding, by which a ceiling is placed on the maximum penalty that can be imposed.

sentence-factor manipulation. See sentencing entrapment under ENTRAPMENT.

sentence-package rule. Criminal procedure. The principle that a defendant can be resentenced on an aggregate sentence — that is, one arising from a conviction on multiple counts in an indictment — when the defendant successfully challenges part of the conviction, as by successfully challenging some but not all of the counts.

sentencing council. A panel of three or more judges who confer to determine a criminal sentence. • Sentencing by a council occurs less frequently than sentencing by a single trial judge.

sentencing entrapment. See ENTRAPMENT.

sentencing guidelines. A set of standards for determining the punishment that a convicted criminal should receive, based on the nature of the crime and the offender’s criminal history. • The federal government and several states have adopted sentencing guidelines in an effort to make judicial sentencing more consistent.

sentencing hearing. See PRESENTENCE HEARING.

sententia (sen-ten-shee-a), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Sense; meaning. 2. An opinion, esp. a legal opinion. 3. A judicial decision.

SEP (sep). See simplified employee pension plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

separability clause. See SEVERABILITY CLAUSE.

separable, adj. Capable of being separated or divided .

separable controversy. A claim that is separate and independent from the other claims being asserted in a suit. • This term is most often associated with the statute that permits an entire case to be removed to federal court if one of the claims, being separate and independent from the others, presents a federal question that is within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. 28 USCA § 1441(c).

separaliter (sep-a-ray-lo-tar). [Latin] Hist. Separately. • This term was formerly used in an indictment to emphasize that multiple defendants were being charged with separate offenses, when it appeared from the general language of the indictment that the defendants were jointly charged.

separate, adj. (Of liability, cause of action, etc.) individual; distinct; particular; disconnected. separate action. See ACTION.

separate and apart. (Of a husband and wife) living away from each other, along with at least one spouse's intent to dissolve the marriage.

separate-but-equal doctrine. The now-defunct doctrine that African-Americans could be segregated if they were provided with equal opportunities and facilities in education, public transportation, and jobs. • This rule was established in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138 (1896), and overturned in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686 (1954).

separate caucus. See CAUCUS.

separate count. See COUNT.

separate covenant. See several covenant under COVENANT (1).

separate examination. 1. The private interrogation of a witness, apart from the other witnesses in the same case. 2. The interrogation of a wife outside the presence of her husband by a court clerk or notary for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other instrument. • This was done to ensure that the wife signed without being coerced to do so by her husband.

separate maintenance. See MAINTENANCE.

separate offense. See OFFENSE (1).

separate property. 1. In a community-property state, property that a spouse owned before marriage or acquired during marriage by inheritance or by gift from a third party, or property acquired during marriage but after the spouses have entered into a separation agreement and have begun living apart. • Also termed individual property. Cf. COMMUNITY PROPERTY; marital property under PROPERTY. 2. In some common-law states, property titled to one spouse or acquired by one spouse individually during marriage.

separate return. See TAX RETURN.

separate-sovereigns rule. Criminal procedure. The principle that a person may be tried twice for the same offense — despite the Double Jeopardy Clause — if the prosecutions are conducted by separate sovereigns, as by the federal government and a state government or by two different states. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

separate support. See separate maintenance under MAINTENANCE.

separate trading of registered interest and principal of securities. A treasury security by which the owner receives either principal or interest, but usu. not both. • Abbr. STRIP.

separation from bed and board. See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE.

separation of patrimony. Civil law. The act of providing creditors of a succession the right to collect against the class of estate property from which the creditors should be paid, by separating certain succession property from property rights belonging to the heirs.

separation of powers. The division of governmental authority into three branches of government — legislative, executive, and judicial — each with specified duties on which neither of the other branches can encroach; the constitutional doctrine of checks and balances by which the people are protected against tyranny. Cf. DI

VISION OF POWERS.

"[T]he doctrine of the separation of powers was adopted by the convention of 1787 not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power. The purpose was not to avoid friction, but, by means of the inevitable friction incident to the distribution of the governmental powers among three departments, to save the people from autocracy." Justice Louis Brandeis (as quoted in Roscoe Pound, The Development of Constitutional Guar antees of Liberty 94 (1957)).

"Although in political theory much has been made of the vital importance of the separation of powers, it is extraordinarily difficult to define precisely each particular power. In an ideal state we might imagine a legislature which had supreme and exclusive power to lay down general rules for the future without reference to particular cases; courts whose sole function was to make binding orders to settle disputes between individuals which were brought before them by applying these rules to the facts which were found to exist; an administrative body which carried on the business of government by issuing particular orders or making decisions of policy within the narrow confines of rules of law that it could not change. The legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes the law." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 330 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

separation of witnesses. The exclusion of wit nesses (other than the plaintiff and defendant) from the courtroom to prevent them from hearing the testimony of others.

separation order. See SEPARATION PAY.

separatum sub suo perico (si-kway-tar sob si[y]oo-oh po-rik-[y]a-loh), n. [Law Latin "let him follow at his peril"] Hist. A writ available when a sheriff returned nihil to several summons; specif., a writ issued after the sheriff returned nihil to a warrant ad warrantandum and following an alias and a pluries writ. See SICUT ALIAS.

sequala (si-kwee-la), n. [Latin] "that which follows" Hist. Suit; process, as in sequelae curiae ("a suit of court") and sequela causae ("the process of a cause"). Pl. sequelae (si-kwee-lee).

serendipity doctrine. Criminal procedure. The principle that all evidence discovered during a lawful search is eligible to be admitted into evidence at trial.

serf. Hist. A person in a condition of feudal servitude, bound to labor at the will of a lord; a villein. • Serfs differed from slaves in that they were bound to the native soil rather than being the absolute property of a master.

“As the categories became indistinct, the more abject varieties of slavery disappeared and in the twelfth century the word ‘villein’ became the general term for unfree peasants. ‘Serf’ did not become a legal term of art, and in so far as it remained in use it did not connote a status lower than that of villein. The mergers was to the detriment of the villani, but it ensured that full slavery was not received as part of the common law.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 552 (3d ed. 1990).

sergeant. 1. Hist. A person who is not a knight but holds lands by tenure of military service. 2. Hist. A municipal officer performing duties for the Crown. 3. Hist. A bailiff. 4. servitiis liberum (sər-vish-ee-am lib-ar-am), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The service by a free tenant (not a vassal) to the lord, as by attending the lord’s court or accompanying the lord into military service. — Also termed liberum servitiis; servitiis liberum armorum.

servitiis regale (sər-vish-ee-am ri-gəl-le), [Latin “royal service”] Hist. The right of a lord of a royal manor to settle disputes, make assessments, mint money, and the like.

servitor of bills (sər-vər-tər). Hist. A messenger of the marshal of the King’s Bench, sent out to summon people to court. — Also termed tipstave.

servitude. 1. An encumbrance consisting in a right to the limited use of a piece of land without the possession of it; a charge or burden on an estate for another’s benefit <the easement by necessity is an equitable servitude>. • The three types of servitudes are easements, licenses, and profits. See EASEMENT; LICENSE; PROFIT (2). acquired servitude. A servitude that requires a special mode of acquisition before it comes into existence.

additional servitude. A servitude imposed on land taken under an eminent-domain proceeding for a different type of servitude, as when a highway is constructed on land condemned for a public sidewalk. • A landowner servitude

whose land is burdened by an additional servitude is entitled to further compensation.

apparent servitude. Civil law. A predial servitude that is manifested by exterior signs or constructions, such as a roadway. Cf. nonapparent servitude.

landed servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

legal servitude. A servitude arising from a legal limitation on a property’s use.

mineral servitude. A servitude granting the right to enter another’s property to explore for and extract minerals.

natural servitude. A servitude naturally appurtenant to land, requiring no special mode of acquisition. • An example is the right of land, unencumbered by buildings, to the support of the adjoining land.

navigation servitude. See navigatio servitute.

negative servitude. Civil law. A real servitude allowing a person to prohibit the servient landowner from exercising a right. • For example, a negative servitude, such as jus ne luminibus officiatu, prevents an owner of land from building in a way that blocks light from reaching another person’s house.

nonapparent servitude. Civil law. A predial servitude that is not obvious because there are no exterior signs of its existence. • An example is a prohibition against building above a certain height. Cf. apparent servitude.

personal servitude. A servitude granting a specific person certain rights in property.

positive servitude. Civil law. A real servitude allowing a person to do something on the servient landowner’s property, such as entering the property.

predial servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

private servitude. A servitude vested in a particular person. • Examples include a landowner’s personal right-of-way over an adjoining piece of land or a right granted to one person to fish in another’s lake.

public servitude. A servitude vested in the public at large or in some class of indeterminate individuals. • Examples include the right of the public to a highway over privately owned land and the right to navigate a river the bed of which belongs to some private person.

servitude appurtenant. A servitude that is not merely an encumbrance of one piece of land but is accessory to another piece; the right of using one piece of land for the benefit of another, such as the right of support for a building. — Also termed real servitude; predial (or prædial) servitude; landed servitude.

servitude in gross. A servitude that is not accessory to any dominant tenement for whose benefit it exists but is merely an encumbrance on a given piece of land.

urban servitude. A servitude appertaining to the building and construction of houses in a city, such as the right to light and air.

2. The condition of being a servant or slave <under the 15th Amendment, an American citizen’s right to vote cannot be denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude>.

3. The condition of a prisoner who has been sentenced to forced labor <penal servitude>.

involuntary servitude. The condition of one forced to labor — for pay or not — for another by coercion or imprisonment.

servitus actus (sor-vi-tas ak-tas). [Latin “the servitude of driving cattle”] Roman law. A type of right-of-way; a servitude entitling one to walk, ride, or drive animals over another’s property.

servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsam (sar-vi-tas pek-o-ris ad ak-wam ad-pal-sam). [Latin “the servitude to drive cattle to water”] Roman law. A servitude allowing one to drive cattle to water across another’s land.

servitus praedii rustici (sar-vi-tas pree-dee-i ros-ti-sti). [Latin “the servitude of a country estate”] Roman law. A rural servitude; a servitude attached to land, as in servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsam.

servitus praedii urbani (sar-vi-tas pree-dee-i ar-bay-ni). [Latin “the servitude of an urban estate”] Roman law. An urban servitude; a servitude attached to a building, as in servitus oneris ferendi.

servitus praediorum (sar-vi-tas pree-dee-or-am). [Latin “praeial servitude”] Roman law. A burden on one estate for the benefit of another. See servitude appurtenant under SERVITUDE (1).

servitus proiciendi (sar-vi-tas pra-jish-een-di). [Latin “the servitude of projecting”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing a projection from one’s building into the open space of a neighbor’s property.

servitus stillicidii (sar-vi-tas stil-o-sid-ee-i). [Latin “the servitude of drip”] Roman law. A servitude allowing water to drip from one’s house onto the house or ground of a neighbor. Cf. AQUAE IMMITTENDAE; DRIP RIGHTS.

servitus tigni immittendi (sar-vi-tas tig-ni im-a-ten-di). [Latin “the servitude of letting in a beam”] Roman law. An urban servitude allowing one to insert beams into a neighbor’s wall.

servitus viae (sar-vi-tas vi-ee). [Latin “the servitude of road way”] Roman law. The right to use a road over another’s land. • It is broader than and includes the servitus actus and servitus itineris.

sess, n. See CESS.

sessio (sesh-ee-oh), n. [Latin “a sitting”] Hist. A session; a sitting, as in sessio parliamenti (“the sitting of Parliament”).

session. 1. A sitting together or meeting of a court, legislature, or other deliberative body so that it can conduct business <the court’s spring session>. — Also termed (for a court) sitting. See TERM (5). 2. The period within any given day during which such a body is assembled and performing its duties <court is in session>.

biennial session. A legislative session held every two years. • Most state legislatures have biennial sessions, usu. held in odd-numbered years.

closed session. 1. A session to which parties not directly involved are not admitted. 2. Military law. A period during a court-martial when the members (or the judge, if trial is before a military judge) deliberate alone. — Also termed closed court.

extraordinary session. See special session.

extra session. See special session.

joint session. The combined meeting of two legislative bodies (such as the House of Representatives and the Senate) to pursue a common agenda.
lame-duck session. A post-election legislative session in which some of the participants are voting during their last days as elected officials. See LAME DUCK.

open session. 1. A session to which parties not directly involved are admitted. 2. Military law. The period during a court-martial in which all participants are in the courtroom. Generally, the public may attend a court-martial’s open session.

plenary session. A meeting of all the members of a deliberative body, not just a committee.

quarter session. 1. English law. The meetings held four times a year by a county’s justices of the peace to transact business, including trying certain criminal and civil matters as specified by statute. The quarter sessions were abolished in 1971 and replaced by the Crown Court system. 2. Scots law. A meeting formerly held four times a year by the justices to review criminal sentences. — Abbr. Q.S.

regular session. A session that takes place at fixed intervals or specified times.

special session. A legislative session, usu. called by the executive, that meets outside its regular term to consider a specific issue or to reduce backlog. — Also termed extra session; extraordinary session.

session laws. 1. A body of statutes enacted by a legislature during a particular annual or biennial session. 2. The softbound booklets containing these statutes. — Also termed acts of assembly; blue books; sheet acts.

set-aside, n. Something (such as a percentage of funds) that is reserved or put aside for a specific purpose.

set aside, vb. (Of a court) to annul or vacate (a judgment, order, etc.) <the judge refused to set aside the default judgment>.

setback, n. Real estate. The minimum amount of space required between a lot line and a building line . Typically contained in zoning ordinances or deed restrictions, setbacks are designed to ensure that enough light and ventilation reach the property and to keep buildings from being erected too close to property lines.

set down, vb. To schedule (a case) for trial or hearing, usu. by making a docket entry.

se te fecerit securnm (see tee fes-or-it si-ky-oor-am). [Latin] See SI FECERTIT TE SECURUM.

set forth. See SET OUT.

seti. Mining law. A lease.

set of exchange. Commercial law. A single bill of lading drawn in a set of parts, each of which is valid only if the goods have not been delivered against any other part. Bills may be drawn in duplicate or triplicate, the first part being “first of exchange,” the second part being “second of exchange,” and so on. When one part has been paid, the other parts become void.

setoff, n. 1. A defendant’s counterdemand against the plaintiff, arising out of a transaction independent of the plaintiff’s claim. 2. A debtor’s right to reduce the amount of a debt by any sum the creditor owes the debtor; the counterbalancing sum owed by the creditor. Also written set-off. — Also termed (in civil law) compensation; stoppage. — set off, vb. See COUNTERCLAIM; OFFSET. Cf. RECOPMENT (3).

“Set-off signifies the subtraction or taking away of one demand from another opposite or cross demand, so as to distinguish the smaller demand and reduce the greater by the amount of the less; or, if the opposite demands are equal, to extinguish both. It was also, formerly, sometimes called stoppage, because the amount to be set-off was stopped or deducted from the cross demand.” Thomas W. Waterman, A Treatise on the Law of Set-Off, Recoupment, and Counter Claim § 1, at 1 (2d ed. 1872).

“Before considering the counter-claim, a brief reference to ‘the set-off’ as known in former practice is necessary. By the common law, the setting off of one demand against another in the same action was unknown. If A had a cause of action in debt against B, and B had another cause of action in debt in equal amount against A, each must bring his action. One could not be set off against the other. This was changed by statute in England in 1729, by a provision which, somewhat enlarged and modified, has been generally adopted in this country.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 250–51 (2d ed. 1899).

“Set-off is defined to be a counter-demand, generally of a liquidated debt growing out of an independent transaction for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff.” Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 65 n.42 (1916).

set out, vb. To recite, explain, narrate, or incorporate (facts or circumstances) <set out the terms of the contract>. — Also termed set forth.

set over, vb. To transfer or convey (property) <to set over the land to the purchaser>.
setting, n. The date and time established by a court for a trial or hearing <the plaintiff sought a continuance of the imminent setting>.

special setting. A preferential setting on a court’s calendar, usu. reserved for older cases or cases given priority by law, made either on a party’s motion or on the court’s own motion. • For example, some jurisdictions authorize a special setting for cases involving a party over the age of 70. — Also termed special trial setting; trial-setting preference.

settled estate. See ESTATE.

settlement, n. 1. The conveyance of property — or of interests in property — to provide for one or more beneficiaries, usu. members of the settlor’s family, in a way that differs from what the beneficiaries would receive as heirs under the statutes of descent and distribution <in marriage settlements, historically, the wife waived her right to claim dower or to succeed to her husband’s property>. 2. An agreement ending a dispute or lawsuit <the parties reached a settlement the day before trial>. 3. Payment, satisfaction, or final adjustment <the seller shipped the goods after confirming the buyer’s settlement of the account>. 4. CLOSING <the settlement on their first home is next Friday>. 5. Wills & estates. The complete execution of an estate by the executor <the settlement of the tycoon’s estate was long and complex>. — settle, v.b.

final settlement. Wills & estates. A court order discharging an executor’s duties after an estate’s execution.

full settlement. A settlement and release of all pending claims between the parties.

judicial settlement. The settlement of a civil case with the help of a judge who is not assigned to adjudicate the dispute. • Parties sometimes find this procedure advantageous because it capitalizes on judicial experience in evaluating the settlement value of a claim.

nuisance settlement. A settlement in which the defendant pays the plaintiff purely for economic reasons — as opposed to any notion of responsibility — because without the settlement the defendant would spend more money in legal fees and expenses caused by protracted litigation than in paying the settlement amount. • The money paid in such a settlement is often termed nuisance money.

out-of-court settlement. The settlement and termination of a pending suit, arrived at without the court’s participation.

strict settlement. Hist. A property settlement that aimed to keep the estate within the family by creating successive interests in tail and shielding remainders from destruction by the interposition of a trust.

structured settlement. A settlement in which the defendant agrees to pay periodic sums to the plaintiff for a specified time.

viatical settlement (vi-at-o-kal). [fr. Latin viaticus “relating to a road or journey”] A transaction in which a terminally or chronically ill person sells the benefits of a life-insurance policy to a third party in return for a lump-sum cash payment equal to a percentage of the policy’s face value. • Viatical settlements are common with AIDS patients, many of whom sell their policies at a 20% to 40% discount, depending on life expectancy. When the insured (called the “viator”) dies, the investor receives the insurance benefit.

voluntary settlement. A property settlement made without valuable consideration — other than love and affection — from the beneficiary.

settlement class. See CLASS (4).

settlement credit. Civil procedure. A court’s reduction of the amount of a jury verdict — or the effect of the verdict on nonsettling defendants — to account for settlement funds the plaintiff has received from former defendants or from other responsible parties.

settlement date. See DATE.

settlement-first method. A means by which to apply a settlement credit to a jury verdict, by first reducing the amount of the verdict by subtracting the amount of all settlements the plaintiff has received on the claim, then reducing the remainder by the percentage of the plaintiff’s comparative fault. See SETTLEMENT CREDIT. Cf. FAULT-FIRST METHOD.

settlement option. See OPTION.

settlement sheet. See CLOSING STATEMENT (2). settlement statement. See CLOSING STATEMENT (2).

settlement value. See VALUE.

settler. 1. A person who occupies property with the intent to establish a residence. • The term is usu. applied to an early resident of a country or region. 2. SETTLOR.

settle up, vb. To collect, pay, and turn over debts and property (of a decedent, bankrupt, or insolvent business).

settlor (set-lor). 1. A person who makes a settlement of property; esp., one who sets up a trust. — Also termed creator; donor; trustor; grantor; founder. 2. A party to an instrument. — Also spelled (in both senses) settler.

set up, vb. To raise (a defense) <the defendant set up the insanity defense on the murder charge>.

Seventeenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1913, transferring the power to elect U.S. senators from the state legislatures to the states' voters.

Seventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, guaranteeing the right to a jury trial in federal civil cases that are traditionally considered to be suits at common law and that have an amount in controversy exceeding $20.

seven-years'-absence rule. The principle that a person who has been missing without explanation for at least seven years is legally presumed dead. Cf. ENOCH ARDEN LAW.

"[T]he United States, it is quite generally held or provided by statute that a presumption of death arises from the continued and unexplained absence of a person from his home or place of residence without any intelligence of his whereabouts or concerning him for the period of 7 years. The presumption has been regarded as a procedural expedient and a rule of evidence." 22A Am. Jur. 3d Death § 551, at 527 (1988).

severability. See BLUE-PENCIL TEST.

severability clause. A provision that keeps the remaining provisions of a contract or statute in force if any portion of that contract or statute is judicially declared void or unconstitutional. — Also termed saving clause; separability clause. See severable contract UNDER CONTRACT.

severable contract. See CONTRACT.

severable statute. See STATUTE.

Sherman Antitrust Act. A federal statute, passed in 1890, that prohibits direct or indirect interference with the freely competitive interstate production and distribution of goods. ● This Act was amended by the Clayton Act in 1914. 15 USCA §§1-7. — Often shortened to Sherman Act.

shield law. 1. A statute that affords journalists the privilege not to reveal confidential sources. See journalist's privilege under PRIVILEGE (3). 2. A statute that restricts or prohibits the use, in rape or sexual assault cases, of evidence about the past sexual conduct of the victim. — Also termed (in sense 2) rape shield law; rape shield statute.

"The 'rape shield law.' At common law the character of the woman as to chastity or unchastity was held to be admissible in evidence on the theory that it had probative value in determining whether she did or did not consent. Defense counsel, in unrestrained zeal for an acquittal, took advantage of this to the point that it often seemed as if it was the victim of the rape, rather than the perpetrator, who was on trial.... A typical 'rape shield statute' does not prevent the introduction of any relevant and otherwise admissible evidence, but requires that the relevancy of any evidence of the previous sexual conduct of the complaining witness must be determined in a pretrial hearing before the judge in camera." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 206 (3d ed. 1982).

shifting, adj. (Of a position, place, etc.) changing or passing from one to another .

shifting clause. At common law, a clause under the Statute of Uses prescribing a substituted mode of devolution in the settlement of an estate. See STATUTE OF USES.

shifting income. A device used by a taxpayer in a high tax bracket to shelter income by moving the income to another (usu. a spouse or child) in a lower tax bracket, and esp. by forming a Clifford trust. See Clifford trust under TRUST.

shifting stock of merchandise. Merchandise inventory subject to change by purchases and sales in the course of trade.

shifting the burden of proof. In litigation, the transference of the duty to prove a fact from one party to the other; the passing of the duty to produce evidence in a case from one side to another as the case progresses, when one side has made a prima facie showing on a point of evidence, requiring the other side to rebut it by contradictory evidence. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

shifting trust. See TRUST.

shifting use. See USE (4).

shill. A person who poses as an innocent bystander at a confidence game but actually serves as a decoy for the perpetrators of the scheme.

shingle theory. Securities. The notion that a broker-dealer must be held to a high standard of conduct because by engaging in the securities business ("hanging out a shingle"), the broker-dealer implicitly represents to the world that the conduct of all its employees will be fair and meet professional norms.

"[In judging the appropriate standard of care that attaches to a broker-dealer in recommending securities to his or her customers and in dealing with the customers' accounts, the Commission has relied upon the 'shingle theory.' The shingle theory is but an extension of the common law doctrine of 'holding out.' When brokers hold themselves out as experts either in investments in general or in the securities of a particular issuer, they will be held to a higher standard of care in making recommendations." Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation §10.6, at 423 (2d ed. 1994).

shin plaster. Hist. Slang. 1. A bank note that has greatly depreciated in value, esp. the paper money of the Republic of Texas in relation to the U.S. dollar. 2. Paper money in denominations less than one dollar.

shoplifting. n. Theft of merchandise from a store or business; specif., larceny of goods from a store or other commercial establishment by willfully taking and concealing the merchandise with the intention of converting the goods to one’s personal use without paying the purchase price. See LARCENY. — shoplift, vb.

"Shoplifting is a form of larceny .... As a practical matter, however, the difficulty of proving the wrongful taking and the felonious intent requisites for a conviction under the general larceny statutes, together with the risk of retributory civil action against the shopkeeper consequent to acquittal of an accused shoplifter, have caused shoplifting to be established as a specific statutory crime in many jurisdictions." 50 Am. Jur. 2d Larceny § 71, at 79–80 (1995).

shop-right doctrine. The principle that an employer is entitled to a nonexclusive free license to use an employee’s invention that the employee developed in the course of employment while using the employer’s materials.

A notice to the Crown in chancery, based on the bishop's certificate, whereby a writ de contumace capiendo (or, earlier, a writ de excommunicato capiendo) would issue for the disobedient person's arrest and imprisonment. See DE CONTUMACI PEINDO.

signum (sig-nam), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A sign; a seal.

"Signum. (On written documents.) A seal (a stamp) put on to close a document in order to make its contents inaccessible to unauthorized persons and protect against forgery, or at the end of it after the written text. In the latter case the seal (without or with a signature) indicated that the sealer recognized the written declaration as his. . . . Signum is also the seal of a witness who was present at the making of a document." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedia Dictionary of Roman Law 707 (1953).

2. An indication of something seen or otherwise perceived by the senses, such as a bloodstain on a murder suspect. Pl. SIGA.

si ita est (si i-ta est). [Latin] If it be so. • This phrase was formerly used in a mandamus writ to order a judge to affix a seal to a bill of exceptions, if the facts were accurately stated.

si judicás, cognosce (si joo-dii-kas, kog-noos-ee). [Latin] If you judge, inquire.

silence, n. 1. A restraint from speaking. • In criminal law, silence includes an arrestee's statements expressing the desire not to speak and requesting an attorney. 2. A failure to reveal something required by law to be revealed. See estoppel by silence under ESTOP-PEL. — silent, adj.

silent confirmation. See CONFIRMATION.

silentiary (st-len-shee-air-ee), n. 1. Roman law. An official who maintains order in the imperial palace and on the imperial council; a chamberlain. 2. Hist. An officer who is sworn to silence about state secrets; esp., a privy councillor so sworn. 3. Hist. A court usher who maintains order and esp. silence in the court. — Also termed silentiarius.

silent partner. See PARTNER.

silent record. See RECORD.

silent-witness theory. Evidence. A method of authenticating and admitting evidence (such as a photograph), without the need for a witness to verify its authenticity, upon a sufficient showing of the reliability of the process of producing the evidence, including proof that the evidence has not been altered.

silk gown. 1. The professional robe worn by Queen's Counsel. 2. One who is a Queen's Counsel. — Often shortened (in sense 2) to silk. Cf. STUFF GOWN.

silver certificates. U.S. paper money formerly in circulation and redeemable in silver. ● Silver certificates have been replaced by Federal Reserve notes, which are not so redeemable.

silver parachute. See Tin PARACHUTE.

silver-platter doctrine. Criminal procedure. The principle that a federal court could allow the admission of evidence obtained illegally by a state police officer as long as a federal officer did not participate in or request the search. ● The Supreme Court rejected this doctrine in Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437 (1960).

similar happenings. Evidence. Events that occur at a time different from the time in dispute and are therefore usu. inadmissible except to the extent that they provide relevant information on issues that would be fairly constant, such as the control of and conditions on land on the day in question.

similar sales. See SALE.

similiter (si-mil-i-tar). [Latin "similarly"] Common-law pleading. A party's written acceptance of an opponent's issue or argument; a set form of words by which a party accepts or joins in an issue of fact tendered by the other side. See joinder of issue (2) under JOINDER.

simony (sim-a-nee or st-ma-nee), n. [fr. Latin simonia "payment for things spiritual," fr. the proper name Simon Magus (see below)] Hist. Eccles. law. The unlawful practice of giving or receiving money or gifts in exchange for spiritual promotion; esp., the unlawful buying or selling of a right to present clergy to a vacant benefice.

"By simony, the right of presentation to a living is forfeited, and vested pro hac vice in the crown. Simony is the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money, gift, or reward. It is so called from the resemblance it is said to bear to the sin of Simon Magus, though the purchasing of holy orders seems to approach nearer to his offence. It was by the canon law a very grievous crime: and is so much the more odious, because, as sir Edward Coke observes, it is ever accompanied with perjury; for the presentee is sworn to have committed no simony." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 278 (1766).

"Simony is an offence which consists in the buying and selling of holy orders, and any bond or contract involving simony is illegal and void." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 195 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

simple, adj. 1. (Of a crime) not accompanied by aggravating circumstances. Cf. AGGRAVATED. 2. (Of an estate or fee) inheritable by the owner's heirs with no conditions concerning tail. 3. (Of a contract) not made under seal.

single-controversy doctrine. See ENTIRE-CON-TOVERSY DOCTRINE.

single creditor. See CREDITOR.

single-criminal-intent doctrine. See SINGLE-LARCENY DOCTRINE.

single-date-of-removal doctrine. Civil procedure. The principle that the deadline for removing a case from state court to federal court is 30 days from the day that any defendant receives a copy of the state-court pleading on which the removal is based. • If a later-served defendant seeks to remove a case to federal court more than 30 days after the day any other defendant received the pleading, the removal is untimely even if effectuated within 30 days after the removing defendant received the pleading. One theory underlying this doctrine is that all defendants must consent to remove a case to federal court, and a defendant who has waited longer than 30 days to remove does not have the capacity to consent to removal. 28 USCA § 1446(b). See NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

single demise. See DEMISE.

single-entry bookkeeping. See BOOKKEEPING.

single-filing rule. Civil-rights law. The principle that an administrative charge filed by one plaintiff in a civil-rights suit (esp. a Title VII suit) will satisfy the administrative-filing requirements for all coplaintiffs who are making claims for the same act of discrimination. • But this rule will not usu. protect a coplaintiff’s claims if the coplaintiff also filed an administrative charge, against the same employer, in which different discriminatory acts were complained of, because the administrative agency (usu. the EEOC) and the employer are entitled to rely on the allegations someone makes in an administrative charge.

single-impulse plan. See SINGLE-LARCENY DOCTRINE.

single-juror instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

single-larceny doctrine. Criminal law. The principle that the taking of different items of property either belonging to the same or different owners at the same time and place constitutes one act of larceny if the theft is part of one larcenous plan, as when it involves essentially one continuous act or if control over the property is exercised simultaneously. • The intent of the thief determines the number of occurrences. — Also termed single-impulse plan; single-larceny rule; single-criminal-intent doctrine.
single-name paper. A negotiable instrument signed by only one maker and not backed by a surety.

single obligation. See OBLIGATION.

single original. An instrument executed singly, not in duplicate.

single-premium insurance. See INSURANCE.

single-publication rule. The doctrine that a plaintiff in a libel suit against a publisher has only one claim for each mass publication, not a claim for every book or issue in that run.

single-purpose project. A facility that is designed, built, and used for one reason only, such as to generate electricity. • This term most often refers to large, complex, expensive projects such as power plants, chemical-processing plants, mines, and toll roads. Projects of this type are often funded through project financing, in which a special-purpose entity is established to perform no function other than to develop, own, and operate the facility, the idea being to limit the number of the entity’s creditors and thus provide protection for the project’s lenders. See project financing under FINANCING; SPECIAL-PURPOSE ENTITY; BANKRUPTCY-REMOTE ENTITY.

single-recovery rule. See ONE-SATISFACTION RULE.

singular, adj. 1. Individual; each <all and singular>. 2. Civil law. Of or relating to separate interests in property, rather than the estate as a whole <singular succession>.

singular successor. See SUCCESSOR.

singular title. See TITLE (2).

sinking fund. See FUND (1).

sinking-fund bond. See BOND (3).

sinking-fund debenture. See DEBENTURE.

sit, vb. 1. (Of a judge) to occupy a judicial seat <Judge Wilson sits on the trial court for the Eastern District of Arkansas>. 2. (Of a judge) to hold court or perform official functions <is the judge sitting this week?>. 3. (Of a court or legislative body) to hold proceedings <the U.S. Supreme Court sits from October to June>.

sit-down strike. See STRIKE.

site. 1. A place or location; esp., a piece of property set aside for a specific use. 2. SCITE.

site plan. A proposal for the development or use of a particular piece of real property. ● Some zoning ordinances require a developer to present a site plan to the city council, and to receive council approval, before certain projects may be completed.

sitting, n. A court session; esp., a session of an appellate court.

en banc sitting. A court session in which all the judges (or a quorum) participate. See EN BANC.

in camera sitting. A court session conducted by a judge in chambers or elsewhere outside the courtroom. See IN CAMERA.

situation. 1. Condition; position in reference to circumstances <dangerous situation>. 2. The place where someone or something is occupied; a location <situation near the border>.

situation of danger. See DANGEROUS SITUATION.

situs (si-tas). [Latin] The location or position (of something) for legal purposes, as in lex situs, the law of the place where the thing in issue is situated.

Six Clerks. Hist. A collective name for the clerks of the English Court of Chancery who filed pleadings and other papers. ● The office was abolished in 1842, and its duties transferred to the Clerk of Enrollments in Chancery and to the Clerks of Records and Writs.

Sixteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1913, allowing Congress to tax income.

Sixth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, guaranteeing in criminal cases the right to a speedy and public trial by jury, the right to be informed of the nature of the accusation, the right to confront witnesses, the right to counsel, and the right to compulsory process for obtaining favorable witnesses.

sixth-sentence remand. See REMAND.

sixty clerks. See SWORN CLERKS IN CHANCERY.

sixty-day notice. Labor law. Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the 60-day advance notice required for either party to a collective-bargaining agreement to reopen or terminate the contract. ● During this period, strikes and lockouts are prohibited. 29 USCA § 158(d)(1).

S.J.D. See DOCTOR OF JURIDICAL SCIENCE.

skeleton bill. See BILL (7).

skeleton bill of exceptions. See BILL (2).

skill. Ability; proficiency, esp. the practical and familiar knowledge of the principles and processes of an art, science, or trade, combined with the ability to apply them appropriately, with readiness and dexterity.

skilled witness. See expert witness under WITNESS.

skilled work. See WORK.

skip bail. See JUMP BAIL.

skip person. Tax. A beneficiary who is more than one generation removed from the transferor and to whom assets are conveyed in a generation-skipping transfer. IRC (26 USCA) § 2613(a). See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER.

“Since a skip person is necessary to trigger a generation-skipping tax, it is important to have a precise definition of ‘skip person.’ In most cases, it suffices to say that a skip person is a person who is two or more generations younger than the transferor.” John K. McNulty, Federal Estate and Gift Taxation in a Nutshell 63 (5th ed. 1994).

skip tracing agency. A service that locates persons (such as delinquent debtors, missing heirs, witnesses, stockholders, bondholders, etc.) or missing assets (such as bank accounts).

S.L. abbr. 1. Session law. See SESSION LAWS. 2. Statute law.

slamming. The practice by which a long-distance telephone company wrongfully appropriates a customer's service from another company, usu. through an unauthorized transfer or by way of a transfer authorization that is disguised as something else, such as a form to sign up for a free vacation.

slander, n. 1. A defamatory statement expressed in a transitory form, esp. speech. ● Damages for slander — unlike those for libel — are not presumed and thus must be proved by the plaintiff (unless the defamation is slander per se). 2. The act of making such a statement. — slander, vb. — slanderous, adj. See DEFAMATION. Cf. libel (1).

"Although libel and slander are for the most part governed by the same principles, there are two important differences: (1) Libel is not merely an actionable tort, but also a criminal offence, whereas slander is a civil injury only. (2) Libel is in all cases actionable per se; but slander is, save in special cases, actionable only on proof of actual damage. This distinction has been severely criticised as productive of great injustice." R.F.V. Houston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 199 (17th ed. 1977).

slander per quod. Slander that does not qualify as slander per se, thus forcing the plaintiff to prove special damages.

slander per se. Slander for which special damages need not be proved because it imputes to the plaintiff any one of the following: (1) a crime involving moral turpitude, (2) a loathsome disease (such as a sexually transmitted disease), (3) conduct that would adversely affect one's business or profession, or (4) unchastity (esp. of a woman).

slanderer, n. One who commits slander.

slander of goods. See DISPARAGEMENT.

slander of title. A false statement, made orally or in writing, that casts doubt on another person's ownership of property. See DISPARAGEMENT.

slander per quod. See SLANDER.

slander per se. See SLANDER.

SLAPP (slap). abbr. A strategic lawsuit against public participation — that is, a suit brought by a developer, corporate executive, or elected official to stifle those who protest against some type of high-dollar initiative or who take an adverse position on a public-interest issue (often involving the environment). — Also termed SLAPP suit.

slate. A list of candidates, esp. for political office or a corporation's board of directors.

slavery. 1. A situation in which one person has absolute power over the life, fortune, and liberty of another. 2. The practice of keeping individuals in such a state of bondage or servitude. • Slavery was outlawed by the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

"Slavery was a big problem for the Constitution makers. Those who profited by it insisted on protecting it; those who loathed it dreaded even more the prospect that to insist on abolition would mean that the Constitution would die aborning. So the Framers reached a compromise, of sorts. The words 'slave' and 'slavery' would never be mentioned, but the Constitution would safeguard the 'peculiar institution' from the abolitionists." Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 493 (1992).

slavery, badge of. See BADGE OF SLAVERY.

slay, vb. To kill (a person), esp. in battle.

slayer's rule. The doctrine that neither a person who kills another nor the killer's heirs can share in the decedent's estate.

small-loan company. See consumer finance company under FINANCE COMPANY.

smart money. 1. Funds held by sophisticated, usu. large investors who are considered capable of minimizing risks and maximizing profits <the smart money has now left this market>. 2. See punitive damages under DAMAGES <although the jury awarded only $7,000 in actual damages, it also awarded $500,000 in smart money>.

Smith Act. A 1948 federal antisedition law that criminalizes advocating the forcible or violent overthrow of the government. 18 USCA § 2385.

“...how the Smith Act is aimed at the advocacy and teaching of concrete action for the forcible overthrow of the government, and not at advocacy of principles divorced from action. The essential distinction is that those to whom the advocacy is addressed must be urged to do something, now or in the future, rather than merely to believe in something.” 70 Am. Jur. 2d Sedition, Etc. § 63, at 59 (1987).

smoking gun. A piece of physical or documentary evidence that conclusively impeaches an adversary on an outcome-determinative issue or destroys the adversary's credibility.

alcohol content of a person's breath sample. See breathalyzer.

field sobriety test. A motor-skills test administered by a peace officer during a stop to determine whether a suspect has been driving while intoxicated. • The test usu. involves checking the suspect's speaking ability or coordination (as by reciting the alphabet or walking in a straight line). — Abbr. FST.

sobrini (so-brī-nī), n. [Latin] Roman law. Children of first cousins; second cousins.

soca (sō-kə or soh-kə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A seigniory granted the privilege of holding a tenant's court.

socage (sō-kāj). Hist. A type of tenure in which a tenant held lands in exchange for providing the lord husbandry-related (rather than military) service. • Socage, the great residuary tenure, was any free tenure that did not fall within the definition of knight-service, serjeancy, or Frankalmoine. Cf. knight-service; villeinage.

"If they [the peasant's duties] were fixed — for instance, helping the lord with sowing or reaping at specified times — the tenure was usually called socage. This was originally the tenure of socman; but it became ... a generic term for all free services other than knight-service, serjeancy, or spiritual service." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 280 (3d ed. 1990).

free socage. Socage in which the services were both certain and honorable. • By the statute 12 Car. 2, ch. 24 (1660), all the tenures by knight-service were, with minor exceptions, converted into free socage. — Also termed free and common socage; liberum sociagium.

villein socage (vil-ān). Socage in which the services, though certain, were of a baser nature than those provided under free socage.

socager (sō-ij-ar). A tenant by socage; socman.

social contract. The express or implied agreement between citizens and their government by which individuals agree to surrender certain freedoms in exchange for mutual protection; an agreement forming the foundation of a political society. • The term is primarily associated with political philosophers, such as Thomas Hobbes, John Locke, and esp. Jean Jacques Rousseau, though it can be traced back to the Greek Sophists.

social cost. See cost (1).

social guest. See guest.

social harm. See harm.

social insurance. See insurance.

social justice. See justice (1).

Social Security Act. A federal law, originally established in 1935 in response to the Great Depression, creating a system of benefits, including old-age and survivors' benefits, and establishing the Social Security Administration. 42 USCA §§ 401–433.

Social Security Administration. A federal agency created by the Social Security Act to institute a national program of social insurance. — Abbr. SSA.

social-service state. See state (1).

socida (sō-sī-da), n. [Latin] Civil law. A contract of bailment by which the bailee assumes the risk of loss; specif., a bailment by which a person delivers animals to another for a fee, on the condition that if any animals perish, the bailee will be liable for the loss.

societas (sō-sī-ā-tās), n. [Latin] Roman law. A partnership between two or more people agreeing to share profits and losses; a partnership contract.

societas leonina (sō-sī-ā-tās leē-ō-nī-nā), n. [Latin "partnership with a lion"] Roman law. An illegal partnership in which the profits are distributed to only a few partners to the exclusion of the others; a partnership in which one person takes the lion's share. — Also termed leonina societas.

"But an arrangement by which one party should have all the gain was not recognized as binding; it was considered as contrary to the nature and purposes of the societas, the aim of which was gain for all the parties concerned. Such an arrangement the lawyers called societas leonina, a partnership like that which the lion in the fable imposed upon the cow, the sheep, and the she-goat, his associates in the chase." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 281–82 (1861).

societas universorum bonorum (soh-sta-ta tas yoo-wi-var-sor-am ba-nor-am), n. Hist. An entire partnership, including all the individual partners' property.

société d'acquêts (soh-shee-a-tay dah-kay), n. [French] French law. A written agreement between husband and wife designating community property to be only that property acquired during marriage.

société en nom collectif (soh-shee-a-tay awn nawn koh-leek-teef), n. [French] French law. A partnership in which all members are jointly and severally liable for the partnership debts; an ordinary partnership.

société par actions (soh-shee-a-tay pahr ak-syawn), n. French law. A joint-stock company.

socna (sok-na). Hist. A privilege; a liberty; a franchise.

Socratic method. A technique of philosophical discussion — and of law-school instruction — by which the questioner (a law professor) questions one or more followers (the law students), building on each answer with another question, esp. an analogy incorporating the answer. • This method takes its name from the Greek philosopher Socrates, who lived in Athens from about 469–399 B.C. His method is a traditional one in law schools, primarily because it forces law students to think through issues rationally and deductively — a skill required in the practice of law. Most law professors who employ this method call on students randomly, an approach designed to teach students to think quickly, without stage fright.

"[Socrates] himself did not profess to be capable of teaching anything except consciousness of ignorance. . . . He called his method of discussion (the Socratic method) obstetrics . . . because it was an art of inducing his interlocutors to develop their own ideas under a catechetical system." 5 The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia 5746 (rev. ed. 1914).

SODDI defense (sahd-ee). Slang. The somebody-dude-did-it defense; a claim that somebody else committed a crime, usu. made by a criminal defendant who cannot identify the third party.

sodomy (sod-a-mee), n. 1. Oral or anal copulation between humans, esp. those of the same sex. 2. Oral or anal copulation between a human and an animal; bestiality. — Also termed buggery; crime against nature; abominable and detestable crime against nature; unnatural offense; unspeakable crime; (archaically) sodomity. — sodomize, vb. — sodomitic, adj. — sodomist, sodomite, n. Cf. Pедерasty.
“Sodomy was not a crime under the common law of England but was an ecclesiastical offense only. It was made a felony by an English statute so early that it is a common-law felony in this country, and statutes expressly making it a felony were widely adopted. ‘Sodomy’ is a generic term including both ‘bestiality’ and ‘buggery.’” Rolin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 465 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated sodomy. Criminal sodomy that involves force or results in serious bodily injury to the victim in addition to mental injury and emotional distress. • Some laws provide that sodomy involving a minor is automatically aggravated sodomy.

solidarity. The state of being jointly and severally liable (as for a debt). See SOLIDARY OBLIGATION under OBLIGATION.

solidary (sol-a-der-ee), adj. (Of a liability or obligation) joint and several. See JOINT AND SEVERAL.

"It is a single debt of £100 owing by each of them, in such fashion that each of them may be compelled to pay the whole of it, but that when it is once paid by either of them, both are discharged from it. Obligations of this description may be called solidary, since in the language of Roman law, each of the debtors is bound in solidum instead of pro parte; that is to say, for the whole, and not for a proportionate part. A solidary obligation, therefore, may be defined as one in which two or more debtors owe the same thing to the same creditor." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 462-63 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

solidary liability. See LIABILITY.

solidary obligation. See OBLIGATION.

solo, n. See SOLE PRACTITIONER.

solo practitioner. See SOLE PRACTITIONER.

solum italicum (soh-lam i-tal-ə-kaum), n. [Latin "Italian land"] Roman law. Land in Italy (an extension of the old ager Romanus) usu. held by one having full ownership and power to transfer the property by formal methods, such as mancipatio. Cf. SOLUM PROVINCIALE.

solum provinciale (soh-lam pro-vin-shee-ay-lee), n. [Latin "provincial land"] Roman law. Provincial land (an extension of the old ager Publicus) ultimately held by the Emperor or state, with private holders having only a possessory title without the right to transfer the property by formal methods, as distinguished from SOLUM ITALICUM. • Justinian abolished all distinctions between the two, simplifying the conveyance of both types of land. Cf. SOLUM ITALICUM.

“Ownership of provincial land. The dominium of this was in Caesar or the populus according as it was an imperial or a senatorial province. . . . The holders were practically owners, but as they were not domini formal methods of transfer were not applicable. The holdings were however transferable informally. . . . The case disappeared when Justinian abolished the distinction between Italian and provincial land. Not all land in the provinces was SOLUM PROVINCIALE: many provincial communities were given ius italicum, the chief result being that the land was in the dominium of the holder and not of the State, so that it could be transferred and claimed at law by civil law methods.” W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 190 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

solutio (soo-loo-shoo-oh), n. [Latin fr. solvere “to pay”] Roman law. Payment of an obligation; satisfaction.

solutio indebiti (soo-loo-shoo-oh in-deb-ə-ti). [Latin “payment of what is not owing”] Roman law. Payment of a nonexistent debt. • If the payment was made by a mistake of fact, the recipient had a duty to give back the money.

solvere (sol-va-ree), vb. [Latin “to unbind”] Roman law. To pay (a debt); to release (a person) from an obligation.

solvit ad diem (sol-vit ad di-am). [Law Latin “he paid on the day”] Hist. In a debt action, a plea that the defendant paid the debt on the due date.

solvit ante diem (sol-vit an-tee di-am). [Law Latin “he paid before the day”] Hist. In a debt action, a plea that the defendant paid the money before the due date.

solvit post diem (sol-vit pohst di-am). [Law Latin “he paid after the day”] Hist. In a debt action on a bond, a plea that the defendant paid the debt after the due date but before commencement of the lawsuit.

somnambulism (sahm-nam-bya-liz-om). Sleep-walking. • Generally, a person will not be held criminally responsible for an act performed while in this state.

somnolentia (sahtm-na-len-shee-a). 1. The state of drowsiness. 2. A condition of incomplete sleep resembling drunkenness, during which part of the faculties are abnormally excited while the others are dormant; the combined condition of sleeping and wakefulness producing a temporary state of involuntary intoxication. • To the extent that it destroys moral agency, somnolentia may be a defense to a criminal charge.

son. 1. A person’s male child. 2. An immediate male descendant. 3. An adopted male child or dependent. 4. Loosely, any young male person.

son assault demesne (sohn a-sawit di-mayn). [French “his own assault”] The plea of self-defense in a tort action, by which the defendant alleges that the plaintiff originally engaged in an assault and that the defendant used only the force necessary to repel the plaintiff’s assault and to protect person and property. See self-defense.

son-in-law. The husband of one’s daughter.

Son-of-Sam law. A state statute that prohibits a convicted criminal from profiting by selling his or her story rights to a publisher or filmmaker. • State law usu. authorizes prosecutors to seize royalties from a convicted criminal and to place the money in an escrow account for the crime victim’s benefit. Such a law was first enacted in New York in 1977, in response to the lucrative book deals that publishers offered David Berkowitz, the serial killer who called himself “Son of Sam.” In 1992, the U.S. Supreme Court declared New York’s Son-of-Sam law unconstitutional as a content-based speech regulation, prompting many states to amend their laws in an attempt to avoid constitutionality problems. Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. New York State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 112 S.Ct. 501 (1992).

sonticus (sahn-ti-kas), n. [Latin] Roman law. Serious, more than trivial. • The term was used in the Twelve Tables to refer to a serious illness (morbus sonticus) that gave a defendant a valid reason not to appear in court.

sortition (sor-tish-ahn), n. [fr. Latin sortiri “to cast lots”] Roman law. The drawing of lots, used, for example, in selecting judges for a criminal trial. — Also termed sortitio.
sound, adj. 1. (Of health, mind, etc.) good; whole; free from disease or disorder. 2. (Of property) good; marketable. 3. (Of discretion) exercised equitably under the circumstances. — soundness, n.

sound, vb. 1. To be actionable (in) <her claims for physical injury sound in tort, not in contract>. 2. To be recoverable (in) <his tort action sounds in damages, not in equitable relief>.

sound health. See HEALTH.

source, n. The originator or primary agent of an act, circumstance, or result <she was the source of the information> <the side business was the source of income>.

source of law. Something (such as a constitution, treaty, statute, or custom) that provides authority for legislation and for judicial decisions; a point of origin for law or legal analysis. — Also termed fons juris.

"The term 'sources of law' is ordinarily used in a much narrower sense than will be attributed to it here. In the literature of jurisprudence the problem of 'sources' relates to the question: Where does the judge obtain the rules by which to decide cases? In this sense, among the sources of law will be commonly listed: statutes, judicial precedents, custom, the opinion of experts, morality, and equity. In the usual discussions these various sources of law are analyzed and some attempt is made to state the conditions under which each can appropriately be drawn upon in the decision of legal controversies. Curiously, when a legislature is enacting law we do not talk about the 'sources' from which it derives its decision as to what the law shall be, though an analysis in these terms might be more enlightening than one directed toward the more restricted function performed by judges. Our concern here will be with 'sources' in a much broader sense than is usual in the literature of jurisprudence. Our interest is not so much in sources of laws, as in sources of law. From whence does the law generally draw not only its content but its force in men's lives?" Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 69 (1968).

"In the context of legal research, the term 'sources of law' can refer to three different concepts which should be distinguished. One, sources of law can refer to the origins of legal concepts and ideas. Two, sources of law can refer to governmental institutions that formulate legal rules. Three, sources of law can refer to the published manifestations of the law. The books, computer databases, microforms, optical disks, and other media that contain legal information are all sources of law." J. Myron Jacobstein & Roy M. Mersky, Fundamentals of Legal Research 1–2 (5th ed. 1990).

South Eastern Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks that, being part of the West Group’s National Reporter System, contain every published decision from Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia, from 1887 to date. • The first series ran from 1887 to 1939; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. A set of regional lawbooks that, being part of the West Group’s National Reporter System, contain every published decision from Arkansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, and Texas, from 1886 to date. • The first series ran from 1886 to 1928; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. S.W.; S.W.2d.

sovereign, n. 1. A person, body, or state vested with independent and supreme authority. 2. The ruler of an independent state. — Also spelled souvern. See SOVEREIGNTY.

sovereign immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

sovereign people. The political body consisting of the collective number of citizens and qualified electors who possess the powers of sovereignty and exercise them through their chosen representatives.

sovereign political power. See POLITICAL POWER.

sovereign power. The power to make and enforce laws.

sovereign right. A unique right possessed by a state or its agencies that enables it to carry out its official functions for the public benefit, as distinguished from certain proprietary rights that it may possess like any other private person.

sovereign state. A state that possesses an independent existence, being complete in itself, without being merely part of a larger whole to whose government it is subject; a political community whose members are bound together by the tie of common subjection to some central authority, whose commands those members must obey. — Also termed independent state. Cf. CLIENT STATE.
part-sovereign state. A political community in which part of the powers of external sovereignty are exercised by the home government, and part are vested in or controlled by some other political body or bodies. • Such a state is not fully independent because by the conditions of its existence it is not allowed full freedom of action in external affairs.

sovereignty (sahv-ə-rin-tee). 1. Supreme dominion, authority, or rule. 2. The supreme political authority of an independent state. 3. The state itself.

“It is well to (distinguish) the senses in which the word Sovereignty is used. In the ordinary popular sense it means Supremacy, the right to demand obedience. Although the idea of actual power is not absent, the prominent idea is that of some sort of title to exercise control. An ordinary layman would call that person (or body of persons) Sovereign in a State who is obeyed because he is acknowledged to stand at the top, whose will must be expected to prevail, who can get his own way, and make others go his, because such is the practice of the country. Etymologically the word of course means merely superiority, and familiar usage applies it in monarchies to the monarch, because he stands first in the State, be his real power great or small.” James Bryce, Studies in History and Jurisprudence 504-05 (1901).

external sovereignty. The power of dealing on a nation’s behalf with other national governments.

internal sovereignty. The power that rulers exercise over their own subjects.

sovran. See SOVEREIGN.

space arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

sparsim (spahr-sim). [Latin] Hist. Scattered; here and there. • This term was used in several cases — for example, when an action to recover for waste not only when the injury was complete, but also when the injury was partial or scattered.

“And if waste be done sparsim, or here and there, all over a wood, the whole wood shall be recovered; or if in several rooms of a house, the whole house shall be forfeited; because it is impracticable for the reversioner to enjoy only the identical places wasted, when lying interspersed with the other. But if waste be done only in one end of a wood (or perhaps in one room of a house) if that can be conveniently separated from the rest, that part only is the locus vastatus, or thing wasted, and that only shall be forfeited to the reversioner.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 283-84 (1766).

spatae placitum (spay-tee pla-as-o-tam), n. [Latin “the plea of the sword”] Hist. During the reign of Henry II, a court providing swift justice in military matters.

special reference. See REFERENCE.

special registration. See REGISTRATION (1).

special relationship. A nonfiduciary relationship having an element of trust, arising esp. when one person trusts another to exercise a reasonable degree of care and the other knows or ought to know about the reliance. Cf. FIDUCIARY RELATIONSHIP.

special-relationship doctrine. The theory that if a state has assumed control over an individual sufficient to trigger an affirmative duty to protect that individual (as in an involuntary hospitalization or custody), then the state may be liable for the harm inflicted on the individual by a third party. ● This is an exception to the general principle prohibiting members of the public from suing state employees for failing to protect them from third parties. — Also termed special-relationship exception. Cf. DANGER-CREATION DOCTRINE.

special replication. See REPLICAATION.

special reprisal. See REPRISAL.

special retainer. See RETAINER.

specialty. 1. See contract under seal under CONTRACT. 2. See doctrine of specialty. 3. Eminent domain. Unique property (such as a church or cemetery) that is essentially not marketable, so that its value for condemnation purposes is determined by measuring the property's reproduction cost less any depreciation. — Also termed (in sense 3) specialty property.

specialty bar. See BAR.

specialty contract. See contract under seal under CONTRACT.

specialty debt. See special-contract debt under DEBT.

specialty doctrine. See doctrine of specialty.

specialty property. See SPECIALTY (3).

special use. See SPECIAL EXCEPTION (2).

special-use permit. A zoning board's authorization to use property in a way that is identified as a special exception in a zoning ordinance. • Unlike a variance, which is an authorized violation of a zoning ordinance, a special-use permit is a permitted exception. — Abbr. SUP. — Also termed conditional-use permit; special permit. See special exception (2). Cf. variance.

special-use valuation. See VALUATION.

special verdict. See VERDICT.

special warranty. See WARRANTY (1).

special warranty deed. See DEED.

specie (spec-i). See IN SPECIE.

species (spec-i-zeez). A taxonomic class of organisms uniquely distinguished from other classes by shared characteristics and usu. by an inability to interbreed with members of other classes.

endangered species. A species in danger of becoming extinct; esp., under federal law, a species that is in danger of extinction throughout all or a significant part of its range. • Federal law excludes from the definition a species of the class Insecta if the Environmental Protection Agency determines that it constitutes a pest whose protection would present a significant risk to the human population. 50 CFR § 81.1(c).

threatened species. A species that, within the foreseeable future, is likely to become an endangered species throughout all or a significant part of its range. 16 USCA § 1532(20).

specific, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or designating a particular or defined thing; explicit <specific duties>. 2. Of or relating to a particular named thing <specific item>. 3. Conformable to special requirements <specific performance>. — specificity (spe-s-spe-tee), n. — specifically, adv.

specificatio (spe-s-s-s-he-ee). n. [Latin fr. species "form" + facere "to make"] Roman & civil law. A giving of form to materials; making something new from existing property. See accession.

"Specificatio. This may be described as acquisition of a new thing by making it, out of materials wholly or partly belonging to another person. We shall deal only with the case in which the materials are wholly another's. There was in classical law a conflict of opinion on this topic ... Justinian tells us that there had been a media sententia according to which it belonged to the maker if (i) it was irreducible to its former state, and (ii) it really was a nova species, where species means thing. And this view he adopts as law." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 143 (2d ed. 1963).

specification. 1. The act of making a detailed statement, esp. of the measurements, quality, materials, or other items to be provided under a contract. 2. The statement so made. 3. Patents. A patent applicant's written description of how an invention is constructed and used. Cf.
CLAIM (6). 4. Military law. A statement of charges against one who is accused of a military offense. 5. The acquisition of title to materials belonging to another person by converting those materials into a new and different form, as by changing grapes into wine, lumber into shelving, or corn into liquor. • The effect is that the original owner of the materials loses the property rights in them and is left with a right of action for their original value. — Abbr. spec.

specific bequest. See BEQUEST.

specific denial. See DENIAL.

specific deposit. See special deposit under DEPOSIT (2).

specific devise. See DEVISE.

specific enforcement. See primary right under RIGHT.

specific guaranty. See GUARANTY.

specific intent. See INTENT (1).

specific jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

specific legacy. See LEGACY.

specific legatee. See LEGATEE.

specific lien. See LIEN.

specific performance. A court-ordered remedy that requires precise fulfillment of a legal or contractual obligation when monetary damages are inappropriate or inadequate, as when the sale of real estate or a rare article is involved. • Specific performance is an equitable remedy that lies within the court’s discretion to award whenever the common-law remedy is insufficient, either because damages would be inadequate or because the damages could not possibly be established. — Also termed specific relief.

"In essence, the remedy of specific performance enforces the execution of a contract according to its terms, and it may therefore be contrasted with the remedy of damages, which is compensation for non-execution. In specific performance, execution of the contract is enforced by the power of the Court to treat disobedience of its decree as contempt, for which the offender may be imprisoned until he is prepared to comply with the decree. Actually, ... it is not strictly accurate to say that the Court enforces execution of the contract according to its terms, for the Court will not usually intervene until default upon the contract has occurred, so that enforcement by the Court is later in time than performance carried out by the person bound, without the intervention of the Court." G.W. Keeton, An Introduction to Equity 304 (5th ed. 1961).

specific remedy. See REMEDY.

specific tax. See TAX.

specific traverse. See common traverse under TRAVERSE.

spectrograph. An electromagnetic machine that analyzes sound, esp. a human voice, by separating and mapping it into elements of frequency, time lapse, and intensity (represented by a series of horizontal and vertical bar lines) to produce a final voiceprint. See VOICEPRINT.

speculation, n. 1. The buying or selling of something with the expectation of profiting from price fluctuations <he engaged in speculation in the stock market>. 2. The act or practice of theorizing about matters over which there is no certain knowledge <the public’s speculation about the assassination of John F. Kennedy>. — speculate, vb. — speculative, adj.

speculative damages. See DAMAGES.

speculative risk. See RISK.

speculative security. See SECURITY.

speculator. A knowledgeable, aggressive investor who trades securities to profit from fluctuating market prices.

speech. 1. The expression or communication of thoughts or opinions in spoken words; something spoken or uttered. See FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

commercial speech. Communication (such as advertising and marketing) that involves only the commercial interests of the speaker and the audience, and is therefore afforded lesser First Amendment protection than social, political, or religious speech. Cf. pure speech.

corporate speech. Speech deriving from a corporation and protected under the First Amendment. • It does not lose protected status simply because of its corporate source.

hate speech. Speech that carries no meaning other than the expression of hatred for some group, such as a particular race, esp. in circumstances where the communication is likely to provoke violence. Cf. group libel under libel.
speech

pure speech. Words or conduct limited in form to what is necessary to convey the idea. • This type of speech is given the greatest constitutional protection. Cf. commercial speech; symbolic speech.

seditious speech. Speech advocating the violent overthrow of government. See sedition.

symbolic speech. Conduct that expresses opinions or thoughts, such as a hunger strike or the wearing of a black armband. • Symbolic speech does not enjoy the same constitutional protection that pure speech does. — Also termed speech-plus. Cf. pure speech.

2. English law. An opinion delivered by a Law Lord; judgment (2).

Speech or Debate Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving members of Congress immunity for statements made during debate in either the House or the Senate. • This immunity is extended to other areas where it is necessary to prevent impairment of deliberations and other legitimate legislative activities, such as subpoenaing bank records for an investigation. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6., cl. 1. — Also termed Speech and Debate Clause. See congressional immunity under immunity (1).

speech-plus. See symbolic speech under speech.

speedy execution. See execution.

speedy remedy. See remedy.

speedy trial. Criminal procedure. A trial that the prosecution, with reasonable diligence, begins promptly and conducts expeditiously. • The Sixth Amendment secures the right to a speedy trial. In deciding whether an accused has been deprived of that right, courts generally consider the length of the delay, the reason for the delay, and the prejudice to the accused.

Speedy Trial Act of 1974. A federal statute establishing time limits for carrying out the major events (such as information, indictment, arraignment, and trial commencement) in the prosecution of federal criminal cases. 18 USCA §§ 3161–3174.

spending power. See power.

spendthrift, n. One who spends lavishly and wastefully; a profligate. — spendthrift, adj.

spendthrift trust. See trust.

sperate (speer-at), adj. Archaic. (Of a debt) recoverable; not hopeless. • In determining whether a debt could be collected, consideration was formerly given to whether the debt was desperate or sperate.

spes accrescendi (speez ak-ra-sen-di). [Latin “hope of accrual”] Hope of acquiring an extra share of a legacy or inheritance by survival.

spes recuperandi (spemz ri-k[y]oo-pa-ran-di). [Latin “hope of recovery”] Hope of recovering a prize, as from a captured vessel.

spes successionis (speez sak-seesh-ee-oh-nis). [Latin “hope of succession”] Hope of succeeding to a right.

“A mere spes successionis must be distinguished from a contingent right. If Matilda has nursed her invalid friend for thirty years, she may have every hope of succeeding to the property, but she has no right.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 306 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

Spielberg doctrine. Labor law. The policy of the National Labor Relations Board to defer to an arbitrator’s decision regarding a contract dispute if (1) the decision is not repugnant to the National Labor Relations Board, (2) the arbitration proceedings provided a hearing as fair as would have been provided before the NLRB, and (3) the contract requires binding arbitration. Spielberg Mfg. Co., 112 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 86 (1955). Cf. colyer doctrine.

“In Spielberg Mfg. Co. (1955), the Board announced its policy of dismissing an unfair labor practice complaint in deference to an arbitration award already rendered, provided the arbitral procedures were fair and the award was not repugnant to the policies of the Labor Act. . . . The Supreme Court in several cases cited the Board’s deferral policy with approval, noting that the Board has discretion to respect an arbitration award and that arbitration of disputes contributes to industrial peace and stability.” Robert A. Gorman, Basic Text on Labor Law: Unionization and Collective Bargaining 751 (1976).

spigurnel (spig-or-nel), n. Hist. An early officer of the Chancery, equivalent to the Sealer of the king’s writs in later times.

spillover. See externality.

spillover theory. The principle that a severance must be granted only when a defendant can show that trial with a codefendant would substantially prejudice the defendant’s case, as when the jury might wrongly use evidence against the defendant.
"The spillover theory involves the question of whether a jury’s unfavorable impression of a defendant against whom the evidence is properly admitted will influence the way the jurors view a codefendant... The test... is whether the jury can keep separate the evidence that is relevant to each defendant and render a fair and impartial verdict." 22A C.J.S. Criminal Law § 571, at 190–91 (1989).

spillover, n. 1. A corporate divestiture in which a division of a corporation becomes an independent company and stock of the new company is distributed to the corporation’s shareholders. 2. The company created by this divestiture. Cf. SPLIT-OFF; SPLIT-UP.

spill gift. See GIFT.

spill income. See INCOME.

split-interest trust. See charitable-remainder trust under TRUST.

split-level statute. See STATUTE.

split-off, n.* 1. The creation of a new corporation by an existing corporation that gives its shareholders stock in the new corporation in return for their stock in the original corporation. 2. The corporation created by this process. Cf. SPIN-OFF; SPLIT-UP.

split order. See ORDER (4).

split sentence. See SENTENCE.

splitting a cause of action. Separating parts of a demand and pursuing it piecemeal; presenting only a part of a claim in one lawsuit, leaving the rest for a second suit. * This practice has long been considered procedurally impermissible.

split-up, n.* The division of a corporation into two or more new corporations. * The shareholders in the original corporation typically receive shares in the new corporations, and the original corporation goes out of business. Cf. SPIN-OFF; SPLIT-OFF.

split verdict. See VERDICT.

spoils of war. See BOOTY (1).

spoils system. The practice of awarding government jobs to supporters and friends of the victorious political party. Cf. MERIT SYSTEM.

spoliation (spoh-lee-ay-shan), n.* 1. The intentional destruction, mutilation, alteration, or concealment of evidence, usu. a document. * If proved, spoliation may be used to establish that the evidence was unfavorable to the party responsible. 2. The seizure of personal or real property by violent means; the act of pillaging. 3. The taking of a benefit properly belonging to another. 4. Eccles. law. The wrongful deprivation of a cleric of his benefice. — spoliate (spoh-lee-aht), vb. — spoliator (spoh-lee-ahtor), n.

spolium (spoh-lee-am), n.* [Latin] Roman law. Something illegally and violently taken from spolium another. • The plural spolia was more common than the singular.

Spondesme? Spondeo (spon-deez spon-dee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. Do you agree to undertake? I undertake. • This was a common phrase used to create a stipulation. See STIPULATIO.

spondet peritiam artis (spon-det pa-ri-sham ahr-ti-a). [Latin “he guarantees his professional skill”] Hist. He promised to use the skill of his art. • This phrase is used in construction contracts to indicate an implied agreement to perform in a workmanlike manner.

sponsalia (spon-say-lee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. A betrothal; an espousal. — Also termed stipulatio sponsalitiae.

sponsalia per verba de futuro (spon-say-lee-oh par var-ba dee fly-loo-tlyoor-oh). [Latin “espousals by words about the future”] Hist. A promise to marry in the future.

“[A] promise to marry in the future (sponsalia per verba de futuro) gave rise only to an executory contract of marriage. The regular way of executing the contract was to solemnize the marriage, using present words. But the Canon law acknowledged that it could also be turned into the indissoluble bond of present maternity by physical consummation … Thus, in the absence of carnal copulation, the validity of a marriage had come to depend on whether the contract was by words de praeamenti or de futuro … It is hardly surprising that it gave rise to so much wrangling and fraud, and that the commonest species of matrimonial suit in the medieval consistory courts was to interpret and enforce ‘espousals.’” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 546 (3d ed. 1990).

sponsio (spon-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. An undertaking in the form of an answer to a question in a stipulatio, esp. by way of suretyship. See STIPULATIO.

sponsio judicialis (spon-shee-oh joo-dish-ee-ay-lish). [Latin] Roman law. A formal promise that the judge is entitled to acquire by virtue of his office.

sponsio ludicra (spon-shee-oh loo-di-kra). [Latin “a laughable promise”] 1. Civil law. An informal understanding that is not enforceable. 2. Scots law. An obligation that a court will not enforce because it does not concern a serious subject; e.g., a gambling agreement.

sponsion (spon-shan), n. [fr. Latin sponsere “to engage”] 1. The formal pledge by which a person becomes a surety. 2. Int'l law. An ultra vires promise of an official agent (such as a general in wartime), requiring later ratification by the principal. 3. Roman law. A form of adpomission accessory to an oral contract. • Only Roman citizens could make this type of adpomission. See ADPOMISSION. — sponsional (spon-shan-al), adj.

sponsor. 1. One who acts as a surety for another. 2. A legislator who proposes a bill. 3. Civil law. One who voluntarily intervenes for another without being requested to do so.

spontaneous declaration. Evidence. A statement that is made without time to reflect or fabricate and that is related to the circumstances of the perceived occurrence. — Also termed spontaneous statement; spontaneous exclamation; spontaneous utterance. See EXCITED UTTERANCE; PRESENT SENSE IMPRESSION.

sports franchise. See FRANCHISE (3).

sportula (spor-cha-la), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A present; a donation, as to the poor. 2. A fee paid to certain officials for performing judicial duties. — Also termed sportella.

spot, adj. Made, paid, or delivered immediately  <spot commodities>.

spot market. See MARKET.

spousals. Hist. Mutual promises to marry.

spousal support. See ALIMONY.

spouse. One’s husband or wife by lawful marriage; a married person.

spouse-breath. See ADULTERY.
spray trust. See sprinkling trust under TRUST.

spread, n. 1. Banking. The difference between the interest rate that a financial institution must pay to attract deposits and the rate at which money can be loaned. 2. Securities. The difference between the highest price a buyer will pay for a security (the bid price) and the lowest price at which a seller will sell a security (the asked price). 3. Securities. The simultaneous buying and selling of one or more options or futures contracts on the same security in order to profit from the price difference. 4. In investment banking, the difference between the price the underwriter pays the issuer of the security and the price paid by the public in the initial offering. • The spread compensates the underwriter for its services; it is made up of the manager's fee, the underwriter's discount, and the selling-group concession or discount. — Also termed (in sense 4) gross spread; underwriting spread.

spread eagle. See STRADDLE.

spreadsheet. A multicolumned worksheet used esp. by accountants and auditors to summarize and analyze financial transactions.

springing use. See USE (4).

spring tide. See TIDE.

sprinkling trust. See TRUST.

spurious (spyoor-ee-as), adj. 1. Deceptively suggesting an erroneous origin; fake <spurious trademarks>. 2. Of doubtful or low quality <spurious goods that fell apart>. 3. Archaic. Of illegitimate birth <spurious offspring>.

spurious bank bill. See spurious banknote under BANKNOTE.

spurious banknote. See BANKNOTE.

spurious class action. See CLASS ACTION.

spurius (spyur-ee-as), n. [Latin] Roman law. A bastard; the offspring of unlawful intercourse. See NOTUS.

SPV. abbr. Special-purpose vehicle. See SPECIAL-PURPOSE ENTITY.

spy. One who secretly observes and collects secret information or intelligence about what another government or company is doing or plans to do; one who commits espionage. See ESPIONAGE.

square, n. 1. A certain portion of land within a city limit. — Also termed block. 2. A space set apart for public use. 3. In a government survey, an area measuring 24 by 24 miles.

squatter. 1. A person who settles on property without any legal claim or title. 2. A person who settles on public land under a government regulation allowing the person to acquire title upon fulfilling specified conditions.

squatter's rights. The right to acquire title to real property by adverse possession, or by pre-emption of public lands. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

squeeze-out, n. An action taken in an attempt to eliminate or reduce a minority interest in a corporation. Cf. FREEZE-OUT.

ss. abbr. 1. Sections. 2. Subscripsi (i.e., signed below). 3. Sans (i.e., without). 4. (Erroneously) scilicet.

“Many possible etymologies have been suggested for this mysterious abbreviation. One is that it signifies scilicet (= namely, to wit), which is usually abbreviated sc. or scil. Another is that ss. represents '(t)he two gold letters at the ends of the chain of office or 'collar' worn by the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench ......’ Max Radin, Law Dictionary 327 (1955). Mellinkoff suggests that the precise etymology is unknown: ‘Lawyers have been using ss for nine hundred years and still are not sure what it means.’ David Mellinkoff, The Language of the Law 296 (1965). In fact, though, it is a flourish deriving from the Year Books — an equivalent of the paragraph mark: ‘.’ Hence Lord Hardwicke’s statement that ss. is nothing more than a division mark. See Jodderrell v. Cowell, 95 Eng. Rep. 222, 222 (K.B. 1737) .... An early formbook writer incorporated it into his forms, and ever since it has been mindlessly perpetuated by one generation after another.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 825 (2d ed. 1995).

SSA. abbr. SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

SSI. abbr. SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME.

SSS. abbr. SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM.

stabilize, vb. 1. To make firm or steadfast <to stabilize the ship>. 2. To maintain a particular level or amount <stabilize prices>.

stable stand. Hist. In forest law, a person found standing in a forest either with a bow bent, ready to shoot a deer, or close to a tree with greyhounds on a leash and ready to slip, being presumptive evidence of an intent to steal the Crown's deer.

stacking. 1. Insurance. The process of obtaining benefits from a second policy on the same claim when recovery from the first policy alone would be inadequate.

judicial stacking. The principle that a court can construe insurance policies to permit stacking, under certain circumstances, when the policies do not specifically provide for stacking but public policy is best served by permitting it.

policy stacking. Stacking that is permitted by the express terms of an insurance policy.

2. A gerrymandering technique in which a large political or racial group is combined in the same district with a larger opposition group. Cf. CRACKING; PACKING.

staff attorney. 1. A lawyer who works for a court, usu. in a permanent position, on matters such as reviewing motions, screening docketing statements, preparing scheduling orders, and examining habeas corpus petitions. ● Staff attorneys do not rule on motions or decide cases, but they review, research, and recommend proposed rulings to judges, as well as drafting the orders implementing those rulings. 2. An in-house lawyer for a corporation.

staff judge advocate. See JUDGE ADVOCATE.

stagflation (stag-flay-shan), n. A period of slow economic growth or recession characterized by high inflation, stagnant consumer demand, and high unemployment. — stagflationary, adj.

staggered board of directors. See BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

stagiarius (stay-ee-air-ee-as), n. [Latin] Hist.

1. Eccles. law. A resident canon; an ecclesiastic bound to keep terms of residence. 2. A stagiary; a law student keeping terms before admission to the bar.

stake, n. 1. Something (such as property) deposited by two or more parties with a third party pending the resolution of a dispute; the subject matter of an interpleader. 2. An interest or share in a business venture. 3. Something (esp. money) bet in a wager, game, or contest. 4. A boundary marker used in land surveys.

stakeholder. 1. A disinterested third party who holds money or property, the right to which is disputed between two or more other parties. See INTERPLEADER. 2. A person who has an interest or concern in a business or enterprise, though not necessarily as an owner. 3. One who holds the money or valuables bet by others in a wager.

stale claim. A claim that is barred by the statute of limitations or the defense of laches. — Also termed stale demand.

stalking. 1. The act or an instance of following another by stealth. 2. The offense of following or loitering near another, often surreptitiously, with the purpose of annoying or harassing that person or committing a further crime such as assault or battery. ● Some statutory definitions include an element that the person being stalked must reasonably feel harassed, alarmed, or distressed about personal safety or the safety of one or more persons for whom that person is responsible. And some definitions stipulate that acts such as telephoning another and remaining silent during the call amount to stalking.

stallage (stawl-iij), n. Hist. 1. The right to erect stalls in public markets. 2. The cost for that right.

stamp, n. An official mark or seal placed on a document, esp. to indicate that a required tax (such as duty or excise tax) has been paid.

stamp acts. English statutes requiring and regulating stamps on deeds, contracts, legal papers, bills, or other documents.

stamp duty. Hist. A tax raised by requiring stamps sold by the government to be affixed to designated documents, thus forming part of the perpetual revenue. See stamp tax under TAX.

“A fifth branch of the perpetual revenue consists in the stamp duties, which are a tax imposed upon all parchment and paper whereon any legal proceedings, or private instruments of almost any nature whatsoever, are written; and also upon licenses ... and pamphlets containing less than six sheets of paper. These imports are very various, according to the nature of the thing stamped, rising gradually from a penny to ten pounds.”

stamp tax. See TAX.

standard, n. 1. A model accepted as correct by custom, consent, or authority <what is the standard in the ant-farm industry?>. 2. A criterion for measuring acceptability, quality, or accuracy — the attorney was making a nice living — even by New York standards. — standard, adj.

objective standard. A legal standard that is based on conduct and perceptions external to a particular person. • In tort law, for example, the reasonable-person standard is considered an objective standard because it does not require a determination of what the defendant was thinking.

subjective standard. A legal standard that is peculiar to a particular person and based on the person’s individual views and experiences. • In criminal law, for example, premeditation is determined by a subjective standard because it depends on the defendant’s mental state.

standard deduction. See DEDUCTION.

standard-form contract. See CONTRACT.

standard instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

standard mortgage clause. See MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

standard of care. Torts. In the law of negligence, the degree of care that a reasonable person should exercise. See CARE (2).

standard of need. In public-assistance law, the total subsistence resources required by an individual or family unit as determined by a state and, when unsatisfied by available resources, entitles the individual or family unit to public assistance.

standard of proof. The degree or level of proof demanded in a specific case, such as “beyond a reasonable doubt” or “by a preponderance of the evidence.” See BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

standard policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

standby commitment. An arrangement between an underwriter and an issuer of securities whereby the underwriter agrees, for a fee, to buy any unsold shares remaining after the public offering. — Also termed standby underwriting agreement.

standby counsel. See COUNSEL.

standby letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

standing committee. See COMMITTEE.

standby underwriting. See UNDERWRITING.

standby underwriting agreement. See STANDBY COMMITMENT.

standing, n. A party’s right to make a legal claim or seek judicial enforcement of a duty or right. • To have standing in federal court, a plaintiff must show (1) that the challenged conduct has caused the plaintiff actual injury, and (2) that the interest sought to be protected is within the zone of interests meant to be regulated by the statutory or constitutional guarantee in question. — Also termed standing to sue. Cf. JUSTICIABILITY.

“Have the appellants alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions? This is the gist of the question of standing.” Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S.Ct. 691, 703 (1962) (Brennan, J.).

“The word standing is rather recent in the basic judicial vocabulary and does not appear to have been commonly used until the middle of our own century. No authority that I have found introduces the term with proper explanations and apologies and announces that henceforth standing should be used to describe who may be heard by a judge. Nor was there any sudden adoption by tacit consent. The word appears here and there, spreading very gradually with no discernable pattern. Judges and lawyers found themselves using the term and did not ask why they did so or where it came from.” Joseph Vining, Legal Identity 55 (1978).

third-party standing. Standing held by someone claiming to protect the rights of others.

standing aside a juror. The prosecution practice of provisionally placing a juror aside until the panel is exhausted, without providing a reason, instead of challenging the juror or showing cause. • The practice originally developed as a method of avoiding the Challenge of Jurors Act (1305), which prohibited the Crown from challenging a juror without showing cause. A similar practice was formerly used in Pennsylvania.

standing by. 1. The awaiting of an opportunity to respond, as with assistance. 2. Silence or inaction when there is a duty to speak or act; esp., the tacit possession of knowledge under circumstances requiring the possessor to reveal the knowledge. See ESTOPPEL BY SILENCE under ESTOPPEL.

standing committee. See COMMITTEE.
Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure. A group of judges, lawyers, and legal scholars appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States to advise the Judicial Conference of the United States on possible amendments to the procedural rules in the various federal courts and on other issues relating to the operation of the federal courts. 28 USCA § 331.

"[Under 28 USCA § 331], the Judicial Conference of the United States has created a Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure and has authorized the appointment from time to time of various advisory committees. These committees make recommendations regarding amendments of the rules to the Judicial Conference, which in turn transmits those recommendations it approves to the Supreme Court. Under this new plan, as under the machinery in effect from 1934 to 1956, the Court retains the ultimate responsibility for the adoption of amendments to the rules." 4 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1007, at 35 (2d ed. 1987).

staple (stay-pal). Hist. 1. A key commodity such as wool, leather, tin, lead, butter, or cheese (collectively termed the staple). 2. A town appointed by the Crown as an exclusive market for staple products. See STATUTE STAPLE.

Star Chamber. 1. Hist. An English court having broad civil and criminal jurisdiction at the king's discretion and noted for its secretive, arbitrary, and oppressive procedures, including compulsory self-incrimination, inquisitorial investigation, and the absence of juries. • The Star Chamber was abolished in 1641 because of its abuses of power. — Also termed Court of Star Chamber. 2. (usu. l.c.) Any secretive, arbitrary, or oppressive tribunal or proceeding.

stare decisis (stahr-ee di-st-sis or stair-ee), n. [Latin “to stand by things decided”] The doctrine of precedent, under which it is necessary for a court to follow earlier judicial decisions when the same points arise again in litigation. See PRECEDENT; NON QUIETA MOVERE. Cf. RES JUDICATA; LAW OF THE CASE.

"The rule of adherence to judicial precedents finds its expression in the doctrine of stare decisis. This doctrine is simply that, when a point or principle of law has been once officially decided or settled by the ruling of a competent court in a case in which it is directly and necessarily involved, it will no longer be considered as open to examination or to a new ruling by the same tribunal, or by those which are bound to follow its adjudications, unless it be for urgent reasons and in exceptional cases." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 321 (3d ed. 1914).

"The general orthodox interpretation of stare decisis . . . is stare rationibus decidentibus ("keep to the reasons decided of past cases"), but a narrower and more literal interpretation is sometimes employed. To appreciate this narrower interpretation it is necessary to refer . . . to Lord Halsbury's assertion that a case is only authority for what it actually decides. We saw that situations can arise in which all that is binding is the decision. According to Lord Reid, such a situation arises when the ratio decidenti of a previous case is obscure, out of accord with authority or established principle, or too broadly expressed." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 100-01 (4th ed. 1991).

stare decisis et non quieta movere (stair-ee di-st-sis et non kwi-ee-to moh-veer-ee). [Latin] To stand by things decided, and not to disturb settled points. See STARE DECISIS.

star paging, n. 1. A method of referring to a page in an earlier edition of a book, esp. a legal source. • This method correlates the pagination of the later edition with that of the earlier (usu. the first) edition. 2. By extension, the method of displaying on a computer screen the page breaks that occur in printed documents such as law reports and law reviews. — Also termed star pagination. — star page, n.

starr (stahr), n. [fr. Latin starrum fr. Hebrew sh’tar “a writing”] Hist. A Jewish contract (esp. for release of an obligation) that Richard I declared to be invalid unless it was placed in a lawful repository, the largest being in the king’s Exchequer at Westminster. — Also termed starra.

“It is well known that, before the banishment of the Jews under Edward I, their contracts and obligations were denominated in our ancient records starra or starrs, from a corruption of the Hebrew word, shetar, a covenant. . . . These starrs, by an ordinance of Richard the first . . . were commanded to be enrolled and deposited in chests under three keys in certain places; one, and the most considerable, of which was in the king’s exchequer at Westminster. . . . [T]he room at the exchequer, where the chests containing these starrs were kept, was probably called the starr-chamber, and, when the Jews were expelled the kingdom, was applied to the use of the king’s council, when sitting in their judicial capacity.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 263 n.s. (1769).

stash, vb. To hide or conceal (money or property).

stat. abbr. STATUTE.

state, n. 1. The political system of a body of people who are politically organized; the system of rules by which jurisdiction and authority are exercised over such a body of people <separation of church and state>. — Also termed political society. Cf. NATION.

“A state or political society is an association of human beings established for the attainment of certain ends by certain means. It is the most important of all the various kinds of society in which men unite, being indeed the necessary basis and condition of peace, order, and civilization. What then is the difference between this and other forms of association? In what does the state differ from such other societies as a church, a university, a joint-stock company, or a trade union? The difference is clearly one of function. The state must be defined by reference to such of its activities and purposes as are essential and characteristic.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 129 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“A state is an institution, that is to say, it is a system of relations which men establish among themselves as a means of securing certain objects, of which the most fundamental is a system of order within which their activities can be carried on. Modern states are territorial; their governments exercise control over persons and things within their frontiers, and today the whole of the habitable world is divided between about seventy of these territorial states. A state should not be confused with the whole community of persons living on its territory; it is only one among a multitude of other institutions, such as churches and corporations, which a community establishes for securing different objects, though obviously it is one of tremendous importance; none the less it is not, except in the ideology of totalitarianism, an all-embracing institution, not something from which, or within which, all other institutions and associations have their being; many institutions, e.g. the Roman Catholic Church, and many associations, e.g. federations of employers and of workers, transcend the boundaries of any single state.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 118 (5th ed. 1955).

composite state. A state that comprises an aggregate or group of constituent states.

dependent state. See nonsovereign state.

federal state. A composite state in which the sovereignty of the entire state is divided between the central or federal government and the local governments of the several constituent states; a union of states in which the control of the external relations of all the member states has been surrendered to a central government so that the only state that exists for international purposes is the one formed by the union. Cf. confederation of states under CONFEDERATION.

imperial state. Archaic. A composite state in which a common or central government possesses in itself the entire sovereignty, so that the constituent states possess no portion of this sovereignty.

nonsovereign state. A state that is a constituent part of a greater state that includes both it and one or more others, and to whose government it is subject; a state that is not complete and self-existent. — Also termed dependent state.

police state. A state in which the political, economic, and social life of its citizens is subject to repressive governmental control and arbitrary use of power by the ruling elite, which uses the police as the instrument of control; a totalitarian state.

simple state. See unitary state.

social-service state. A state that uses its power to create laws and regulations to provide for the welfare of its citizens.

sovereign state. See SOVEREIGN STATE.

unitary state. A state that is not made up of territorial divisions that are states themselves. — Also termed (archaically) simple state.

2. An institution of self-government within a larger political entity; esp., one of the constituent parts of a nation having a federal government <the 50 states>. Also termed nonsovereign state. 3. (often cap.) The prosecution as the representative of the people <the State rests its case>.

state action. Anything done by a government; esp., in constitutional law, an intrusion on a person’s rights (esp. civil rights) either by a governmental entity or by a private requirement that can be enforced only by governmental action (such as a racially restrictive covenant, which requires judicial action for enforcement).

state-action doctrine. Antitrust. The principle that the antitrust laws do not prohibit a state’s anticompetitive acts, or official acts directed by a state. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S.Ct. 307 (1943). Also termed Parker doctrine. See MIDCAL TEST.

state auditor. The appointed or elected official responsible for overseeing state fiscal transactions and auditing state-agency accounts. See AUDIT.

state bank. See BANK.

state bar association. See BAR ASSOCIATION.

state bond. See BOND (3).

state-compulsion test. Civil-rights law. The rule that a state is responsible for discriminating that a private party commits while acting under the requirements of state law, as when a restaurant owner is required by state law to refuse service to minorities. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 90 S.Ct. 1598 (1970). See SYMBIOTIC-RELATIONSHIP TEST; NEXUS TEST.

state court. See COURT.

state criminal. See CRIMINAL.

stated, adj. 1. Fixed; determined; settled <at the stated time> <settlement for a stated amount>. 2. Expressed; declared <stated facts>.

stated account. See account stated under ACCOUNT.

stated capital. See CAPITAL.

State Department. An executive department, headed by the Secretary of State, responsible for analyzing, making recommendations on, and carrying out matters of foreign policy (including trade relations, environmental concerns, and human-rights issues), as by negotiating treaties and other international agreements, and representing the United States in the United Nations and other international organizations. Also termed Department of State. 22 USCA §§ 2651–2728.

stated interest rate. See nominal rate under INTEREST RATE.

stated meeting. See annual meeting under MEETING.

stated rate. See nominal rate under INTEREST RATE.

stated term. See general term under TERM (5).

stated value. See PAR VALUE.

state government. See GOVERNMENT.

state law. A body of law in a particular state consisting of the state’s constitution, statutes, regulations, and common law. Cf. FEDERAL LAW.

stateless person. Int’l law. A natural person who is not considered a national by any country. • The Stateless Persons Convention (1954) provides these people with certain protections, as well as obliging them to abide by the laws of the country where they reside.

“It is, of course, quite possible that a person may be without any nationality, in which case he is referred to as a stateless person.” Oscar Svarlien, An Introduction to the Law of Nations 428 (1955).

statement. 1. Evidence. A verbal assertion or nonverbal conduct intended as an assertion. 2. A formal and exact presentation of facts. 3. Criminal procedure. An account of a person’s (usu. a suspect’s) knowledge of a crime, taken by the police pursuant to their investigation of the offense. Cf. CONFESSION.

consonant statement. A prior declaration of a witness, testified to by a person to whom the declaration was made and allowed into evidence only after the witness’s testimony has been impeached. • This type of evidence would, but for the impeachment of the witness, be inadmissible hearsay.

false statement. See FALSE STATEMENT.

financial statement. See FINANCIAL STATEMENT. incredinating statement. A statement that tends to establish the guilt of an accused.

prior consistent statement. See PRIOR CONSISTENT STATEMENT.

prior inconsistent statement. See PRIOR INCONSISTENT STATEMENT.

sworn statement. 1. A statement given under oath; an affidavit. 2. A contractor-builder's listing of suppliers and subcontractors, and their respective bids, required by a lending institution for interim financing.

voluntary statement. A statement free from duress, coercion, or inducement.

Statement and Account Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution requiring the regular publication of the receipts and expenditures of the federal government. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 7.

statement of account. 1. A report issued periodically (usu. monthly) by a bank to a customer, providing certain information on the customer's account, including the checks drawn and cleared, deposits made, charges debited, and the account balance. — Also termed bank statement. 2. A report issued periodically (usu. monthly) by a creditor to a customer, providing certain information on the customer's account, including the amounts billed, credits given, and the balance due. — Also termed account statement.

statement of affairs. 1. STATEMENT OF FINANCIAL AFFAIRS. 2. A balance sheet showing immediate liquidation values (rather than historical costs), usu. prepared when insolvency is imminent.

statement of claim. 1. COMPLAINT (1). 2. English law. A plaintiff's initial pleading in a civil case; DECLARATION (7).

statement of condition. See BALANCE SHEET.

statement of confession. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

statement of defense. The assertions by a defendant; esp., in England, the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's statement of claim.

statement of facts. A party's written presentation of the facts leading up to or surrounding a legal dispute, usu. recited toward the beginning of a brief.

agreed statement of facts. A narrative statement of facts that is stipulated to be correct by the parties and is submitted to a tribunal for a ruling. • When the narrative statement is filed on appeal instead of a report of the trial proceedings, it is called an agreed statement on appeal.

statement of financial affairs. Bankruptcy. A document that an individual or corporate debtor must file to answer questions about its past and present financial status, including any previous bankruptcy, the location of any current accounts, and its recent or current debt. — Also termed statement of affairs.

statement of financial condition. See BALANCE SHEET.

statement of financial position. See BALANCE SHEET.

statement of income. See INCOME STATEMENT.

statement of intention. Bankruptcy. A preliminary statement filed by the debtor in a Chapter 7 case, in which the debtor details whether property secured by consumer debt will be retained or surrendered and whether the property is claimed as exempt. • The statement usu. must be filed before the first creditors' meeting or within 30 days from the petition-filing date, whichever is earlier. 11 USCA § 521.

statement of particulars. See BILL OF PARTICULARS.

state of art. See STATE OF THE ART.

state officer. See OFFICER (1).

state of mind. 1. The condition or capacity of a person's mind; MENS REA. 2. Loosely, a person's reasons or motives for committing an act, esp. a criminal act.

state-of-mind exception. Evidence. The principle that an out-of-court declaration of an existing motive is admissible, even when the declarant cannot testify in person. • This principle constitutes an exception to the hearsay rule.

state of nature. The lack of a politically organized society. • The term is a fictional construct for the period in human history predating any type of political society.

"We may make use of the contrast, familiar to the philosophy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, between the civil state and the state of nature. This state of nature is now commonly rejected as one of the fictions which flourished in the era of the social contract, but such treatment is needlessly severe. The term certainly became associated with much false or exaggerated doctrine touching the golden age, on the one hand, and the bellum omnium contra omnes of Hobbes, on the other, but in itself it nevertheless affords a convenient mode for the expression of an undoubted truth. As long as there have been men, there has probably been some form of human society. The state of nature, therefore, is not the absence of society, but the absence of a society so organised on the basis of physical force as to constitute a state. Though human society is coeval with mankind, the rise of political society, properly so called, is an event in human history.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 103-04 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

state of the art. Products liability. The level of pertinent scientific and technical knowledge existing at the time of a product’s manufacture, and the best technology reasonably available at the time the product was sold. — Also termed state of art. — state-of-the-art, adj.

“While the statutes in effect in some jurisdictions speak in terms of a state of the art defense, statutes in other jurisdictions provide that state of the art evidence is admissible or may be considered by the trier of fact by statute, and that in determining whether a product was in a defective condition or unreasonably dangerous at the time it left the control of the manufacturer or seller, consideration is given to the state of scientific and technical knowledge available to the manufacturer or seller at the time the product was placed on the market, and to the customary designs, methods, standards, and techniques of manufacturing, inspecting, and testing used by other manufacturers or sellers of similar products.” 69A Am. Jur. 2d Products Liability § 1319, at 472 (1997).

state of the case. The posture of litigation as it develops, as in discovery, at trial, or on appeal.

State of the Union. See Presidential message under MESSAGE.

state of war. A situation in which war has been declared or armed conflict is in progress.

state paper. 1. A document prepared by or relating to a state or national government and affecting the administration of that government in its political or international relations. 2. A newspaper officially designated for the publication of public statutes, resolutions, notices, and advertisements.

state paper office. Hist. An office established in London in 1578, headed by the Clerk of the Papers, to maintain custody of state documents.

state police. The department or agency of a state government empowered to maintain order, as by investigating and preventing crimes, and making arrests.

state police power. The power of a state to enforce laws for the health, welfare, morals, and safety of its citizens, if enacted so that the means are reasonably calculated to protect those legitimate state interests.

state’s attorney. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

state seal. See GREAT SEAL under SEAL.

state secret. A governmental matter that would be a threat to the national defense or diplomatic interests of the United States if revealed, and is therefore protected against disclosure by a witness in an ordinary judicial proceeding.

state-secrets privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

state’s evidence. See EVIDENCE.

state’s evidence, turn. See TURN STATE’S EVIDENCE.

state sovereignty. The right of a state to self-government; the supreme authority exercised by each state.

states’ rights. Under the Tenth Amendment, rights neither conferred on the federal government nor forbidden to the states.

state tax. See TAX.

state trial. See TRIAL.

stateway, n. A governmental policy or law. • This term is formed on the analogy of folkway.

statim (stay-tim). [Latin] Hist. Immediately; at the earliest possible time when an act might lawfully be completed.

station. 1. Social position or status. See STATUS. 2. A place where military duties are performed or military goods are stored. 3. A headquarters, as of a police department. 4. A place where both freight and passengers are received for transport or delivered after transport. 5. Civil law. A place where ships may safely travel.

Stationers’ Company. Hist. An association of stationers and their successors, established in London in 1557 and entrusted, by order of the Privy Council, with censorship of the press.

Stationers' Hall. Hist. The hall of the Stationers' Company, established in London in 1553, at which every person claiming a copyright was required to register as a condition precedent to filing an infringement action.

"Accordingly 'Entered at Stationers' Hall' on the title page of books was a form of warning to pirates that the owner of the copyright could and might sue. This requirement disappeared with the Copyright Act, 1911."

Stationery Office. Hist. English law. A government office established in 1786 as a department of the treasury, to supply government offices (including Parliament) with stationery and books, and to print and publish government papers. — Also termed Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

stationhouse. 1. A police station or precinct. 2. The lockup at a police precinct. See cash bail under BAIL (1).

stationhouse bail. See cash bail under BAIL.

statistical-decision theory. A method for determining whether a panel of potential jurors was selected from a fair cross-section of the community, by calculating the probabilities of selecting a certain number of jurors from a particular group to analyze whether it is statistically probable that the jury pool was selected by mere chance. • This method has been criticized because a pool of potential jurors is not ordinarily selected by mere chance; potential jurors are disqualified for a number of legitimate reasons. See FAIR-CROSS-SECTION REQUIREMENT; ABSOLUTE DISPARITY; COMPARATIVE DISPARITY; DUREN TEST.

statuliber (stack-ə-lə-bar), n. [Latin] Roman law. A person whose freedom under a will is made conditional or postponed; a person who will be free at a particular time or when certain conditions are met. — Also written statu liber (stay-tyoo 11-bar).

"The statuliber is one who has freedom arranged to take effect on completion of a period or fulfillment of a condition. Men become statuliberi as a result of an express condition, or by the very nature of the case. The meaning of 'express condition' presents no problem. The status arises from the very nature of the case when men are manumitted for the purpose of defrauding a creditor; for so long as it is uncertain whether the creditor will use his right, the men remain statuliberi, since fraud is taken in the lex Aelia Sentia to involve actual damage." Digest of Justinian 40.7.1 (Paul, ad Sabinum 5).

status. 1. A person's legal condition, whether personal or proprietary; the sum total of a person's legal rights, duties, liabilities, and other legal relations, or any particular group of them separately considered <the status of a landowner>. 2. A person's legal condition regarding personal rights but excluding proprietary relations <the status of a father> <the status of a wife>. 3. A person's capacities and incapacities, as opposed to other elements of personal status <the status of minors>. 4. A person's legal condition insofar as it is imposed by the law without the person's consent, as opposed to a condition that the person has acquired by agreement <the status of a slave>.

"By the status (or standing) of a person is meant the position that he holds with reference to the rights which are recognized and maintained by the law — in other words, his capacity for the exercise and enjoyment of legal rights." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 106 (1881).

"The word 'status' itself originally signified nothing more than the position of a person before the law. Therefore, every person (except slaves, who were not regarded as persons, for legal purposes) had a status. But, as a result of the modern tendency towards legal equality formerly noticed, differences of status became less and less frequent, and the importance of the subject has greatly diminished, with the result that the term status is now used, at any rate in English Law, in connection only with those comparatively few classes of persons in the community who, by reason of their conspicuous differences from normal persons, and the fact that by no decision of their own can they get rid of these differences, require separate consideration in an account of the law. But professional or even political differences do not amount to status; thus peers, physicians, clergymen of the established Church, and many other classes of persons, are not regarded as the subjects of status, because the legal differences which distinguish them from other persons, though substantial, are not enough to make them legally abnormal. And landowners, merchants, manufacturers, and wage-earners are not subjects of the Law of Status, though the last-named are, as the result of recent legislation, tending to approach that position." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 109 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

status, law of. See LAW OF STATUS.

status crime. See CRIME.

status de maniero (stay-tas deh mah-nee-er-ee-o). [Law Latin "the state of a manor"] Hist. The assembly of tenants to attend the lord's court.
status offender

status offender. See OFFENDER.

status offense. See OFFENSE (1).

status of irremovability. Hist. A pauper's right not to be removed from a parish after residing there for one year.

status quo (stay-tas or stat-ás kwoh). [Latin] The situation that currently exists.

status quo ante (stay-tas kwoh an-tee). [Latin] The situation that existed before something else (being discussed) occurred.

statutable (stach-ə-ta-bal), adj. 1. Prescribed or authorized by statute. 2. Conformed to the legislative requirements for quality, size, amount, or the like. 3. (Of an offense) punishable by law. See STATUTORY.

statute. A law passed by a legislative body. — Abbr. s.; stat.

"We are not justified in limiting the statutory law to those rules only which are promulgated by what we commonly call 'legislatures.' Any positive enactment to which the state gives the force of a law is a 'statute,' whether it has gone through the usual stages of legislative proceedings, or has been adopted in other modes of expressing the will of the people or other sovereign power of the state. In an absolute monarchy, an edict of the ruling sovereign is statutory law. Constitutions, being direct legislation by the people, must be included in the statutory law, and indeed they are examples of the highest form that the statute law can assume. Generally speaking, treaties also are statutory law, because in this country, under the provisions of the United States Constitution, treaties have not the force of law until so declared by the representatives of the people." — William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 8 (3d ed. 1914).

affirmative statute. A law requiring that something be done; one that directs the doing of an act. Cf. negative statute.

codifying statute. A law that purports to be exhaustive in restating the whole of the law on a particular topic, including prior caselaw as well as legislative provisions. • Courts generally presume that a codifying statute supersedes prior caselaw. Cf. consolidating statute.

compiled statutes. Laws that have been arranged by subject but have not been substantively changed; COMPILATION. Cf. revised statutes.

"The term 'compiled statutes' is properly applied to a methodical arrangement, without revision or reenactment, of the existing statutes of a State, all the statutes on a given subject being collected in one place. The work is usually performed by private persons; and the former statutes, as they were before the compilation, remain the authority." — Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 12 (1922).

consolidating statute. A law that collects the legislative provisions on a particular subject and embodies them in a single statute, often with minor amendments and drafting improvements. • Courts generally presume that a consolidating statute leaves prior caselaw intact. Cf. codifying statute.

"A distinction of greater importance in this field is that between consolidating and codifying statutes. A consolidating statute is one which collects the statutory provisions relating to a particular topic, and embodies them in a single Act of Parliament, making only minor amendments and improvements. A codifying statute is one which purports to state exhaustively the whole of the law on a particular subject (the common law as well as previous statutory provisions) . . . . The importance of the distinction lies in the courts' treatment of the previous case law, the existence of special procedural provisions with regard to consolidating statutes and the existence of a presumption that they do not change the law." — Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 6 (1976).

criminal statute. A law that defines, classifies, and sets forth punishment for specific crimes. — Also termed criminal code.

declaratory statute. A law enacted to clarify prior law by reconciling conflicting judicial decisions or by explaining the meaning of a prior statute.

directory statute. A law that indicates only what should be done, with no provision for enforcement. Cf. mandatory statute.

disabling statute. A law that limits or curbs certain rights.

enabling statute. A law that permits what was previously prohibited or that creates new powers; esp., a congressional statute conferring powers on an executive agency to carry out various delegated tasks. — Also termed enabling act.

expository statute. A law enacted to explain the meaning of a previously enacted law.

general statute. A law pertaining to an entire community or all persons generally. — Also termed public statute. See PUBLIC LAW (2).

imperfect statute. A law that prohibits, but does not render void, an objectionable transaction. • Such a statute provides a penalty for disobedience without depriving the violative transaction of its legal effect.

local statute. See LOCAL LAW (1), (2).

mandatory statute. A law that requires a course of action as opposed to merely permitting it. Cf. directory statute. negative statute. A law prohibiting something; a law expressed in negative terms. Cf. affirmative statute.

nonclaim statute. 1. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. 2. A law extinguishing a claim that is not timely asserted, esp. in the context of another proceeding. • An example is a statutory deadline for a creditor to file a claim in a probate proceeding. Unlike a statute of limitations, most nonclaim statutes are not subject to tolling.

organic statute. A law that establishes an administrative agency or local government. — Also termed organic act. Cf. ORGANIC LAW.

penal statute. A law that defines an offense and prescribes its corresponding fine, penalty, or punishment. — Also termed penal law; punitive statute.

perpetual statute. A law containing no provision for repeal, abrogation, or expiration at a future time.

personal statute. Civil law. A law that primarily affects a person’s condition or status (such as a statute relating to capacity or majority) and affects property only incidentally.

private statute. See special statute.

prospective statute. A law that applies to future events.

public statute. See PUBLIC LAW (2).

punitive statute. See penal statute.

real statute. Civil law. A law primarily affecting the operation, status, and condition of property, and addressing persons only incidentally.

reference statute. A law that incorporates and adopts by reference provisions of other laws.

remedial statute. A law that affords a remedy.

retrospective statute. A law that applies to past events.

revised statutes. Laws that have been collected, arranged, and reenacted as a whole by a legislative body. — Abbr. Rev. Stat.; R.S. See CODE (1). Cf. compiled statutes.

revival statute. A law that provides for the renewal of actions, of wills, and of the legal effect of documents.

severable statute. A law that remains operative in its remaining provisions even though a portion of the law is declared unconstitutional.

single-act statute. See LONG-ARM STATUTE.

speaking statute. A statute to be interpreted in light of the understanding of its terms prevailing at the time of interpretation.

special statute. A law that applies only to specific individuals, as opposed to everyone. — Also termed private statute.

“It is ancient wisdom, tracing back at least as far as the Roman taboo against the privilegium, that laws ought to be general, they ought to be addressed, not to particular persons, but to persons generally or to classes of persons (say, ‘all householders’). Accordingly, a number of American states have inserted in their constitutions prohibitions against ‘private or special’ statutes. These have given rise to endless difficulties.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 102–03 (1968).

split-level statute. A law that has connected with it officially promulgated explanatory materials, so that courts are left with two levels of documents to construe.

statute of frauds. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

temporary statute. 1. A law that specifically provides that it is to remain in effect for a fixed, limited period. 2. A law (such as an appropriation statute) that, by its nature, has only a single and temporary operation.

validating statute. A law that is amended either to remove errors or to add provisions to conform to constitutional requirements. — Also termed validation statute.

statute book. A bound collection of statutes, usu. as part of a larger set of books containing a complete body of statutory law, such as the United States Code Annotated.

statute fair. Hist. A fair during which the fixed labor rates are announced and laborers of both sexes offer themselves for hire. — Also termed mop.

statute law. See STATUTORY LAW.

statute merchant. Hist. 1. (cap.) One of two 13th-century statutes establishing procedures to better secure and recover debts by, among other things, providing for a commercial bond that, if not timely paid, resulted in swift execution on the lands, goods, and body of the debtor. 13 Edw., ch. 6 (1283); 15 Edw., ch. 6 (1285). • These statutes were repealed in 1863. 2. The commercial bond so established. Cf. STATUTE STAPLE.

"It is not a little remarkable that our common law knew no process whereby a man could pledge his body or liberty for payment of a debt. . . . Under Edward I, the tide turned. In the interest of commerce a new form of security, the so-called 'statute merchant,' was invented, which gave the creditor power to demand the seizure and statute mile. See MILE (1).

Statute of Accumulations. Hist. A statute forbidding the accumulation, beyond a certain period, of property settled by deed or will. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, ch. 98 (1800).

Statute of Allegiance de Facto. Hist. A statute requiring subjects to give allegiance to the actual (de facto) king, and protecting them in so doing. 11 Hen. 7, ch. 1.

Statute of Amendments and Jeofails (je-fayl). Hist. One of several 15th- and 16th-century statutes allowing a party who acknowledges a pleading error to correct it. 1 Hen. 5, ch. 5 (1413); 32 Hen. 8, ch. 30 (1540); 37 Hen. 8, ch. 6 (1545). See JEOFAIL.

Statute of Anne. Hist. 1. The Copyright Act of 1709, which first granted copyright protection to book authors. 8 Anne, ch. 19 (1709). 2. The statute that modernized the English bankruptcy system and first introduced the discharge of the debtor’s existing debts. 4 Anne, ch. 17 (1705).

statute of bread and ale. See ASSISA PANIS ET CEREVERISAE.

statute of distribution. A state law regulating the distribution of an estate among an intestate’s heirs and relatives.

Statute of Elizabeth. Hist. The Bankrupts Act of 1705, which contained provisions against conveyances made to defraud creditors. 13 Eliz., ch. 5.

statute of frauds. 1. (cap.) An English statute enacted in 1677 declaring certain contracts judicially unenforceable (but not void) if they are not committed to writing and signed by the party to be charged. • The statute was entitled “An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries” (29 Car. 2, ch. 3). — Also termed Statute of Frauds and Perjuries.

“The best known, and until recently, most important, Act prescribing written formalities for certain contracts only required that those contracts should be evidenced in writing, or to put it another way, that the contract would be unenforceable in a Court (but not void) in the absence of writing. This was the Statute of Frauds 1677, sections 4 and 17 of which required written evidence of a somewhat curious list of contracts. Today, all that is left of these provisions is that part of section 4, which requires contracts of guarantee to be evidenced in writing, and section 40 of the Law of Property Act 1925 (replacing another part of section 4), which deals with contracts of sale of an interest in land.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 141 (3d ed. 1981).

2. A statute (based on the English Statute of Frauds) designed to prevent fraud and perjury by requiring certain contracts to be in writing and signed by the party to be charged. • Statutes of frauds traditionally apply to the following types of contracts: (1) a contract for the sale or transfer of an interest in land, (2) a contract that cannot be performed within one year of its making, (3) a contract for the sale of goods valued at $500 or more, (4) a contract of an executor or administrator to answer for a decedent’s debt, (5) a contract to guarantee the debt or duty of another, and (6) a contract made in consideration of marriage. UCC § 2–201. — Abbr. S/F; SOF.

“(T)he primary statute of frauds, past and present, is that they are means to the end of preventing successful courtroom perjury. The means to this end is simply the requirement of a writing signed by the party to be charged . . . (B)ut the statute of frauds writing requirement is . . . so far from any kind of guarantee against successful perjury that it is inappropriate even to call it a means to fraud prevention at all.” 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 2–8, at 82 (4th ed. 1995).

statute of limitations. 1. A statute establishing a time limit for suing in a civil case, based on the date when the claim accrued (as when the injury occurred or was discovered). • The purpose of such a statute is to require diligent prosecution of known claims, thereby providing finality and predictability in legal affairs and ensuring that claims will be resolved while evidence is reasonably available and fresh. — Also termed nonclaim statute.

“Statutes of limitations, like the equitable doctrine of laches, in their conclusive effects are designed to promote justice by preventing surprises through the revival of claims that have been allowed to slumber until evidence has been lost, memories have faded, and witnesses have disappeared.” Order of R.R. Telegraphers v. Railway Express Agency, 321 U.S. 342, 348-49, 64 S.Ct. 582, 586 (1944).

2. A statute establishing a time limit for prosecuting a crime, based on the date when the offense occurred. Cf. STATUTE OF REPOSE.
The purpose of a statute of limitations is to limit exposure to criminal prosecution to a certain fixed period of time following the occurrence of those acts the legislature had decided to punish by criminal sanctions. Such a limitation is designed to protect individuals from having to defend themselves against charges when the basic facts have become obscured by the passage of time and to minimize the danger of official punishment because of acts in the far-distant past. Such a time limit may also have the salutary effect of encouraging law enforcement officials promptly to investigate suspected criminal activity.” Toussie v. United States, 397 U.S. 112, 90 S.Ct. 858 (1970).

Statute of Mortmain. See Mortmain Statute.

Statute of Repose. A statute that bars a suit a fixed number of years after the defendant acts in some way (as by designing or manufacturing a product), even if this period ends before the plaintiff has suffered any injury. Cf. Statute of Limitations.

“A statute of repose . . . limits the time within which an action may be brought and is not related to the accrual of any cause of action; the injury need not have occurred, much less have been discovered. Unlike an ordinary statute of limitations which begins running upon accrual of the claim, the period contained in a statute of repose begins when a specific event occurs, regardless of whether a cause of action has accrued or whether any injury has resulted.” 54 C.J.S. Limitations of Actions § 4, at 20–21 (1987).

Statute of Uses. Hist. An English statute of 1535 that converted the equitable title held by a cestui que use (i.e., a beneficiary) to a legal one in order to make the cestui que use liable for feudal dues, as only a legal owner (the feoffee to uses) could be. • This statute was the culmination of a series of enactments designed by the Tudors to stop the practice of creating uses in land that deprived feudal lords of the valuable incidents of feudal tenure. The statute discouraged the granting of property subject to another’s use by deeming the person who enjoys the use to have legal title with the right of absolute ownership and possession. So after the statute was enacted, if A conveyed land to B subject to the use of C, then C became the legal owner of the land in fee simple. Ultimately, the use was circumvented by the courts’ recognition of the use of equitable trusts in land conveying. See Cestui Que Use; Grant To Uses; Use (4).

“The Statute of 27 H.8. hath advanced Uses, and hath established Surety for him that hath the Use against the Feoffees: for before the Statute the Feoffees were Owners of the Land, but now it is destroyed, and the cestuy que use is the Owner of the same: before the Possession ruled the Use, but since the Use governeth the Possession.” William Noy, A Treatise of the Principal Grounds and Maxims of the Laws of This Nation 73 (4th ed. 1677; repr. C. Sims ed., 1870).

Statute of Westminster the First. See Westminster the First, Statute of.

Statute of Wills. 1. (cap.) An English statute (enacted in 1540) that established the right of a person to devise real property by will. • Also termed Wills Act. 2. A state statute, usu. derived from the English statute, providing for testamentary disposition in that jurisdiction.

Statute of Winchester. See Winchester, Statute of.

Statute Roll. Hist. A roll upon which a statute was formally entered after receiving the royal assent.

Statutes at Large. An official compilation of the acts and resolutions that become law from each session of Congress, printed in chronological order.

“A popular form of security after 1285 . . . was the Statute staple” — whereby the borrower could by means of a registered contract charge his land and goods without giving up possession; if he failed to pay, the lender became a tenant of the land until satisfied. . . . The borrower under a statute or recognizance remained in possession of his land, and it later became a common practice under the common-law forms of mortgage likewise to allow the mortgagor to remain in possession as a tenant at will or at sufferance of the mortgagee.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 354 (3rd ed. 1990).

stay, n. 1. The postponement or halting of a proceeding, judgment, or the like. 2. An order to suspend all or part of a judicial proceeding or a judgment resulting from that proceeding. — Also termed stay of execution. — stay, vb. — stayable, adj.

automatic stay. Bankruptcy. A bar to all judicial and extrajudicial collection efforts against the debtor or the debtor’s property. ● The policy behind the automatic stay, which is effective upon the filing of the bankruptcy petition, is that all actions against the debtor should be halted pending the determination of creditors’ rights and the orderly administration of the debtor’s assets free from creditor interference. — Also termed automatic suspension.

stay of execution. See STAY.

stay-put rule. School law. The principle that a child must remain in his or her current educational placement while an administrative claim under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (usu. for an alternative placement or for mainstreaming) is pending. 20 USCA § 1415(j).

STB. abbr. Surface Transportation Board. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

STD. abbr. SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASE.

steady course. Maritime law. A ship’s path that can be readily ascertained either because the ship is on a straight heading or because the ship’s future positions are easy to plot based on the ship’s current position and movements.

steal, vb. 1. To take (personal property) illegally with the intent to keep it unlawfully. 2. To take (something) by larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses.

stealth. 1. Hist. Theft; an act or instance of stealing. ● Etymologically, this term is the noun corresponding to the verb steal.

"Stealth is the wrongful taking of goods without pretence of title; and therefore altereth not the property, as a trespass doth, so as upon an appeal the party shall rehave them." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 210 (1759).

2. Surreptitiousness; furtive slyness.

stellionatus (stel-ea-nay-tas or stel-yaa). [Lat. "underhand dealing"] Roman & Scots law. Conduct that is fraudulent but does not fall within a specific class of offenses. ● This term applies primarily to fraudulent practices in the sale or hypothecation of land. — Also termed (in Scots law) stellionate. Cf. COZENING.

"Though pignus and hypothec are almost different names for the same thing, there were differences. Hypothece was used mainly for land, which cannot be removed. A thing could be pledged only to one, but successive hypothes might be created over a thing. There was no fraud in this but it was the offence of stellionatus to give a hypothec without declaring existing hypotheses." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 355 (2d ed. 1953).

"STELLIONATE ... is a term applied, in the law of Scotland, either to any crime which, though indictable, goes under no general denomination, and is punishable arbitrarily, or to any civil delinquency of which fraud is an ingredient. Those, e.g., who grant double conveyances of the same subject, are guilty of this crime ... and are punishable arbitrarily in their persons and goods, besides becoming infamous." William Bell, Bell’s Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 940 (George Watson ed., 1882).

stepchild. The child of one’s spouse by a previous marriage.

stepfather. The husband of one’s mother by a later marriage. — Formerly also termed vitricus.

step-in-the-dark rule. Torts. The contributory-negligence rule that a person who enters a totally unfamiliar area in the darkness has a duty, in the absence of unusual stress, to refrain from proceeding until first ascertaining the existence of any dangerous obstacles. See contributory negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

stepmother. The wife of one’s father by a later marriage.

stepped-up basis. See BASIS.

step-rate-premium insurance. See INSURANCE.
step-transaction doctrine. A method used by the Internal Revenue Service to determine tax liability by viewing the transaction as a whole, and disregarding one or more nonsubstantive, intervening transactions taken to achieve the final result. — Also termed step-transaction approach.

sterling, adj. 1. Of or conforming to a standard of national value, esp. of English money or metal . 2. (Of an opinion, value, etc.) valuable; authoritative .

stet (stet), n. [Latin “let it stand’’] 1. An order staying legal proceedings, as when a prosecutor determines not to proceed on an indictment and places the case on a stet docket. • The term is used chiefly in Maryland. 2. An instruction to leave a text as it stands.

stet processus (stet prə-səs-as), n. [Law Latin “let the process stand’’] Hist. 1. A record entry, similar to a rolle prosequi, by which the parties agree to stay further proceedings. 2. The agreement between the parties to stay those proceedings. • This was typically used by a plaintiff to suspend an action rather than suffer a nonsuit.

stevedore (stee-vo-dor). Maritime law. A person employed in the loading and unloading of vessels. Cf. SEAMAN.

steward. 1. A person appointed in place of another. 2. A union official who represents union employees and who oversees the carrying out of union contracts. — Also termed (in sense 2) union steward; shop steward.

steward of all England. Hist. An officer vested with various powers, including the power to preside over the trial of peers.

steward of a manor. Hist. An officer who handles the business matters of a manor, including keeping the court rolls and granting admittance to copyhold lands.

Steward of Chiltern Hundreds (chil-tarn). English law. Formerly, a royal officer charged with protecting residents from robbers and thieves who hid in the hundreds’ wooded areas. • A member of Parliament can now use the office as a way to resign from office (something forbidden by statute) by accepting in lieu of a Parliamentary seat a royal appointment as Steward of Chiltern Hundreds. By law, a member of Parliament may not accept certain Crown appointments without forfeiting his or her seat, so once a member secures an appointment as Steward of Chiltern Hundreds — an office that is now only a sinecure — he or she is removed from Parliament. A resignation from the office of Steward completes the resignation process.

stickering. Securities. The updating of a prospectus by affixing stickers that contain the new or revised information. • Stickering avoids the expense of reprinting an entire prospectus.

stickup. An armed robbery in which the victim is threatened by the use of weapons. — Also termed holdup. See armed robbery under ROBBERY.

stifling of a prosecution. An agreement, in exchange for money or other advantage, to abstain from prosecuting a person.

stigma-plus doctrine. The principle that defamation by a government official is not actionable as a civil-rights violation unless the victim suffers not only embarrassment but also the loss of a property interest (such as continued employment in a government job).

stillicidium (stil-ə-sid-ə-am). [Latin fr. stilla “a drop” + codere “to fall’’] Roman law. See AQUAE IMMITTENDÆ.

sting. An undercover operation in which law-enforcement agents pose as criminals to catch actual criminals engaging in illegal acts.

stint. 1. English law. A limited number .

“...All these species, of pasturable common, may be and usually are limited as to number and time; but there are also commons without stint, and which last all the year.” 2. William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 34 (1766).

2. The task for the day or work <he has done his stint>.

stipend (sti-pend or -pend). 1. A salary or other regular, periodic payment. 2. A tribute to support the clergy, usu. consisting of payments in money or grain.

stipendiary estate (sti-pen-deer-e). See ESTATE.

stipendiary magistrate. See MAGISTRATE.

stipes (stip-pee), n. [Latin “a trunk”] Hist. Family stock; a source of descent or title. Pl. stipites (stip-a-teez).

stipital (stip-i-tal), adj. See stirpital.

stipulated authority. See express authority under authority (1).

stipulated damages. See liquidated damages under damages.

stipulated judgment. See agreed judgment under judgment.

stipulatio (stip-ya-lay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. An oral contract requiring a formal question and reply, binding the replier to do what was asked. • It is essential that both parties speak, and that the reply directly conforms to the question asked and is made with the intent to enter into a contractual obligation. No consideration is required. See actio ex stipulatu under actio.

"[I]t must be remembered that the law-forms used by the Romans had their origin in times when writing was neither easy nor common. It is not surprising, therefore, that among them a form of spoken words, a verbal contract, should hold the place which among us is occupied by written notes. This form ... stipulatio — was of a very simple character, consisting only of a question asked by one party, and an answer returned by the other ... Such forms as Spondee mihi decem aureos dare (do you engage to give me ten aurei, or gold-pieces); answer, Spondeo (I engage) ..." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 210 (1881).

"The oldest Roman contract was the stipulatio, an oral promise made by an answer to an immediately preceding question, with the promisor using the same verb. The contract was unilateral. Only one party, the promisor, was legally liable, and he was bound strictly by the words used." Alan Watson, Ancient Law and Modern Understanding 96 (1998).

stipulatio aqualiana (stip-ya-lay-shee-oh-ak-wil-ee-ay-no). [Latin] Roman law. A type of stipulatio used to collect and discharge all the liabilities owed by a single contract.

"(Stipulatio Aqualiana, a device credited to Aquilus Gallus, of Cicero’s time. Where two persons with complex relations between them desired to square or simplify their accounts they could work out the items and arrive at the balance ... This balance being paid or otherwise arranged, each party would then make with the other this stipulatio, which was a comprehensive formula ... This would note all the claims and turn them into a single promise, for an incertum. These mutual stipulations might then be released by acceptilatio." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 348 (2d ed. 1959).

stipulatio juris (stip-ya-lay-shee-oh joor-is). [Latin “stipulatio as to the law”] The parties’ agreement on a question of law or its applicability. • The court is not bound to accept the stipulation if it is erroneous. But the parties are allowed to stipulate the law to be applied to a dispute.

stipulation (stip-ya-lay-shan), n. 1. A material condition or requirement in an agreement; esp., a factual representation that is incorporated into a contract as a term <breach of the stipulation regarding payment of taxes>. • Such a contractual term often appears in a section of the contract called “Representations and Warranties.” 2. A voluntary agreement between opposing parties concerning some relevant point <the plaintiff and defendant entered into a stipulation on the issue of liability>. • A stipulation relating to a pending judicial proceeding, made by a party to the proceeding or the party’s attorney, is binding without consideration.

“Breach of a stipulation should not be confused with misrepresentation, which is a false statement made before or at the time the contract is made, and which induces the contract; only if it is incorporated into the contract does it become a stipulation or term, the breach of which will entitle the injured party to pursue the usual remedies which are available where there has been a breach of a warranty or of a condition.” 1 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 259 (P.W. French ed., 13th ed. 1960).

“Stipulations with respect to matters of form and procedure serve the convenience of the parties to litigation and often serve to simplify and expedite the proceeding. In some cases they are supported by the policy of favoring compromise in order to reduce the volume of litigation. Hence they are favored by the courts and enforced without regard to consideration.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 94 cmt. a (1981).

3. Roman law. A formal contract by which a promisor (and only the promisor) became bound by oral question and answer. • By the sixth century A.D., stipulations were exclusively in written form. — stipulate (stip-ya-layt), vb. — stipulative (stip-ya-la-tiv), adj.

stipulation pour autrui (poor oh-troo-ee). [French “for other persons”] Civil law. A contractual provision that benefits a third party and gives the third party a cause of action against the promisor for specific performance. See third-party beneficiary under beneficiary.

stipulatio sponsalitiae (stip-ya-lay-shee-oh spon-sa-lish-ee-no). See sponsalia. stipulative definition. See DEFINITION.

stipulator. 1. One who makes a stipulation. 2. Civil law. The promisee in a stipulation pour autrui, accepting the promise of a benefit to a third party.

stirpal (star-pal), adj. See STIRPITAL.

stirpes (star-peez), pl. STIRPS.

stirpital (star-pa-tal), adj. Of or relating to per stirpes distribution. — Also termed stipital; stirpal. See PER STIRPES.

stirps (storphs), n. [Latin “stock”] A branch of a family; a line of descent. Pl. stirpes (star-peez). See PER STIRPES.

stock, n. 1. The original progenitor of a family; a person from whom a family is descended <George Harper, Sr. was the stock of the Harper line>. 2. A merchant’s goods that are kept for sale or trade <the car dealer put last year’s models on sale to reduce its stock>. 3. The capital or principal fund raised by a corporation through subscribers’ contributions or the sale of shares <Acme’s stock is worth far more today than it was 20 years ago>. 4. A proportional part of a corporation’s capital represented by the number of equal units (or shares) owned, and granting the holder the right to participate in the company’s general management and to share in its net profits or earnings <Julia sold her stock in Pantheon Corporation>. See SHARE (2). Cf. SECURITY (4).

assented stock. Stock that an owner deposits with a third person according to an agreement by which the owner voluntarily accepts a change in the corporation’s securities.

assessable stock. Stock that is subject to resale by the issuer if the holder fails to pay any assessment levied on it.

authorized stock. See capital stock (1).

bailout stock. Nontaxable preferred stock issued to stockholders as a dividend. • Bailout stock is issued to gain favorable tax rates by distributing corporate earnings at capital gains rates rather than by distributing dividends at ordinary income rates. This practice is now prohibited by the Internal Revenue Code. IRC (26 USCA) § 306.

barometer stock. A stock whose price fluctuates according to market conditions; an individual stock considered to be indicative of the strength of the market in general. — Also termed bellwether stock.

blank stock. Securities. Stock with voting powers and rights set by the issuer’s board of directors after the stock has been sold.

blue-chip stock. See BLUE CHIP.

bonus stock. A stock share that is issued for no consideration, as an enticement to buy some other type or class of security. • It is considered a type of watered stock. — Also termed bonus share.

book-value stock. Stock offered to executives at a book-value price, rather than at its market value. • The stock is offered with the understanding that when its book value has risen, the company will buy back the stock at the increased price or will make payments in stock equal to the increased price.

callable preferred stock. Preferred stock that may be repurchased by the issuing corporation at a prestated price, usu. at or slightly above par value.

capital stock. 1. The total number of shares of stock that a corporation may issue under its charter or articles of incorporation, including both common stock and preferred stock. • A corporation may increase the amount of capital stock if the owners of a majority of the outstanding shares consent. — Also termed authorized stock; authorized capital stock; authorized stock issue; authorized shares. 2. The total par value or stated value of this stock; CAPITALIZATION (4). 3. See common stock.

common stock. A class of stock entitling the holder to vote on corporate matters, to receive dividends after other claims and dividends have been paid (esp. to preferred shareholders), and to share in assets upon liquidation. • Common stock is often called capital stock if it is the corporation’s only class of stock outstanding. — Also termed ordinary shares. Cf. preferred stock.

convertible stock. See convertible security under SECURITY.

corporate stock. An equity security issued by a corporation.

cumulative preferred stock. Preferred stock that must pay dividends in full before common shareholders may receive any dividend. • If the corporation omits a dividend in a particular year or period, it is carried over to the next year or period and must be paid before the common shareholders receive any payment. — Also termed cumulative stock; cumulative preference share.

deferred stock. Stock whose holders are entitled to dividends only after the corporation has met some other specified obligation, such as the discharge of a liability or the payment of a dividend to preferred shareholders.

discount stock. A stock share issued for less than par value. • Discount stock is considered a type of watered stock, the issuance of which may impose liability on the recipient for the difference between the par value and the cash amount paid. — Also termed discount share.

donated stock. Stock donated to a charity or given to a corporation by its own stockholders, esp. for resale.

equity stock. Stock of any class having unlimited dividend rights, regardless of whether the stock is preferred.

floating stock. Stock that is offered for sale on the open market and that has not yet been purchased; the number of outstanding shares available for trading.

full-paid stock. Stock on which no further payments can be demanded by the issuing company. — Also termed paid-up stock.

glamour stock. A stock with great public interest because of a real or imagined potential for fast growth or high earnings. — Also termed growth stock; performance stock.

growth stock. 1. Stock issued by a growth company. • Because a growth company usu. reinvests a large share of its income back into the company, growth stock pays relatively low dividends, though its price usu. has a relatively high appreciation in market value over time. 2. See glamour stock.

guaranteed stock. Preferred stock whose dividend is guaranteed by someone (usu. a parent corporation) other than the issuer.

guarantee stock. A fixed, nonwithdrawal investment in a building-and-loan association. • This type of stock guarantees to all other investors in the association a fixed dividend or interest rate. See BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

guaranty stock. A savings-and-loan association’s stock yielding dividends to the holders after dividends have been paid to the depositors.

hot stock. See hot issue under ISSUE (2).

income stock. A stock with a history of high yields or dividend payments (e.g., public utilities and well-established corporations).

issued stock. Capital stock that has been authorized and sold to subscribers, but may be reacquired, such as treasury stock.

letter stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

listed stock. See listed security under SECURITY.

margin stock. See marginable security under SECURITY.

nonassessable stock. Stock owned by a holder whose potential liability is limited to the amount paid for the stock and who cannot be charged additional funds to pay the issuer’s debts. • Stock issued in the United States is usu. nonassessable.

noncumulative preferred stock. Preferred stock that does not have to pay dividends that are in arrears. • Once a periodic dividend is omitted, it will not be paid. — Also termed noncumulative stock.

nonparticipating preferred stock. Preferred stock that does not give the shareholder the right to additional earnings — usu. surplus common-stock dividends — beyond those stated in the preferred contract.

nonvoting stock. Stock that has no voting rights attached to it under most situations.

no-par stock. Stock issued without a specific value assigned to it. • For accounting purposes, it is given a legal or stated value that has little or no connection to the stock’s market value. — Also termed no-par-value stock. — Sometimes shortened to no par.

outstanding stock. Stock that is held by investors and has not been redeemed by the issuing corporation. — Also termed outstanding capital stock; shares outstanding.

participating preferred stock. Preferred stock whose holder is entitled to receive stated dividends and to share with the common shareholders in any additional distributions of earnings.

participation stock. Stock permitting the holder to participate in profits and surplus.

par-value stock. Stock originally issued for a fixed value derived by dividing the total value of capital stock by the number of shares to be issued. • The par value does not bear a necessary relation to the actual stock value because of the part surplus plays in the valuation.

penny stock. An equity security that is not traded in established markets, represents no tangible assets, or has average revenues less than required for trading on an exchange. • Typically, a penny stock is highly speculative and can be purchased for less than $5 a share.
performance stock. See glamour stock.

phantom stock. Imaginary stock that is credited to a corporate executive account as part of the executive’s compensation package. See PHANTOM STOCK PLAN.

preferred stock. A class of stock giving its holder a preferential claim to dividends and to corporate assets upon liquidation but that usu. carries no voting rights. — Also termed preference shares. Cf. common stock.

premium stock. Stock that carries a premium for trading, as in the case of short-selling.

prior preferred stock. Preferred stock that has preference over another class of preferred stock from the same issuer. • The preference usu. relates to dividend payments or claims on assets.

reacquired stock. See treasury stock.

redeemable stock. Preferred stock that can be called by the issuing corporation and retired.

registered stock. See registered security under SECURITY.

restricted stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

retired stock. See treasury stock.

subscribed stock. A stockholder’s equity account showing the capital that will be contributed when the subscription price is collected. See SUBSCRIPTION (2).

tainted stock. Stock owned or transferred by a person disqualified from serving as a plaintiff in a derivative action. • A good-faith transferee is also disqualified from filing a derivative action.

treasury stock. Stock issued by a company but then reacquired and either canceled or held. • Some states have eliminated this classification and treat such stock as if it is authorized but unissued. — Also termed treasury security; reacquired stock; retired stock.

unissued stock. Stock that is authorized by the corporate charter but not yet distributed.

unlisted stock. See unlisted security under SECURITY.

volatile stock. Stock subject to wide and rapid fluctuations in price. — Also termed yo-yo stock.

voting stock. Stock that entitles the holder to vote in the corporation’s election of officers and on other matters put to a vote. — Also termed voting security.

watered stock. Stock issued with a par value greater than the value of the corporation’s assets.

“The term ‘watered stock’ is a colorful common law phrase describing the situation where shareholders receive shares without paying as much for them as the law requires. … Much of the early common law relating to watered shares concerned the liability of shareholders receiving watered shares to pay the additional consideration needed to ‘squeeze out the water.’ … [It now] seems clear that a shareholder is liable to the corporation if he or she pays less for the shares than the consideration fixed by the directors, and this liability is measured by the difference between the fixed consideration and the amount actually paid.” Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 120–21 (3d ed. 1991).

whisper stock. The stock of a company that is rumored to be the target of a takeover attempt.

yo-yo stock. See volatile stock.

stop and frisk, n. A police officer’s brief detention, questioning, and search of a person for a concealed weapon when the officer reasonably suspects that the person has committed or is about to commit a crime. • The stop and frisk, which can be conducted without a warrant or probable cause, was held constitutional by the Supreme Court in Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868 (1968). — Also termed investigatory stop; Terry stop. See reasonable suspicion.

stopgap zoning. See interim zoning under zoning.

stop-limit order. See stop order under order (4).

stop-list. Antitrust. An illegal means by which manufacturers sometimes attempt to enforce price maintenance, by having suppliers agree among themselves not to supply any party who competes actively and breaks anticompetitive price “rules.”

stop-loss insurance. See insurance.

stop-loss order. See stop order under order (4).

stop-notice statute. A law providing an alternative to a mechanic’s lien by allowing a contractor, supplier, or worker to make a claim against the construction lender and, in some instances, the owner for a portion of the undisbursed construction-loan proceeds. See mechanic’s lien under lien.

stop order. 1. See order (4). 2. An SEC order that suspends a registration statement containing false, incomplete, or misleading information. 3. A bank customer’s order instructing the bank not to honor one of the customer’s checks. — Also termed (in sense 3) stop-payment order.

stoppage, n. 1. An obstruction or hindrance to the performance of something <stoppage of goods or persons in transit for inspection>. 2. Civil law. Setoff <stoppage in pay for money owed>.

stoppage in transit (in tran-si-t[y]oo or tranz-i-t[y]oo). The right that a seller of goods has, under certain circumstances, to regain the possession of those goods even though the seller has already parted with them under a contract for sale. • This right traditionally applies when goods are consigned wholly or partly on credit from one person to another, and the consignee becomes bankrupt or insolvent before the goods arrive — in which event the consignor may direct the carrier to deliver the goods to someone other than the consignee (who can no longer pay for them). — Also termed stoppage in transit.

stop-payment order. See stop order (3).

store, n. 1. A place where goods are deposited to be purchased or sold. 2. (usu. pl.) A supply of articles provided for the subsistence and accommodation of a ship’s crew and passengers. 3. A place where goods or supplies are stored for future use; a warehouse.

strand, n. A shore or bank of an ocean, lake, river, or stream.

stranding, n. Maritime law. A ship’s drifting, driving, or running aground on a strand. accidental stranding. Stranding as a result of natural forces, as in wind and waves. • The type of stranding that occurs determines the method of apportioning the liability for any resulting losses. See general average and special average under AVERAGE. — Also termed involuntary stranding.

“Damage to a vessel from involuntary stranding or wreck, and the cost of repairs, are particular average only. Where, however, the ship and cargo are exposed to a common peril by the accidental stranding, the expenses of unloading and taking care of the cargo, rescuing the vessel, reloading the cargo, and other expenses other than repairs requisite to enable the vessel to proceed on the voyage, are brought into general average, provided the vessel and cargo were saved by the same series of measures during the continuance of the common peril which created the joint necessity for the expenses.” 70 Am. Jur. 2d Shipping § 961, at 1069 (1987).

voluntary stranding. Stranding to avoid a more dangerous fate or for fraudulent purposes.

“The loss occurring when a ship is voluntarily run ashore to avoid capture, foundering, or shipwreck is to be made good by general average contribution, if the ship is afterwards recovered so as to be able to perform its voyage, as such a claim is clearly within the rule that whatever is sacrificed for the common benefit of the associated interests shall be made good by all the interests exposed to the common peril which were saved from the common danger by the sacrifice. . . . A vessel cannot, however, claim contribution founded on even a voluntary stranding made necessary by . . . unwiseworthiness or the negligence of those in charge, except in pursuance of a valid agreement to that effect.” 70 Am. Jur. 2d Shipping § 961, at 1069 (1987).

stranger. 1. One who is not party to a given transaction <she was a stranger to the agreement>. 2. One not standing toward another in some relation implied in the context <the trustee was negotiating with a stranger>.

stranger in blood. 1. One not related by blood, such as a relative by affinity. 2. Any person not within the consideration of natural love and affection arising from a relationship.

stratagem. A trick or deception to obtain an advantage, esp. in a military conflict.

ardizing competitive independence through their strategic alliance, the manufacturer and distributor of a co-developed product shared development costs>. Cf. JOINT VENTURE; PARTNERSHIP.

stratocracy (strə-tək-rə-see). A military government.

strator (strə-tər). Hist. A surveyor of the highways.

straw bail. See bail common under BAIL (3).

straw bond. See BOND (2).

straw man. 1. A fictitious person, esp. one that is weak or flawed. 2. A tenuous and exaggerated counterargument that an advocate puts forward for the sole purpose of disproving it. — Also termed straw-man argument. 3. A third party used in some transactions as a temporary transferee to allow the principal parties to accomplish something that is otherwise impermissible. 4. A person hired to post a worthless bail bond for the release of an accused. — Also termed stramineus homo.

stray remarks. Employment law. Statements to or about an employee by a coworker or supervisor, concerning the employee’s race, sex, age, national origin, or other status, that are either objectively or subjectively offensive, but that do not represent harassment or discrimination by the employer because of (1) their sporadic, unsystematic, and unofficial nature, (2) the circumstances in which they were made, or (3) their not showing any intention to hamper the employee’s continued employment. — Also termed stray comments.

stream. Anything liquid that flows in a line or course; esp., a current of water consisting of a bed, bank, and watercourse, usu. emptying into other bodies of water but not losing its character even if it breaks up or disappears.

private stream. A watercourse, the bed, channel, or waters of which are exclusively owned by private parties.

stream-of-commerce theory. 1. The principle that a state may exercise personal jurisdiction over a defendant if the defendant places a product in the general marketplace and the product causes injury or damage in the forum state, as long as the defendant also takes other acts to establish some connection with the forum state, as by advertising there or by hiring someone to serve as a sales agent there. Asahi Metal Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Superior Court of California, 480 U.S. 102, 107 S.Ct. 1026 (1987). 2. The principle that a person who participates in placing a defective product in the general marketplace is strictly liable for harm caused by the product. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A (1979).

street. A road or public thoroughfare used for travel in an urban area, including the pavement, shoulders, gutters, curbs, and other areas within the street lines.

"Strictly speaking, a 'street' is a public thoroughfare in an urban community such as a city, town, or village, and the term is not ordinarily applicable to roads and highways outside of municipalities. Although a street, in common parlance, is equivalent to a highway, it is usually specifically denominated by its own proper appellation... Whether a particular highway is to be regarded as a 'street' within the meaning of that term as used in a statute must, of course, be resolved by construction." 39 Am. Jur. 2d Highways, Streets, and Bridges § 8, at 588-89 (1999).

street crime. See CRIME.

street gang. See GANG.

street name. A brokerage firm’s name in which securities owned by another are registered. • A security is held by a broker in street name (at the customer’s request) to simplify trading because no signature on the stock certificate is required. A street name may also be used for securities purchased on margin. The word “street” in this term is a reference to Wall Street.

strict scrutiny. Constitutional law. The standard applied to suspect classifications (such as race) in equal-protection analysis and to fundamental rights (such as voting rights) in due-process analysis. • Under strict scrutiny, the state must establish that it has a compelling interest that justifies and necessitates the law in question. Cf. COMPPELLING-STATE-INTEREST TEST; SUSPECT CLASSIFICATION; FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT. Cf. INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY; RATIONAL-BASED TEST.

strict settlement. See SETTLEMENT.

strict test. Evidence. The principle that disclosure of a privileged document, even when inadvertent, results in a waiver of the attorney-client privilege regarding the document, unless all possible precautions were taken to protect the document from disclosure. Cf. LENIENT TEST; HYDRAFLOW TEST.

strictum jus (strik-tam jas). See JUS STRICTUM.

strict underwriting. See STANDBY UNDERWRITING under UNDERWRITING.

strike, n. 1. An organized cessation or slowdown of work by employees to compel the employer to meet the employees' demands. Cf. LOCKOUT; BOYCOTT; PICKETING.

can-canny strike (kah-can-ee or kaw-). A strike in which the workers remain on the job but work at a slower pace to reduce their output.

economic strike. A strike resulting from an economic dispute with the employer (such as a wage dispute); a dispute for reasons other than unfair labor practices. • An employer can permanently replace an economic striker but cannot prevent the worker from coming back to an unreplaced position simply because the worker was on strike.

general strike. A strike organized to affect an entire industry.

illegal strike. 1. A strike using unlawful procedures. 2. A strike to obtain unlawful objectives, as in a strike to force an employer to stop doing business with a particular company.

jurisdictional strike. A strike resulting from a dispute between members of different unions over work assignments.

outlaw strike. See wildcat strike.

quickie strike. See wildcat strike.

recognition strike. A strike by workers seeking to force their employer to acknowledge the union as their collective-bargaining agent. • After the National Labor Relations Act was passed in 1935, recognition strikes became unnecessary. Under the Act, the employer is required to recognize an NLRB-certified union for bargaining purposes. — Also termed organizational strike.

secondary strike. A strike against an employer because that employer has business dealings with another employer directly involved in a dispute with the union. See secondary boycott under BOYCOTT; secondary picketing under PICKETING.

sit-down strike. A strike in which employees occupy the workplace but do not work.

sympathy strike. A strike by union members who have no grievance against their own employer but who want to show support for another union involved in a labor dispute.

subdivision map. A map that shows how a parcel of land is to be divided into smaller lots, and generally showing the layout and utilities.

subinfeudate (sab-in-fyoo-day-d), vb. Hist. (Of a subvassal) to grant lands to another to hold as his vassal rather than his superior. — Also termed subinfeud (sab-in-fyood).

"[A] more common method of obtaining the annual quota of knights was to subinfeudate portions of the baronial lands to individual knights in exchange for their obligations to spend a fixed portion of time annually in the king's or baron's service. A knight who so received a portion of a baron's land would hold of his baron in much the same way as the baron held of the king." — Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskel, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 4 (2d ed. 1984).

subinfeudation (sab-in-fyoo-day-shan), n. Hist. The system under which the tenants in a feudal system granted smaller estates to their tenants, who in turn did the same from their pieces of land. Cf. INFEUDATION; SUPERINFEUDATION.

subjacent (sab-jay-sant), adj. Located under or below the land's subjacent support.

subjacent support. See SUPPORT.

subject, n. 1. One who owes allegiance to a sovereign and is governed by that sovereign's laws <the monarchy's subjects>.

"Speaking generally, we may say that the terms subject and citizen are synonymous. Subjects and citizens are alike those whose relation to the state is personal and not merely territorial, permanent and not merely temporary. This equivalent, however, is not absolute. For in the first place, the term subject is commonly limited to monarchical forms of government, while the term citizen is more specially applicable in the case of republics. A British subject becomes by naturalisation a citizen of the United States of America or of France. In the second place, the term citizen brings into prominence the rights and privileges of the status, rather than its correlative obligations, while the reverse is the case with the term subject. Finally it is to be noticed that the term subject is capable of a different and wider application, in which it includes all members of the body politic, whether they are citizens (i.e., subjects stricto sensu) or resident aliens. All such persons are subjects, all being subject to the power of the state and to its jurisdiction, and as owing to it, at least temporarily, fidelity and obedience." — John Salmond, Jurisprudence 133 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 16th ed. 1947).

2. The matter of concern over which something is created <the subject of the statute>.— Also termed (in sense 2) subject matter.

subject, adj. Referred to above; having relevance to the current discussion <the subject property was then sold to Smith>.

subjuction. 1. The act of subjecting someone to something <their subjuction to torture was unconscionable>. 2. The condition of a subject in a monarchy; the obligations surrounding such a person . 3. The condition of being subject, exposed, or liable; liability <the defendants' subjuction to the plaintiffs became clear shortly after the trial began>. — Also termed (in sense 3) liability; susceptibility.

subjective, adj. 1. Based on an individual's perceptions, feelings, or intentions, as opposed to externally verifiable phenomena <the subjective theory of contract — that the parties must have an actual meeting of the minds — is not favored by most courts>. 2. Personal; individual <subjective judgments about popular music>. Cf. OBJECTIVE.

subjective ethics. See MORAL RELATIVISM.

subjective meaning. See MEANING.

subjective novation. See NOVATION.

subjective standard. See STANDARD.

subjective theory of contract. The doctrine (now largely outmoded) that a contract is an agreement in which the parties have a subjective meeting of the minds. — Often shortened to subjective theory. See MEETING OF THE MINDS. Cf. OBJECTIVE THEORY OF CONTRACT.

subject matter. The issue presented for consideration; the thing in which a right or duty has been asserted; the thing in dispute. See CORPUS (2). — Sometimes written (as a noun) subject-matter. — subject-matter, adj.

subject-matter jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

subject-matter test. A method of determining whether an employee's communication with a corporation's lawyer was made at the direction of the employee's supervisors and in the course and scope of the employee's employment, so as to be protected under the attorney-client privilege, despite the fact that the employee is not a member of the corporation's control group. Harper & Row Pubs., Inc. v. Decker, 423 F.2d 487 (7th Cir. 1970), aff'd per curiam by equally divided Court, 400 U.S. 348, 91 S.Ct. 479 (1971). — Also termed Decker test. Cf. CONTROL-GROUP TEST.

subject of a right. 1. The owner of a right; the person in whom a legal right is vested. 2. OBJECT OF A RIGHT.

subject to open. Denoting the future interest of a class of people when this class is subject to a possible increase or decrease in number.

sub judice (səb joo-di-see also suub yoo-di-kay), adj. [Latin "under a judge"] Before the court or judge for determination; at bar <in the case sub judice, there have been no out-of-court settlements>. • Legal writers sometimes use "case sub judice" where "the present case" would be more comprehensible.

subjugation. See DE BELLATIO.

sublease, n. A lease by a lessee to a third party, conveying some or all of the leased property for a shorter term than that of the lessee, who retains a reversion in the lease. — Also termed subtenancy and (esp. in England) underlease. — sublease, sublet, vb.

sublessee. A third party who receives by lease some or all of the leased property from a lessee. — Also termed subtenant and (esp. in England) underlessee.

sublessor. A lessee who leases some or all of the leased property to a third party. — Also termed (esp. in England) underlessor.

 sublicense. A license granting a portion or all of the rights granted to the licensee under an original license.

subdivision. 1. A yielding to the authority or will of another <his resistance ended in an about-face: complete submission>. 2. A contract in which the parties agree to refer their dispute to a third party for resolution <in their submission to arbitration, they referred to the rules of the American Arbitration Association>. 3. An advocate’s argument <neither the written nor the oral submissions were particularly helpful>. — submit, vb.

submission bond. See BOND (2).

submission date. See DATE.

submission to a finding. The admission to facts sufficient to warrant a finding of guilt. — Also termed admission to sufficient facts.

submission to the jury. The process by which a judge gives a case to the jury for its consideration and verdict, usu. occurring after all evidence has been presented, arguments have been completed, and instructions have been given.

sub modo (səb moh-doh). [Latin] Subject to conditions or qualifications <the riparian landowner enjoys the property sub modo, i.e., subject to the right of the public to reserve enough space for levees, public roads, and the like>.

submortgage. A mortgage created when a person holding a mortgage as security for a loan procures another loan from a third party and pledges the mortgage as security; a loan to a mortgagee who puts up the mortgage as collateral or security for the loan.

sub nomine (səb nom-ə-nee). [Latin] Under the name. • This phrase, typically in abbreviated form, is often used in a case citation to indicate that there has been a name change from one stage of the case to another, as in Guernsey Memorial Hosp. v. Secretary of Health and Human Servs., 996 F.2d 830 (6th Cir. 1993), rev’d sub nom. Shalala v. Guernsey Memorial Hosp., 514 U.S. 87, 115 S.Ct. 1232 (1995). — Abbr. sub nom.

subordinate (sə-bor-də-nit), adj. 1. Placed in or belonging to a lower rank, class, or position . 2. Subject to another’s authority or control .

subordinate (sə-bor-da-nayt), vb. To place in a lower rank, class, or position; to assign a lower priority to <subordinate the debt to a different class of claims>.

subornation of perjury. The crime of persuading another to commit perjury. — Sometimes shortened to subornation.

subpartnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

sub pede sigilli (sab pee-dee si-jil-i). [Latin] Under the foot of the seal.

subpoena (sə-phee-na), n. [Latin “under penalty”] A writ commanding a person to appear before a court or other tribunal, subject to a penalty for failing to comply. — Also spelled subpoena. Pl. subpoenas.

alias subpoena (ay-lee-as sə-phee-na). A subpoena issued after an initial subpoena has failed.

subpoena, vb. 1. To call before a court or other tribunal by subpoena <subpoena the material witnesses>. 2. To order the production of (documents or other things) by subpoena duces tecum <subpoena the corporate records>. — Also spelled subpoena.

subpoenal (sə-phee-nal), adj. Required or done under penalty, esp. in compliance with a subpoena.

sub potestate (sab poh-tes-tay-tee). [Latin] Under the power of another, as in a child or other person not sui juris. See SUI JURIS.

subreptio (sə-rep-shee-oh). [Latin “surreptitious removal”] Roman law. 1. Theft. 2. The obtaining of a grant from the emperor under false pretenses. — Also termed (in French law) subreption.

subrogate (sə-rō-gayt), vb. To substitute (a person) for another regarding a legal right or claim.

subrogation (sə-ro-gay-shan), n. 1. The substitution of one party for another whose debt the party pays, entitling the paying party to rights, remedies, or securities that would otherwise belong to the debtor. • For example, a surety who has paid a debt is, by subrogation, entitled to any security for the debt held by the creditor and the benefit of any judgment the creditor has against the debtor, and may proceed against the debtor as the creditor would. 2. The principle under which an insurer that has paid a loss under an insurance policy is entitled to all the rights and remedies belonging to the insured against a third party with respect to any loss covered by the policy. See EQUITY OF SUBROGATION. Cf. ANTISUBROGATION RULE.

“Subrogation is equitable assignment. The right comes into existence when the surety becomes obligated, and this is important as affecting priorities; but such right of subrogation does not become a cause of action until the debt is fully paid. Subrogation entitles the surety to use any remedy against the principal which the creditor could have used, and in general to enjoy the benefit of any advantage that the creditor had, such as a mortgage, lien, power to confess judgment, to follow trust funds, to proceed against a third person who has promised either the principal or the creditor to pay the debt.” Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 205 (1950).

“Subrogation simply means substitution of one person for another; that is, one person is allowed to stand in the shoes of another and assert that person’s rights against the defendant. Factually, the case arises because, for some justifiable reason, the subrogation plaintiff has paid a debt owed by the defendant.” Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 4.3, at 404 (2d ed. 1993).

conventional subrogation. Subrogation that arises by contract or by an express act of the parties.

legal subrogation. Subrogation that arises by operation of law or by implication in equity to prevent fraud or injustice. • Legal subrogation usu. arises when (1) the paying party has a liability, claim, or fiduciary relationship with the debtor, (2) the party pays to fulfill a legal duty or because of public policy, (3) the paying party is a secondary debtor, (4) the paying party is a surety, or (5) the party pays to protect its own rights or property. — Also termed equitable subrogation.

subrogative (səb-rə-gə-tiv), adj. Of or relating to subrogation <subrogative rights>. — Also termed subrogatory; subrogational.

subrogee (səb-rə-je) . One who is substituted for another in having a right, duty, or claim. • An insurance company frequently becomes a subrogee after paying a policy claim, as a result of which it is then in a position to sue a tortfeasor who injured the insured or otherwise caused damages.

subrogor (səb-rə-gōr). One who allows another to be substituted for oneself as creditor, with a transfer of rights and duties.

sub rosa (səb rō-zə), adj. [Latin "under the rose"] Hist. Confidential; secret; not for publication.

sub salvo et seguro conductu (səb səl-və-ət su-ər-goo-kənt-dək-t(y)ə), [Law Latin] Hist. Under safe and secure conduct. • This phrase was used in writs of habeas corpus.

subscription (səb-skrip-shē-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A signature, esp. a name written under or at the bottom of a document to authenticate it. 2. A signature to a will, required in certain cases in addition to the seals of witnesses.

subscription. n. 1. The act of signing one's name on a document; the signature so affixed. 2. Securities. A written contract to purchase newly issued shares of stock or bonds. — Also termed (in connection with stock) stock subscription. 3. An oral or a written agreement to contribute a sum of money or property, gratuitously or with consideration, to a specific person or for a specific purpose. — Also termed (in subsequent remedial measure sense 3) subscription contract. — subscribe, vb. — subscriber, n.

subscription list. An enumeration of subscribers to an agreement, periodical, or service.

subscription price. The price at which investors can buy shares in a new stock offering before the shares are offered to the public.

subscription privilege. See PREEMPTIVE RIGHT.

subscription right. A certificate evidencing a shareholder's right (known as a preemptive right) to purchase newly issued stock before the stock is offered to the public. • Subscription rights have a market value and are actively traded because they allow the holder to purchase stock at favorable prices. — Also termed stock right. See PREEMPTIVE RIGHT.

subscription warrant. An instrument granting the holder a long-term (usu. a five- to ten-year) option to buy shares at a fixed price. • It is commonly attached to preferred stocks or bonds. — Also termed warrant; stock warrant.

subsellia (səb-sel-i-ə), n. [Latin fr. sub "under" and sella "seat"] Roman law. Lower seats in a courtroom, usu. occupied by the parties or their witnesses, as distinguished from the seat of the tribunal.

subsequent, adj. (Of an action, event, etc.) occurring later; coming after something else.

subsequent-advance rule. Bankruptcy. The principle that a preferential transfer by the debtor will not be avoided or rescinded by the debtor's bankruptcy trustee if (1) the creditor extended new value to the debtor after receiving the preferential transfer, (2) the new value is unsecured, and (3) the new value remains unpaid after its transfer. 11 USCA § 547(c)(4).

subsequent creditor. See CREDITOR.

subsequent negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

subsequent-negligence doctrine. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

subsequent remedial measure. (usu. pl.) Evidence. An action taken after an event, which, if taken before the event, would have reduced the likelihood of the event's occurrence. • Evidence subsequent remedial measure of subsequent remedial measures is not admissible to prove negligence, but it may be admitted to prove ownership, control, feasibility, or the like. Fed. R. Evid. 407.

subservant. See subagent under AGENT.

subsidiary (sub-sid-eer-ee), adj. Subordinate; under another's control. See subsidiary corporation under CORPORATION.

subsidiary, n. See subsidiary corporation under CORPORATION.

subsidiary corporation. See CORPORATION.

subsidiary merger. See triangular merger under MERGER.

subsidy, n. 1. A grant, usu. made by the government, to any enterprise whose promotion is considered to be in the public interest. 2. A specific financial contribution by a foreign government or public entity conferring a benefit on exporters to the United States. • Such a subsidy is countervailable under 19 USCA §§ 1671, 1677. — subsidize, vb.

sub sigillo (sub si-jil-oh). [Latin “under the seal (of confession)”] Hist. In the strictest confidence.

sub silentio (sub si-len-shee-oh). [Latin] Under silence; without notice being taken; without being expressly mentioned (such as precedent sub silentio).

subsistence. Support; means of support. See NECESSARIES.

substance. 1. The essence of something; the essential quality of something, as opposed to its mere form <matter of substance>. 2. Any matter, esp. an addictive drug <illegal substance> <abuse of a substance>.

substantial-capacity test. Criminal law. The Model Penal Code's test for the insanity defense, stating that a person is not criminally responsible for an act if, as a result of a mental disease or defect, the person lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality of the conduct or to conform the conduct to the law. • This test combines elements of both the McNaghten rules and the irresistible-impulse test by allowing consideration of both volitional and cognitive weaknesses. This test was formerly used by the federal courts and many states, but since 1984 many jurisdictions (including the federal courts) — in response to the acquittal by reason of insanity of would-be presidential assassin John Hinckley — have narrowed the insanity defense and adopted a new test resembling the McNaghten rules, although portions of the substantial-capacity test continue to be used. Model Penal Code § 4.01. — Also termed Model Penal Code test; MPC test; American Law Institute test; ALI test. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

substantial-certainty test. Copyright. The test for deciding whether a second work was copied from the first. • The question is whether a reasonable observer would conclude with substantial certainty that the second work is a copy.

substantial-compliance rule. See SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

substantial-continuity doctrine. A principle for holding a successor corporation liable for the acts of its predecessor corporation, if the successor maintains the same business as the predecessor, with the same employees, doing the same jobs, for the same supervisors, under the same working conditions, and using the same production processes to produce the same products for the same customers. — Also termed CONTINUITY-OF-ENTERPRISE doctrine. Cf. MERE-CONTINUATION DOCTRINE.

substantial damages. See DAMAGES.

substantial equivalent. Patents. The same essential thing as the patented item, so that if two devices do the same work in substantially the same way, they are equivalent, even though they differ in name, form, or shape. — Also termed SUBSTANTIAL EQUIVALENT OF A PATENTED DEVICE.

substantial evidence. See EVIDENCE.

substantial-evidence rule. The principle that a reviewing court should uphold an administrative body's ruling if it is supported by evidence on which the administrative body could reasonably base its decision.

substantial-factor test. Torts. The principle that causation exists when the defendant's conduct is an important or significant contributor to the plaintiff's injuries. Cf. BUT-FOR TEST.

substantial justice. See JUSTICE (1).

substantially justified. (Of conduct, a position, etc.) having a reasonable basis in law and in fact. • Under the Equal Access to Justice Act, a prevailing party in a lawsuit against the government will be unable to recover its attorney's fees if the government's position is substantially justified.

substantial performance. See PERFORMANCE.

substantial-performance doctrine. The equitable rule that, if a good-faith attempt to perform does not precisely meet the terms of the agreement, the agreement will still be considered complete if the essential purpose of the contract is accomplished. • Courts may allow a remedy for minimal damages caused by the deviance. — Also termed substantial-compliance rule. Cf. PERFECT-TENDER RULE.

"There has arisen in the United States an indefinite doctrine sometimes referred to as that of substantial performance. It is a doctrine that deals not with performance of a duty as a discharge thereof but with performance by the plaintiff as a condition precedent to the active duty of performance by the defendant. Where a defendant is sued for non-performance he cannot avoid paying damages by showing that he substantially performed or came near performing or gave something equally good; but he can always successfully defend if in fact some condition precedent to his own duty has not been fulfilled by the plaintiff." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 422 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

substantial similarity. Copyright. A strong resemblance between a copyrighted work and an alleged infringement, thereby creating an inference of unauthorized copying. • The standard for substantial similarity is whether an ordinary person would conclude that the alleged infringement has appropriated nontrivial amounts of the copyrighted work's expressions. See DERIVATIVE WORK.

comprehensive nonliteral similarity. Similarity evidenced by the copying of the protected work's general ideas or structure (such as a movie's plot) without using the precise words or phrases of the work. — Also termed pattern similarity.

fragmented literal similarity. Similarity evidenced by the copying of verbatim portions of the protected work.

substantial-step test. Criminal law. The Model Penal Code's test for determining whether a person is guilty of attempt, based on the extent of the defendant's preparation for the crime, the criminal intent shown, and any statements personally made that bear on the defendant's actions. Model Penal Code § 5.01(1)(c). See ATTEMPT (2).

substantiate, vb. To establish the existence or truth of (a fact, etc.), esp. by competent evidence; to verify.

substantive consolidation. See CONSOLIDATION.

substantive crime. See substantive offense under OFFENSE (1).

substantive due process. See DUE PROCESS.

substantive evidence. See EVIDENCE.

substantive law (sub-stan-tiv). The part of the law that creates, defines, and regulates the rights, duties, and powers of parties. Cf. PROCEDURAL LAW.

"So far as the administration of justice is concerned with the application of remedies to violated rights, we may say that the substantive law defines the remedy and the right, while the law of procedure defines the modes and conditions of the application of the one to the other." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 476 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

substantive rule. See LEGISLATIVE RULE.

substantive unconscionability. See UNCONSCIONABILITY.

substitute, n. 1. One who stands in another's place . See SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES. 2. Civil law. A person named in a will as heir to an estate after the estate has been held and then passed on by another specified person (called the institute). — substitute, vb.

substituted basis. See BASIS. substituted contract. See CONTRACT.

substituted executor. See EXECUTOR.

substituted-judgment doctrine. The rule allowing a person (such as a family member or a conservator) or a court to make a decision about medical treatment on behalf of one who is incompetent and unable to make his or her own decisions.

substituted service. See SERVICE (2).

substitute gift. See GIFT.

substitutio haeredis (sub-sta-t[y]oo-shee-oh ha-ree-dis). [Latin] Roman law. The substitution of an heir who, under certain circumstances, took the place of the original heir, as when the original heir declined an estate.

substitution. 1. A designation of a person or thing to take the place of another person or thing. 2. The process by which one person or thing takes the place of another person or thing. 3. Roman law. The nomination of a person to take the place of a previously named heir who has refused or failed to accept an inheritance. — Also termed common substitution; vulgar substitution. 4. Roman law. The nomination of a person to take as heir in place of, or to succeed, a descendant who is under the age of puberty and in the potestas of the testator, if the descendant has failed to take the inheritance or has died before reaching puberty. • This type of substitution was also known as a pupillary substitution. If a descendant of any age failed to take by reason of lunacy, the substitution was known as an exemplary substitution or quasi-pupillary substitution. 5. Roman law. A testator’s designation of a person to whom the property was to be given by the person named as heir, or by the heir of that person. — Also termed fideicommissary substitution. See FIDEICOMMISSUM. 6. Civil law. The designation of a person to succeed another as beneficiary of an estate, usu. involving a fideicommissum. — Also termed fideicommisary substitution.

substitutional, adj. Capable of taking or supplying the position of another <substitutional executor> <substitutional issue>. — Also termed substitutionary.

substitutional gift. See substitute gift under GIFT.

substitutional legacy. See LEGACY.

substitutional remedy. See REMEDY.

substitutionary. See SUBSTITUTIONAL.

substitutionary evidence. See secondary evidence under EVIDENCE.

substitution-of-judgment doctrine. Administrative law. The standard for reviewing an agency’s decision, by which a court uses its own independent judgment in interpreting laws and administrative regulations — rather than deferring to the agency — when the agency’s interpretation is not instructive or the regulations do not involve matters requiring the agency’s expertise.

subtraction (sub-strak-shan), n. The secret misappropriation of property, esp. from a decedent’s estate.

subsume (sub-s[y]oom), vb. To judge as a particular instance governed by a general principle; to bring (a case) under a broad rule. — subsumption (sub-samp-shan), n.

subsurety (sub-shuur[[-a]-tee]). A person whose undertaking is given as additional security, usu. conditioned not only on nonperformance by the principal but also on nonperformance by an earlier promisor as well; a surety with the lesser liability in a subsuretyship.

subsuretyship (sub-shuur[[-a]-tee-ship)). The relation between two (or more) sureties, in which a principal surety bears the burden of the whole performance that is due from both sureties; a relationship in which one surety acts as a surety for another.

subterfuge (sub-tor-fyooj). A clever plan or idea used to escape, avoid, or conceal something .

subterranean water. See WATER. subtraction. 1. The process of deducting one number from another number to determine the difference. 2. Hist. The act of neglecting a duty or service that one party owes to another, esp. one that arises out of land tenure.

"Subtraction, which is the fifth species of injuries affecting a man's real property, happens, when any person who owes any suit, duty, custom, or service to another, withdraws or neglects to perform it. It differs from a disseisin, in that this is committed without any denial of the right, consisting merely in non-performance; that strikes at the very title of the party injured, and amounts to an ouster or actual dispossession. Subtraction however, being clearly an injury, is remediable by due course of law: but the remedy differs according to the nature of the services; whether they be due by virtue of any tenure, or by custom only." — William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 230 (1768).

subtraction of conjugal rights. Hist. The act of a husband and wife unlawfully living apart.

subvention (səb-ven-šən). A grant of financial aid or assistance; a subsidy.

subversion. The process of overthrowing, destroying, or corrupting <subversion of legal principles> <subversion of the government>.

Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950. See McCARRAN ACT.

legal succession. The succession established by law, usu. in favor of the nearest relation of a deceased person.

natural succession. Succession between natural persons, as in descent on the death of an ancestor.

testamentary succession. Civil law. Succession resulting from the institution of an heir in a testament executed in the legally required form.

testate succession. See TESTATE SUCCESSION.

universal succession. Civil law. Succession to an entire estate of another, living or dead (though usu. the latter). • This type of succession carries with it the predecessor's liabilities as well as assets.

vacant succession. Civil law. 1. A succession that fails either because there are no known heirs or because the heirs have renounced the estate. 2. An estate that has suffered such a failure.

3. The right by which one group, in replacing another group, acquires all the goods, moveables, and other chattels of a corporation. 4. The continuation of a corporation's legal status despite changes in ownership or management. — Also termed artificial succession. — successor, n.

perpetual succession. The continuous succession of a corporation — despite changes in shareholders and officers — for as long as the corporation legally exists.

"As a general rule, the words 'perpetual succession,' as used in charters, often in connection with a further provision limiting the period of corporate existence to a certain number of years, mean nothing more than that the corporation shall have continuous and uninterrupted succession so long as it shall continue to exist as a corporation, and are not intended to define its duration." — 18 Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 69, at 883 (1985).

successional, adj. Of or relating to acquiring rights or property by inheritance under the laws of descent and distribution.

succession tax. See inheritance tax (1) under TAX.

sudden heat of passion. See HEAT OF PASSION.

sudden-onset rule. The principle that medical testimony is unnecessary to prove causation of the obvious symptoms of an injury that immediately follows a known traumatic incident.

sudden passion. See HEAT OF PASSION.

sudden-peril doctrine. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (1).

sue, vb. To institute a lawsuit against (another party).

sue-and-labor clause. Marine insurance. A provision providing that the marine insurer will cover the costs incurred by the insured in protecting the covered property from damage or minimizing actual damages to the property. — Also termed rescue clause.

"Some insurance today is written against ‘all risks’ .... Besides the perils clause ... recovery under the policy can be had on the entirely separate ‘sue and labor’ clause .... Under this clause, the underwriter may become liable for certain charges incurred by the assured in caring for the insured property, whether or not there is any actual loss or damage. Where sue-and-labor charges are incurred and loss also occurs, the underwriter may become liable for more than the policy amount, which limits only a claim for loss of or damage to the goods or vessel." — Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 2-10, at 75 (2d ed. 1975).

sue facts. Facts that determine whether a party should bring a lawsuit; esp., facts determining whether a shareholder-derivative action should be instituted under state law.

sufficiency-of-evidence test. 1. The guideline for a grand jury considering whether to indict a suspect: if all the evidence presented were uncontradicted and unexplained, it would warrant a conviction by the fact-trier. 2. A standard for reviewing a criminal conviction on appeal, based on whether enough evidence exists to justify the fact-trier’s finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. — Also termed sufficiency-of-the-evidence test.

sufficient, adj. Adequate; of such quality, number, force, or value as is necessary for a given purpose <sufficient consideration> <sufficient evidence>.

sufficient cause. 1. See good cause under CAUSE (2). 2. PROBABLE CAUSE.

sufficient consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

sufficient evidence. See satisfactory evidence under EVIDENCE.

suffragan (sa-fra-gan). A titular bishop ordained to aid and assist a bishop of the diocese in the church business; a deputy or assistant bishop. • Suffragans were originally appointed only to replace absent bishops and were called chōrepiscopi (“bishops of the county”), as distinguished from the regular bishops of the city or see.

suffrage (sa-frrij). 1. The right or privilege of casting a vote at a public election. — Also termed RIGHT TO VOTE.

“In the United States suffrage is a privilege, franchise or trust conferred by the people upon such persons as it deems fittest to represent it in the choice of magistrates or in the performance of political duties which it would be inexpedient or inconvenient for the people to perform in a body. The person upon whom the franchise is conferred is called an elector or voter. No community extends suffrage to all persons, but places such restrictions upon it as may best subserve the ends of government.” George W. McCrery, A Treatise on the American Law of Elections § 1, at 2 (Henry L. McCune ed., 4th ed. 1897).

2. A vote; the act of voting.

supplicatio (səp-li-kə-shə-oh), n. [Latin “atone-ment”] Roman law. 1. A petition to the emperor requesting him to decide a case in the first instance or, sometimes, to reopen a case in which no appeal is normally allowed.

“Another mode was supplicatio, petition to the Emperor by a private person, not allowed when the question was already before a court or had been decided and not properly appealed. It was mainly used to bring matters before the Emperor or his delegate, in first instance, where for any reason it was unlikely that justice would be done, e.g., where the claimant was humble and the opponent a ‘potentior,’ or where the claimant was of too high rank to go before the ordinary court, or the decision was of an unappealable magistrate.” W.W. Buckland, Elementary Principles of the Roman Private Law 671 (1912).

2. A petition for a pardon on a first offense. 3. Hist. A pleading similar to a rejoinder.

supplicavit (səp-li-kə-vit). Hist. A writ issuing out of the King’s Bench or Chancery for taking sureties of the peace, obligating a person to be on good behavior for a specified period. • It is commonly directed to the justices of the peace who are hesitant to intervene in their judicial capacities. See surety of the peace under SURETY.

“Any justices of the peace, by virtue of their commission, or those who are ex officio conservators of the peace . . . may demand such security according to their own discretion: or it may be granted at the request of any subject, upon due cause shewn . . . . Or, if the justice is averse to act, it may be granted by a mandatory writ, called a supplicavit, issuing out of the court of king’s bench or chancery; which will compel the justice to act, as a ministerial and not as a judicial officer . . . .” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 250 (1769).

supplicium (səp-lə-ʃəm), n. [Latin “atone-ment”] Roman law. A punishment. • Ultimum supplicium is the death penalty.

surety (shuur-[a]-tee). 1. A person who is primarily liable for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's obligation. • Although a surety is similar to an insurer, one important difference is that a surety often receives no compensation for assuming liability. A surety differs from a guarantor, who is liable to the creditor only if the debtor does not meet the duties owed to the creditor; the surety is directly liable. Cf. GUARANTOR.

"The words surety and guarantor are often used indiscriminately as synonymous terms; but while a surety and a guarantor have this in common, that they are both bound for another person, yet there are points of difference between them which should be carefully noted. A surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument, executed at the same time and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor and debtor from the beginning, and is held ordinarily to know every default of this principal. Usually the surety will not be discharged, either by the mere indulgence of the creditor to the principal, or by want of notice of the default of the principal, no matter how much he may be injured thereby. On the other hand, the contract of the guarantor is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. It is usually entered into before or after that of the principal, and is often founded on a separate consideration from that supporting the contract of the principal." 1 George W. Brandt, The Law of Suretyship and Guaranty § 2, at 9 (3d ed. 1905).

"A surety, in the broad sense, is one who is liable for the debt or obligation of another, whether primarily or secondarily, conditionally or unconditionally. In other words, the term surety includes anyone who is bound on an obligation which, as between himself and another person who is bound to the obligee for the same performance, the latter obligor should discharge. In this sense, suretyship includes all accessorial obligations. By such terminology, guarantors and indorsers are kinds of sureties... A surety, in the narrow sense, is one who is liable in form primarily on the debt or obligation of another. His obligation is accessorial to that of the principal debtor, but it is direct and not conditioned on the principal debtor's default. In this sense, suretyship differs from guaranty and indorsement, which are conditional, secondary obligations... The word surety is in the majority of American decisions used in the narrower sense to indicate a primary obligation to pay another's debt, to distinguish it from the secondary obligation of a guarantor. This terminology has the advantage of indicating by the use of the one word 'surety' an obligation which is at once one to pay another's debt, but which at the same time is not conditioned upon another's default." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 6, 8-9 (1950). accommodation surety. See voluntary surety.

compensated surety. A surety who is paid for becoming obliged to the creditor. • A bonding company is a typical example of a compensated surety. — Also termed commercial surety.

cosurety. See COSURETY.

gratuitous surety. A surety who is not compensated for becoming obliged to the creditor. • Perhaps the most common example is the parent who signs as a surety for a child.

subsSurety. See SUBSURETY.

supplemental surety. A surety for a surety.

surety of the peace. Hist. A surety responsible for ensuring that a person will not commit a future offense. • It is required of one against whom there are probable grounds to suspect future misbehavior. See SUPPLICAVIT.

voluntary surety. A surety who receives no consideration for the promise to act as a surety. — Also termed accommodation surety.

2. A formal assurance; esp., a pledge, bond, guarantee, or security given for the fulfillment of an undertaking.

surety and fidelity insurance. See fidelity insurance under INSURANCE.

surety bond. See BOND (2).

surety company. See COMPANY.

surety insurance. See guaranty insurance under INSURANCE.

surety of the peace. See SURETY.

suretyship. 1. The legal relation that arises when one party assumes liability for a debt, default, or other failing of a second party. • The liability of both parties begins simultaneously. In other words, under a contract of suretyship, a surety becomes a party to the principal obligation. 2. The lending of credit to aid a principal who does not have sufficient credit. • The purpose is to guard against loss if the principal debtor were to default. 3. The position or status of a surety.

involuntary suretyship. A suretyship that arises incidentally, when the chief object of the contract is to accomplish some other purpose.

personal suretyship. A suretyship in which the surety is answerable in damages.

real suretyship. A suretyship in which specified property can be taken, but the surety is not answerable in damages.

suretyship by operation of law. A suretyship that the law creates when a third party promises a debtor to assume and pay the debt that the debtor owes to a creditor.

voluntary suretyship. A suretyship in which the chief object of the contract is to make one party a surety.

surface. 1. The top layer of something, esp. of land. 2. Mining law. An entire portion of land, including mineral deposits, except those specifically reserved. • The meaning of the term varies, esp. when used in legal instruments, depending on the language used, the intention of the parties, the business involved, and the nature and circumstances of the transaction. 3. Mining law. The part of the geologic section lying over the minerals in question.

surface right. A landowner’s right to the land’s surface and to all substances below the surface that are not defined as minerals. • The surface right is subject to the mineral owner’s right to use the surface. — Also termed surface interest. Cf. MINERAL RIGHT; SUBSURFACE RIGHT.

Surface Transportation Board. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

surface water. See diffused surface water under WATER.

Surgeon General. 1. The chief medical officer of the U.S. Public Health Service or of a state public-health agency. 2. The chief officer of the medical departments in the armed forces. — Abbr. SG.

surmise (sar-miz), n. 1. An idea based on weak evidence; conjecture. 2. Hist. A suggestion, esp. to a court. 3. Hist. Eccles. law. An allegation in the complaint. • A collateral surmise is a surmise of a fact not contained in the libel. See LIBEL (3).

surpliCe fees (sar-plis feez). Eccles. law. Fees paid to clergy for performing occasional duties, such as marriages, funerals, and baptisms.

surplus. 1. The remainder of a thing; the residue or excess. 2. The excess of receipts over disbursements. 3. Funds that remain after a partnership has been dissolved and all its debts paid. 4. A corporation’s net worth, beyond the par value of capital stock. — Also termed overplus.

accumulated surplus. Earnings in excess of a corporation's capital and liabilities.

acquired surplus. The surplus gained by the purchase of another business.

appreciation surplus. See revaluation surplus.

appropriated surplus. 1. The portion of surplus earmarked for a specific purpose. — Also termed reserved surplus. 2. See appropriated retained earnings under EARNINGS.

capital surplus. 1. All surplus (such as paid-in surplus or donated surplus) not arising from the accumulation of profits; a company's surplus other than earned surplus, usu. created by financial reorganization or gifts. 2. See paid-in surplus.

donated surplus. 1. Assets (such as stock) contributed to a corporation. 2. The increase in the shareholders’ equity account resulting from such a contribution.

earned surplus. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

initial surplus. The surplus that appears on the financial statement at the beginning of an accounting period, but that does not reflect the operations for the statement’s period.

paid-in surplus. The surplus gained by the sale, exchange, or issuance of capital stock at a price above par value. — Also termed capital surplus; premium on capital stock.

reserved surplus. See appropriated surplus (1).

restricted surplus. A surplus with a limited or restricted use; esp., the portion of retained earnings that cannot be distributed as dividends. • The restriction is usu. due to preferred dividends in arrears, a covenant in a loan agreement, or some decision of the board of directors. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

revaluation surplus. Surplus that is gained when assets are reappraised at a higher value. — Also termed appreciation surplus.

trade surplus. The excess of merchandise exports over merchandise imports during a specific period. Cf. trade deficit under DEFICIT.

unearned surplus. Corporations. The total of amounts assigned to shares in excess of stated capital, surplus arising from a revaluation of assets above cost, and contributions other than for shares, whether from shareholders or others.

surplusage (sar-plas-ij). 1. Redundant words in a statute or other drafted document; language that does not add meaning <the court must give effect to every word, nothing as mere surplusage>. 2. Extraneous matter in a pleading <allegations that are irrelevant to the case will be treated as surplusage>.

"Surplusage is to be avoided. The perfection of pleading is to combine the requisite certainty and precision with the greatest possible brevity of statement. 'Surplusage' . . . includes matter of any description which is unnecessary to the maintenance of the action or defense. The rule requires the omission of such matter in two instances: (1) Where the matter is wholly foreign and irrelevant to the merits of the case. (2) When, though not wholly foreign, such matter need not be stated." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 316, at 514 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

surplus earnings. See EARNINGS.

surplus-lines insurance. See INSURANCE.

surplus profit. See PROFIT.

surplus revenue. See appropriated retained earnings under EARNINGS.

surplus water. See WATER.

surprise. An occurrence for which there is no adequate warning or that affects someone in an unexpected way. • In a trial, the procedural rules are designed to limit surprise — or trial by ambush — as much as possible. For example, the parties in a civil case are permitted to conduct discovery, to determine the essential facts of the case and the identities of possible witnesses, and to inspect relevant documents. At trial, if a party calls a witness who has not been previously identified, the witness's testimony may be excluded if it would unfairly surprise and prejudice the other party. And if a party has diligently prepared the case and is nevertheless taken by surprise on a material point at trial, that fact can sometimes be grounds for a new trial or for relief from the judgment under Rules 59 and 60 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

surrebuttal (sar-ri-bat-al). The response to the opposing party's rebuttal in a trial or other proceeding; a rebuttal to a rebuttal <called two extra witnesses in surrebuttal>.

surrejoinder  (sör-ri-joyn-dər). Common-law pleading. The plaintiff’s answer to the defendant’s rejoinder. See REPLICATION.

“The where the common-law system of pleading is in force, the pleadings do not terminate with the plaintiff’s replication. The defendant may interpose a rejoinder to the replication, and the plaintiff a surrejoinder to the defendant’s rejoinder. Then follows the rebutter, which in turn may be met by a surrebutter.” 61A Am. Jur. 2d Pleading § 193, at 192 (1981).

surrender, n. 1. The act of yielding to another’s power or control. 2. The giving up of a right or claim; RELEASE (1). 3. The return of an estate to the person who has a reversion or remainder, so as to merge the estate into a larger estate. 4. Commercial law. The delivery of an instrument so that the delivery releases the deliverer from all liability. 5. A tenant’s relinquishment of possession before the lease has expired, allowing the landlord to take possession and treat the lease as terminated. — surrender, vb.

surrender by bail. A surety’s delivery of a prisoner, who had been released on bail, into custody.

surrender by operation of law. An act that is an equivalent to an agreement by a tenant to abandon property and the landlord to resume possession, as when the parties perform an act so inconsistent with the landlord-tenant relationship that surrender is presumed, or when a tenant performs some act that would not be valid if the estate continued to exist.

surrenderee. One to whom a surrender is made. See SURRENDER.

surrenderor. See SURRENDEROR.

surrender of a criminal. An officer’s delivery of a prisoner to the authorities in the appropriate jurisdiction. See EXTRADITION; RENDITION.

surrender of a preference. Bankruptcy. The yielding of a voidable conveyance, transfer, assignment, or encumbrance by a creditor to the trustee as a condition of allowing the creditor’s claim.

surrender of charter. Corporations. The dissolution of a corporation by a formal yielding of its charter to the state under which it was created and the subsequent acceptance of that charter by the state.

"The surrender of a charter can be made only by some formal, solemn act of the corporation, and will be of no avail until accepted by the government. There must be the same agreement of the parties to dissolve that there was to form the compact. It is the acceptance which gives efficacy to the surrender. Consent of the state is sometimes given by general statute.” 19 Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 2738, at 546 (1986).

surrender of copyhold. Hist. The transfer by a tenant of a copyhold estate by yielding it to the lord in trust for the transferee according to the terms in the surrender. • In normal practice, the tenant went to the steward of the manor and delivered a rod, a glove, or other customary symbol, thereby conveying to the lord (through the steward) all interest and title to the estate, in trust, to be then granted by the lord to the transferee. See COPYHOLD.

surrenderor. One who surrenders; esp., one who yields up a copyhold estate for conveyance. — Also spelled SURRENDERER. See COPYHOLD.

surrender to uses of will. Hist. A required yielding of a copyhold interest passed by will to the will’s uses. • The requirement was abolished by St. 55 Geo. 3, ch. 192.

surrender value. See cash surrender value under VALUE.

surreptitious (sər-ap-tish-əs), adj. (Of conduct) unauthorized and clandestine; stealthily and usu. fraudulently done <surreptitious interception of electronic communications is prohibited under wiretapping laws>.

surrogate (sər-ə-gət), n. 1. A substitute; esp., a person appointed to act in the place of another <in his absence, Sam’s wife acted as a surrogate>. 2. PROBATE JUDGE <the surrogate held that the will was valid>. — SURROGACY (sər-ə-gə-si), SURROGATESHIP, n.

surrogate court. See probate court under COURT.

surrogate mother. 1. A woman who carries a child to term on behalf of another woman and then assigns her parental rights to that woman and the father. 2. A person who carries out the role of a mother.

surrogate parent. A person who carries out the role of a parent by court appointment or the voluntary assumption of parental responsibilities.
surrogate-parenting agreement. An agreement in which the surrogate mother agrees to carry a child to term on behalf of another woman and then assign her parental rights to that woman and the father.

surrogate’s court. See probate court under COURT.

surrounding circumstances. The facts underlying an act, injury, or transaction — usu. one at issue in a legal proceeding.

sursum reddere (sör-sam red-ər-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. In conveyancing, to render up or surrender (property rights, etc.).

surtax. See TAX.

surtax exemption. 1. An exclusion of an item from a surtax. 2. An item or an amount not subject to a surtax. See surtax under TAX.

surveillance (sör-vay-lants), n. Close observation or listening of a person or place in the hope of gathering evidence. — surveil (sör-vay-l), vb.

survey, n. 1. A general consideration of something; appraisal . 2. The measuring of a tract of land and its boundaries and contents; a map indicating the results of such measurements <the lender requires a survey of the property before it will issue a loan>.

  - government survey. A survey made by a governmental entity of tracts of land (as of townships and sections and quarter-sections of land). — Also termed (when conducted by the federal government) congressional survey.
  - topographical survey. A survey that determines a property’s elevation above sea level.

3. A governmental department that carries out such measurements <please obtain the boundaries from survey>. 4. A poll or questionnaire, esp. one examining popular opinion <the radio station took a survey of the concert audience>. 5. A written assessment of a vessel’s current condition. — Also termed survey of a vessel. — survey, vb.

surveyor (sör-vay-ər), n. One who surveys land and buildings. — surveyorship, n.

surveyor of the port. Hist. A U.S. customs revenue officer appointed for each principal port of entry to oversee the inspection and valuation of imports. • The office was abolished in 1953.

survival action. A lawsuit brought on behalf of a decedent’s estate for injuries or damages incurred by the decedent immediately before dying. • A survival action derives from the claim that a decedent who had survived would have had — as opposed to the claim that beneficiaries might have in a wrongful-death action. Cf. WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION.

survival statute. A law that modifies the common law by allowing certain actions to continue in favor of a personal representative after the death of the party who could have originally brought the action; esp., a law that provides for the estate’s recovery of damages incurred by the decedent immediately before death. Cf. DEATH STATUTE.

surviving, adj. Remaining alive; living beyond the happening of an event so as to entitle one to a distribution of property or income <surviving spouse>. See SURVIVAL ACTION.

surviving corporation. See CORPORATION.

surviving partner. See PARTNER.

surviving spouse. A spouse who outlives the other spouse.

survivor. 1. One who outlives another. 2. A trustee who administers a trust after the co-trustee has been removed, has refused to act, or has died.

survivorship. 1. The state or condition of being the one person out of two or more who remains alive after the others die. 2. The right of a surviving party having a joint interest with others in an estate to take the whole. See RIGHT OF SURVIVORSHIP.

survivorship annuity. See ANNUITY.

survivorship policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

susceptibility. See SUBJECTION (3). suspect, n. A person believed to have committed a crime or offense.

suspect class. A group identified or defined in a suspect classification.

suspect classification. Constitutional law. A statutory classification based on race, national origin, or alienage, and thereby subject to strict scrutiny under equal-protection analysis. • Examples of suspect classifications are a law permitting only U.S. citizens to receive welfare benefits and a law setting quotas for the government’s hiring of minority contractors. See strict scrutiny. Cf. fundamental right.

quasi-suspect classification. A statutory classification based on gender or legitimacy, and therefore subject to intermediate scrutiny under equal-protection analysis. • Examples of quasi-suspect classifications are a law permitting alimony for women only and a law providing for an all-male draft. See intermediate scrutiny.

suspend, vb. 1. To interrupt; postpone; defer <the fire alarm suspended the prosecutor’s opening statement>. 2. To temporarily keep (a person) from performing a function, occupying an office, holding a job, or exercising a right or privilege <the attorney’s law license was suspended for violating the Model Rules of Professional Conduct>.

suspensum per collum (sas-pen-day-tar par kahl-om). [Law French] Hist. Let him be hanged by the neck. • This phrase was written by a judge in the margin of the sheriff’s calendar, opposite the name of a prisoner who had been sentenced to death. — Abbr. sus. per coll.

“And now the usage is, for the judge to sign the calendar, or list of all the prisoners’ names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff. As, for capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner’s name, ‘hanged by the neck;’ formerly, in the days of Latin and abbreviation, ‘sus. per coll.’ for ‘suspensum per collum.’ And this is the only warrant that the sheriff has for so material an act as taking away life of another.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 396 (1769).

suspended sentence. See sentence.

suspense. The state or condition of being suspended; temporary cessation .

suspense reserve. See appropriated retained earnings under earnings.

suspension. 1. The act of temporarily delaying, interrupting, or terminating something <suspension of business operations> <suspension of a statute>. 2. The state of such delay, interruption, or termination <corporate transfers were not allowed because of the suspension of business>. 3. The temporary deprivation of a person’s powers or privileges, esp. of office or profession <suspension of her bar license>. 4. The temporary withdrawal from employment, as distinguished from permanent severance <suspension from teaching without pay>. 5. Eccles. law. An ecclesiastical censure that can be temporary or permanent, and partial or complete. See deprivation. 6. Scots law. The process of staying a judgment pending an appeal to the Supreme Court.

suspension of arms. See truce.

suspensory veto. See veto.

sus. per coll. abbr. suspensum per collum.

suspicion. The imagination or apprehension of the existence of something wrong based only on slight or no evidence, without definitive proof. See reasonable suspicion.

suspicious activity report. A form that, as of 1996, a financial institution must complete and submit to federal regulatory authorities if it suspects that a federal crime has occurred in the course of a monetary transaction. • This form superseded two earlier forms, the criminal-referral form and the suspicious-transaction report. — Abbr. SAR.

suspicious character. In some states, a person who is strongly suspected or known to be a habitual criminal and therefore may be arrested or required to give security for good behavior.

suspicious-transaction report. A checkbox on IRS Form 4789 formerly (1990–1995) requiring banks and other financial institutions to report transactions that might be relevant to a violation of the Bank Secrecy Act or its regulations or that might suggest money-laundering or tax evasion. ● This checkbox, like the criminal-referral form, has since been superseded by the suspicious-activity report. — Abbr. STR.

sustain, vb. 1. To support or maintain, esp. over a long period <enough oxygen to sustain life>. 2. To nourish and encourage; lend strength to <she helped sustain the criminal enterprise>. 3. To undergo; suffer <Charles sustained third-degree burns>. 4. (Of a court) to uphold or rule in favor of <objection sustained>. 5. To substantiate or corroborate <several witnesses sustained Ms. Sipes’s allegation>. 6. To persist in making (an effort) over a long period <he sustained his vow of silence for the last 16 years of his life>. — sustainment, sustentation, n. — sustainable, adj.

suthdure (south-door). Hist. Eccles. law. The south door of a church, where purgations and other acts were performed and complaints were heard and resolved.

suum cuique tribuere (s[y]oo-am k[w]-i-kwee tri-bwoo-ar-e), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To render to every person his due. ● This was one of the three general precepts in which Justinian expressed the requirements of the law. Cf. ALTERUM NON LAEDERE; HONESTE VIVERE.

suzerainty (soo-za-rin-tee or -rayn-tee). 1. Hist. The power of a feudal overlord to whom fealty is due. See FEALTY. 2. Int’l law. The dominion of a nation that controls the foreign relations of another nation but allows it autonomy in its domestic affairs. • At the present time there appears to be no instance of a relation between states which is described as a suzerainty. The term was applied to the relation between Great Britain and the South African Republic, and also to that between Turkey and Bulgaria from 1878 to 1909, but it seems likely to disappear from diplomatic terminology.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 128 (5th ed. 1965).

suzereign. See SUZERAIN.

swamp and overflowed land. See LAND.

swap, n. Commercial law. 1. An exchange of one security for another. 2. A financial transaction between two parties, usu. involving an intermediary or dealer, in which payments or rates are exchanged over a specified period and according to specified conditions.

sweatshop. A business where the employees are overworked and underpaid in extreme conditions; esp., in lawyer lingo, a law firm that requires associates to work so hard that they barely (if at all) maintain a family or social life — though the firm may, in return, pay higher salaries.

Sweeping Clause. See NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE.

sweepstakes. 1. A race (esp. a horse race) in which the winner’s prize is the sum of the stakes contributed by the various competitors. 2. A contest, often for promotional purposes, that awards prizes based on the random selection of entries. • State and federal laws prohibit conducting a sweepstakes as a scheme to obtain money or property through the mail by false representations. 39 USCA § 3005.

sweetener. 1. An inducement offered to a brokerage firm to enter into an underwriting arrangement with an issuer. 2. A special stock feature (such as convertibility) that enhances the stock’s marketability.

sweetheart deal. A collusive agreement; esp., a collective-bargaining agreement made as a result of collusion between an employer and a union representative, usu. allowing the employer to pay lower wages in exchange for payoffs to the union representative.

swein (swayn). Hist. A forest freeholder. — Also spelled swain.

sweinmote (swayn-moht). Hist. A forest court held three times a year, before verderors as judges and freeholders of the forest as jurors, to try forest offenses. — Also spelled swainmote; swainmote; swainemote; sweingemote.

"The court of sweinmote is to be holden before the verderors, as judges, by the steward of the sweinmote thrice in every year ... The principal jurisdiction of this court is, first, to enquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest ... and, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments against offences in vert and venison." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 72 (1768).

swell, n. 1. An expansion in the bulk of something . 2. A gradual rise of something . 3. A large, unbroken wave; the collective waves, particularly following a storm .

sworn brothers. Hist. Persons who, by mutual oaths, swear to share in each other’s fortunes.

sworn clerks in chancery. Hist. Certain officers in the Court of Chancery who assist the six principal clerks by performing clerical tasks, including keeping records and making copies of pleadings. • The offices were abolished in 1842 by the Court of Chancery Act. St. 5 & 6 Vict., ch. 103. — Also termed sixty clerks.

sworn statement. See STATEMENT.

SYD. abbr. Sum of the years’ digits. See sum-of-the-years’-digits depreciation method under DEPRECIATION METHOD. syllabus (sil-a-bas). 1. An abstract or outline of a topic or course of study. 2. HEADNOTE. Pl. syllabuses, syllabi (sil-a-bi).

symbiotic-relationship test. The standard by which a private person may be considered a state actor — and may be liable for violating someone's constitutional rights — if the relationship between the private person and the government is so close that they can fairly be said to be acting jointly. • Private acts by a private person do not generally create liability for violating someone's constitutional rights. But if a private person violates someone's constitutional rights while engaging in state action, the private person, and possibly the government, can be held liable. State action may be shown by proving that the private person and the state have a mutually dependent (symbiotic) relationship. For example, a restaurant in a public parking garage was held to have engaged in discriminatory state action by refusing to serve African-Americans. Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715, 81 S.Ct. 856 (1961). There, the Court found a symbiotic relationship because the restaurant relied on the garage for its existence and significantly contributed to the municipal parking authority's ability to maintain the garage. But the symbiotic-relationship test is strictly construed. For example, the fact that an entity receives financial support from — or is heavily regulated by — the government is probably insufficient to show a symbiotic relationship. Thus, although a state had granted a partial monopoly to a public utility, the Court refused to find a symbiotic relationship between them. Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 95 S.Ct. 449 (1974). See joint-participation test. Cf. state-compulsion test; nexus test.

symbolocography (sim-bo-lee-og-ra-fee). The art of drafting legal instruments.

symbolic, adj. (Of a signature) consisting of a symbol or mark. Cf. onomastic (2); holograph.

symbolic delivery. See DELIVERY.

symbolic speech. See SPEECH.

talisman (tal-is-man), n. A charm, amulet, or other physical thing supposedly capable of working wonders <private property is not some sacred talisman that can never be touched by the state — it can be taken for public use as long as the owner is justly compensated>. — talismanic (tal-is-man-ik), adj.

tally. 1. Hist. A stick cut into two parts and marked with notches to show what was due between a debtor and creditor.

“The tally, used as a receipt for money or chattels, was a narrow wooden stick with notches of varying dimensions to represent the amount received. After the notches had been cut, the stick was split lengthwise into two unequal pieces. The longer, which contained a stump or handle and was called the ‘stock,’ was given to the person making the payment, and the shorter, a flat strip called the ‘foil,’ to the other party. If the sum involved was disputed, the two pieces could be fitted one to the other to see if they would ‘tally.’” C.H.S. Fifoot, History and Sources of the Common Law: Tort and Contract 223 (1949).

“A thousand pounds was marked by cutting out the thickness of the palm of the hand, a hundred by the breadth of the thumb, a score by the breadth of the little finger, one pound by that of a swelling barley-corn .... The terminology has left a permanent imprint on our language. If you lent money to the Bank of England, tallies were cut for the amount: the Bank kept the foil and you received the stock; you thus held ‘Bank Stock’ of the amount recorded upon it. When the form of cheque was adopted, it was not indeed called a foil, but the part retained by the payer is still the counterfoil; and the word ‘cheque’ itself goes back ultimately to the same root as ‘exchequer.’” Reginald L. Poole, The Exchequer in the Twelfth Century 86–83 (1912).
“From early times tallies were used in the Exchequer and this lasted until 1826. The burning of a large quantity of old tallies led to the burning down of the old Houses of Parliament.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1207 (1980).

2. Anything used to record an account. 3. An account; a score.

target witness. See WITNESS.

tariff, n. 1. A schedule or system of duties imposed by a government on imported or exported goods. • In the United States, tariffs are imposed on imported goods only. 2. A duty imposed on imported or exported goods under such a system. See DUTY (4).

antidumping tariff. A tariff equaling the difference between the price at which the product is sold in the exporting country and the price at which the importer will sell the product in the importing country. • These tariffs are designed to prevent foreign businesses from artificially lowering their prices and gaining unfair advantages outside their home market. See ANTIDUMPING LAW.

autonomous tariff. A tariff set by legislation rather than by commercial treaty.

discriminatory tariff. A tariff containing duties that are applied unequally to different countries or manufacturers.

preferential tariff. A tariff that favors the products of one country over those of another. Cf. MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE.

protective tariff. A tariff designed primarily to give domestic manufacturers economic protection against price competition from abroad, rather than to generate revenue.

relastionary tariff. A tariff imposed to pressure another country into removing its own tariffs or making trade concessions.

revenue tariff. A tariff enacted solely or primarily to raise revenue.

3. A fee that a public utility or telecommunications company may assess for its services. • The tariffs that a provider may charge are limited by statute. 4. A schedule listing the rates charged for services provided by a public utility, the U.S. Postal Service, or a business
(esp. one that must by law file its rates with a public agency). — tariff, vb.

joint tariff. A rate schedule established by two or more carriers covering shipments between places requiring the use of facilities owned by those carriers.

tax, n. A monetary charge imposed by the government on persons, entities, or property to yield public revenue. Most broadly, the term embraces all governmental impositions on the person, property, privileges, occupations, and enjoyment of the people, and includes duties, imposts, and excises. Although a tax is often thought of as being pecuniary in nature, it is not necessarily payable in money. — tax, vb.

"Taxes are the enforced proportional contributions from persons and property, levied by the state by virtue of its sovereignty for the support of government and for all public needs. This definition of taxes, often referred to as ‘Cooley’s definition,’ has been quoted and indorsed, or approved, expressly or otherwise, by many different courts. While this definition characterizes them as ‘contributions,’ other definitions refer to them as ‘imposts,’ ‘duty or impost,’ ‘charges,’ ‘burdens,’ or ‘excisions’; but these variations in phraseology are of no practical importance." 1 Thomas M. Cooley, The Law of Taxation § 1, at 61–63 (Clark A. Nichols ed., 4th ed. 1924).

accrued tax. A tax that has been incurred but not yet paid or payable.

accumulated-earnings tax. A penalty tax imposed on a corporation that has retained its earnings in an effort to avoid the income-tax liability arising once the earnings are distributed to shareholders as dividends. Also termed excess-profits tax; undistributed-earnings tax.

admission tax. A tax imposed as part of the price of being admitted to a particular event.

ad valorem tax. A tax imposed proportionally on the value of something (esp. real property), rather than on its quantity or some other measure.

"[An] ad valorem tax is a tax of a fixed proportion of the value of the property with respect to which the tax is assessed, and requires the intervention of assessors or appraisers to estimate the value of such property before the amount due from each taxpayer can be determined." 71 Am. Jur. 2d State and Local Taxation § 20, at 385 (1973).

alternative minimum tax. A flat tax potentially imposed on corporations and higher-income individuals to ensure that those taxpayers do not avoid all income-tax liability by using exclusions, deductions, and credits. Abbr. AMT. Also termed minimum tax.

amusement tax. A tax on a ticket to a concert, sporting event, or the like. The tax is usu. expressed as a percentage of the ticket price.

capital-gains tax. A tax on income derived from the sale of a capital asset. The federal income tax on capital gains typically has a more favorable tax rate — now 28% for an individual and 34% for a corporation — than the maximum tax rate on ordinary income. See CAPITAL GAIN.

capital-stock tax. 1. A tax on capital stock in the hands of a stockholder. 2. A state tax for conducting business in the corporate form, usu. imposed on out-of-state corporations for the privilege of doing business in the state. The tax is usu. assessed as a percentage of the par or assigned value of a corporation’s capital stock.

capitation tax. See poll tax.

classified tax. A tax system in which different rates are assessed against different types of taxed property.

collateral-inheritance tax. A tax levied on the transfer of property by will or intestate succession to a person other than the spouse, a parent, or a descendant of the decedent.

consumption tax. A tax imposed on sale of goods to be consumed and services.

death tax. An estate tax or inheritance tax.

delinquent tax. A tax not paid when due.

direct tax. A tax that is imposed on property, as distinguished from a tax on a right or privilege. Ad valorem and property taxes are direct taxes.

documentary stamp tax. See stamp tax.

errohensive tax. 1. A tax levied without statutory authority. 2. A tax on property not subject to taxation. 3. A tax levied by an officer who lacks authority to levy the tax. Also termed illegal tax.

estate tax. A tax imposed on property transferred by will or by intestate succession. Cf. inheritance tax.

estimated tax. A tax paid quarterly by a taxpayer not subject to withholding (such as a self-employed person) based on either the previous year’s tax liability or an estimate of the current year’s tax liability.

excess-profits tax. 1. A tax levied on profits that are beyond a business’s normal profits. This type of tax is usu. imposed only in times of national emergency (such as war) to discourage profiteering. 2. See accumulated-earnings tax.
excise lieu property tax. A tax on the gross premiums received and collected by designated classes of insurance companies.

excise tax. See excise.

export tax. A tax levied on merchandise and goods shipped or to be shipped out of a country.

flat tax. A tax whose rate remains fixed regardless of the amount of the tax base. • Most sales taxes are flat taxes. — Also termed proportional tax. Cf. progressive tax; regressive tax.

floor tax. A tax imposed on distilled spirits stored in a warehouse.

franchise tax. A tax imposed on the privilege of carrying on a business (esp. as a corporation), usu. measured by the business’s income. See franchise.

general tax. 1. A tax that returns no special benefit to the taxpayer other than the support of governmental programs that benefit all. 2. A property tax or an ad valorem tax that is imposed for no special purpose except to produce public revenue. Cf. special assessment under assessment.

generation-skipping tax. A tax on a property transfer that skips a generation. • The tax limits the use of generation-skipping techniques as a means of avoiding estate taxes.

generation-skipping transfer tax. A gift or estate tax imposed on a generation-skipping transfer or a generation-skipping trust. — Also termed generation-skipping tax; transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601–2663. See direct skip; generation-skipping transfer; generation-skipping trust under trust; taxable distribution; taxable termination.

gift tax. A tax imposed when property is voluntarily and gratuitously transferred. • Under federal law, the gift tax is imposed on the donor, but some states tax the donee.

graduated tax. See progressive tax.

gross-income tax. A tax on gross receipts rather than on net profits; an income tax without allowance for expenses or deductions. — Also termed gross-receipts tax.

head tax. 1. See poll tax. 2. head money (3).

hidden tax. A tax that is paid, often unknowingly, by someone other than the person or entity on whom it is levied; esp., a tax imposed on a manufacturer or seller (such as a gasoline producer) who passes it on to consumers in the form of higher sales prices.

highway tax. A tax raised to pay for the construction, repair, and maintenance of highways.

holding-company tax. A federal tax imposed on undistributed personal-holding-company income after allowing deductions for such things as dividends paid. IRC (26 USCA) § 545. — Also termed personal-holding-company tax.

illegal tax. See erroneous tax.

income tax. A tax on an individual’s or entity’s net income. • The federal income tax — governed by the Internal Revenue Code — is the federal government’s primary source of revenue, and many states have income taxes as well. Cf. property tax; excise.

indirect tax. A tax on a right or privilege, such as an occupation tax or franchise tax.

inheritance tax. 1. A tax imposed on a person who inherits property from another (unlike an estate tax, which is imposed on the decedent’s estate). • There is no federal inheritance tax, but some states provide for one (though it is deductible under the federal estate tax). — Also termed succession tax. Cf. estate tax. 2. Loosely, an estate tax.

intangible tax. A state tax imposed on the privilege of owning, transferring, devising, or otherwise dealing with intangible property.

interest-equalization tax. A tax imposed on a U.S. citizen’s acquisition of stock issued by a foreign issuer or a debt obligation of a foreign obligor, but only if the obligation did not mature within a year. • This tax was repealed in the mid-1970s. IRC (26 USCA) § 4911.

hiedie tax. A federal tax imposed on a child’s unearned income at the parents’ tax rate if the parents’ rate is higher and if the child is under 14 years of age.

land tax. See property tax.

legacy tax. A tax on the privilege of inheriting property by will or by succession.

lieu tax. A tax imposed as a substitute for another.

luxury tax. An excise tax imposed on high-priced items that are not deemed necessities (such as cars costing more than a specified amount). Cf. sin tax.

minimum tax. See alternative minimum tax.

nanny tax. A federal social-security tax imposed on the employer of a domestic employee if the employer pays that employee more than a specified amount in total wages in a year. • The term, which is not a technical legal phrase, was popularized in the mid-1990s, when several of President Clinton's nominees were found not to have paid the social-security tax for their nannies.

Occupation tax. An excise tax imposed for the privilege of carrying on a business, trade, or profession. • For example, many states require lawyers to pay an occupation tax. — Also termed occupational tax.

Payroll tax. 1. A tax payable by an employer based on its payroll (such as a social-security tax or an unemployment tax). 2. A tax collected by an employer from its employees' gross pay (such as an income tax or a social-security tax). See withholding tax.

Per capita tax. See poll tax.

Personal-holding-company tax. See holding-company tax.

Personal-property company tax. A tax on personal property (such as jewelry or household furniture) levied by a state or local government.

Poll tax. A fixed tax levied on each person within a jurisdiction. • The 24th Amendment prohibits the federal and state governments from imposing poll taxes as a condition for voting. — Also termed per capita tax; capitation tax; capitatio tax; head tax.

Premium tax. A state tax paid by an insurer on payments made by the insurer on behalf of an insured.

Privilege tax. A tax on the privilege of carrying on a business or occupation for which a license or franchise is required.

Progressive tax. A tax structured so that the tax rate increases as the tax base increases. • Most income taxes are progressive, meaning that higher income is taxed at a higher rate. — Also termed graduated tax. Cf. regressive tax; flat tax.

Property tax. A tax levied on the owner of property (esp. real property), usu. based on the property's value. • Local governments often impose property taxes to finance school districts, municipal projects, and the like. — Also termed (specif.) land tax. Cf. income tax; excise.

Proportional tax. See flat tax.

Regressive tax. A tax structured so that the tax rate decreases as the tax base increases. • A flat tax (such as the typical sales tax) is usu. considered regressive — despite its constant rate — because it is more burdensome for low-income taxpayers than high-income taxpayers. Cf. progressive tax; flat tax.

Repressive tax. See sin tax.

Sales tax. A tax imposed on the sale of goods and services, usu. measured as a percentage of their price. — Also termed retail sales tax. See flat tax.

"While the term 'sales tax' encompasses a large variety of levies, the term often refers to the 'retail sales tax,' where the tax is separately stated and collected on a transaction-by-transaction basis from the consumer; although the economic burden of the sales tax falls upon the consumer, the seller has the statutory duty to collect the tax for the taxing jurisdiction." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Sales and Use Tax § 1, at 11 (1993).

Self-employment tax. The social-security tax imposed on the net earnings of a self-employed person.

Service-occupation tax. A tax imposed on persons who sell services, usu. computed as a percentage of net cost of the tangible personal property transferred as an incident to the sale.

Severance tax. A tax imposed on the value of oil, gas, timber, or other natural resources extracted from the earth.

Sinking-fund tax. A tax to be applied to the repayment of a public loan.

Sin tax. An excise tax imposed on goods or activities that are considered harmful or immoral (such as cigarettes, liquor, or gambling). — Also termed repressive tax. Cf. luxury tax.

Special tax. 1. A tax levied for a unique purpose. 2. A tax (such as an inheritance tax) that is levied in addition to a general tax.

Specific tax. A tax imposed as a fixed sum on each article or item of property of a given class or kind without regard to its value.

Stamp tax. A tax imposed by requiring the purchase of a revenue stamp that must be affixed to a legal document (such as a deed or note) before the document can be recorded. — Also termed documentary-stamp tax.

State tax. 1. A tax — usu. in the form of a sales or income tax — earmarked for state, rather than federal or municipal, purposes. 2. A tax levied under a state law.

Stock-transfer tax. A tax levied by the federal government and by some states on the transfer or sale of shares of stock. — Often shortened to transfer tax.

"Some state statutes impose special taxes, usually in the form of a stamp tax, upon sales and agreements for sale and other transfers of stock in corporations. Such a tax is in the nature of an excise tax on the transfer. Taxes on the issuance and transfer of corporate stock, commonly known as 'stock transfer taxes' and payable by means of stamps, are constitutional, as within the power of state succession tax. See inheritance tax.

surtax. An additional tax imposed on something being taxed or on the primary tax itself.

tonnage tax. See TONNAGE DUTY.

transfer tax. 1. A tax imposed on the transfer of property, esp. by will, inheritance, or gift. • The federal estate-and-gift tax is sometimes referred to as the unified transfer tax (or the unified estate-and-gift tax) because lifetime gifts and death gifts are treated equally under the same tax laws. 2. See stock-transfer tax.

undistributed-earnings tax. See accumulated-earnings tax.

unemployment tax. A tax imposed on an employer by state or federal law to cover the cost of unemployment insurance. • The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) provides for a tax based on a percentage of employee earnings but allows a credit for amounts paid in state unemployment taxes.

unitary tax. A tax of income earned locally by a business that transacts business through an affiliated company outside the state. See UNITARY BUSINESS.

unrelated-business-income tax. A tax levied on a not-for-profit organization's taxable income, such as advertising revenue from a publication.

use tax. A tax imposed on the use of certain goods that are bought outside the taxing authority's jurisdiction. • Use taxes are designed to discourage the purchase of products that are not subject to the sales tax.

value-added tax. A tax assessed at each step in the production of a commodity, based on the value added at each step by the difference between the commodity's production cost and its selling price. • A value-added tax—which is popular in several European countries—effectively acts as a sales tax on the ultimate consumer. — Abbr. VAT.

windfall-profits tax. A tax imposed on a business or industry as a result of a sudden increase in profits. • An example is the tax imposed on oil companies in 1980 for profits resulting from the Arab oil embargo of the 1970s.

window tax. Hist. English law. A tax imposed on a house containing a certain number of windows (usu. more than six). • It was established under the Taxation Act of 1695 and replaced with a tax on inhabited houses established under the House Tax of 1851. See HOUSE-DUTY.

withholding tax. A portion of income tax that is deducted from salary, wages, dividends, or other income before the earner receives payment. • The most common example is the income tax and social-security tax withheld by an employer from an employee's pay.

taxable, adj. 1. Subject to taxation <interest earned on a checking account is taxable income>. 2. (Of legal costs or fees) assessable <expert-witness fees are not taxable court costs>.

taxable distribution. A generation-skipping transfer from a trust to the beneficiary (i.e., the skip person) that is neither a direct skip nor a taxable termination. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; SKIP PERSON.

taxable estate. See ESTATE.

taxable gift. See GIFT.

taxable income. See INCOME.

taxable termination. A taxable event that occurs when (1) an interest in a generation-skipping trust property terminates (as on the death of a skip person’s parent who possessed the interest), (2) no interest in the trust is held by a nonskip person, and (3) a distribution may be made to a skip person. • Before the creation of taxable terminations in 1976, a taxpayer could create a trust that paid income to a child for life, then to that child’s child for life, and so on without incurring an estate or gift tax liability. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; SKIP PERSON.

taxable year. See TAX YEAR.

tax accounting. The accounting rules and methods used in determining a taxpayer’s liability.

tax-anticipation bill. A short-term obligation issued by the U.S. Treasury to meet the cashflow needs of the government. • Corporations can tender these bills at par value to make quarterly tax payments. — Abbr. TAB.

tax-anticipation note. See NOTE (1). tax-anticipation warrant. See WARRANT (2).

tax assessment. See ASSESSMENT (3).

tax assessor. See ASSESSOR (1).

taxation. The imposition or assessment of a tax; the means by which the state obtains the revenue required for its activities.

do double taxation. 1. The imposition of two taxes on the same property during the same period and for the same taxing purpose. 2. The imposition of two taxes on one corporate profit; esp., the structure of taxation employed by Subchapter C of the Internal Revenue Code, under which corporate profits are taxed twice, once to the corporation when earned and once to the shareholders when the earnings are distributed as dividends. 3. Int'l law. The imposition of comparable taxes in two or more states on the same taxpayer for the same subject matter or identical goods.

equal and uniform taxation. A tax system in which no person or class of persons in the taxing district — whether it be a state, city, or county — is taxed at a different rate from others in the same district on the same value or thing.

pass-through taxation. The taxation of an entity’s owners for the entity’s income without taxing the entity itself. • Partnerships and S corporations are taxed under this method. — Also termed conduit taxation.

tax audit. See AUDIT.

tax avoidance. The act of taking advantage of legally available tax-planning opportunities in order to minimize one’s tax liability. Cf. TAX EVASION.

tax base. The total property, income, or wealth subject to taxation in a given jurisdiction; the aggregate value of the property being taxed by a particular tax. Cf. BASIS (2).

tax basis. See BASIS (2).

tax-benefit rule. The principle that if a taxpayer recovers a loss or expense that was deducted in a previous year, the recovery must be included in the current year’s gross income to the extent that it was previously deducted. — Also termed tax-benefit doctrine.

tax bracket. A categorized level of income subject to a particular tax rate under federal or state law <28% tax bracket>.

tax certificate. An instrument issued to the buyer of property at a tax sale, certifying the sale and entitling the buyer to a tax deed and possession of the property upon the expiration of the redemption period. • If the property is redeemed, the tax certificate is voided. See REDEMPTION PERIOD; tax sale under SALE. Cf. tax deed under DEED.

tax court. 1. TAX COURT, U.S. 2. In some states, a court that hears appeals in nonfederal tax cases and can modify or change any valuation, assessment, classification, tax, or final order appealed from.

Tax Court, U.S. A federal court that hears appeals by taxpayers from adverse IRS decisions about tax deficiencies. • The Tax Court was created in 1942, replacing the Board of Tax Appeals. — Abbr. T.C.

tax credit. An amount subtracted directly from one’s total tax liability, dollar for dollar, as opposed to a deduction from gross income. — Often shortened to credit. Cf. DEDUCTION (2).

child- and dependent-care tax credit. A tax credit available to a person who is employed full-time and who maintains a household for a dependent child or a disabled spouse or dependent.

earned-income credit. A refundable federal tax credit on the earned income of a low-income worker with dependent children. • The credit is paid to the taxpayer even if it exceeds the total tax liability.

foreign tax credit. A tax credit against U.S. income taxes for a taxpayer who earns income overseas and has paid foreign taxes on that income. See FOREIGN-EARNED-INCOME EXCLUSION.

investment tax credit. A tax credit intended to stimulate business investment in capital goods by allowing a percentage of the purchase price as a credit against the taxpayer’s income taxes. • The Tax Reform Act of 1986 generally repealed this credit retroactively for most property placed in service after January 1, 1986.

unified credit. A tax credit applied against the federal unified transfer tax. • The 1999 credit is $211,300, meaning that an estate worth up to $650,000 passes to the heirs free of any federal estate tax. The credit will gradually increase so that, after 2005, it will be tax credit

$345,800, meaning that no federal estate tax will be due on an estate worth up to $1 million. — Also termed unified estate-and-gift tax credit.

tax deduction. See DEDUCTION (2).

tax deed. See DEED.

tax-deferred, adj. Not taxable until a future date or event .

tax-deferred annuity. See 403(b) plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

tax deficiency. See DEFICIENCY.

tax-deficiency notice. See NINETY-DAY LETTER.

tax evasion. The willful attempt to defeat or circumvent the tax law in order to illegally reduce one’s tax liability. • Tax evasion is punishable by both civil and criminal penalties. — Also termed tax fraud. Cf. TAX AVOIDANCE.

tax-exempt, adj. 1. Not legally subject to taxation . 2. Bearing interest that is free from income tax <tax-exempt municipal bonds>. — Also termed tax-free.

tax-exempt bond. See BOND (3).

tax ferret. A private person engaged in the business of searching for taxable property that has somehow not been taxed.

tax foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

tax fraud. See TAX EVASION.

tax-free, adj. See TAX-EXEMPT.

tax-free exchange. A transfer of property that the tax law specifically exempts from income-tax consequences. • For example, a transfer of property to a controlled corporation under IRC (26 USCA § 351(a) and a like-kind exchange under IRC (26 USCA) § 1031(a).

tax haven. A country that imposes little or no tax on the profits from transactions carried on in that country.

tax home. A taxpayer’s principal business location, post, or station. • Travel expenses are tax-deductible only if the taxpayer is traveling away from home.

tax incentive. A governmental enticement, through a tax benefit, to engage in a particular activity, such as the mortgage financing of real-estate sales.

tax-increment financing. A technique used by a municipality to finance commercial developments usu. involving issuing bonds to finance land acquisition and other up-front costs, and then using the additional property taxes generated from the new development to service the debt. — Abbr. TIF.

taxing district. A district — constituting the whole state, a county, a city, or other smaller unit — throughout which a particular tax or assessment is ratably apportioned and levied on the district’s inhabitants.

taxing power. See POWER.

tax injunction act. A federal law prohibiting a federal court from interfering with the assessment or collection of any state tax where the state affords a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy in its own courts. 28 USCA § 1341.

tax law. 1. INTERNAL REVENUE CODE. 2. The area of legal study dealing with taxation.

tax lease. See LEASE.

tax levy. See LEVY (1).

taxpayer. One who pays or is subject to a tax.
taxpayers' bill of rights. Federal legislation granting taxpayers specific rights when dealing with the Internal Revenue Service, such as the right to have representation and the right to receive written notice of a levy 30 days before enforcement.

taxpayers' lists. Written exhibits required of taxpayers in some taxing districts, listing all property owned by them and subject to taxation, used as a basis for assessment and valuation. Cf. ROLL (2).

taxpayer-standing doctrine. Constitutional law. The principle that a taxpayer has no standing to sue the government for allegedly misspending the public's tax money unless the taxpayer can demonstrate a personal stake and show some direct injury.

tax-preference items. Certain items that, even though deducted in arriving at taxable income for regular tax purposes, must be considered in calculating a taxpayer's alternative minimum tax. See alternative minimum tax under TAX.

tax rate. A mathematical figure for calculating a tax, usu. expressed as a percentage.

  average tax rate. A taxpayer's tax liability divided by the amount of taxable income.

  marginal tax rate. In a progressive-tax scheme, the rate applicable to the last dollar of income earned by the taxpayer. • This concept is useful in calculating the tax effect of receiving additional income or claiming additional deductions. See TAX BRACKET.

tax-rate schedule. A schedule used to determine the tax on a given level of taxable income and based on a taxpayer's status (for example, married filing a joint income-tax return). — Also termed tax table.

tax rebate. See TAX REFUND.

tax redemption. See REDEMPTION.

tax refund. Money that a taxpayer overpaid and is thus returned by the taxing authority. — Also termed tax rebate.

tax return. An income-tax form on which a person or entity reports income, deductions, and exemptions, and on which tax liability is calculated. — Often shortened to return. — Also termed income-tax return.

amended return. A return filed after the original return, usu. to correct an error in the original.

consolidated return. A return that reflects combined financial information for a group of affiliated corporations.

false return. See FALSE RETURN (2).

information return. A return, such as a W-2, filed by an entity to report some economic information other than tax liability.

joint return. A return filed together by spouses. • A joint return can be filed even if only one spouse had income, but each spouse is usu. individually liable for the tax payment.

separate return. A return filed by each spouse separately, showing income and liability. • Unlike with a joint return, each spouse is individually liable only for taxes due on the separate return.

tax roll. See ROLL (2).

tax sale. See SALE.

tax shelter, n. A financial operation or investment strategy (such as a partnership or real-estate investment trust) that is created primarily for the purpose of reducing or deferring income-tax payments. • The Tax Reform Act of 1986 — by restricting the deductibility of passive losses — sharply limited the effectiveness of tax shelters. — Often shortened to shelter. — tax-sheltered, adj.

tax-sheltered annuity. See 403(b) plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

tax situs (st-tas). A state or jurisdiction that has a substantial connection with assets that are subject to taxation.

tax-straddle rule. The rule that a taxpayer may not defer a tax liability by investing a short-term capital gain in a commodities future or option (i.e., investment vehicles whose values formerly did not have to be reported at the end of the year) to create the appearance of a loss in the current tax year. • This practice has been greatly restricted by the requirement that gains and losses on commodities transactions must be reported based on their value at year end. IRC (26 USCA) § 165(c)(2).

tax table. See TAX-RATE SCHEDULE.

tax title. See TITLE (2). tax warrant. See WARRANT (1).

tax write-off. A deduction of depreciation, loss, or expense.

tax year. The period used for computing federal or state income-tax liability, usu. either the calendar year or a fiscal year of 12 months ending on the last day of a month other than December. — Also termed taxable year.

temporary total disability. See disability (1).

temporary ward. See ward.

tenancy. 1. The possession or occupancy of land by right or title, esp. under a lease; a leasehold interest in real estate. 2. The period of such possession or occupancy. See estate.

at-will tenancy. See tenancy at will.

common tenancy. See tenancy in common.

cotenancy. A tenancy with two or more coowners who have unity of possession. • Examples are a joint tenancy and a tenancy in common.

entire tenancy. A tenancy possessed by one person, as opposed to a joint or common tenancy. See tenancy by the entirety.

general tenancy. A tenancy that is not of fixed duration under the parties' agreement.

holdover tenancy. See tenancy at sufferance.

joint tenancy. A tenancy with two or more coowners who take identical interests simultaneously by the same instrument and with the same right of possession. • A joint tenancy differs from a tenancy in common because each joint tenant has a right of survivorship to the other's share (in some states, this right must be clearly expressed in the conveyance — otherwise, the tenancy will be presumed to be a tenancy in common). See unity

(2): right of survivorship. Cf. tenancy in common.

"The rules for creation of a joint tenancy are these: The joint tenants must get their interests at the same time. They must become entitled to possession at the same time. The interests must be physically undivided interests, and each undivided interest must be an equal fraction of the whole — e.g., a one-third undivided interest to each of three joint tenants. The joint tenants must get their interests by the same instrument — e.g., the same deed or will. The joint tenants must get the same kinds of estates — e.g., in fee simple, for life, and so on." — Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 55 (2d ed. 1984).

life tenancy. See life estate under estate.

periodic tenancy. A tenancy that automatically continues for successive periods — usu. month to month or year to year — unless terminated at the end of a period by notice. • A typical example is a month-to-month apartment lease. This type of tenancy originated through court rulings that, when the lessor received a periodic rent, the lease could not be terminated without reasonable notice. — Also termed tenancy from period to period; periodic estate; estate from period to period; (more specif.) month-to-month tenancy (or estate); year-to-year tenancy (or estate).

several tenancy. A tenancy that is separate and not held jointly with another person.

tenancy at sufferance. A tenancy arising when a person who has been in lawful possession of property wrongfully remains as a holdover after his or her interest has expired. • A tenancy at sufferance takes the form of either a tenancy at will or a periodic tenancy. — Also termed holdover tenancy; estate at sufferance. See holding over.

tenancy attendant on the inheritance. A tenancy for a term that is vested in a trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance. — Also termed tenancy attendant on an inheritance.

tenancy at will. A tenancy in which the tenant holds possession with the landlord's consent but without fixed terms (as for duration or rent). • Such a tenancy may be terminated by either party upon fair notice. — Also termed at-will tenancy; estate at will.

tenancy by the entirety (en-ti-ar-tee). A joint tenancy that arises between husband and wife when a single instrument conveys realty to both of them but nothing is said in the deed or will about the character of their ownership. • This type of tenancy exists in only a few states. — Also termed tenancy by the entireties; estate by the entirety; estate by the entireties.
tenancy

“Where tenancy by the entirety is recognized, it may exist only between a husband and a wife. It resembles, in most respects, the joint tenancy. The only major difference is that a tenant by the entirety may not destroy the other spouse’s right of survivorship by transferring his or her interest to another. Whether a tenant by the entirety may transfer any interest to a third party — for example, the right of present possession or the contingent right of survivorship — is a matter on which the states differ. Most take the view that no interest may be transferred. The husband and wife may, of course, together convey their estate to a third person. If they both wish to convert their tenancy into a tenancy in common or a joint tenancy, they may do so. Upon the death of a tenant by the entirety, no interest passes, in theory, to the surviving spouse. As was true of the joint tenancy, the survivor’s ownership is thought simply to expand to absorb the relinquished ownership of the decedent.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Prefix to Estates in Land and Future Interests 55 (2d ed. 1984).

“Tenancy by the entireties is a form of joint tenancy. It resembles joint tenancy in that upon the death of either husband or wife the survivor automatically acquires title to the share of the deceased spouse. Like a joint tenancy, also, it is necessary for the creation of a tenancy by the entireties that the husband and wife acquire title by the same deed or will.” Robert Krotavil, Real Estate Law 198 (6th ed. 1974).

tenancy by the rod. See COPYHOLD.

tenancy by the verge. See COPYHOLD.

tenancy for a term. A tenancy whose duration is known in years, weeks, or days from the moment of its creation. — Also termed tenancy for a period; tenancy for years; term for years; term of years; estate for a term; estate for years; lease for years.

tenancy from period to period. See periodic tenancy.

tenancy in common. A tenancy by two or more persons, in equal or unequal undivided shares, each person having an equal right to possess the whole property but no right of survivorship. — Also termed common tenancy; estate in common. Cf. joint tenancy.

“The central characteristic of a tenancy in common is simply that each tenant is deemed to own by himself, with most of the attributes of independent ownership, a physically undivided part of the entire parcel.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Prefix to Estates in Land and Future Interests 54 (2d ed. 1984).

tenancy in coparcenary. See COPARCENARY.

tenancy in gross. A tenancy for a term that is outstanding — that is, one that is unattached to or disconnected from the estate or inheritance, such as one that is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance.

tenancy in tail. See FEE TAIL.

tenancy par la verge. See tenancy by the rod.

year-to-year tenancy. See periodic tenancy.

tenancy at sufferance. See TENANCY.

tenancy par la verge (pahr la vərʒ). See COPYHOLD.

tenant, n. 1. One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right or title. See TENANCY.

custody tenant. A tenant holding by the custom of the manor. • Over time, customary tenants became known as copyhold tenants. See COPYHOLD.

“The lord has a court; in that court the tenant in villeinage, even though he be personally unfree, appears as no mere tenant at will, but as holding permanently, often heritably, on fairly definite terms. He is a customary tenant, customarius, consuetudinarius; he holds according to the custom of the manor... Then gradually...[d]ealings with villein tenements are set forth upon the rolls of the lord’s court; the villein tenement is conceived to be held by ‘roll of court,’ or even ‘by copy of court roll,’ and the mode of conveyance serves to mark off the most beneficial of villeinholds from the most onerous of freeholds... In Henry III’s time this process which secured for the tenant in villeinage a written, a registered title, and gave him the name of ‘copyholder,’ was but beginning...” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic dominant tenant. The person who holds a dominant estate and therefore benefits from an easement. Cf. servient tenant.

holdover tenant. A person who remains in possession of real property after a previous tenancy (esp. one under a lease) expires, thus giving rise to a tenancy at sufferance. — Sometimes shortened to holdover. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

illusory tenant. 1. A fictitious person who, as the landlord’s alter ego, subleases an apartment to permit the landlord to circumvent rent-law regulations. 2. A tenant whose business is to sublease rent-controlled apartments.

life tenant. See LIFE TENANT.

particular tenant. A tenant of a limited estate taken out of a fee. See particular estate under ESTATE.

prime tenant. A commercial or professional tenant with an established reputation that leases substantial, and usu. the most preferred, space in a commercial development. ● A prime tenant is important in securing construction financing and in attracting other desirable tenants.

quasi-tenant. A sublessee that the new tenant or reversioner allows to hold over.

servient tenant. The person who holds a servient estate and is therefore burdened by an easement. Cf. dominant tenant.

tenant by the verge. See COPYHOLDER.

tenant in chief. Hist. A person who held land directly of the king. — Also termed tenant in capite. See in capite.

tenant in common. One of two or more tenants who hold the same land by unity of possession but by separate and distinct titles, with each person having an equal right to possess the whole property but no right of survivorship. See tenancy in common under TENANCY.

tenant in demesne (di-mayn or di-meen).
A feudal tenant who holds land of, and owes services to, a tenant in service.

tenant in service. A feudal tenant who grants an estate to another (a tenant in de-mesne) and is therefore entitled to services from the latter.

2. One who pays rent for the temporary use and occupation of another’s land under a lease or similar arrangement. See LESSEE. 3. Archaic.

The defendant in a real action (the plaintiff being called a demandant). See real action under ACTION.

tenantable repair. A repair that will render premises fit for present habitation. See HABITA-BILITY.

tenant in demesne. See TENANT.

tenant in service. See TENANT.

tenantlike, adj. In accordance with the rights and obligations of a tenant, as in matters of repairs, waste, etc.

tenant par la verge. See COPYHOLDER.

tenant-right. English law. A tenant’s right, upon termination of the tenancy, to payment for unexhausted improvements made on the holding. ● This right is governed by the Agritenantry. A body or group of tenants.

tenant’s fixture. See FIXTURE.

tend, vb. 1. To be disposed toward (something).
2. To serve, contribute, or conduce in some degree or way; to have a more or less direct bearing or effect. 3. To be directed or have a tendency to (an end, object, or purpose).

ten-day rule. The doctrine that one who sells goods on credit and then learns that the buyer is insolvent has ten days after the buyer receives the goods to demand their return. ● The seller has even longer to demand return if the buyer has made a written representation of solvency to the seller within three months before delivery.

tender, n. 1. An unconditional offer of money or performance to satisfy a debt or obligation <a tender of delivery. A seller's putting and holding conforming goods at the buyer's disposition and giving the buyer any notification reasonably necessary to take delivery. • The manner, time, and place for tender are determined by the agreement and by Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code.

2. Something unconditionally offered to satisfy a debt or obligation. 3. Contracts. Attempted performance that is frustrated by the act of the party for whose benefit it is to take place. • The performance may take the form of either a tender of goods or a tender of payment. Although this sense is quite similar to sense 1, it differs in making the other party's refusal part of the definition itself.

perfect tender. A seller's tender that meets the contractual terms entered into with the buyer concerning the quality and specifications of the goods sold.

4. An offer or bid put forward for acceptance . 5. Something that serves as a means of payment, such as coin, banknotes, or other circulating medium; money <legal tender>. — tender, vb.

tender, plea of. See PLEA OF TENDER.

tender of delivery. See TENDER (1).

tender offer. A public offer to buy a minimum number of shares directly from a corporation's shareholders at a fixed price, usu. at a substantial premium over the market price, in an effort to take control of the corporation. — Also termed takeover offer; takeover bid. Cf. public-exchange offer under OFFER.

cash tender offer. A tender offer in which the bidder offers to pay cash for the target's shares, as opposed to offering other corporate shares in exchange. • Most tender offers involve cash.

creeping tender offer. The gradual purchase of a corporation's stock at varying prices in the open market. • This takeover method does not involve a formal tender offer, although the SEC may classify it as such for regulatory purposes.

tender of issue. Common-law pleading. A form attached to a traverse, by which the traversing party refers the issue to the proper mode of trial.

"It is the object of all pleadings to bring the parties, in the course of their mutual altercation, to an issue that is a single entire point, affirmed on the one side and denied on the other; and it is to effect this object that the above rule was established. There can be no arrival at this point until one or the other of the parties, by the conclusion of his pleading, offers an issue for the acceptance of his opponent, and this offer is called the 'tender of issue.' " Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 234, at 446 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

tender of performance. An offer to perform, usu. necessary to hold the defaulting party to a contract liable for breach.

tender-years doctrine. Family law. The doctrine holding that custody of very young children (usu. five years of age and younger) should generally be awarded to the mother in a divorce unless she is found to be unfit. • This doctrine has been rejected in most states and replaced by a presumption of joint custody.

tenement. 1. Property (esp. land) held by freehold; an estate or holding of land.

dominant tenement. See dominant estate under ESTATE.

servient tenement (sar-vee-ant). See servient estate under ESTATE.

2. A house or other building used as a residence.

tenement house. A low-rent apartment building, usu. in poor condition and at best meeting only minimal safety and sanitary conditions.

tenendum (ta-nen-dem). A clause in a deed designating the kind of tenure by which the things granted are to be held. — Also termed tenendum clause. Cf. HABENDUM CLAUSE (1).

10-K. A financial report filed annually with the SEC by a registered corporation. • The report typically includes an audited financial statement, a description of the corporation's business and financial condition, and summaries of other financial data. — Also termed Form 10-K. Cf. 8-K.

Tennessee Valley Authority. A government-owned corporation, created in 1933, that conducts a unified program of resource development to advance economic growth in the Tennessee Valley region. • The Authority's activities include flood control, navigation development, electric-power production, fertilizer development, recreation improvement, and forestry-and-wildlife development. Though its power program is financially self-supporting, the Authority's other programs are financed primarily by congressional appropriations. — Abbr. TVA.

ten-percent bond. See BOND (2).

10–Q. An unaudited financial report filed quarterly with the SEC by a registered corporation. • The 10–Q is less detailed than the 10–K. — Also termed Form 10–Q.

tentative trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

Tenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified as part of the Bill of Rights in 1791, providing that any powers not constitutionally delegated to the federal government, nor prohibited to the states, are reserved for the states or the people. — Also termed Reserved Power Clause.

1031 exchange (ten-ther-tee-won). A like-kind exchange of property that is exempt from income-tax consequences under IRC (26 USCA) § 1031.

tenure (ten-yar), n. 1. A right, term, or mode of holding lands or tenements in subordination to a superior. • In feudal times, real property was held predominantly as part of a tenure system. 2. A particular feudal mode of holding lands, such as socage, gavelkind, villeinage, and frankalmoign.

base tenure. Hist. The holding of property in villeinage rather than by military service or free service. See VILLEINAGE (1). copyhold tenure. See COPYHOLD.

lay tenure. Hist. Any tenure not held through religious service, such as a base tenure or a freehold tenure. Cf. tenure by divine service.

military tenure. A tenure that bears some relation to military service, such as knight service, grand serjeanty, and cornage.

spiritual tenure. A tenure that bears some relation to religious exercises, such as frankalmoign and tenure by divine service.

tenure ad furcam et flagellum (ad for-kam et fla-jel-am). [Latin] Hist. Tenure by gallows and whip. • This was the meanest of the servile tenures — the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb.

tenure by divine service. Hist. A tenure obligating the tenant to perform an expressly defined divine service, such as singing a certain number of masses or distributing a fixed sum of alms. Cf. lay tenure.

3. A status afforded to a teacher or professor as a protection against summary dismissal without sufficient cause. • This status has long been considered a cornerstone of academic freedom. 4. More generally, the legal protection of a long-term relationship, such as employment. — tenurial (ten-yuur-eel-al), adj.

tenured faculty. The members of a school's teaching staff who hold their positions for life or until retirement, and who may not be discharged except for cause.

tenure in capite. See IN CAPITE.

term, n. 1. A word or phrase; esp., an expression that has a fixed meaning in some field <term of art>. 2. A contractual stipulation <the delivery term provided for shipment within 30 days>. See CONDITION (3).

fundamental term. 1. A contractual provision that must be included for a contract to exist; a contractual provision that specifies an essential purpose of the contract, so that a breach of the provision through inadequate performance makes the performance not only defective but essentially different from what had been promised. 2. A contractual provision that must be included in the contract to satisfy the statute of frauds. — Also termed essential term; vital term.

“During the 1950s and 1960s there flourished another species of term called the fundamental term. A fundamental term was said to be a term which was so important and central to a contract that if it was broken, the innocent party always had some remedy, even if the contract contained an exemption clause protecting the guilty party from liability. This doctrine served a useful purpose in helping to protect consumers from unreasonably wide exemption clauses. It was first used most extensively in contracts of hire-purchase where vehicles were often let to consumers under contracts containing the widest possible exemptions from liability.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 151 (3d ed. 1981).

implied term. A provision not expressly agreed to by the parties but instead read into the contract by a court as being implicit. • An implied term should not, in theory, contradict the contract's express terms.

nonfundamental term. Any contractual provision that is not regarded as a fundamental term. — Also termed nonessential term; nonvital term.
term

3. (pl.) Provisions that define an agreement’s scope; conditions or stipulations <terms of sale>. 4. A fixed period of time; esp., the period for which an estate is granted <term for years>.

attendant term. A long period (such as 1,000 years) specified as the duration of a mortgage, created to protect the mortgagor’s heirs’ interest in the land by not taking back title to the land once it is paid for, but rather by assigning title to a trustee who holds the title in trust for the mortgagor and the mortgagor’s heirs. • This arrangement gives the heirs another title to the property in case the interest they inherited proves somehow defective. These types of terms have been largely abolished. See tenancy attendant on the inheritance under TENANCY.

satisfied term. A term of years in land that has satisfied the purpose for which it was created before the term’s expiration.

term for deliberating. The time given a beneficiary to decide whether to accept or reject an inheritance or other succession.

term in gross. A term that is unattached to an estate or inheritance. See tenancy in gross under TENANCY.

unexpired term. The remainder of a period prescribed by law or provided for in a lease.

5. The period or session during which a court conducts judicial business <the most recent term was busy indeed>. — Also termed (in sense 5) term of court. See SESSION.

additional term. A distinct, added term to a previous term.

adjourned term. A continuance of a previous or regular term but not a separate term; the same term prolonged.

general term. A regular term of court — that is, the period during which a court ordinarily sits. — Also termed stated term.

regular term. A term of court begun at the time appointed by law and continued, in the court’s discretion, until the court lawfully adjourns.

special term. A term of court scheduled outside the general term, usu. for conducting extraordinary business.

stated term. See general term.

term probatory. Eccles. law. The period given to the promoter of an ecclesiastical suit to produce witnesses and prove the case.

term to conclude. Eccles. law. A deadline imposed by the judge for all parties to renounce any further exhibits and allegations.

term to propound all things. Eccles. law. A deadline imposed by the judge for the parties to exhibit all evidence supporting their positions.

6. Hist. English law. One of the four periods in a year during which the courts are in session to conduct judicial business. • Terms came into use in the 13th century, and their dates varied. The four terms — Hilary, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas — were abolished by the Judicature Acts of 1873–1875, and the legal year was divided into sittings and vacations. Terms are still maintained by the Inns of Court to determine various time periods and dates, such as a call to the bar or observance of a Grand Day.

term bond. See BOND (3).

term fee. English law. A sum that a solicitor may charge a client, and that the client (if successful) may recover from the losing party, payable for each term in which any proceedings following the summons take place.

term for deliberating. See TERM (4).

term for years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

terminable interest. An interest that may be terminated upon the lapse of time or upon the occurrence of some condition.

terminable property. Property (such as a leasehold) whose duration is not perpetual or indefinite but that is limited in time or liable to terminate on the happening of an event.

terminal disclaimer. See DISCLAIMER (4).

terminate, vb. 1. To put an end to; to bring to an end. 2. To end; to conclude.

termination, n. 1. The act of ending something <termination of the partnership by winding up its affairs>.

termination of conditional contract. The act of putting an end to all unperformed portions of a conditional contract.

termination of employment. The complete severance of an employer–employee relationship.

2. The end of something in time or existence; conclusion or discontinuance <the insurance policy’s termination left the doctor without liability coverage. — terminate, vb. — terminable, adj.

termination hearing. Family law. A hearing to determine whether parental rights will be taken away from parents of a child who has become the court's ward, usu. because of parental neglect or abuse.

termination proceeding. An administrative action to end a person's or entity's status or relationship. • For example, the International Banking Act authorizes the International Banking Board to institute a termination proceeding when a foreign bank or its U.S. agency or branch is convicted of money laundering. 12 USCA § 3105(e).

terminer. See OYER AND TERMINER.

term in gross. See TERM (4).

term loan. See LOAN.

term of art. 1. A word or phrase having a specific, precise meaning in a given specialty, apart from its general meaning in ordinary contexts. • Examples in law include and his heirs and res ipsa loquitur. 2. Loosely, a jargonistic word or phrase. — Also termed word of art.

term-of-art canon. In statutory construction, the principle that if a term has acquired a technical or specialized meaning in a particular context, the term should be presumed to have that meaning if used in that context.

term of court. See TERM (5).

term of office. The period during which an elected officer or appointee may hold office, perform its functions, and enjoy its privileges and emoluments.

term of years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

tenor (tar-mar). A person who holds lands or tenements for a term of years or for life.

term policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

term probatory. See TERM (5).

terrestrial. See YEAR BOOKS.

term sheet. Securities. A document setting forth all information that is material to investors about the offering but is not disclosed in the accompanying prospectus or the confirmation.

abbreviated term sheet. A term sheet that includes (1) the description of the securities as required by Item 202 of SEC Regulation S-K, or a good summary of that information; and (2) all material changes to the issuer's affairs required to be disclosed on SEC Form S-3 or F-3, as applicable.

termtime. The time of the year when a court is in session.

term to conclude. See TERM (5).

term to propound all things. See TERM (5).

terra nullius (ter-a nal-ee-as), n. [Latin "the land of no one"] A territory not belonging to any particular country.

terre-tenant (tair-ten-ant). 1. One who has actual possession of land; the occupant of land. 2. One who has an interest in a judgment debtor's land after the judgment creditor's lien has attached to the land (such as a subsequent purchaser). — Also spelled tertenant (tar-ten-ant). — Also termed land-tenant.

territorial, adj. Having to do with a particular geographical area.

territorial court. See COURT.

territorialism. The traditional approach to choice of law, whereby the place of injury or of contract formation determines which state's law will be applied in a case. See CHOICE OF LAW.

territorial jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

territorial law. The law that applies to all persons within a given territory regardless of their citizenship or nationality. Cf. PERSONAL LAW.

territorial property. Land and water over which a state has jurisdiction and control, whether the legal title is held by the state or by a private individual or entity. • Lakes and waters wholly within a state are generally its property, as is the marginal sea within the three-mile limit, but bays and gulfs are not always recognized as state property.

territorial sea. See territorial waters under water.

territorial waters. See water.

territory, n. 1. A geographical area included within a particular government's jurisdiction; the portion of the earth's surface that is in a state's exclusive possession and control.

non-self-governing territory. Int'l law. A territory that is governed by another country.
• These types of territories are rarely allowed representation in the governing country's legislature.

trust territory. Int'l law. A territory governed under the United Nations' international trusteeship system; a territory administered by the United Nations or a member state for the political, economic, educational, and social advancement of its inhabitants.

2. A part of the United States not included within any state but organized with a separate legislature (such as Guam and the U.S. Virgin Islands). — territorial, adj. Cf. commonwealth; dependency.

territory of a judge. The territorial jurisdiction of a particular court. See jurisdiction (3).

terrorism, n. The use or threat of violence to intimidate or cause panic, esp. as a means of affecting political conduct. — terrorist, adj. & n.

terroristic threat. See threat.

Terry stop. See stop and frisk.

tertenant. See terre-tenant.

tertius gaudens (tar-she-as Gaw-denz). [Latin "a rejoicing third"] A third party who profits when two others dispute.

testable, adj. 1. Capable of being tested . 2. Capable of making a will <an 18-year-old person is testable in this state>. 3. Capable of being transferred by will <today virtually all property is considered testable>.

test action. See test case under case.

testacy (tes-ta-see), n. The fact or condition of leaving a valid will at one's death. Cf. intestacy.

inofficious testament. Civil law. A will that does not dispose of property to the testator's natural heirs; esp., a will that deprives the heirs of a portion of the estate to which they are entitled by law. — Also termed inofficious will; unofficious will.

mystic testament. See mystic will under will.

officious testament. Civil law. A will that disposes of property to the testator's family; a will that reserves the legitimate for the testator's children and other natural heirs. — Also termed officious will. See legitimate.

testamentary (tes-ta-men-ta-ree or -tree), adj. 1. Of or relating to a will or testament <testamentary intent>. 2. Provided for or appointed by a will <testamentary guardian>. 3. Created by a will <testamentary gift>.

testamentary capacity. See capacity (3).

testamentary succession. See succession.

testamentary trust. See trust.

testamentary trustee. See trustee (1).

testamenti facto (tes-ta-men-ti fak-shen-oh). [Latin "right to make a testament"] Roman law. 1. Broadly, the capacity to take part in a will, as testator, heir, or witness. 2. The capacity to make a will. • This term is sometimes known as "active" testamenti facto or testamenti facto activa, though the latter phrase was not known to the Roman law. 3. The capacity to receive property by will. • This is also known as "passive" testamenti facto or testamenti factio passiva, though the latter phrase was (like testamenti factio activa) unknown to the Roman law. 4. The capacity to witness a will.

testamentum holografum (tes-ta-men-tam hol-a-graf-am). [Latin] See holographic will under WILL.

testate (tes-tayt), adj. Having left a will at death <she died testate>. Cf. INTESTATE.

testate, \textit{n}. See TESTATOR.

testate succession. The passing of rights or property by will. Cf. INTESTATE SUCCESSION.

testation (te-stay-shan). 1. The disposal of property by will; the power to dispose of property by will. 2. Archaic. Attestation; a witnessing.

testator (tes-tay-tar also te-stay-tar). A person who has made a will; esp., a person who dies leaving a will. • Because this term is usu. interpreted as applying to both sexes, testatrix has become archaic. — Also termed testate. Cf. INTESTATE.

testatrix (te-stay-triks or tes-to-triks). Archaic. A female testator. • In modern usage, a person who leaves a will is called a testator, regardless of sex.

testatum (tes-tay-tam). [Latin “attested”] Hist. A writ issued in a county where a defendant or a defendant’s property is located when venue lies in another county. • This writ, when issued after a ground writ, allowed the seizure of the defendant or the defendant’s property in another county. — Also termed testatum bill; testatum writ; latitum (lat-a-tat). Cf. ground writ under WRIT.

"But if the defendant had removed into another county, the next process the plaintiff might sue out against him was a testatum bill, directed to the sheriff thereof, which soon gained the name of a latitum, from that word being within it.” 1 George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King’s Bench and Common Pleas xxxv (3d ed. 1787).

testatus (tes-tay-tas), \textit{n}. [Latin] Civil law. See TESTATOR.

test case. See CASE.

teste (tes-tee). [Latin teste meipse “I myself being a witness”] In drafting, the clause that states the name of a witness and evidences the act of witnessing.

testifier. One who testifies; WITNESS. — Also termed (archaically) testificator (tes-ta-fi-kay-tar).

testify, vb. 1. To give evidence as a witness <she testified that the Ford Bronco was at the defendant’s home at the critical time>. 2. (Of a person or thing) to bear witness <the incomplete log entries testified to his sloppiness>.

testifying expert. See EXPERT.

testimonial evidence. See TESTIMONY; EVIDENCE.

testimonial immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

testimonial incapacity. See INCAPACITY.

testimonial privilege. See PRIVILEGE (1).

testimonial proof. See PROOF.

testimonialum clause. A provision at the end of an instrument (esp. a will) reciting the date when the instrument was signed, by whom it was signed, and in what capacity. • This clause traditionally begins with the phrase “In witness whereof.” Cf. ATTESTATION CLAUSE.

testimony, \textit{n}. Evidence that a competent witness under oath or affirmation gives at trial or in an affidavit or deposition. — Also termed personal evidence. — \textbf{testimonial}, \textit{adj}.

affirmative testimony. Testimony about whether something occurred or did not occur, based on what the witness saw or heard at the time and place in question. — Also termed positive testimony. See direct evidence under EVIDENCE.

cumulative testimony. Identical or similar testimony by more than one witness, and usu. by several, offered by a party usu. to impress the jury with the apparent weight of proof on that party’s side. • The trial court typically limits cumulative testimony.

dropsy testimony. A police officer’s false testimony that a fleeing suspect dropped an illegal substance that was then confiscated by the police and used as probable cause for arresting the suspect. ● Dropsy testimony may be given when an arrest has been made without probable cause, as when illegal substances have been found through an improper search.

expert testimony. See expert evidence under EVIDENCE.

false testimony. Testimony that is untrue. ● This term is broader than perjury, which has a state-of-mind element. Unlike perjury, false testimony does not denote a crime. — Also termed false evidence.

interpreted testimony. Testimony translated because the witness cannot communicate in the language of the tribunal.

lay opinion testimony. Evidence given by a witness who is not qualified as an expert but who testifies to opinions or inferences. ● In federal court, the admissibility of this testimony is limited to opinions or inferences that are rationally based on the witness's perception and that will be helpful to a clear understanding of the witness's testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. Fed. R. Evid. 701.

negative testimony. See negative evidence under EVIDENCE.

nonverbal testimony. A photograph, drawing, map, chart, or other depiction used to aid a witness in testifying. ● The witness need not have made it, but it must accurately represent something that the witness saw. See demonstrative evidence under EVIDENCE.

opinion testimony. Testimony based on one's belief or idea rather than on direct knowledge of the facts at issue. ● Opinion testimony from either a lay witness or an expert witness may be allowed in evidence under certain conditions. See opinion evidence under EVIDENCE.

positive testimony. See direct evidence (1) under EVIDENCE.

testimony de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay). Testimony taken because it is in danger of being lost before it can be given at a trial or hearing, usu. because of the impending death or departure of the witness. ● Such testimony is taken in aid of a pending lawsuit, while testimony taken under a bill to perpetuate testimony is taken in anticipation of future litigation. See deposition de bene esse under DEPOSITION.

written testimony. 1. Testimony given out of court by deposition. ● The recorded writing, signed by the witness, is considered testimony. 2. In some administrative agencies and courts, direct narrative testimony that is reduced to writing, to which the witness swears at a hearing or trial before cross-examination takes place in the traditional way.

testing clause. Scots law. The clause in a formal written instrument or deed by which it is authenticated according to the forms of law. ● Traditionally, the clause states the name and address of the writer, the number of pages in the instrument, the names and addresses of the witnesses, the name and address of the person who penned the instrument, and the date and place of signing.

test oath. See oath of allegiance under OATH.

test-paper. In Pennsylvania, a paper or instrument shown to the jury as evidence.

textbook digest. A legal text whose aim is to set forth the law of a subject in condensed form, with little or no criticism or discussion of the authorities cited, and no serious attempt to explain or reconcile apparently conflicting decisions.

textualism. See STRICT CONSTRUCTIONISM.

thalweg (tahl-vayk or -veg). 1. A line following the lowest part of a (usu. submerged) valley. 2. The middle of the primary navigable channel of a waterway, constituting the boundary between states. — Also termed midway.

live thalweg. The part of a river channel that is most followed, usu. at the middle of the principal channel. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 466 U.S. 96, 104 S.Ct. 1645 (1984).

Thayer presumption. A presumption that requires the party against whom the presumption operates to come forward with evidence to rebut the presumption, but that does not shift the burden of proof to that party. James B. Thayer, A Preliminary Treatise on Evidence 31–44 (1898). ● Most presumptions that arise in civil trials in federal court are interpreted in this way. Fed. R. Evid. 301. Cf. MORGAN PRESUMPTION.

The Federalist. See FEDERALIST PAPERS.

theft, n. 1. The felonious taking and removing of another's personal property with the intent of depriving the true owner of it; larceny. 2. Broadly, any act or instance of stealing, including larceny, burglary, embezzlement, and false pretenses. ● Many modern penal codes have consolidated such property offenses under the name “theft.” See LARCENY.

“[T]he distinctions between larceny, embezzlement and false pretenses serve no useful purpose in the criminal law but are useless handicaps from the standpoint of the administration of criminal justice. One solution has been to combine all three in one section of the code under the name of ‘larceny.’ This has one disadvantage, however, because it frequently becomes necessary to add a modifier to make clear whether the reference is to common-law larceny or to statutory larceny. To avoid this difficulty some states have employed another word to designate a statutory offense made up of a combination of larceny, embezzlement, and false pretenses. And the word used for this purpose is ‘theft.’ ‘Theft’ is not the name of any common-law offense. At times it has been employed as a synonym of ‘larceny,’ but for the most part has been regarded as broader in its general scope. Under such a statute it is not necessary for the indictment charging theft to specify whether the offense is larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses.” Rollin M. Perkin & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 389–90 (3d ed. 1962).

cybertheft. See CYBERTHEFT.

theft by deception. The use of deception to obtain another’s property.

theft by false pretext. The use of a false pretext to obtain another’s property.

theft of services. The act of obtaining services from another by deception, threat, coercion, stealth, mechanical tampering, or using a false token or device.

theft-bote (theft-boht). See BOTE (2).

theft by deception. See THEFT.

theft by false pretext. See THEFT.

theft of services. See THEFT.

theftuous (theft-choo-as), adj. 1. (Of an act) characterized by theft. 2. (Of a person) given to stealing. — Also spelled theftous.

thence, adv. 1. From that place; from that time. • In surveying, and in describing land by courses and distances, this word, preceding each course given, implies that the following course is continuous with the one before it <south 240 feet to an iron post, thence west 59 feet>. 2. On that account; therefore.

thence down the river. With the meanders of a river. • This phrase appears in the field notes of patent surveyors, indicating that the survey follows a meandering river unless evidence shows that the meander line as written was where the surveyor in fact ran it. See MEANDER LINE.

theocracy (thee-ok-ra-see). 1. Government of a state by those who are presumably acting under the immediate direction of God or some other divinity. 2. A state in which power is exercised by ecclesiastics.

Theodosian Code (thee-oh-doh-shan). See CODEX THEODOSIANUS.

theolonia. See DE THEOLONIA.

theory of law. The legal premise or set of principles on which a case rests.

theory-of-pleading doctrine. The principle — now outmoded — that one must prove a case exactly as pleaded. • Various modern codes and rules of civil procedure have abolished this strict pleading-and-proof requirement. • For example, Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 allows amendment of pleadings to conform to the evidence.

theory of the case. A comprehensive and orderly mental arrangement of principles and facts, conceived and constructed for the purpose of securing a judgment or decree of a court in favor of a litigant; the particular line of reasoning of either party to a suit, the purpose being to bring together certain facts of the case in a logical sequence and to correlate them in a way that produces in the decision-maker’s mind a definite result or conclusion favored by the advocate. See CAUSE OF ACTION (1).

therapeutic abortion. See ABORTION.

therapeutic relief. See RELIEF.

Third World. The group of underdeveloped nations (esp. in Africa and Asia) not aligned with major powers, whether Western democracies (i.e., the First — or Free — World) or countries that were formerly part of the Soviet bloc (i.e., the Second World).

Third World country. See DEVELOPING COUNTRY.

Thirteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1865, that abolished slavery and involuntary servitude.

"...The thirteenth amendment is fairly unique in two respects. First, it contains an absolute bar to the existence of slavery or involuntary servitude; there is no requirement of 'state action.' Thus it is applicable to individuals as well as states... Secondly, like the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, it contains an enforcement clause, enabling Congress to pass all necessary legislation." John E. Nowak & Ronald D. Rotunda, Constitutional Law § 15.5, at 518 (4th ed. 1991).

30(b)(6) deposition. See DEPOSITION.

thirty-day letter. A letter that accompanies a revenue agent's report issued as a result of an Internal Revenue Service audit or the rejection of a taxpayer's claim for refund and that outlines the taxpayer's appeal procedure before the Internal Revenue Service. • If the taxpayer does not request any such procedure within the 30-day period, the IRS will issue a statutory notice of deficiency. Cf. NINETY-DAY LETTER.

threat, n. 1. A communicated intent to inflict harm or loss on another or on another's property, esp. one that might diminish a person's freedom to act voluntarily or with lawful consent <the kidnapper's threat was that if the magnate did not meet the demands, his son would never be seen again>.

terroristic threat. A threat to commit any crime of violence with the purpose of (1) terrorizing another, (2) causing the evacuation of a building, place of assembly, or facility of public transportation, (3) causing serious public inconvenience, or (4) recklessly disregarding the risk of causing such terror or inconvenience.

2. An indication of an approaching menace <the threat of bankruptcy>. 3. A person or thing that might well cause harm <Mrs. Harrington testified that she had never viewed her husband as a threat>. — threaten, vb. — threatening, adj.

three-strikes law. A statute prescribing an enhanced sentence, esp. life imprisonment, for a repeat offender’s third felony conviction. • About half the states have enacted a statute of this kind. — Also termed three-strikes-and-you’re-out law.

three wicked sisters. Slang. The three doctrines — contributory negligence, the fellow-servant rule, and assumption of the risk — used by 19th-century courts to deny recovery to workers injured on the job.

"These three common law defenses, contributory negligence, fellow servant rule, and assumption of the risk, became known as the ‘three wicked sisters,’ because of their preclusive effect on the ability of injured workers to recover… By precluding application of the traditional respondent superior concept for acts of fellow servants and by presuming that workers assumed the risks associated with their employment, courts made it extremely difficult for employees to recover from their employers for the increasing number of work-related injuries… By the late 1890s, courts began to recognize the harsh results generated by rote application of the fellow servant, assumption of the risk, and contributory negligence doctrines." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 7.2, at 404 (1994).

thrift institution. See SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

through bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

through lot. A lot that abuts a street at each end.

through rate. The total shipping cost when two or more carriers are involved.

throwback rule. Tax. 1. In the taxation of trusts, a rule requiring that an amount distributed in any tax year that exceeds the year’s distributable net income must be treated as if it had been distributed in the preceding year. • The beneficiary is taxed in the current year although the computation is made as if the excess had been distributed in the previous year. If the trust did not have undistributed accumulated income in the preceding year, the amount of the throwback is tested against each of the preceding years. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 665–668. 2. A taxation rule requiring a sale that would otherwise be exempt from state income tax (because the state to which the sale would be assigned for apportionment purposes does not have an income tax, even though the seller’s state does) to be attributed to the seller’s state and thus subjected to a state-level tax. • This rule applies only if the seller’s state has adopted a throwback rule.

throw out, vb. To dismiss (a claim or lawsuit).

great tithe. (usu. pl.) A tithe paid in kind and therefore considered more valuable than other tithes. • The great tithes often consisted of corn, peas, beans, hay, and wood.

mixed tithes. Tithes consisting of natural products, such as milk or wool, obtained or cultivated by human effort.

"A second species of incorporeal hereditaments is that of tithes ... the first species being usually called predial, as of corn, grass, hops, and wood; the second mixed, as of wool, milk, pigs, etc., consisting of natural products, but nurtured and preserved in part by the care of man; and of these the tenth must be paid in gross: the third personal, as of manual occupations, trades, fisheries, and the like; and of these only the tenth part of the clear gains and profits is due." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 24 (1766).
vicarial tithe (vi-kair-e-əl). A small tithe payable to a vicar.

tithe of agistment (ə-jist-mənt). Hist. A church-levied charge on grazing land. • The tithe was paid by the occupier of the land rather than the person whose cattle grazed on the land. See AGISTMENT.

tithing. See DECENNARY.

title. 1. The union of all elements (as ownership, possession, and custody) constituting the legal right to control and dispose of property; the legal link between a person who owns property and the property itself <no one has title to that land>. 2. Legal evidence of a person's ownership rights in property; an instrument (such as a deed) that constitutes such evidence.

absolute title. An exclusive title to land; a title that excludes all others not compatible with it. See fee simple absolute under FEE SIMPLE.

adverse title. A title acquired by adverse possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

after-acquired title. Title held by a person who bought property from a seller who acquired title only after purporting to sell the property to the buyer. See AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE DOCTRINE.

clear title. 1. A title free from any encumbrances, burdens, or other limitations. 2. See marketable title. • Also termed good title.

defeasible title. A title voidable on the occurrence of a contingency, but not void on its face.

defective title. A title that cannot legally convey the property to which it applies, usu. because of some conflicting claim to that property. • Also termed bad title.

derivative title. 1. A title that results when an already existing right is transferred to a new owner. 2. The general principle that a transferee of property acquires only the rights held by the transferor and no more.

dormant title. A title in real property held in abeyance.

doubtful title. A title that exposes the party holding it to the risk of litigation with an adverse claimant. See unmarketable title.

equitable title. A title that indicates a beneficial interest in property and that gives the holder the right to acquire formal legal title. Cf. legal title.

good title. 1. A title that is legally valid or effective. 2. See clear title (1). 3. See marketable title.

imperfect title. A title that requires a further exercise of the granting power to pass land in fee, or that does not convey full and absolute dominion.

Indian title. See INDIAN TITLE.

just title. In a case of prescription, a title that the possessor received from someone whom the possessor honestly believed to be the real owner, provided that the title was to transfer ownership of the property.

legal title. A title that evidences apparent ownership but does not necessarily signify full and complete title or a beneficial interest. Cf. equitable title.

lucrative title. Civil law. A title acquired without giving anything in exchange for the property; title by which a person acquires anything that comes as a clear gain, as by gift, descent, or devise. • Because lucrative title is usu. acquired by gift or inheritance, it is treated as the separate property of a married person. Cf. onerous title.

marketable title. A title that a reasonable buyer would accept because it appears to lack any defect and to cover the entire property that the seller has purported to sell. • Also termed merchantable title; clear title; good title.

nonmercurable title. See unmarketable title.

onerous title (on-ər-əs). 1. Civil law. A title acquired by giving valuable consideration for the property, as by paying money or performing services. 2. A title to property that is acquired during marriage through a spouse's skill or labor and is therefore treated as community property. Cf. lucrative title.

original title. A title that creates a right for the first time.

"The catching of fish is an original title of the right of ownership, whereas the purchase of them is a derivative title. The right acquired by the fisherman is newly created; it did not formerly exist in any one." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 345 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

paramount title. 1. Archaic. A title that is the source of the current title; original title. 2. A title that is superior to another title or claim on the same property. particular title. Civil law. A title acquired from an ancestor by purchase, gift, or inheritance before or after the ancestor’s death.

perfect title. 1. Fee simple. 2. A grant of land that requires no further act from the legal authority to constitute an absolute title to the land. 3. A title that does not disclose a patent defect that may require a lawsuit to defend it. 4. A title that is good both at law and in equity. 5. A title that is good and valid beyond all reasonable doubt.

presumptive title. A title of the lowest order, arising out of the mere occupation or simple possession of property without any apparent right, or any pretense of right, to hold and continue that possession.

record title. A title as it appears in the public records after the deed is properly recorded. — Also termed title of record; paper title.

singular title. The title by which one acquires property as a singular successor.

tax title. A title to land purchased at a tax sale.

title by descent. A title that one acquires by law as an heir of the deceased owner.

title by devise. A title created by will.

title by prescription. A title acquired by prescription. See PRESCRIPTION (2).

title of record. See record title under TITLE (2).

title of right. A court-issued decree creating, transferring, or extinguishing rights. • Examples include a decree of divorce or judicial separation, an adjudication of bankruptcy, a discharge in bankruptcy, a decree of foreclosure against a mortgagor, an order appointing or removing a trustee, and a grant of letters of administration. In all the examples listed, the judgment operates not as a remedy but as a title of right.

title opinion. See OPINION (2).

title registration. A system of registering title to land with a public registry, such as a county clerk's office. See TORRENS SYSTEM.

title retention. A form of lien, in the nature of a chattel mortgage, to secure payment of a loan given to purchase the secured item.

title search. An examination of the public records to determine whether any defects or encumbrances exist in a given property's chain of title. • A title search is typically conducted by a title company or a real-estate lawyer at a prospective buyer's or mortgagor's request.

title standards. Criteria by which a real-estate title can be evaluated to determine whether it is defective or marketable. • Many states, through associations of conveyancers and real-estate attorneys, have adopted title standards.

title state. See TITLE THEORY.

title theory. Property law. The idea that a mortgage transfers legal title of the property to the mortgagee, who retains it until the mortgage has been satisfied or foreclosed. • Only a few American states — known as title states, title jurisdictions, or title-theory jurisdictions — have adopted this theory. Cf. LIEN THEORY.

title transaction. A transaction that affects title to an interest in land.

title unity. See unity of title under UNITY.

T-note. abbr. TREASURY NOTE.

to-have-and-to-hold clause. See HABENDUM CLAUSE.

token, n. 1. A sign or mark; a tangible evidence of the existence of a fact. 2. A sign or indication of an intention to do something, as when a buyer places a small order with a vendor to show good faith with a view toward later placing a larger order.

toll, n. 1. A sum of money paid for the use of something; esp., the consideration paid to use a public road, highway, or bridge. 2. A charge for a long-distance telephone call.

toll, vbd. 1. To annul or take away <toll a right of entry>. 2. (Of a time period, esp. a statutory one) to stop the running of; to abate <toll the limitations period>.

tollage (tō-laj). 1. Payment of a toll. 2. Money charged or paid as a toll. 3. The liberty or franchise of charging a toll.

tolling agreement. An agreement between a potential plaintiff and a potential defendant by which the defendant agrees to extend the statutory limitations period on the plaintiff's claim, usu. so that both parties will have more time to resolve their dispute without litigation.

tolling statute. A law that interrupts the running of a statute of limitations in certain situations, as when the defendant cannot be served with process in the forum jurisdiction.

tolt (tolt). Hist. A writ for removing a case pending in a court baron to a county court. — Also termed writ of tolt.

"Where the disputed interest in the land was not a fee held of the king in chief but a fee held of a 'mesne lord' the writ was directed to him bidding him do full right between the parties in the matter of the land in question under pain of the case being removed from his court to the sheriff's court if he failed to do justice. This removal was effected (if necessary) by the process known as 'tolt' under which a sheriff on a complaint to him in his county court of a failure of the lord to do justice ordered his bailiff to attend the lord's court and take away the tombstone. Securities. An advertisement (esp. in a newspaper) for a public securities offering, describing the security and identifying the sellers. ● The term gets its name from the ad’s traditional black border and plain print. — Also termed tombstone advertisement; tombstone ad. Cf. PROSPECTUS.

tontine (ton-teen or ton-teen), n. 1. A financial arrangement in which a group of participants share in the arrangement's advantages until all but one has died or defaulted, at which time the whole goes to that survivor. 2. A financial arrangement in which an entire sum goes to the contributing participants still alive and not in default at the end of a specified period.

tontine policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

top-hat plan. See PENSION PLAN.

top lease. See LEASE.

top management. See MANAGEMENT.

topographical survey. See SURVEY.

torpedo doctrine. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE.

Torrens system (tor-anz or tahr-anz). A system for establishing title to real estate in which a claimant first acquires an abstract of title and then applies to a court for the issuance of a title certificate, which serves as conclusive evidence of ownership. ● This system — named after Sir Robert Torrens, a 19th-century reformer of Australian land laws — has been adopted in the United States by several counties with large metropolitan areas. — Also termed Torrens title system.

tort (tort). 1. A civil wrong for which a remedy may be obtained, usu. in the form of damages; a breach of a duty that the law imposes on everyone in the same relation to one another as those involved in a given transaction. 2. (pl.) The branch of law dealing with such wrongs.

"To ask concerning any occurrence 'Is this a crime or is it a tort?' is — to borrow Sir James Stephen's apt illustration — no wiser than it would be to ask concerning a man 'Is he a father or a son?' For he may well be both." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 543 (16th ed. 1952).

"We may ... define a tort as a civil wrong for which the remedy is a common-law action for unliquidated damages, and which is not exclusively the breach of a contract or the breach of a trust or other merely equitable obligation." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 13 (17th ed. 1977).

"It might be possible to define a tort by enumerating the things that it is not. It is not crime, it is not breach of contract, it is not necessarily concerned with property rights or problems of government, but is the occupant of a large residuary field remaining if these are taken out of the law. But this again is illusory, and the conception of a sort of legal garbage-can to hold what can be put nowhere else is of no help. In the first place, tort is a field which pervades the entire law, and is so interlocked at every point with property, contract and other accepted classifications that, as the student of law soon discovers, the categories are quite arbitrary. In the second, there is a central theme, or basis or idea, running through the cases of what are called torts, which, although difficult to put into words, does distinguish them in greater or less degree from other types of cases." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 1, at 2-3 (5th ed. 1984).

constitutional tort. A violation of one's constitutional rights by a government officer, redressable by a civil action filed directly against the officer. ● A constitutional tort committed under color of state law (such as a civil-rights violation) is actionable under 42 USCA § 1983.

dignitary tort (dīg-nə-tər-e). A tort involving injury to one’s reputation or honor. ● In the few jurisdictions in which courts use the phrase dignitary tort (such as Maine), defamation is commonly cited as an example.

government tort. A tort committed by the government through an employee, agent, or instrumentality under its control. ● The tort may or may not be actionable, depending on whether the government is entitled to sovereign immunity. A tort action against the U.S. government is regulated by the Federal Tort Claims Act, while a state action is governed by the state’s tort claims act. See FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT; SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY UNDER IMMUNITY (1).

intentional tort. A tort committed by someone acting with general or specific intent. ● Examples include battery, false imprisonment, and trespass to land. — Also termed willful tort. Cf. NEGLIGENCE.

maritime tort. A tort committed on navigable waters. See JONES ACT.

mass tort. A civil wrong that injures many people. ● Examples include toxic emissions from a factory, the crash of a commercial airliner, and contamination from an industrial-waste-disposal site. Cf. toxic tort.

negligent tort. A tort committed by failure to observe the standard of care required by law under the circumstances. See NEGLIGENCE.

personal tort. A tort involving or consisting in an injury to one’s person, reputation, or feelings, as distinguished from an injury or damage to real or personal property.

prenatal tort. 1. A tort committed against a fetus. ● If born alive, a child can sue for injuries resulting from tortious conduct predating the child’s birth. 2. Loosely, any of several torts relating to reproduction, such as those giving rise to wrongful-birth actions, wrongful-life actions, and wrongful-pregnancy actions.

prima facie tort (prī-me fāy-shēe-ər or -shē or -shə). An unjustified, intentional infliction of harm on another person, resulting in damages, by one or more acts that would otherwise be lawful. ● Some jurisdictions have established this tort to provide a remedy for malicious deeds — esp. in business and trade contexts — that are not actionable under traditional tort law.

property tort. A tort involving damage to property.

public tort. A minor breach of the law (such as a parking violation) that, although it carries a criminal punishment, is considered a civil offense rather than a criminal one because it is merely a prohibited act (malum prohibitum) and not inherently reprehensible conduct (malum in se). — Also termed civil offense. Cf. civil wrong under WRONG; public delict under DELICT.

quasi-tort. A wrong for which a nonpepetrator is held responsible; a tort for which one who did not directly commit it can nonetheless be found liable, as when a master is held liable for a tort committed by a servant. — Also spelled quasi tort. See vicarious liability under LIABILITY; RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

sanctions tort. See SANCTIONS TORT.

toxic tort. A civil wrong arising from exposure to a toxic substance, such as asbestos, radiation, or hazardous waste. ● A toxic tort can be remedied by a civil lawsuit (usu. a class action) or by administrative action. Cf. mass tort.

willful tort. See intentional tort.

tortfeasor (tort-fe-zar). One who commits a tort; a wrongdoer.

concurrent tortfeasors. Two or more tortfeasors whose simultaneous actions cause injury to a third party. ● Such tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable.

consecutive tortfeasors. Two or more tortfeasors whose actions, while occurring at different times, combine to cause a single injury to a third party. ● Such tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable.

joint tortfeasors. Two or more tortfeasors who contributed to the claimant’s injury and who may be joined as defendants in the same lawsuit. See joint and several liability under LIABILITY.

successive tortfeasors. Two or more tortfeasors whose negligence occurs at different times and causes different injuries to the same third party.

tortious (tort-shəs), adj. 1. Constituting a tort; wrongful <tortious conduct>. 2. In the nature of a tort <tortious cause of action>.

tortious battery. See BATTERY (2). tortious interference with contractual relations. A third party's intentional inducement of a contracting party to break a contract, causing damage to the relationship between the contracting parties. — Also termed unlawful interference with contractual relations; interference with a contractual relationship; inducement of breach of contract; procurement of breach of contract.

tortious interference with prospective advantage. An intentional, damaging intrusion on another's potential business relationship, such as the opportunity of obtaining customers or employment. — Also termed interference with a business relationship.

tort reform. A movement to reduce the amount of tort litigation, usu. involving legislation that restricts tort remedies or that caps damages awards (esp. for punitive damages). • Advocates of tort reform argue that it lowers insurance and healthcare costs and prevents windfalls, while opponents contend that it denies plaintiffs the recovery they deserve for their injuries.

torture, n. The infliction of intense pain to the body or mind to punish, to extract a confession or information, or to obtain sadistic pleasure. — torture, vb.

total, adj. 1. Whole; not divided; full; complete. 2. Utter; absolute.

total incorporation. See INCORPORATION.

totality-of-the-circumstances test. Criminal procedure. A standard for determining whether hearsay (such as an informant's tip) is sufficiently reliable to establish probable cause for an arrest or search warrant. • Under this test — which replaced Aguilar–Spinelli's two-pronged approach — the reliability of the hearsay is weighed by focusing on the entire situation as described in the probable-cause affidavit, and not on any one specific factor. Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 103 S.Ct. 2317 (1983). Cf. AGUILAR–SPINELLI TEST.

total loss. See LOSS.

total repudiation. See REPUDIATION.

totten trust. See TRUST.

touch, vb. Marine insurance. To stop at a port, usu. for a brief period.

touch and stay. Marine insurance. An insurer's giving to the insured the right to stop and remain at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. • A vessel that has the power to touch and stay at a place must confine itself strictly to the terms of the permission given, and any deviation during a stay — for example, by shipping or landing goods — will discharge the underwriters, unless the vessel has permission to trade as well as to touch and stay.

tout court (too koor), adv. [French "simply, without qualification"] Very briefly; without explanation.

towage (toh-ij), n. 1. The act or service of towing ships and vessels, usu. by means of a small vessel called a tug. 2. The charge for such a service.

to wit (too wit), adv. Archaic. That is to say; namely <the district attorney amended the complaint to include embezzlement, to wit, "stealing money that the company had entrusted to the accused">. — Sometimes spelled to-wit; towit.

town. 1. A center of population that is larger and more fully developed than a village, but that (traditionally speaking) is not incorporated as a city. 2. The territory within which this population lives. 3. Collectively, the people who live within this territory. Cf. CITY.

"A town is a precinct anciently containing ten families, whereupon in some countries they are called tithings, within one of which tithings every man must be dwelling, and find sureties for his good behaviour, else he that taketh him into his house is to be amerced in the leet."
Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 80 (1759). town-bonding act. A law authorizing a town, county, or other municipal corporation to issue its corporate bonds for the purpose of aiding in construction, often of railroads. — Also termed town-bonding law.

town clerk. An officer who keeps the records, issues calls for town meetings, and performs the duties of a secretary to the town’s political organization.

town collector. A town officer charged with collecting the taxes assessed by a town.

town commissioner. A member of the board of administrative officers charged with managing the town’s business.

town hall. A building that houses the offices of a town’s government.

townhouse. A dwelling unit having usu. two or three stories and often connected to a similar structure by a common wall and (particularly in a planned-unit development) sharing and owning in common the surrounding grounds. — Also termed townhome.

town meeting. 1. A legal meeting of a town’s qualified voters for the administration of local government or the enactment of legislation. • Town meetings of this type are common in some New England states. 2. More generally, any assembly of a town’s citizens for the purpose of discussing political, economic, or social issues. 3. Modernly, a televised event in which one or more politicians meet and talk with representative citizens about current issues.

town order. An official written direction by the auditing officers of a town, directing the treasurer to pay a sum of money. — Also termed town warrant.

town purpose. A municipal project or expenditure that concerns the welfare and advantage of the town as a whole.

township. 1. In a government survey, a square tract six miles on each side, containing thirty-six square miles of land. 2. In some states, a civil and political subdivision of a county.

township trustee. One of a board of officers to whom, in some states, a township’s affairs are entrusted.

townsite. A portion of the public domain segregated by proper authority and procedure as the site for a town.

town treasurer. An officer responsible for maintaining and disbursing town funds.

town warrant. See TOWN ORDER.

toxic, adj. Having the character or producing the effects of a poison; produced by or resulting from a poison; poisonous. — Also termed toxic-al.

toxicant (tok-si-kant), n. A poison; a toxic agent; any substance capable of producing toxicity or poisoning.

toxicate, vb. Archaic. To poison. See INTOXICATION.

toxicology (tok-si-kol-o-je). The branch of medicine that concerns poisons, their effects, their recognition, their antidotes, and generally the diagnosis and therapeutics of poisoning; the science of poisons. — toxicological (tok-si-kol-o-jik), adj.

toxic tort. See T Tort.

toxic waste. See WASTE (2).

toxin, n. 1. Broadly, any poison or toxicant. 2. As used in pathology and medical jurisprudence, any diffusible alkaloidal substance such as the ptomaines, ahrin, brucin, or serpent venoms — and esp. the poisonous products of disease-producing bacteria.
	traces. See RETROSPECTANT EVIDENCE under EVIDENCE.
	tracing, n. 1. The process of tracking property’s ownership or characteristics from the time of its origin to the present. 2. SKIPTRACING. 3. A mechanical copy or facsimile of an original, produced by following its lines with a pen or pencil through a transparent medium. — trace, vb. tract. A specified parcel of land .

trade, n. 1. The business of buying and selling or bartering goods or services; COMMERCE.

inland trade. Trade wholly carried on within a country, as distinguished from foreign commerce.

precarious trade. Int'l law. Trade by a neutral country between two belligerent powers, allowed to exist at the latter's sufferance.

2. A transaction or swap. 3. A business or industry occupation; a craft or profession. — trade, vb.

trade acceptance. See ACCEPTANCE (4).

trade agreement. 1. An agreement — such as the North American Free Trade Agreement — between two or more nations concerning the buying and selling of each nation's goods. 2. See COLLECTIVE-BARGAINING AGREEMENT.

trade and commerce. Every business occupation carried on for subsistence or profit and involving the elements of bargain and sale, barter, exchange, or traffic.

trade association. See ASSOCIATION.

trade deficit. See DEFICIT.

trade discount. See DISCOUNT.

trade dispute. 1. A dispute between two countries arising from tariff rates or other matters related to international commerce. 2. A dispute between an employer and employees over pay, working conditions, or other employment-related matters. • An employee who leaves during a trade dispute is not entitled to benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

trade dress. The overall appearance and image in the marketplace of a product or a commercial enterprise. • For a product, trade dress typically comprises packaging and labeling. For an enterprise, it typically comprises design and decor. If a trade dress is distinctive and non-functional, it may be protected under trademark law.

trade embargo. See EMBARGO (3).

trade fixture. See FIXTURE.

trade gap. See trade deficit under DEFICIT.

trade libel. A false statement that disparages the quality or reputation of another's product or business. See DISPARAGEMENT.

trademark, n. 1. A word, phrase, logo, or other graphic symbol used by a manufacturer or seller to distinguish its product or products from those of others. • The main purpose of a trademark is to guarantee a product's genuineness. In effect, the trademark is the commercial substitute for one's signature. To receive federal protection, a trademark must be (1) distinctive rather than merely descriptive, (2) affixed to a product that is actually sold in the marketplace, and (3) registered with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. In its broadest sense, the term trademark includes a servicemark. — Often shortened to mark. Cf. SERVICEMARK. 2. The body of law dealing with how businesses distinctively identify their products. See LANHAM ACT.

"The protection of trade-marks is the law's recognition of the psychological function of symbols. If it is true that we live by symbols, it is no less true that we purchase goods by them. A trade-mark is a merchandising short-cut which induces a purchaser to select what he wants, or what he has been led to believe he wants. The owner of a mark exploits this human propensity by making every effort to impregnate the atmosphere of the market with the drawing power of a congenial symbol. Whatever the means employed, the aim is the same — to convey through the mark, in the minds of potential customers, the desirability of the commodity upon which it appears. Once this is attained, the trade-mark owner has something of value. If another poaches upon the commercial magnetism of the symbol he has created, the owner can obtain legal redress." Mishawaka Rubber & Woolen Mfg Co. v. S.S. Kresge Co., 316 U.S. 203, 205, 62 S.Ct. 1022, 1024 (1942) (Frankfurter, J.).

"A trademark functions on three different levels: as an indication of origin or ownership, as a guarantee of constancy of the quality or other characteristics of a product or service, and as a medium of advertisement. Thus, a trademark guarantees, identifies, and sells the product or service to which it refers. These three facets of a trademark — of differing importance at different times, in different lines of business and for different products or services — are somewhat correlative. The classical function, that of identification, has been primarily responsible for molding the development of trademark law. The significance of the guarantee function has been somewhat exaggerated, while the implications of the advertisement function still await full recognition in the law." 3 Rudolf Callmann, The Law of Unfair Competition, Trademarks and Monopolies § 17.01, at 2 (4th ed. 1998).

arbitrary trademark. A trademark containing common words that do not describe or suggest any characteristic of the product to which the trademark is assigned. — Also termed arbitrary mark.
certification trademark. See certification TRADEMARK.

collective trademark. See COLLECTIVE MARK.

descriptive trademark. See DESCRIPTIVE MARK.

fanciful trademark. A trademark consisting of a made-up or coined word; a distinctive trademark or tradename having no independent meaning. • This type of mark is considered inherently distinctive and thus protected at common law, and is eligible for trademark registration from the time of its first use. — Also termed fanciful mark; fanciful term; coined term.

"Arbitrary or fanciful marks convey nothing about the nature of the product except through knowledge of the market. For instance, Kodak conveys nothing about photographic equipment except to those knowledgeable about that trade." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 168 (2d ed. 1990).

geographically descriptive trademark. A trademark that uses a geographic name to indicate where the goods are grown or manufactured. • This type of mark is protected at common law, and can be registered only on proof that it has acquired distinctiveness over time. See SECONDARY MEANING.

registered trademark. A trademark that has been filed and recorded with the Patent and Trademark Office. • A federally registered trademark is usu. marked by the symbol "®" so that the trademark owner can collect treble damages or the defendant’s profits for an infringement. If the symbol is not used, the owner can still collect these damages or profits by proving that the defendant actually knew that the mark was registered.

strong trademark. An inherently distinctive trademark that is used — usu. by the owner only — in a fictitious, arbitrary, and fanciful manner, and is therefore given greater protection than a weak mark under the trademark laws.

suggestive trademark. A trademark that suggests rather than describes the particular characteristics of a product, thus requiring a consumer to use imagination to draw a conclusion about the nature of the product. • A suggestive trademark is entitled to protection without proof of secondary meaning. See SECONDARY MEANING.

weak trademark. A trademark that is a meaningful word in common usage or that merely describes or suggests a product. • This type of trademark is entitled to protection only if it has acquired distinctiveness over time. See SECONDARY MEANING.

trademark infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

trade meaning. See SECONDARY MEANING.

tradename. 1. A name, style, or symbol used to distinguish a company, partnership, or business (as opposed to a product or service); the name under which a business operates. • A tradename is a means of identifying a business — or its products or services — to establish goodwill. It symbolizes the business’s reputation. 2. A trademark that was not originally susceptible to exclusive appropriation but has acquired a secondary meaning. — Also termed commercial name.

trade or business. Tax. Any business or professional activity conducted by a taxpayer with the objective of earning a profit. • If the taxpayer can show that the primary purpose and intention is to make a profit, the taxpayer may deduct certain expenses as trade-or-business expenses under the Internal Revenue Code.

trader. 1. A merchant; a retailer; one who buys goods to sell them at a profit. 2. One who sells goods substantially in the form in which they are bought; one who has not converted them into another form of property by skill and labor. 3. One who, as a member of a stock exchange, buys and sells securities on the exchange floor either for brokers or on his or her own account. 4. One who buys and sells commodities and commodity futures for others or for his or her own account in anticipation of a speculative profit.

trade secret. 1. A formula, process, device, or other business information that is kept confidential to maintain an advantage over competitors; information — including a formula, pattern, compilation, program, device, method, technique, or process — that (1) derives independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known or readily ascertainable by others who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use, and (2) is the subject of reasonable efforts, under the circumstances, to maintain its secrecy. • This definition states the majority view, which is found in the Uniform Trade Secrets Act.

"The concept of protecting trade secrets is related to the principles of trademark and patent law. The scope of trade secret protection, however, goes well beyond that of patent law. Unlike patent law, protection under trade secret law is not tied to the information’s novelty; rather, the essence of a trade secret is its relative secrecy. Additionally, unlike patent law, trade secret law draws less from property principles, and more from the equitable principles surrounding confidential relationships. Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 8.18, at 516 (1994).

"The difficulty with defining 'trade secrets' in the abstract is that there are so many ways to go about it. In large part, this is a reflection of the fact that the law of trade secrets, unlike the law of patents or copyright, is a creature of the common law rather than of statute. In trying to impose a moral solution on cases of apparent breach of confidence, judges have juggled competing policy interests while trying to draw a line of protection that would lead to the result that they believed was right... In other words, the development of trade secret law has been a bit chaotic..." James Pooley, Trade Secrets § 1.01, at 1-1 to 1-3 (1998).

2. Information that (1) is not generally known or ascertainable, (2) provides a competitive advantage, (3) has been developed at the plaintiff’s expense and is used continuously in the plaintiff’s business, and (4) is the subject of the plaintiff’s intent to keep it confidential. This definition states the minority view, which is found in the Restatement of Torts § 757 cmt. b (1939).

trade surplus. See SURPLUS.

trade union. See UNION.

trade usage. See USAGE.

trading. The business of buying and selling, esp. of commodities and securities.

day trading. The act or practice of buying and selling stock shares or other securities on the same day, esp. over the Internet, usu. for the purpose of making a quick profit on the difference between the buying price and the selling price.

secondary trading. The buying and selling of securities in the market between members of the public, involving neither the issuer nor the underwriter of the securities.

trading corporation. See CORPORATION.

trading partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

trading voyage. See VOYAGE.

trading with the enemy. The federal offense of carrying on commerce with a nation or with a subject or ally of a nation with which the United States is at war.

traditio brevi manu (tra-dish-ee-oh bree-vi man-yoo). [Latin] Roman law. The surrender of the mediate possession of a thing to the person who is already in immediate possession of it. This is a type of constructive delivery in which a delivery to the mediate possessor and redelivery to the immediate possessor are unnecessary. For the other two types of constructive delivery, see ATTornment; CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM.

"The first [type of constructive delivery] is that which the Roman lawyers termed traditio brevi manu, but which has no recognised name in the language of English law... If, for example, I lend a book to someone, and afterwards, while he still retains it, I agree with him to sell it to him, or to make him a present of it, I can effectively deliver it to him in fulfilment of this sale or gift, by telling him that he may keep it. It is not necessary for him to go through the form of handing it back to me and receiving it a second time from my hands." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 306 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

tradition. 1. Past customs and usages that influence or govern present acts or practices. 2. The delivery of an item or an estate.

traditional public forum. See PUBLIC FORUM.

traditionary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

tradsue (tra-dyooz), vb. To slander; calumniate. — traducement, n.

traffic, n. 1. Commerce; trade; the sale or exchange of such things as merchandise, bills, and money. 2. The passing or exchange of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money. 3. People or things being transported along a route. 4. The passing to and fro of people, animals, vehicles, and vessels along a transportation route.

traffic, vb. To trade or deal in (goods, esp. illicit drugs or other contraband) <trafficking in heroin>.

traffic balance. The balance of moneys collected in payment for transporting passengers and freight.

traffic regulation. A prescribed rule of conduct for traffic; a rule intended to promote the orderly and safe flow of traffic.

traitor, n. 1. A person who commits treason against his or her country. 2. One who betrays a person, a cause, or an obligation. — tra·to·rous, adj.

tramp, n. A person who roams about from place to place, begging or living without labor or visible means of support; a vagrant.

tramp corporation. See CORPORATION.

tramp steamer. A ship that is not scheduled to sail between prearranged ports of call but that stops at those ports for which it has cargo.

tranche (tranh), n. [French “slice”] Securities. 1. A bond issue derived from a pooling of similar debt obligations. ♦ A tranche usu. differs from other issues by maturity date or rate of return. 2. A block of bonds designated for sale in a foreign country. — Also spelled tranch; trench. See COLLATERALIZED MORTGAGE OBLIGATION.

transact, vb. 1. To carry on or conduct (negotiations, business, etc.) to a conclusion <transact business >. 2. Civil law. To settle (a dispute) by mutual concession. See TRANSACTION (4). 3. To carry on or conduct negotiations or business <refuses to transact with the enemy >.

transaction, n. 1. The act or an instance of conducting business or other dealings. 2. Something performed or carried out; a business agreement or exchange. 3. Any activity involving two or more persons. 4. Civil law. An agreement that is intended by the parties to prevent or end a dispute and in which they make reciprocal concessions. — transactional, adj.

closed transaction. Tax. A transaction in which an amount realized on a sale can be established for the purpose of stating a gain or loss.

colorable transaction. A sham transaction having the appearance of authenticity; a pretended transaction <the court set aside the colorable transaction >.

transactional immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

transactional lawyer. See LAWYER.

transaction causation. See CAUSATION.

transaction cost. See COST (1).

transaction-or-occurrence test. A test used to determine whether, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a), a particular claim is a compulsory counterclaim. ♦ Four different tests have been suggested: (1) Are the legal and factual issues raised by the claim and counterclaim largely the same? (2) Would res judicata bar a later suit on the counterclaim in the absence of the compulsory-counterclaim rule? (3) Will substantially the same evidence support or refute both the plaintiff's claim and the counterclaim? (4) Are the claim and counterclaim logically related? See compulsory counterclaim under COUNTERCLAIM.

transaction slip. See CONFIRMATION SLIP.

transcribe, vb. To make a written or typed copy of (spoken material, esp. testimony).

transcript, n. A handwritten, printed, or typed copy of testimony given orally; esp., the official record of proceedings in a trial or hearing, as taken down by a court reporter. — Also termed report of proceedings; reporter's record.

transcription. 1. The act or process of transcribing. 2. Something transcribed; a transcript.

transcript of proceedings. A compilation of all documents relating to a bond issue, typically including the notices, affidavits of notices, a bond resolution (or bond ordinance), official statement, trust indenture and loan agreements, and minutes of meetings of all authorizing bodies.

transseunt cum universitate (tran·see·unt kam yoo·ni·var·sa·tay·tee). [Latin] Hist. They are transferred with the whole estate.

transfer, n. 1. Any mode of disposing of or parting with an asset or an interest in an asset, including the payment of money, release, lease, or creation of a lien or other encumbrance. ♦ The term embraces every method — direct or indirect, absolute or conditional, voluntary or involuntary — of disposing of or parting with property or with an interest in property, including retention of title as a security interest and foreclosure of the debtor's equity of redemption. 2. Negotiation of an instrument according to the forms of law. ♦ The four methods of transfer are by indorsement, by delivery, by assignment, and by operation of law. 3. A conveyance of property or title from one person to another.

constructive transfer. A delivery of an item — esp. a controlled substance — by someone other than the owner but at the owner's direction.
incomplete transfer. Tax. A decedent’s inter vivos transfer that is not completed for federal estate-tax purposes because the decedent retains significant powers over the property’s possession or enjoyment. ● Because the transfer is incomplete, some or all of the property’s value will be included in the transferor’s gross estate. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2036-2038.

inter vivos transfer (in-ter vi-vohs or -vee-vohs). A transfer of property made during the transferor’s lifetime.

transfer in contemplation of death. See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

transfer in fraud of creditors. A conveyance of property made in an attempt to prevent the transferor’s creditors from making a claim to it.

transfer, vb. 1. To convey or remove from one place or one person to another; to pass or hand over from one to another, esp. to change over the possession or control of. 2. To sell or give.

transferable (trans-far-ah-bal), adj. Capable of being transferred, together with all rights of the original holder.

transferable letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

transfer agent. See AGENT.

transferee. One to whom a property interest is conveyed.

transferee liability. Tax. The liability of a transferee to pay taxes owed by the transferor. ● This liability is limited to the value of the asset transferred. The Internal Revenue Service can, for example, force a donee to pay the gift tax when the donor who made the transfer cannot pay it. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 6901–6905.

transfer in contemplation of death. See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

transfer in fraud of creditors. See TRANSFER.

transfer of a case. The removal of a case from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority. — Also termed transfer of a cause. See REMOVAL (2).

transfer of venue. See CHANGE OF VENUE.

transferor. One who conveys an interest in property.

transfer payment. (usu. pl.) A governmental payment to a person who has neither provided goods or services nor invested money in exchange for the payment. ● Examples include unemployment compensation and welfare payments.

transfer price. See PRICE.

transferred intent. See INTENT (1).

transferred-intent doctrine. The rule that if one person intends to harm a second person but instead unintentionally harms a third, the first person’s criminal or tortious intent toward the second applies to the third as well. ● Thus, the offender may be prosecuted for an intent crime or sued by the third person for an intentional tort. See INTENT.

transferred malice. See MALICE.

Transfers to Minors Act. See UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINORS ACT.

transfer tax. See TAX.

transfer warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

transgression. Archaic. See MISDEMEANOR.

transgressione, ad audiendum et terminandum (trans-gres-huhn ee-oh-nee, ad aw-dee-end-dam et tar-ma-nan-dam). See DE TRANSGRESSION, AD AUDIENDUM ET TERMINANDUM.

transgressive trust. See TRUST.

transient, n. A person or thing whose presence is temporary or fleeting.

transient foreigner. One who visits a country without the intent to remain.

transient jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

transient merchant. A trader who sells merchandise at a temporary location without intending to become a permanent merchant in that place. transient person. One who has no legal residence within a jurisdiction for the purpose of a state venue statute.

transit, n. 1. The transportation of goods or persons from one place to another. 2. Passage; the act of passing.

transitive covenant. See COVENANT (1).

transitory (trans-a-tor-ee or tran-zar-), adj. That passes from place to place; capable of passing or being changed from one place to another.

transitory action. See ACTION.

transitory wrong. See WRONG.

transit passage. Int'l law. The right of a vessel or airplane to exercise freedom of navigation and overflight solely for the purpose of continuous and expeditious transit between one part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone and another part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone. — Also termed right of transit passage. Cf. INNOCENT PASSAGE.

translative (trans- or tranz-lay-tiv), adj. Making or causing a transfer or conveyance.

translative fact. See FACT.

transmission. Civil law. The passing of an inheritance to an heir.

transmit, vb. 1. To send or transfer (a thing) from one person or place to another. 2. To communicate.

transmittal letter. A nonsubstantive letter that establishes a record of delivery, such as a letter to a court clerk advising that a particular pleading is enclosed for filing. • Lawyers have traditionally opened transmittal letters with the phrase “Enclosed please find,” even though that phrasing has been widely condemned in business-writing handbooks since the late 19th century. A transmittal letter may properly begin with a range of openers as informal as “Here is” to the more formal “Enclosed is.” — Also termed cover letter.

transnational law. 1. General principles of law recognized by civilized nations. Cf. INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2. The amalgam of common principles of domestic and international law dealing esp. with problems arising from agreements made between sovereign states and foreign private parties. 3. The problems to which such principles apply.

transport, vb. To carry or convey (a thing) from one place to another.

transportation, n. 1. The movement of goods or persons from one place to another by a carrier. 2. Criminal law. A type of punishment that sends the criminal out of the country to another place (usu. a penal colony) for a specified period. Cf. DEPORTATION.

transshipment. Maritime law. The act of taking cargo out of one ship and loading it on another. — transship, vb.

trap, n. 1. A device for capturing animals, such as a pitfall, snare, or machine that shuts suddenly. 2. Any device or contrivance by which one may be caught unawares; stratagem; snare. 3. Torts. An ultrahazardous hidden peril of which the property owner or occupier, but not a licensee, has knowledge. • A trap can exist even if it was not designed or intended to catch or entrap anything.

trashing. DECONSTRUCTION.

travaux préparatoires (tra-voh pray-par-at-twah[r]z). [French “preparatory works”] Materials used in preparing the ultimate form of an agreement or statute, and esp. of an international treaty; materials constituting a legislative history. See LEGISLATIVE HISTORY.

travel-accident insurance. See INSURANCE.

Travel Act. A federal law that prohibits travel in interstate or foreign commerce to further unlawful gambling, prostitution, extortion, bribery, or arson, as well as illegal transactions involving liquor or narcotics. 18 USCA § 1952.

traveled place. A place where the public has, in some manner, acquired the legal right to travel.

traveler, n. A person who passes from place to place, for any reason.

traveler's check. See CHECK. traveler’s letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

travel expense. See EXPENSE.

traverse (trav-ars), n. Common-law pleading. A formal denial of a factual allegation made in the opposing party’s pleading <Smith filed a traverse to Allen’s complaint, asserting that he did not knowingly provide false information>. — traverse (trav-ars or tra-vars), vb. See DENIAL.

“It is said that the technical term traverse, from transverto, to turn over, is applied to an issue taken upon an indictment for a misdemeanor, and means nothing more than turning over or putting off the trial to a following session or assize; and that thus it is that the officer of the court asks the party whether he is ready to try then, or will traverse to the next session; though some have referred its meaning originally to the denying or taking issue upon an indictment, without reference to the delay of trial, and which seems more correct.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 486 (2d ed. 1826).

common traverse. A traverse consisting of a tender of issue — that is, a denial accompanied by a formal offer for decision of the point denied — with a denial that expressly contradicts the terms of the allegation traversed. — Also termed specific traverse.

“The common or specific traverse is an express denial of a particular allegation in the opposing pleading in the terms of the allegation, accompanied by a tender of issue or formal offer of the point denied for trial.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 168, at 303 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

cumulative traverse. A traverse that analyzes a proposition into its constituent parts and traverses them cumulatively. • It amounts to the same thing as traversing the one entire proposition, since the several parts traversed must all make up one entire proposition or point.

general traverse. A denial of all the facts in an opponent’s pleading.

special traverse. A denial of one material fact in an opponent’s pleading; a traverse that explains or qualifies the denial. • The essential parts of a special traverse are an inducement, a denial, and a verification.

specific traverse. See common traverse.

traverse jury. See petit jury under JURY.

traverser, n. One who traverses or denies a pleading.

treachery, n. A deliberate and willful betrayal of trust and confidence.

treason, n. The offense of attempting to overthrow the government of the state to which one owes allegiance, either by making war against the state or by materially supporting its enemies. — Also termed high treason; alta prodi-ttio. — treasonable, treasonous, adj. Cf. SEDITION.

“The judgment of high treason was, until very lately, an exception to the merciful tenor of our judgments. The least offensive form which is given in the books is, that the offender ‘be carried back to the place from whence he came, and from thence to be drawn to the place of execution, and be there hanged by the neck, and cut down alive, and that his entrails be taken out and burned before his face, and his head cut off, and his body divided into four quarters, and his head and quarters disposed of at the king’s pleasure.’ Some of the precedents add other circumstances, of still more grossness and aggravation. But this horrible denunciation was very seldom executed in its more terrible niceties.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 702 (2d ed. 1826).

petty treason. Archaic. Murder of one’s employer or husband. • Until 1828, this act was considered treason under English law. — Also spelled petit treason.

“The frequent reference to high treason is a carry-over from an ancient division of the offense that has long since disappeared. In the feudal stage of history the relation of lord to vassal was quite similar to the relation of king to subject. The relation of husband to wife came to be regarded in the same category, as also did the relation of master to servant, and that of prelate to clergyman. And just as it was high treason to kill the king, so a malicious homicide was petit treason if it involved a killing of (originally, lord by vassal, and later) husband by wife, master by mistresse or servant, or prelate by clergyman. When the special brutality provided by the common law for the punishment of petit treason disappeared, this crime became merged with murder and only one crime of treason remained.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 498-99 (3d ed. 1982).

treasonable misdemeanor. English law. An act that is likely to endanger or alarm the monarch, or disturb the public peace in the presence of the monarch. Cf. TREASON FELONY.

treason felony. English law. An act that shows an intention of committing treason, unaccompanied by any further act to carry out that intention. • This offense usu. results in life imprisonment rather than the death penalty. Cf. TREASONABLE MISDEMEANOR.

Treas. Reg. abbr. TREASURY REGULATION. treasurer. A corporate or governmental officer who receives, maintains custody of, invests, and disburses funds.

treasure trove. [Law French “treasure found”] Valuables (usu. gold or silver) found hidden in the ground or other private place, the owner of which is unknown. • At common law, the finder of a treasure trove was entitled to title against all except the true owner.

“Treasure hid in the earth, not upon the earth, nor in the sea, and coin though not hidden, being found is the king’s; we call it treasure trove.” Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 177 (1759).

“Treasure trove consists essentially of articles of gold and silver, intentionally hidden for safety in the earth or in some secret place, the owner being unknown, although it is probable that the category might include articles made from the required metals buried in the ground for other purposes, for example in connection with an ancient sepulture. In the United States, the state has never claimed title to lost property by virtue of its character as treasure trove, and it has been stated that the law relating thereto is merged with that of lost goods generally, although there is authority for the proposition that while treasure trove in the United States belongs to the finder, found goods not of that character go to the owner of the locus in quo.” Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 13, at 27–28 (2d ed. 1955).

Treasures. Debt obligations of the federal government backed by the full faith and credit of the government. See TREASURY BILL; TREASURY BOND; TREASURY CERTIFICATE; TREASURY NOTE.

treasury. 1. A place or building in which stores of wealth are kept; esp., a place where public revenues are deposited and kept and from which money is disbursed to defray government expenses. 2. (cap.) TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Treasury, First Lord. See FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.

Treasury Bench. In the British House of Commons, the first row of seats on the right hand of the speaker. • The Treasury Bench is occupied by the First Lord of the Treasury or principal minister of the Crown.

Treasury bill. A short-term debt security issued by the federal government, with a maturity of 13, 26, or 52 weeks. • These bills — auctioned weekly or quarterly — pay interest in the form of the difference between their discounted purchase price and their par value at maturity. — Abbr. T-bill.

Treasury bond. A long-term debt security issued by the federal government, with a maturity of 10 to 30 years. • These bonds are considered risk-free, but they usu. pay relatively little interest. — Abbr. T-bond.

treasury certificate. An obligation of the federal government maturing in one year and on which interest is paid on a coupon basis.

Treasury Department. A federal department — created by Congress in 1789 — whose duties include formulating and recommending financial, tax, and fiscal policies, serving as the federal government’s financial agent, and manufacturing coins and currency.

Treasury note. An intermediate-term debt security issued by the federal government, with a maturity of two to ten years. • These notes are considered risk-free, but they usu. pay relatively little interest. — Abbr. T-note.

Treasury Regulation. A regulation promulgated by the U.S. Treasury Department to explain or interpret a section of the Internal Revenue Code. • Treasury Regulations are binding on all taxpayers. — Abbr. Treas. Reg.

treasury security. See treasury stock under STOCK.

treasury share. See treasury stock under STOCK.

treasury stock. See STOCK.

treasury warrant. See WARRANT (2).

treating-physician rule. The principle that a treating physician’s diagnoses and findings about the degree of a social-security claimant’s impairment are binding on an administrative-law judge in the absence of substantial contrary evidence.

treaty. 1. A formally signed and ratified agreement between two nations or sovereigns; an international agreement concluded between two or more states in written form and governed by international law. • A treaty is not only the law in each state but also a contract between the signatories. — Also termed accord; convention; covenant; declaration; pact. Of. EXCUTIVE AGREEMENT.

commercial treaty. A bilateral or multilateral treaty concerning trade or other mercantile activities. • Such a treaty may be general in nature, as by supplying the framework of long-term commercial relations. Or it may be specific, as by detailing the conditions of particular branches of trade or other commercial transactions. Sometimes a treaty of this kind deals with an individual project, such as a guaranty agreement.
treaty

dispositive treaty (dis-poz-ə-tiv). A treaty by which a country takes over territory by impressing a special character on it, creating something analogous to a servitude or easement in private law.

guaranty treaty. An agreement between countries directly or indirectly establishing a unilateral or reciprocal guarantee. — Also termed quasi-guarantee treaty; pseudo-guarantee treaty.

"In many instances where the term 'guarantee' is used in international treaties, the contracting parties merely intend to underline their willingness to comply with the obligation they have entered into. Obligations of this kind do not fall within the concept of guarantee in the proper sense of the term. In this particular respect, the expression 'pseudo-guarantees' or 'quasi-guarantee treaties' is used." George Ress, "Guarantee Treaties," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 634 (1995).

nonproliferation treaty. A treaty forbidding the transfer of nuclear weapons from a country with a nuclear arsenal to one that does not have nuclear-weapons capability. ● The first such treaty was reached in 1968, and now more than 100 nations have agreed to its terms. — Also termed nuclear-nonproliferation treaty.

peace treaty. A treaty signed by heads of state to end a war. — Also termed treaty of peace.

pseudo-guarantee treaty. See guaranty treaty.

quasi-guarantee treaty. See guaranty treaty.

2. A contract or agreement between insurers providing for treaty reinsurance. See treaty reinsurance under REINSURANCE.

Treaty Clause. The constitutional provision giving the President the power to make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate. U.S. Const. art. II, § 2.

treaty-created law. See CONVENTIONAL LAW.

treaty-made law. See CONVENTIONAL LAW.

treaty of peace. See peace treaty under TREATY.

treaty of reinsurance. See REINSURANCE TREATY.

treaty power. The President's constitutional authority to make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate. See TREATY CLAUSE.

treaty reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

treble damages. See DAMAGES.

trebucket (tree-bak-it). See CASTIGATORY.

trend. A long-term price pattern in the stock market generally or in a particular stock.

major trend. A long-term trend of the stock market; a general increase or decrease of stock prices over an extended period. — Also termed fundamental trend.

market trend. The direction of stock-market prices over a several-month period.

trespass (tres-pas or tres-pas), n. 1. An unlawful act committed against the person or property of another; esp., wrongfull entry on another’s real property. 2. At common law, a legal action for injuries resulting from an unlawful act of this kind. 3. Archaic. MISDEMEANOR. — trespass, vb. — trespassory (tres-pa-sor-e), adj.

"The term trespass has been used by lawyers and laymen in three senses of varying degrees of generality. (1) In its widest and original signification it includes any wrongfull act — any infringement or transgression of the rule of right. This use is common in the Authorised Version of the Bible, and was presumably familiar when that version was first published. But it never obtained recognition in the technical language of the law, and is now archaic even in popular speech. (2) In a second and narrower signification — its true legal sense — the term means any legal wrong for which the appropriate remedy was a writ of trespass — viz. any direct and forcible injury to person, land, or chattels. (3) The third and narrowest meaning of the term is that in which, in accordance with popular speech, it is limited to one particular kind of trespass in the second sense — viz. the tort of trespass to land (trespas quaer clausum fregit)." R.F.V. Houston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 4 (17th ed. 1977).

"Before the word 'misdemeanor' became well established the old writers tended to use the word 'trespass' to indicate an offense below the grade of felony. And it was used at times by Blackstone for this purpose, as in the phrase 'treason, felony, or trespass.' " Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 405 (3d ed. 1982).

continuing trespass. A trespass in the nature of a permanent invasion on another's rights, such as a sign that overhangs another's property.

criminal trespass. 1. A trespass on property that is clearly marked against trespass by signs or fences. 2. A trespass in which the trespasser remains on the property after being ordered off by a person authorized to do so.

innocent trespass. A trespass committed either unintentionally or in good faith.

joint trespass. A trespass that two or more persons have united in committing, or that some have actually committed while others commanded, encouraged, or directed it.

permanent trespass. A trespass consisting of a series of acts, done on consecutive days, that are of the same nature and that are renewed or continued from day to day, so that the acts in the aggregate form one indivisible harm.

trespass ab initio (ab i-nish-ee-oh). An entry on land that, though begun innocently or with a privilege, is deemed a trespass from the beginning because of conduct that abuses the privilege.

trespass by relation. A trespass committed when the plaintiff had a right to immediate possession of land but had not yet exercised that right. • When the plaintiff takes possession, a legal fiction treats the plaintiff as having had possession ever since the accrual of the right of entry. This is known as trespass by relation because the plaintiff’s possession relates back to the time when the plaintiff first acquired a right to possession.

trespass de bonis asportatis (dee boh-nis as-par-tay-tis). [Latin “trespass for carrying goods away”] 1. A wrongful taking of chattels. • This type of trespassory taking was also an element of common-law larceny. 2. At common law, an action to recover damages for the wrongful taking of chattels. — Often shortened to trespass de bonis. — Also termed trespass to personal property.

trespass on the case. At common law, an action to recover damages that are not the immediate result of a wrongful act but rather a later consequence. • This action was the precursor to a variety of modern-day tort claims, including negligence, nuisance, and business torts. — Often shortened to case. — Also termed action on the case; breue de transgressione super casum.

“The most important of the writs framed under the authority of the statute of Westminster 2 is that of ‘trespass on the case,’ to meet cases analogous to trespass in delict, but lacking the element of direct or immediate force or violence. This writ gave a form of action in which the court was enabled to render judgment of damages in cases of fraud, deceit, negligence, want of skill, defamation oral or written, and all other injurious acts or omissions resulting in harm to person or property, but wanting the vi et armis, the element of direct force and violence, to constitute trespass.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 7 (2d ed. 1899).

“Common law recognizes a distinction between the actions of trespass vi et armis (or simply trespass) and trespass on the case. This distinction has been expressed by stating that a tort committed by the direct application of force is remediable by an action for trespass, while a tort accomplished indirectly is a matter for trespass on the case. Other authority makes the distinction on the basis of the defendant’s intent, stating that trespasses involves a willful and deliberate act while trespass on the case contemplates an act or omission resulting from negligence.” 1 Am. Jur. 2d Actions § 23, at 738 (1994).

trespass quare clausum fregit (kwair-ee-klaw-zam-free-jit). [Latin “why he broke the close”] 1. A person’s unlawful entry on another’s land that is visibly enclosed. • This tort consists of doing any of the following without lawful justification: (1) entering upon land in the possession of another, (2) remaining on the land, or (3) placing or projecting any object upon it. 2. At common law, an action to recover damages resulting from another’s unlawful entry on one’s land that is visibly enclosed. — Also termed trespass to real property; trespass to land; quare clausum querentis fregit. See trespass vi et armis.

“Every unwarrantable entry on another’s soil the law entitles a trespass by breaking his close; the words of the writ of trespass commanding the defendant to shew cause, quare clausum querentis fregit. For every man’s land is in the eye of the law enclosed and set apart from his neighbour’s: and that either by a visible and material fence, as one field is divided from another by a hedge; or, by an ideal invisible boundary, existing only in the contemplation of law, as when one man’s land adjoins to another’s in the same field. And every such entry or breach of a man’s close carries necessarily along with it some damage or other: for, if no other special loss can be assigned, yet still the words of the writ itself specify one general damage, viz. the treading down and bruising his herbage.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 209–10 (1768).

trespass to chattels. The act of committing, without lawful justification, any act of direct physical interference with a chattel possessed by another. • The act must amount to a direct forcible injury.

trespass to land. See trespass quare clausum fregit (2).

trespass to personal property. See trespass de bonis asportatis.

trespass to real property. See trespass quare clausum fregit (2).

trespass to try title. 1. In some states, an action for the recovery of property unlawfully withheld from an owner who has the immediate right to possession. 2. A procedure under which a claim to title may be adjudicated. trespass

trespass vi et armis (vī et ahr-mis). [Latin “with force and arms”] 1. At common law, an action for damages resulting from an intentional injury to person or property, esp. if by violent means; trespass to the plaintiff’s person, as in illegal assault, battery, wounding, or imprisonment, when not under color of legal process, or when the battery, wounding, or imprisonment was in the first instance lawful, but unnecessary violence was used or the imprisonment continued after the process had ceased to be lawful. • This action also lay for injury to relative rights, such as menacing tenants or servants, beating and wounding a spouse, criminal conversation with or seducing a wife, or debauching a daughter or servant. 2. See trespass quare clausum fregit. • In this sense, the “force” is implied by the “breaking” of the close (that is, an enclosed area), even if no real force is used.

trespass ab initio. See TRESPASS.

trespass by relation. See TRESPASS.

trespass de bonis asportatis. See TRESPASS.

trespasser. One who commits a trespass; one who intentionally and without consent or privilege enters another’s property. • In tort law, a landholder owes no duty to unforeseeable trespassers. Cf. INVITEE; LICENSEE (2).

“The word ‘trespasser’ has an ugly sound, but it covers the wicked and the innocent. The burglar and the arrogant squatter are trespassers, but so are all sorts of comparatively innocent and respectable persons such as a walker in the countryside who unhindered strolls across an open field. Perhaps much of the trouble in this area has arisen from ‘the simplistic stereotype’ of the definition. The courts are therefore beginning to recognize that the duty of the occupier may vary according to the nature of the trespasser.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 278 (17th ed. 1977).

innocent trespasser. One who enters another’s land unlawfully, but either inadvertently or believing in a right to do so.

trespass for mesne profits. Hist. An action — supplementing an action for ejectment — brought against a tenant in possession to recover the profits wrongfully received during the tenant’s occupation.

tret (tret), n. An allowance or abatement of a certain weight or quantity that a seller makes to a buyer because of water or dust that may be mixed with a commodity. Cf. TARE.

triable, adj. Subject or liable to judicial examination and trial .

triable either way. English law. (Of an offense) prosecutable either in the Crown Court or in a magistrates’ court.

“The criminal courts in England and Wales are the magistrates’ courts and the Crown Court. Those offences considered least serious are summary offences, triable only in the magistrates’ courts. Those offences considered most serious are triable only on indictment, in the Crown Court. A large number of offences, such as theft and most burglaries, are ‘triable either way,’ in a magistrates’ court or the Crown Court. For these offences the defendant can elect to be tried at the Crown Court, where there is a judge and jury. If the defendant does not wish a Crown Court trial, the magistrates may decide (having heard representations from the prosecutor) that the case is so serious that it should be committed to the Crown Court for trial.” Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 16 (1991).

trial. A formal judicial examination of evidence and determination of legal claims in an adversary proceeding.

bench trial. A trial before a judge without a jury. • The judge decides questions of fact as well as questions of law. — Also termed trial to the bench; nonjury trial; trial before the court (abbr. TBC); judge trial.

bifurcated trial. A trial that is divided into two stages, such as for guilt and punishment or for liability and damages. — Also termed two-stage trial. Cf. SEVERANCE (2).

fair trial. See FAIR TRIAL.

joint trial. A trial involving two or more parties; esp., a criminal trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses.

judge trial. See bench trial. jury trial. A trial in which the factual issues are determined by a jury, not by the judge. — Also termed trial by jury.

mock trial. See MOCK TRIAL.

nonjury trial. See bench trial.

political trial. A trial (esp. a criminal prosecution) in which either the prosecution or the defendant (or both) uses the proceedings as a platform to espouse a particular political belief; a trial of a person for a political crime. See SHOW TRIAL.

separate trial. 1. Criminal procedure. The individual trial of each of several persons jointly accused of a crime. Fed. R. Crim. P. 14. 2. Civil procedure. Within a single action, a distinct trial of a separate claim or issue — or of a group of claims or issues — ordered by the trial judge, usu. to conserve resources or avoid prejudice. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b). Cf. SEVERANCE.

show trial. See SHOW TRIAL.

speedy trial. See SPEEDY TRIAL.

state trial. A trial for a political offense.

summary jury trial. A settlement technique in which the parties argue before a mock jury, which then reaches a nonbinding verdict that will assist the parties in evaluating their positions.

trial at bar. Hist. A trial before all the judges of the court in which the proceedings take place. — Also termed trial at the bar.

trial at nisi prius (ni-st pri-as). Hist. A trial before the justices of assize and nisi prius in the county where the facts are alleged to have occurred, and from which county the jurors have been summoned.

trial before the court. See bench trial.

trial by battle. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

trial by certificate. Hist. A trial in which the issue is decided on evidence in the form of witnesses’ certificates of what they individually know.

trial by combat. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

trial by inspection. Hist. A trial in which the judge decided the dispute by individual observation and investigation, without the benefit of a jury.

trial by jury. See JURY TRIAL.

trial by ordeal. See ORDEAL.

trial by record. Hist. A trial in which, a record having been pleaded by one party and denied by the other, the record is inspected in order to decide the dispute, no other evidence being admissible. See NULL TIEL RECORD.

trial by the country. See trial per pais.

trial per pais (par pay or pays). [Law French “trial by the country”] Trial by jury. — Also termed trial by the country. Cf. CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY; GOING TO THE COUNTRY; PATRIA (3).

trial to the bench. See bench trial.

trifurcated trial. A trial that is divided into three stages, such as for liability, general damages, and special damages.

two-stage trial. See bifurcated trial.

trial at bar. See TRIAL.

trial at nisi prius. See TRIAL.

trial before the court. See bench trial under TRIAL.

trial brief. Counsel’s written submission, usu. just before trial, outlining the legal issues before the court and arguing one side’s position.

trial by certificate. See TRIAL.

trial by combat. Hist. A trial that is decided by personal battle between the disputants, common in Europe and England during the Middle Ages; specif., a trial in which the person accused fought with the accuser, the idea being that God would give victory to the person in the right. • This method was introduced into England by the Normans after 1066, but it was a widely detested innovation and was little used. It became obsolete several centuries before being formally abolished in 1818, having been replaced in practice by the grand assize and indictment. — Also termed trial by battle; trial by wager of battle; judicial combat; duel; duelum; wager of battle; ornest; vadiatio duel-li; wehading. See JUDICIAM DEI.

trial by inspection. See TRIAL.

trial by jury. See JURY TRIAL under TRIAL.

trial by oath. See COMPURGATION.

trial by ordeal. See ORDEAL.

trial by record. See TRIAL.

trial by the country. See trial per pais under TRIAL.
trial by the record. A trial in which one party insists that a record exists to support its claim and the opposing party denies the existence of such a record. • If the record can be produced, the court will consider it in reaching a verdict — otherwise, it will rule for the opponent.

trial by wager of battle. Hist. See trial by combat.

trial calendar. See docket (2).

trial counsel. See counsel.

trial court. See court.

trial de novo (dee or di noh-voh). A new trial on the entire case — that is, on both questions of fact and issues of law — conducted as if there had been no trial in the first instance.

trial examiner. See administrative-law judge.

trial franchise. See franchise (4).

trial judge. See judge.

trial jury. See petit jury under jury.

trial on the merits. A trial on the substantive issues of a case, as opposed to a motion hearing or interlocutory matter.

tribal land. A part of an Indian reservation that is not allotted to or occupied by individual Indians but is held as the common land of the tribe. Cf. Indian land.

tribunal (tri-byoo-nal). 1. A court or other adjudicatory body. 2. The seat, bench, or place where a judge sits.

tributary (trib-yo-ter-ee), n. A stream flowing directly or indirectly into a river.

tribute (trib-you-t), n. 1. An acknowledgment of gratitude or respect. 2. A contribution that a sovereign raises from its subjects to defray the expenses of state. 3. Money paid by an inferior sovereign or state to a superior one to secure the latter’s friendship and protection.

tributum (tri-byoo-tam). [Latin] Roman law. Originally, a war tax; later, a regular tax on land or persons.

trier of fact. See fact-finder.

trifurcated trial. See trial.

trigamy (trig-a-mee), n. The act of marrying a person while legally married to someone else and bigamously married to yet another.

"'Trigamy, literally three marriages, is often used for a special situation. 'Trigamy,' in the sense of the special problem of the third wife, stems from the premise that invalidity of the alleged prior marriage is a good defense to a charge of bigamy. Thus in a bigamy prosecution a so-called common-law marriage can be relied upon to establish either the first or second marriage, if it is recognized in the jurisdiction as giving rise to the marital status, but cannot be relied upon where it is not so recognized. A logical result is that a charge of bigamy may be defeated by showing that the alleged prior marriage, relied upon to support the charge, was itself void because of an even earlier marriage existing at the time — as was held about 1648 in Lady Madison's Case. For example, D marries A, and afterward while A is alive marries B, and still later when A is dead but B alive, marries C. The marriage to C is not bigamy because the marriage to B was bigamous and void.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 458 (3d ed. 1982).

triptite (tri-pahr-tit), adj. Involving, composed of, or divided into three parts or elements .

triple damages. See treble damages under damages.

triple net lease. See net-net-net lease under lease.

triple trigger. Insurance. A theory of coverage providing that all insurers on a risk from the day a claimant is first exposed to an injury-producing product (such as asbestos) — beyond the last exposure — to the date of diagnosis or death, whichever occurs first, must cover the loss. — Also termed continuous trigger. Cf. actual-injury trigger; exposure theory; manifestation theory.
tristis successio (tris-tis sak-sez(h)-ee-oh). See hereditas luctuosa under HEREDITAS.

trivial, adj. Trifling; inconsiderable; of small worth or importance.

TRO (tee-ahr-oh). abbr. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER.

trover (troh-var). A common-law action for the recovery of damages for the conversion of personal property, the damages generally being measured by the value of the property. — Also termed trover and conversion. Cf. DETINUE; REPLEVIN.

"Trover may be maintained for all kinds of personal property, including legal documents, but not where articles are severed from land by an adverse possessor, at least until recovery of possession of the land. It lies for the misappropriation of specific money, but not for breach of an obligation to pay where there is no duty to return specific money." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 43, at 99 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

truancy (troo-on-see), n. The act or state of shirking responsibility; esp., willful and unjustified failure to attend school by one who is required to attend. — truant, adj. & n.

truancy officer. An official responsible for enforcing laws mandating school attendance for minors of specified ages (usu. 16 and under). — Also termed truant officer; attendance officer.

truce. Int'l law. A suspension or temporary cessation of hostilities by agreement between belligerent powers. — Also termed armistice; cease-fire; suspension of arms.

true admission. See judicial admission under ADMISSION.

true and correct. Authentic; accurate; unaltered <we have forwarded a true and correct copy of the expert's report>. — Also termed true and exact.

true bill, n. A grand jury's notation that a criminal charge should go before a petty jury for trial <the grand jury returned a true bill, and the state prepared to prosecute>. — Also termed billa vera. Cf. NO BILL.

true-bill, vb. To make or deliver a true bill on <the grand jury true-billed the indictment>.

trust, n. 1. The right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property to which another person holds the legal title; a property interest held by one person (the trustor) at the request of another (the settlor) for the benefit of a third party (the beneficiary). • For a trust to be valid, it must involve specific property, reflect the settlor's intent, and be created for a lawful purpose. 2. A fiduciary relationship regarding property and subjecting the person with title to the property to equitable duties to deal with it for another's benefit; the confidence placed in a trustee, together with the trustee's obligations toward the property and the beneficiary. • A trust arises as a result of a manifestation of an intention to create it. See FIDUCIARY RELATIONSHIP. 3. The property so held; TRUST FUND. 4. A business combination that aims at monopoly. See ANTI-TRUST.

"[A] trust involves three elements, namely, (1) a trustee, who holds the trust property and is subject to equitable duties to deal with it for the benefit of another; (2) a beneficiary, to whom the trustee owes equitable duties to deal with the trust property for his benefit; (3) trust property, which is held by the trustee for the beneficiary." Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 2 cmt. h (1959).

"One must distinguish, . . . [n] countries where English is spoken, between a wide and a narrow sense of the word 'trust.' In the wide sense a trust exists when property is to be held or administered by one person on behalf of another or for some purpose other than his own benefit . . . . In the narrow or strict sense a trust exists when the creator of the trust . . . hands over or is bound to hand over the control of an asset which, or the proceeds of which, is to be administered by another (the trustee or administrator) in his capacity as such for the benefit of some person (beneficiary) other than the trustee or for some impersonal object. A trust in this sense is a species of the genus 'trust' in the wide sense." Tony Honore, The South African Law of Trusts §§ 1–2, at 1–3 (3d ed. 1985).

“Some courts and legal writers have defined a trust as a certain kind of right that the beneficiary has against the trustee, or a certain kind of interest that the beneficiary has against the trustee, or a certain kind of interest that the beneficiary has in the trust property, thus looking at it from the point of view of the beneficiary. While it is true that the beneficiary has the right or interest described, the trust is something more than the right or interest of the beneficiary. The trust is the whole juridical device: the legal relationship between the parties with respect to the property that is its subject matter, including not merely the duties that the trustee owes to the beneficiary and to the rest of the world, but also the rights, privileges, powers, and immunities that the beneficiary has against the trustee and against the rest of the world. It would seem proper, therefore, to define the trust either as a relationship having certain characteristics stated in the definition or perhaps as a juridical device or legal institution involving such a relationship.”

accumulation trust. A trust in which the trustee must accumulate income and gains from sales of trust assets for ultimate disposition when the trust terminates. • Many states restrict the time over which accumulations may be made or the amount that may be accumulated.

active trust. A trust in which the trustee has some affirmative duty of management or administration besides the obligation to transfer the property to the beneficiary. — Also termed special trust. Cf. passive trust.

alimony trust. A trust in which the husband transfers to the trustee property from which the wife, as beneficiary, will be supported after a divorce or separation.

annuity trust. A trust from which the trustee must pay a sum certain annually to one or more beneficiaries for their respective lives or for a term of years, and must then either transfer the remainder to or for the use of a qualified charity or retain the remainder for such a use. • The sum certain must not be less than 5% of the initial fair market value of the property transferred to the trust by the donor. A qualified annuity trust must comply with the requirements of IRC (26 USCA) § 664.

bank-account trust. See Totten trust.

blended trust. A trust in which the beneficiaries are a group, with no member of the group having a separable individual interest. • Courts rarely recognize these trusts.

blind trust. A trust in which the settlor places investments under the control of an independent trustee, usu. to avoid a conflict of interest.

bond trust. A trust whose principal consists of bonds that yield interest income.

business trust. A form of business organization, similar to a corporation, in which investors receive transferable certificates of beneficial interest (instead of stock shares). — Also termed Massachusetts trust; common-law trust.

“The business trust was developed in Massachusetts from 1910 to 1925 to achieve limited liability and to avoid restrictions then existing there on a corporation’s acquiring and developing real estate, by adoption of the trust device. . . .” Henry G. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 88, at 117 (3d ed. 1983).

bypass trust. A trust into which a decedent’s estate passes, so that the surviving heirs get a life estate in the trust rather than the property itself, in order to avoid estate taxes on an estate larger than the tax-credit-sheltered amount ($650,000 in 1999, increasing to $1 million after 2005). — Also termed credit-shelter trust. See unified credit under TAX CREDIT.

charitable remainder annuity trust. A charitable-remainder trust in which the beneficiaries receive for a specified period a fixed payment of 5% or more of the fair market value of the original principal, after which the remaining principal passes to charity.

charitable-remainder trust. A trust that consists of assets that are designated for a charitable purpose and that are paid over to the trust after the expiration of a life estate or intermediate estate. — Also termed split-interest trust.

charitable trust. A trust created to benefit a specific charity, specific charities, or the general public rather than a private individual or entity. • Charitable trusts are often eligible for favorable tax treatment. — Also termed public trust; charitable use. See CY PRES. Cf. private trust.

Clafin trust. See indestructible trust.

Clifford trust. An irrevocable trust, set up for at least ten years and a day, whereby income from the trust property is paid to the beneficiary but the property itself reverts back to the settlor when the trust expires. • These trusts were often used by parents — with their children as beneficiaries — to shelter investment income, but the Tax Reform Act of 1986 eliminated the tax advantage by imposing the kiddie tax and by taxing the income of settlers with a reversionary interest that exceeds 5% of the trust’s value. This term gets its name from Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331, 60 S.Ct. 554 (1940). — Also termed short-term trust.
common-law trust. See business trust.

community trust. See community trust.

complete voluntary trust. See executed trust.

complex trust. 1. A trust having elaborate provisions. 2. See discretionary trust.

constructive trust. A trust imposed by a court on equitable grounds against one who has obtained property by wrongdoing, thereby preventing the wrongfull holder from being unjustly enriched. • Such a trust creates no fiduciary relationship. — Also termed implied trust; involuntary trust; trust de son tort; trust ex delicto; trust ex maleficio; remedial trust; trust in invitus. Cf. resulting trust.

“A constructive trust is the formula through which the conscience of equity finds expression. When property has been acquired in such circumstances that the holder of the legal title may not in good conscience retain the beneficial interest, equity converts him into a trustee.” Beatty v. Guggenheim Exploration Co., 122 N.E. 378, 380 (N.Y. 1919) (Cardozo, J.).

“It is sometimes said that when there are sufficient grounds for imposing a constructive trust, the court ‘constructs a trust.’ The expression is, of course, absurd. The word ‘constructive’ is derived from the verb ‘construe,’ not from the verb ‘construct.’ . . . The court construes the circumstances in the sense that it explains or interprets them; it does not construct them.” 5 Austin W. Scott & William F. Fratcher, The Law of Trusts § 462.4 (4th ed. 1987).

contingent trust. An express trust depending for its operation on a future event.

credit-shelter trust. See bypass trust.

custodial trust. A revocable trust in which the trustee manages property in the event of the disability of the primary beneficiary, usu. intended for use by elderly property owners. • This type of trust is sometimes used as a will substitute to avoid probate in disposing of trust property when the primary beneficiary dies.

destructible trust. A trust that can be destroyed by the happening of an event or by operation of law.

directory trust. 1. A trust that is not completely and finally settled by the instrument creating it, but only defined in its general purpose and to be carried into detail according to later specific directions. 2. See fixed trust.

direct trust. See express trust.

discretionary trust. A trust in which the trustee alone decides whether or how to distribute the trust property or its income to the beneficiary. • The beneficiary, in other words, has no say in the matter.

donative trust. A trust requiring no payment of consideration by a beneficiary.

dry trust. 1. A trust that merely vests legal title in a trustee and does not require that trustee to do anything. 2. See passive trust.

educational trust. A trust to found, endow, or support a school.

equipment trust. See equipment trust.

estate trust. A trust all or part of the income of which is to be accumulated during the surviving spouse’s life and added to the trust property, with the accumulated income and trust property being paid to the estate of the surviving spouse at death. • This type of trust is commonly used to qualify property for the marital deduction.

ex delicto trust (da-lik-toh). A trust that is created for an illegal purpose, esp. to prevent the settlor’s creditors from collecting their claims out of the trust property.

executed trust. A trust in which the estates and interests in the subject matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust and require no further instruments to complete them. — Also termed complete voluntary trust.

executory trust (eg-zek-yo-tor-ee). A trust in which the instrument creating the trust is intended to be provisional only, and further conveyances are contemplated by the trust instrument before the terms of the trust can be carried out. — Also termed imperfect trust.

express active trust. An active trust created under a will that confers upon the executor authority to generally manage the estate property and pay over the net income to the devisees or legatees.

express private passive trust. A trust in which land is conveyed to or held by one person in trust for another, without any power being expressly or impliedly given to the trustee to take actual possession of the land or exercise any ownership rights over it, except at the beneficiary’s direction.

express trust. A trust created with the settlor’s express intent, usu. declared in writing; an ordinary trust as opposed to a resulting trust or a constructive trust. — Also termed direct trust.

fixed trust. A trust in which the trustee may not exercise any discretion over the trust’s management or distributions. — Also termed directory trust; nondiscretionary trust.

foreign-situs trust (si-tas). A trust that owes its existence to foreign law. • For tax trust

purposes, this type of trust is treated as a nonresident alien individual.

foreign trust. A trust created and administered under foreign law.

generation-skipping trust. A trust that is established to transfer (usu. principal) assets to a skip person (a beneficiary more than one generation removed from the settlor). ● The transfer is often accomplished by giving some control or benefits (such as trust income) of the assets to a nonskip person, often a member of the generation between the settlor and skip person. This type of trust is subject to a generation-skipping transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601 et seq. See DEEMED TRANSFEROR; GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; SKIP PERSON.

governmental trust. 1. A type of charitable trust established to provide a community with facilities ordinarily supplied by the government, esp. by a municipality, and to promote purposes that are sufficiently beneficial to the community to justify permitting the property to be perpetually devoted to those purposes. ● Examples of such facilities include public buildings, bridges, streets, parks, schools, and hospitals. 2. A type of charitable trust established for general governmental or municipal purposes, such as defraying the expenses of a governmental entity or paying the public debt. Restatement (Second) of Trusts §§ 373, 374 (1959).

grantor trust. A trust in which the settlor retains control over the trust property or its income to such an extent that the settlor is taxed on the trust's income. See Clifford trust.

honorary trust. A trust that is legally invalid and unenforceable because it lacks a proper beneficiary. ● Examples include trusts that honor dead persons, maintain cemetery plots, or benefit animals.

Illinois land trust. See land trust.

illusory trust. An arrangement that looks like a trust but, because of powers retained in the settlor, has no real substance and is not a completed trust.

imperfect trust. See executory trust.

implied trust. See constructive trust.

indestructible trust. A trust that, because of the settlor's wishes, cannot be prematurely terminated by the beneficiary. — Also termed Claflin trust.

insurance trust. A trust whose principal consists of insurance policies or their proceeds.

inter vivos trust (in-ter vi-vohs or -vee-vohs). A trust that is created and takes effect during the settlor's lifetime. — Also termed living trust. Cf. testamentary trust.

investment trust. See investment company under COMPANY.

involuntary trust. See constructive trust.

irrevocable trust (i-rev-a-ka-bal). A trust that cannot be terminated by the settlor once it is created. ● In most states, a trust will be deemed irrevocable unless the settlor specifies otherwise.

land trust. A land-ownership arrangement by which a trustee holds both legal and equitable title to land while the beneficiary retains the power to direct the trustee to manage the property, and draw income from the trust. — Also termed Illinois land trust; naked land trust.

life-insurance trust. A trust consisting of one or more life-insurance policies payable to the trust when the insured dies.

limited trust. A trust created for a limited period. Cf. perpetual trust.

liquidating trust. A trust designed to be liquidated as soon as possible. ● An example is a trust into which a decedent's business is placed to safeguard the business until it can be sold.

living trust. See inter vivos trust.

marital-deduction trust. A testamentary trust created to take full advantage of the marital deduction; esp., a trust entitling a spouse to lifetime income from the trust and sufficient control over the trust to include the trust property in the spouse's estate at death.

Massachusetts trust. See business trust.

Medicaid-qualifying trust. A trust that is deemed to have been created in an effort to reduce someone's assets so that the person may qualify for Medicaid, and that will be included as an asset for purposes of determining the person's eligibility. ● Someone who wants to apply and qualify for Medicaid, but who has too many assets to qualify, will sometimes set up a trust — or have a spouse or custodian set up a trust — using the applicant's own assets, under which the applicant may be the beneficiary of all or part of the payments from the trust, which are distributed by a trustee with discretion to make trust payments to the applicant. Such a trust may be presumed to have been established for the purpose of attempting to qualify for Medicaid, and may be counted as an asset of the applicant, resulting in a denial of benefits.

ministerial trust. See passive trust.

mixed trust. A trust established to benefit both private individuals and charities.

naked land trust. See land trust.

naked trust. See passive trust.

nominal trust. See passive trust.

nominee trust. 1. A trust in which the beneficiaries have the power to direct the trustee’s actions regarding the trust property. 2. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more persons or corporations, under a written declaration of trust, declare that they will hold any property that they acquire as trustees for the benefit of one or more undisclosed beneficiaries.

nondiscretionary trust. See fixed trust.

oral trust. 1. A trust created by the settlor’s spoken statements as opposed to a written agreement. • Trusts of real property must usu. be in writing (because of the statute of frauds), but trusts of personal property usu. can be created orally. — Also termed parol trust. 2. A trust created by operation of law, such as a resulting trust or a constructive trust.

passive trust. A trust in which the trustee has no duty other than to transfer the property to the beneficiary. — Also termed dry trust; nominal trust; simple trust; naked trust; ministerial trust. Cf. active trust.

pension trust. An employer-funded pension plan; esp., a pension plan in which the employer transfers to trustees amounts sufficient to cover the benefits payable to the employees.

perpetual trust. A trust that is to continue as long as the need for it continues, such as for the lifetime of a beneficiary or the term of a particular charity. Cf. limited trust.

personal trust. See private trust.

pourover trust. An inter vivos trust that receives property (usu. the residual estate) from a will upon the testator’s death. Cf. pourover will under WILL.

power-of-appointment trust. A trust, used to qualify property for the marital deduction, under which property is left in trust for the surviving spouse. • The trustee must distribute income to the spouse for life, and the power of appointment is given to the spouse or to his or her estate.

precatory trust (pred-a-tor-ee). A trust that the law will recognize to carry out the wishes of the testator or grantor even though the statement in question is in the nature of an entreaty or recommendation rather than a positive command.

presumptive trust. See resulting trust.

private trust. A trust created for the financial benefit of one or more designated beneficiaries rather than for the public benefit; an ordinary trust as opposed to a charitable trust. • Three elements must be present for a private trust: (1) sufficient words to create it, (2) a definite subject matter, and (3) a certain or ascertained object. — Also termed personal trust. Cf. charitable trust.

protective trust. A trust that is designed to protect the trust property to ensure the continued support of the beneficiary.

"In a broad sense, a spendthrift, support, or other similarly protective trust is one created to provide a fund for the maintenance of the beneficiary and at the same time to secure it against the beneficiary’s improvidence or incapacity." 76 Am. Jur. 2d Trusts § 121 (1992).

public trust. See charitable trust.

purchase-money resulting trust. A resulting trust that arises when one person buys property but directs the seller to transfer the property and its title to another. • The buyer is the beneficiary, and the holder is the trustee. — Abbr. PMRT.

QTIP trust (kuh-tip). A testamentary trust established to transfer assets between spouses when one spouse dies. • Under this trust, the assets — referred to as the qualified-terminable-interest property (QTIP) — are considered part of the surviving spouse’s estate and are therefore not subject to the estate tax on the decedent spouse’s estate.

real-estate investment trust. See REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

reciprocal trust. A trust arrangement between two parties in which one party is beneficiary of a trust established by the other party, and vice versa. • Such trusts are common between husband and wife.

remedial trust. See constructive trust.

resulting trust. A trust imposed by law when property is transferred under circumstances suggesting that the transferor did not intend for the transferee to have the beneficial interest in the property. — Also termed implied trust; presumptive trust. Cf. constructive trust.

revocable trust (rev-a-ka-bal). A trust in which the settlor reserves the right to terminate the trust and recover the trust property and any undistributed income.

savings-account trust. See Totten trust.

savings-bank trust. See Totten trust.

secret trust. A testamentary trust giving property to a legatee or devisee who orally promises to hold it in trust for another person.

self-settled trust. A trust in which the settlor is also the person who is to receive the benefits from the trust, usu. set up in an attempt to protect the trust assets from creditors. • In most states, such a trust will not protect trust assets from the settlor’s creditors. Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 156 (1959).

shifting trust. An express trust providing that, upon a specified contingency, it may operate in favor of an additional or substitut-ed beneficiary.

short-term trust. See Clifford trust.

simple trust. 1. A trust that must distribute all income as it accrues. 2. See passive trust.

special trust. See active trust.

spendthrift trust. A trust that prohibits the beneficiary’s interest from being assigned and also prevents a creditor from attaching that interest.

split-interest trust. See charitable-remainder trust.

sprinkling trust. A trust in which the trustee has discretion to decide how much will be given to each beneficiary. — Also termed spray trust.

support trust. A trust in which the trustee pays to the beneficiary only as much trust income as the trustee believes is needed for the beneficiary’s support. • As with a spendthrift trust, the beneficiary’s interest cannot be assigned or reached by creditors.

tentative trust. See Totten trust.

testamentary trust (tes-ta-men-ta-ree or -tree). A trust that is created by a will and takes effect when the settlor (testator) dies. — Also termed trust under will. Cf. inter vivos trust.

Totten trust. A revocable trust created by one’s deposit of money in one’s own name as a trustee for another. • A Totten trust is commonly used to indicate a successor to the account without having to create a will. — Also termed tentative trust; bank-account trust; savings-account trust; savings-bank trust.

“A deposit by one person of his own money, in his own name as trustee for another, standing alone, does not establish an irrevocable trust during the lifetime of the depositor. It is a tentative trust merely, revocable at will, until the depositor dies or completes the gift in his lifetime by some unequivocal act or declaration, such as delivery of the pass book or notice to the beneficiary. In case the depositor dies before the beneficiary without revocation, or some decisive act or declaration of disaffirmance, the presumption arises that an absolute trust was created as to the balance on hand at the death of the depositor.” In re Totten, 179 N.Y. 112, 125-26 (1904) (Vann, J.).

transgressive trust. A trust that violates the rule against perpetuities.

trust de son tort. See constructive trust.

trust ex delicto. See constructive trust.

trust ex maleficio. See constructive trust.

trust in invitum. See constructive trust.

trust under will. See testamentary trust.

unit-investment trust. 1. A trust in which funds are pooled and invested in income-producing securities. • Units of the trust are sold to investors, who maintain an interest in the trust in proportion to their investment. 2. An investment company that gives a shareholder an undivided interest in a fixed pool of securities held by the trustee. • This type of company can be organized in several ways (as by trust indenture, contract of custodianship or agency, or similar instrument), but is most commonly organized with a trust indenture. Such a company does not have a board of directors and issues only redeemable securities, each of which represents an undivided interest in a unit of specified securities. 15 USCA § 80a-4. See investment company under COMPANY.

unitrust. See UNITRUST.

vertical trust. Antitrust. A combination that gathers together under a single ownership a number of businesses or plants engaged in successive stages of production or marketing.

voluntary trust. 1. A trust that is not founded on consideration. • One having legal title to property may create a voluntary trust by (1) declaring that the property is to be held in trust for another, and (2) transferring the legal title to a third person who acts as trustee. 2. An obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another.

voting trust. A trust in which corporate stockholders transfer their shares to a trustee for the purpose of creating a voting bloc. • The stockholders still receive dividends under such an arrangement. Cf. VOTING GROUP.
“At common law there was great suspicion of voting trusts. One commentator described a voting trust as 'little more than a vehicle for corporate kidnapping.' This attitude has largely disappeared. State statutes now uniformly recognize the validity of voting trusts and they have received a more hospitable judicial reception.” Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 199 (3d ed. 1991).

wasting trust. A trust in which the trust property is gradually depleted by periodic payments to the beneficiary.

trust agreement. See declaration of trust (2) under DECLARATION (1).

trustbuster, n. A person — esp. a federal officer — who seeks the dissolution of trusts under the antitrust laws. See TRUST (1).

trust certificate. See EQUIPMENT TRUST CERTIFICATE.

trust company. See COMPANY.

trust deed. 1. See declaration of trust (2) under DECLARATION. 2. See deed of trust under DEED.

trust de son tort (da sown [or son] tor[t]). See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

trustee (tras-tee), n. 1. One who, having legal title to property, holds it in trust for the benefit of another and owes a fiduciary duty to that beneficiary. • Generally, a trustee's duties are to convert to cash all debts and securities that are not qualified legal investments, to reinvest the cash in proper securities, to protect and preserve the trust property, and to ensure that it is employed solely for the beneficiary, in accordance with the directions contained in the trust instrument.

bare trustee. A trustee of a passive trust. • A bare trustee has no duty other than to transfer the property to the beneficiary. See passive trust under TRUST.

corporate trustee. A corporation that is empowered by its charter to act as a trustee, such as a bank or trust company.

indenture trustee. A trustee named in a trust indenture and charged with holding legal title to the trust property; a trustee under an indenture.

joint trustee. See COTRUSTEE.

judicial trustee. A trustee appointed by a court to execute a trust.

quasi-trustee. One who benefits from a breach of a trust to a great enough degree to become liable as a trustee.

successor trustee. A trustee who succeeds an earlier trustee, usu. as provided in the trust agreement.

testamentary trustee (tees-ta-men-tee or -tree). A trustee appointed by or acting under a will; one appointed to carry out a trust created by a will.

trustee ad litem (ad li-tem or -tam). A trustee appointed by the court.

trustee de son tort (da sown [or son] tor[t]). A person who, without legal authority, administers a living person’s property to the detriment of the property owner. See constructive trust under TRUST.

trustee ex maleficio (eks mal-o-fish-ee-oh). A person who is guilty of wrongful or fraudulent conduct and is held by equity to the duty of a trustee, in relation to the subject matter, to prevent him or her from profiting from the wrongdoing.

2. Bankruptcy. An officer of the court who is elected by creditors or appointed by a judge to act as the representative of a bankruptcy estate. • The trustee's duties include (1) collecting and reducing to cash the assets of the estate, (2) operating the debtor's business with court approval if appropriate to preserve the value of business assets, (3) examining the debtor at a meeting of creditors, (4) filing inventories and making periodic reports to the court on the financial condition of the estate, (5) investigating the debtor's financial affairs, (6) examining proofs of claims and objecting to improper claims, (7) furnishing information relating to the bankruptcy to interested parties, and (8) opposing discharge through bankruptcy, if advisable. — Also termed (in sense 2) bankruptcy trustee; trustee in bankruptcy.

interim trustee. A bankruptcy trustee appointed to perform all the functions and duties of a trustee until the regular trustee is selected and qualified. • Before the meeting of creditors, the interim trustee often preliminarily investigates the debtor’s assets and financial affairs.

trustee, vb. 1. To serve as trustee. 2. To place (a person or property) in the hands of one or more trustees. 3. To appoint (a person) as trustee, often of a bankrupt's estate in order to restrain a creditor from collecting moneys due. 4. To attach (the effects of a debtor) in the hands of a third person. trustee, U.S. See UNITED STATES TRUSTEE.

trustee ad litem. See TRUSTEE (1).

trustee ex maleficio. See TRUSTEE (1).

trustee in bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY TRUSTEE.

trustee process. See FACTORIZING PROCESS.

trusteeship. 1. The office, status, or function of a trustee. 2. Int'l law. Administration or supervision of a territory by one or more countries, esp. under a U.N. commission. Cf. MANDATE (6).

trust estate. See CORPUS (2).

trust ex delicto. See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust ex maleficio. See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust fund. The property held in a trust by a trustee; CORPUS (2).

common trust fund. A trust fund set up within a bank trust department to combine the assets of numerous small trusts to achieve greater investment diversification. • Common trust funds are regulated by state law.

trust-fund doctrine. The principle that the assets of an insolvent company, including paid and unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock, are held as a trust fund to which the company’s creditors may look for payment of their claims. • The creditors may follow the property constituting this fund, and may use it to reduce the debts, unless it has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice. — Also termed trust-fund theory.

trust indenture. See INDENTURE.

Trust Indenture Act. A federal law, enacted in 1939, designed to protect investors of certain types of bonds by requiring that (1) the SEC approve the trust indenture, (2) the indenture include certain protective clauses and exclude certain exculpatory clauses, and (3) the trustees be independent of the issuing company. 15 USCA §§ 77aaa et seq.

trust in invitum (in in-vi-tam). See constructive trust under TRUST.

trust instrument. See declaration of trust under DECLARATION.

trust legacy. See LEGACY.

trust officer. A trust-company official responsible for administering funds held by the company as a trustee.

trustor. One who creates a trust; SETTLOR (1).

trust ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

trust process. See PROCESS (1).

trust property. See CORPUS (2).

trust receipt. 1. A pre-UCC security device — now governed by Article 9 of the Code — consisting of a receipt stating that the wholesale buyer has possession of the goods for the benefit of the financier. • Today there must usu. be a security agreement coupled with a filed financing statement. 2. A method of financing commercial transactions by which title passes directly from the manufacturer or seller to a banker or lender, who as owner delivers the goods to the dealer on whose behalf the banker or lender is acting, and to whom title ultimately goes when the banker’s or lender’s primary right has been satisfied.

trust res (reez or rays). See CORPUS (2).

trust territory. See TERRITORY.

trust under will. See testamentary trust under TRUST.

trusty, n. A convict or prisoner who is considered trustworthy by prison authorities and therefore given special privileges.

truth. 1. A fully accurate account of events; factuality. 2. Defamation. An affirmative defense by which the defendant asserts that the alleged defamatory statement is substantially accurate.

Truth in Lending Act. See CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT. — Abbr. TILA.

try, vb. To examine judicially; to examine and resolve (a dispute) by means of a trial.
try title. The judicial examination of a title. See TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE; action to quiet title under ACTION.

TSCA. abbr. Toxic Substances Control Act. 42 USCA §§ 2601 et seq.

Tucker Act. A federal law enacted in 1887 to ameliorate the inadequacies of the original authority of the Court of Claims by extending that court's jurisdiction to include (1) claims founded on the Constitution, a federal statute, or a federal regulation, and (2) damage claims in cases not arising in tort.

turncoat witness. See WITNESS.

turnkey, adj. 1. (Of a product) provided in a state of readiness for immediate use . 2. Of, relating to, or involving a product provided in this manner .

turnkey, n. A jailer; esp., one charged with keeping the keys to a jail or prison.

turnkey contract. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract under CONTRACT.

turnover duty. Maritime law. A shipowner's obligation to provide safe working conditions and to give notice of any nonobvious hazards regarding instruments and areas that the shipowner turns over to the stevedore and longshoremen while the ship is being loaded or unloaded. — Cf. ACTIVE-OPERATIONS DUTY; INTERVENTION DUTY.

turnover order. See ORDER (2).

turn state's evidence, vb. To cooperate with prosecutors and testify against other criminal defendants <after hours of intense negotiations, the suspect accepted a plea bargain and agreed to turn state's evidence>.

turntable doctrine. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE. • This term gets its name from the enticing yet dangerous qualities of railroad turntables, which have frequently been the subject of personal-injury litigation.

turpitude (tar-po-t[yl]ood). See MORAL TURPITUDE.

tutela (ty[yl]oo-la), n. [Latin "tutelage"] Roman law. A type of guardianship either for those not having reached puberty (tutela impuberum) or for women (tutela mulierum). • The guardian was called the tutor, the ward the pupillus. Cf. CURA.

tutelage (ty[yl]oo-ta-lij), n. 1. The act of protecting or guiding; guardianship. 2. Int'l law. The state of being under the care and management of an international organization such as the League of Nations or United Nations. • This term applies, for example, to the status of a people who do not yet benefit from a fully operational government of their own — such as people displaced by war and living in a territory that will in the future be given its autonomy.

tutor, n. 1. One who teaches; esp., a private instructor. 2. Civil law. A guardian of a minor; a person appointed to have the care of the minor's person and estate. • The guardian of a minor past a certain age is called a curator and has duties somewhat different from those of a tutor.

tutorship. Civil law. The office and power of a tutor; the power that an individual has, sui juris, to take care of one who cannot care for himself or herself. • The four types of tutorship are (1) tutorship by nature, (2) tutorship by will, (3) tutorship by the effect of the law, and (4) tutorship by judicial appointment. La. Civ. Code art. 247.

tutorship by nature. 1. Tutorship of a minor child that belongs by right to a surviving parent. 2. Tutorship of a minor child that belongs to the parent under whose care the child has been placed following divorce or judicial separation. • If the parents are awarded joint custody, both have cotutorship and equal authority, privileges, and responsibilities. La. Civ. Code art. 250.

tutorship by will. Tutorship that is created (1) by the will of the parent who dies last, or (2) by any declaration of the surviving father or mother (or the parent who is the curator of the other spouse), executed before a notary and two witnesses. La. Civ. Code art. 257.

TVA. abbr. TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY.

Twelfth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1804, that altered the electoral-college system by separating the balloting for presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

twelve-day rule. Criminal procedure. A rule in some jurisdictions requiring that a person charged with a felony be given a preliminary examination no later than 12 days after the arraignment on the original warrant.

twelve-month liquidation. See LIQUIDATION.

Twelve Tables. Roman law. The earliest surviving legislation enacted by the Romans, written on 12 tablets in the 5th century B.C. • The Tables set out all the main rights and duties of Roman citizens, including debtors' rights, family law, criminal law, wills, tests, and public law. They substituted a written body of laws, easily accessible and binding on all citizens of Rome, for an unwritten usage accessible to only a few. The law of the Twelve Tables was also known as the Lex Duodecim Tabularum.

"The Twelve Tables continued to be recognized for many centuries as the fundamental law of the Romans; they did not formally lose this character until it was taken from them by the legislation of Justinian." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 74-75 (1881).

Twenty-first Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1933, that changed the date of the presidential and vice-presidential inaugurations from March 4 to January 20, and the date for congressional convention from March 4 to January 3, thereby eliminating the short session of Congress, during which a number of members sat who had not been reelected to office. — Also termed lame-duck amendment.

Twenty-fifth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1967, that established rules of succession for the presidency and vice presidency in the event of death, resignation, or incapacity.

Twenty-first Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1933, that repealed the 18th Amendment (which established national Prohibition) and returned the power to regulate alcohol to the states.

Twenty-fourth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1964, that prohibits the federal and state governments from restricting the right to vote in a federal election because of one's failure to pay a poll tax or other tax.

Twenty-second Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1951, that prohibits a person from being elected President more than twice (or, if the person succeeded to the office with more than half the predecessor's term remaining, more than once).

Twenty-seventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1992, that prevents a pay raise for senators and representatives from taking effect until a new Congress convenes. • This amendment was proposed as part of the original Bill of Rights in 1789, but it took 203 years for the required three-fourths of the states to ratify it.

Twenty-sixth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1971, that sets the minimum voting age at 18 for all state and federal elections.

Twenty-third Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1961, that allows District of Columbia residents to vote in presidential elections.

twisting, n. An insurance agent's or company's misrepresenting or misstating facts, or giving an incomplete comparison of policies, to induce an insured to give up a policy in one company and buy another company's policy.

two-dismissal rule. The rule that a notice of voluntary dismissal operates as an adjudication on the merits — not merely as a dismissal without prejudice — when filed by a plaintiff who has already dismissed the same claim in another court.

two-issue rule. The rule that if multiple issues were submitted to a trial jury and at least one of them is error-free, the appellate court should presume that the jury based its verdict on the proper issue — not on an erroneous one — and should therefore affirm the judgment.

two-stage trial. See bifurcated trial under TRIAL.

two-tier offer. A two-step technique by which a bidder tries to acquire a target corporation, the first step involving a cash tender offer and the second usu. a merger in which the target company's remaining shareholders receive securities from the bidder (these securities ordinarily being less favorable than the cash given in the first step).

two-witness rule. 1. The rule that, to support a perjury conviction, two independent witnesses (or one witness along with corroborating evidence) must establish that the alleged perjurer gave false testimony. 2. The rule, as stated in the U.S. Constitution, that no person may be convicted of treason without two witnesses to the same overt act — or unless the accused

tying, adj. Antitrust. Of or relating to an arrangement whereby a seller sells a product to a buyer only if the buyer purchases another product from the seller (tying agreement).

tying arrangement. Antitrust. 1. A seller’s agreement to sell one product or service only if the buyer also buys a different product or service. • The product or service that the buyer wants to buy is known as the tying product or tying service; the different product or service that the seller insists on selling is known as the tied product or tied service. Tying arrangements may be illegal under the Sherman or Clayton Act if their effect is too anticompetitive. 2. A seller’s refusal to sell one product or service unless the buyer also buys a different product or service. — Also termed tying agreement; tie-in; tie-in arrangement. Cf. reciprocal dealing.

tyranny, n. Arbitrary or despotistic government; the severe and autocratic exercise of sovereign power, whether vested constitutionally in one ruler or usurped by that ruler by breaking down the division and distribution of governmental powers. — tyrannical, tyrannous, adj.

tyrant, n. A sovereign or ruler, legitimate or not, who wields power unjustly and arbitrarily to oppress the citizenry; a despot.

unconscionability (an-kon-sha-na-bil-a-tee). 1. Extreme unfairness. 2. The principle that a court may refuse to enforce a contract that is unfair or oppressive because of procedural abuses during contract formation or because of overreaching contractual terms, esp. terms that are unreasonably favorable to one party while precluding meaningful choice for the other party.  • Because unconscionability depends on circumstances at the time the contract is formed, a later rise in market price is irrelevant.

"Traditionally, a bargain was said to be unconscionable in an action at law if it was "such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other;" damages were then limited to those to which the aggrieved party was "equitably" entitled. Hume v. United States, 132 U.S. 406, [10 S.Ct. 134] (1889), quoting Earl of Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Sen. 125, 155, 28 Eng. Rep. 82, 100 (Ch. 1750). Even though a contract was fully enforceable in an action for damages, equitable remedies such as specific performance were refused where 'the sum total of its provisions drives too hard a bargain for a court of conscience to assist.' Campbell Soup Co. v. Wentz, 172 F.2d 80, 84 (3d Cir. 1948).

Modern procedural reforms have blurred the distinction between remedies at law and in equity. For contracts for the sale of goods, Uniform Commercial Code § 2-302 states the rule of this Section without distinction between law and equity. Comment 1 to that section adds, 'The principle is one of the prevention of oppression and unfair surprise ... and not of disturbance of allocation of risks because of superior bargaining power.' Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 208 cmt. b (1981).

"Nowhere among the [Uniform Commercial Code's many definitions is there one of unconscionability. That the term is incapable of precise definition is a source of both strength and weakness." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 4.28, at 310 (1982).

procedural unconscionability.  Unconscionability resulting from improprieties in contract formation (such as oral misrepresentations or disparities in bargaining position) rather than from the terms of the contract itself.  • This type of unconscionability suggests that there was no meeting of the minds.

substantive unconscionability.  Unconscionability resulting from actual contract terms that are unduly harsh, commercially unreasonable, and grossly unfair given the existing circumstances.

unconscionable (an-kon-sha-na-bal), adj. 1. (Of a person) having no conscience; unscrupulous <an unconscionable used-car salesman>. 2. (Of an act or transaction) showing no regard for conscience; affronting the sense of justice, decency, or reasonableness <the contract is void as unconscionable>. Cf. CONSCIONABLE.

unconscionable agreement.  See AGREEMENT.

unconscionable contract.  See unconscionable agreement under AGREEMENT. unconscious, adj. Without awareness; not conscious. • A person who commits a criminal act while unconscious may be relieved from liability for the act.

unconstitutional, adj. Contrary to or in conflict with a constitution, esp. the U.S. Constitution <the law is unconstitutional because it violates the First Amendment's free-speech guarantee>. Cf. NONCONSTITUTIONAL.

unconstitutional-conditions doctrine. The principle that a government may not condition the receipt of government benefits on the recipient's surrender of constitutional rights (esp. First Amendment rights). • For example, a television station that receives public funds cannot be forced to refrain from endorsing political candidates.

uncontrollable, adj. Incapable of being controlled.

uncontrollable impulse. See IMPULSE.

uncontrolled-securities-offering distribution. See securities-offering distribution under DISTRIBUTION.

uncore prist (un[g]-kor prist). [Law French “still ready”] Hist. A plea by which a party alleges readiness to pay or perform what is justly demanded.

Yet sometimes, after tender and refusal of a debt, if the creditor harasses his debtor with an action, it then becomes necessary for the defendant to acknowledge the debt, and plead the tender; adding, that ... he is still ready, uncore prist, to discharge it .... 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 303 (1768).

uncounseled, adj. Without the benefit or participation of legal counsel <an uncounseled conviction> <an uncounseled defendant>.

uncovered option. See naked option under OPTION (4).

under-tutor. Civil law. A person appointed by a court to represent a minor under the care of a tutor whenever the interests of the minor conflict with that of the tutor. See TUTORSHIP.

underwriter. 1. INSURER. 2. One who buys stock from the issuer with an intent to resell it to the public; a person or entity, esp. an investment banker, who guarantees the sale of newly issued securities by purchasing all or part of the shares for resale to the public.

“The term 'underwriter' derives its meaning from former British insurance practices. When insuring their cargo shippers would seek out investors to insure their property. The insurers would add their signatures and would write their names under those of the shipper; hence the term 'underwriters.' Both in terms of the insurance industry and the securities markets, the concept of underwriting has expanded significantly since its inception.” Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 2.1, at 57 (2d ed. 1994).

chartered life underwriter. An underwriter who has satisfied the requirements set forth by The American College (formerly The American College of Life Underwriters) to be designated a life insurance underwriter. — Abbr. CLU.

underwriting, n. 1. The act of assuming a risk by insuring it; the insurance of life or property. See INSURANCE. 2. The act of agreeing to buy all or part of a new issue of securities to be offered for public sale. — underwrite, vb.

best-efforts underwriting. Underwriting in which an investment banker agrees to direct, but not guarantee, the public sale of the issuer’s securities. • The underwriter, or selling group, sells the securities as agent for the issuer, and any unsold securities are never issued.

firm-commitment underwriting. Underwriting in which the underwriter agrees to buy all the shares to be issued and remain financially responsible for any securities not purchased. • The underwriter, or underwriting group, buys the securities from the issuer and resells them as principal. In this type of underwriting, securities that cannot be sold to the public are owned by the underwriter, and the issuer is paid for those securities as well as the others.

standby underwriting. Underwriting in which the underwriter agrees, for a fee, to buy from the issuer any unsold shares remaining after the public offering. — Also termed strict underwriting.

undocumented alien. See illegal alien under ALIEN. undue, adj. 1. Archaic. Not yet owed; not currently payable <an undue debt>. 2. Excessive or unwarranted <undue burden> <undue influence>.

undue-burden test. Constitutional law. The Supreme Court test stating that a law regulating abortion will be struck down if it places a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman’s right to obtain an abortion. • This test replaced the “trimester analysis,” set forth in Roe v. Wade, in which the state’s ability to restrict abortion increased after each trimester of pregnancy. Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (1992).

undue influence. 1. The improper use of power or trust in a way that deprives a person of free will and substitutes another’s objective. • Consent to a contract, transaction, relationship, or conduct is voidable if the consent is obtained through undue influence.

“Undue influence is unfair persuasion of a party who is under the domination of the person exercising the persuasion or who by virtue of the relation between them is justified in assuming that the person will not act in a manner inconsistent with his welfare.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 177(1) (1981).

“When at the turn of the twentieth century, the common law doctrine of duress was expanded to provide relief for coercion irrespective of the means of coercion, much of the work of undue influence became unnecessary. The doctrine has a much more specialized role today, although often enough the precedents decided when the more general doctrine prevailed are cited and quoted to the general confusion of the profession. Today the gist of the doctrine is unfair persuasion rather than coercion. Euphoria rather than fear is often, but certainly not always, the state of mind of the party unduly influenced.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-9, at 351-52 (3d ed. 1987).

2. Wills & estates. Coercion that destroys a testator’s free will and substitutes another’s objectives in its place. • When a beneficiary actively procures the execution of a will, a presumption of undue influence may be raised, based on the confidential relationship between the influencer and the testator. — Also termed improper influence. See COERCION; DURESS.

unfair competition. 1. Dishonest or fraudulent rivalry in trade and commerce; esp., the practice of endeavoring to substitute one’s own goods or products in the market for those of another by means of imitating or counterfeiting the name, brand, size, shape, or other distinctive characteristic of the article or its packaging. 2. The body of law protecting the first user of such a name, brand, size, shape, or other distinctive characteristic against an imitating or counterfeiting competitor.

unfair hearing. See HEARING.

unfair labor practice. Any conduct prohibited by state or federal law governing the relations among employers, employees, and labor organizations. • Examples of unfair labor practices by an employer include (1) interfering with protected employee rights, such as the right to self-organization, (2) discriminating against employees for union-related activities, (3) retaliating against employees who have invoked their rights, and (4) refusing to engage in collective bargaining. Examples of unfair labor practices by a labor organization include causing an employer to discriminate against an employee, engaging in an illegal strike or boycott, causing an employer to pay for work not to be performed (i.e., featherbedding), and refusing to engage in collective bargaining. 29 USCA §§ 151–169.

unfair persuasion. Contracts. A type of undue influence in which a stronger party achieves a result by means that seriously impair the weaker party’s free and competent exercise of judgment. • Unfair persuasion is a lesser form of undue influence than duress and misrepresentation. The two primary factors to be considered are the unavailability of independent advice and the susceptibility of the person persuaded. See UNDUE INFLUENCE (1).

unfair surprise. A situation in which a party, having had no notice of some action or proffered evidence, is unprepared to answer or refute it.

unfair trade. An inequitable business practice; esp. the act or an instance of a competitor’s repeating of words in a way that conveys a misrepresentation that materially injures the person who first used the words, by appropriating credit of some kind earned by the first user.

unfit, adj. 1. Unsuitable; not adapted or qualified for a particular use or service <the buyer returned the unfit goods to the seller and asked for a refund>. 2. Family law. Morally unqualified; incompetent <the judge found her to be an unfit mother and awarded custody to the father>.

unforeseen, adj. Not foreseen; not expected <unforeseen circumstances>.

unfriendly suitor. See CORPORATE RAIDER.

unhandsome dealing. Archaic. See SHARP PRACTICE.

uniform, adj. Characterized by a lack of variation; identical or consistent.

uniform act. A law drafted with the intention that it will be adopted by all or most of the states; esp., UNIFORM LAW. Cf. MODEL ACT.

Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. An act, in force in all states, that sets out a standard (based on the child’s residence in and connections with the state) by which a state court determines whether it has jurisdiction over a particular child-custody matter or whether it must recognize a custody decree issued by another state’s court. — Abbr. UC-CJA. Cf. PARENTAL KIDNAPPING PREVENTION ACT.

Uniform Commercial Code. A uniform law that governs commercial transactions, including sales of goods, secured transactions, and negotiable instruments. • The Code has been adopted in some form by every state. — Abbr. UCC.
Uniform Consumer Credit Code. A uniform law designed to simplify and modernize the consumer credit and usury laws, to improve consumer understanding of the terms of credit transactions, to protect consumers against unfair practices, and the like. • This Code has been adopted by only a few states. — Abbr. UCCC; U3C. — Also termed Consumer Credit Code. See CONSUMER CREDIT PROTECTION ACT.

Uniform Controlled Substances Act. A uniform act, adopted by many states and the federal government, governing the sale, use, and distribution of drugs. 21 USCA §§ 801 et seq.

Uniform Crime Reports. A series of annual criminological studies (each entitled Crime in the United States) prepared by the FBI. • The reports include data on eight index offenses, statistics on arrests, and information on offenders, crime rates, and the like. — Abbr. UCR.

Uniform Customs and Practice for Commercial Documentary Credits. A publication of the International Chamber of Commerce that codifies widespread customs of bankers and merchants relating to the mechanics and operation of letters of credit. • Courts look to this publication to supplement and help interpret primary sources of credit law, such as UCC Article 5. — Abbr. UCP.

Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act. A type of Baby FTC Act that provides monetary and injunctive relief for a variety of unfair and deceptive acts, such as false advertising and disparagement. See BABY FTC ACT.

Uniform Division of Income for Tax Purposes Act. A uniform law, adopted by some states, that provides criteria to assist in assigning the total taxable income of a multistate corporation among the various states. — Abbr. UDITPA.

Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. A uniform state law giving the holder of a foreign judgment the right to levy and execute as if it were a domestic judgment.

Uniform Fraudulent Conveyances Act. A model act adopted in 1918 to deal with issues arising from fraudulent conveyances by insolvent persons. • This act differentiated between conduct that was presumed fraudulent and con-duct that required an actual intent to commit fraud. — Abbr. UFCA.

Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. A model act designed to bring uniformity among the states regarding the definition of, and penalties for, fraudulent transfers. • This act was adopted in 1984 to replace the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyances Act. — Abbr. UFTA.

Uniform Gifts to Minors Act. See UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINORS ACT.

Uniform Law. An unofficial law proposed as legislation for all the states to adopt exactly as written, the purpose being to promote greater consistency among the states. • All the uniform laws are promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. For a complete collection, see Uniform Laws Annotated.

Uniform Law Commissioners. See NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF COMMISSIONERS ON UNIFORM STATE LAWS.

Uniform Partnership Act. A model code promulgated in 1914 to bring uniformity to state laws governing general and limited partnerships. • The act was adopted by almost all the states, but has been superseded in several of them by the Revised Uniform Partnership Act (1994). — Abbr. UPA.

Uniform Principal and Income Act. A uniform code adopted by some states governing allocation of principal and income in trusts and estates.

Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. A uniform law providing a procedure by which an alimony or child-support decree issued by one state can be enforced against a former spouse who resides in another state. — Abbr. URESA.

Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. A uniform law — adopted by most states — providing for the transfer of property to a minor, permitting a custodian acting in a fiduciary capacity to manage investments and apply the income from the property for the minor’s support. — Abbr. UTMA. — Also termed Transfers to Minors Act. — Formerly also termed Uniform Gifts to Minors Act (UGMA); Gifts to Minors Act.

Universal Copyright Convention. An international convention, first adopted in the United States in 1955, by which signatory countries agree to give the published works of a member country the same protection as that given to works of its own citizens. — Abbr. UCC.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights. An international bill of rights approved by the United Nations in December 1948, being that body’s first enumeration of human rights and fundamental freedoms. • The preamble states that “recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.” The Declaration contains a lengthy list of rights and fundamental freedoms. For the full text of the Declaration, see Appendix C.

"The Universal Declaration is the first comprehensive human rights instrument to be proclaimed by a universal international organization. Because of its moral status and the legal and political importance it has acquired over the years, the Declaration ranks with the Magna Carta, the French Declaration of the Rights of Man and the American Declaration of Independence as a milestone in mankind’s struggle for freedom and human dignity. Its debt to all these great historical documents is unmistakable." Thomas Buergenthal, International Human Rights in a Nutshell 29–30 (2d ed. 1995).

universitas facti (yoo-ni-var-sa-tas fak-ti). [Law Latin] A plurality of corporeal things of the same kind regarded as a whole, such as a herd of cattle.

universitas juris (yoo-ni-var-sa-tas joo-ris). [Latin] Roman & civil law. The whole of a person’s rights and liabilities; the totality of a person’s legal relations.

“A universitas juris is a collection of rights and duties united by the single circumstance of their having belonged at one time to some one person.” Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 148 (17th ed. 1901).

universitas personarum (yoo-ni-var-sa-tas par-sa-nay-ram). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A group of people that are legally considered an entity, such as a college or corporation.

universitas rerum (yoo-ni-var-sa-tas reer-am). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A whole collection of things; a variety of individual things that are together regarded by the law as a whole. See JUS RERUM.

“In the time of Justinian the universitas rerum, or universitas juris (both expressions are used) is a somewhat abstract conception: it means the sum or whole of a man’s legal position so far as it concerns the ius rerum. The conception is important in law only on the occasions, of which death is by far the most important, on which the universitas passes from one to another. . . . The expression universitas rerum is also used in another sense, to denote any collection of objects considered as a whole.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 172 (2d ed. 1953).

unjudicial, adj. Not becoming of or appropriate to a judge.

unjust, adj. Contrary to justice; not just.

unwritten law. Law that, although never enacted in the form of a statute or ordinance, has the sanction of custom. • The term traditionally includes caselaw. — Also termed jus non scriptum; jus ex non scripto; lex non scripta; jus moribus constitutum.

"[T]he very words of the court promulgating the opinion and making the decision do not determine absolutely the rule of law but ... the rule of law is ascertained by discovering what general proposition was essential to the result reached, and by using the words of the opinion as a mere aid in the ascertaining of that rule, so that, although opinions are written, the authoritative rules derived from them are sometimes not written, but are ascertained by the use of reason, causing case law to be classed as unwritten law — lex non scripta, to use the

"In the common law it is not too much to say that the judges are always ready to look behind the words of a precedent to what the previous court was trying to say, or to what it would have said if it could have foreseen the nature of the cases that were later to arise, or if its perception of the relevant factors in the case before it had been more acute. There is, then, a real sense in which the written words of the reported decisions are merely the gateway to something lying behind them that may be called, without any excess of poetic license, 'unwritten law.' " Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 145 (1968).

U.S. abbr. 1. United States. 2. UNITED STATES REPORTS.

usage. 1. A well-known, customary, and uniform practice, usu. in a specific profession or business. See CUSTOM (1). Cf. CONVENTION (3).

"A 'usage' is merely a customary or habitual practice; a 'convention' is a practice that is established by general tacit consent. 'Usage' denotes something that people are accustomed to do; 'convention' indicates that they are accustomed to do it because of a general agreement that it is the proper thing to do." Herbert W. Horwill, The Usages of the American Constitution 22 (1925).

"Although rules of law are often founded on usage, usage is not in itself a legal rule but merely habit or practice in fact. A particular usage may be more or less widespread. It may prevail throughout an area, and the area may be small or large — a city, a state or a larger region. A usage may prevail among all people in the area, or only in a special trade or other group. Usages change over time, and persons in close association often develop temporary usages peculiar to themselves." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 219 cmt. a (1981).

general usage. A usage that prevails throughout a country or particular trade or profession; a usage that is not restricted to a local area.

immemorial usage. A usage that has existed for a very long time; longstanding custom. See TIME IMMORAL.

trade usage. A practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a region, vocation, or trade that it justifies an expectation that it will be observed in a given transaction; a customary practice or set of practices relied on by persons conversant in, or connected with, a trade or business.
While a course of performance or a course of dealing can be established by the parties' testimony, a trade usage is usu. established by expert testimony. — Also termed usage of trade. Cf. COURSE OF DEALING; COURSE OF PERFORMANCE.

"The existence and scope of a usage of trade are to be determined as questions of fact. If a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is to be determined by the court as a question of law. Unless otherwise agreed, a usage of trade in the vocation or trade in which the parties are engaged or a usage of trade of which they know or have reason to know gives meaning to or supplements or qualifies their agreement." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 222 (1981).

2. See conventional custom under CUSTOM.

usance (yoo-zants). The time allowed for the payment of a foreign bill of exchange, sometimes set by custom but now usu. by law.

use (yoos), n. 1. The application or employment of something; esp., a long-continued possession and employment of a thing for the purpose for which it is adapted, as distinguished from a possession and employment that is merely temporary or occasional <the neighbors complained to the city about the owner's use of the building as a dance club>.

accessory use. Zoning. A use that is dependent on or pertains to a main use.

adverse use. A use without license or permission. Cf. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

beneficial use. Property. The right to use property and all that makes that property desirable or habitable, such as light, air, and access, even if someone else owns the legal title to the property.

collateral use. Intellectual property. The legal use of a trademark by someone other than the trademark owner, whereby the other party must clearly identify itself, the use of the trademark, and the absence of affiliation with the trademark owner.

conditional use. Zoning. A use of property subject to special controls and conditions. • A conditional use is one that is suitable to a zoning district, but not necessarily to every location within that district. — Also termed special exception.

conforming use. Zoning. The use of a structure or of the land in conformity with the uses permitted under the zoning classifications of a particular area, such as the building of a single-family dwelling in a residential zone.

double use. Patents. An application of a known principle or process to a new use without leading to a new result or product.

exclusive use. 1. Trademarks. The right to use a specific mark without exception, and to prevent another from using a confusingly similar mark. 2. Property. The right of an adverse user to a property, exercised independently of any similar rights held by others; one of the elements of a prescriptive easement. See USER.

experimental use. Patents. 1. The use or sale of an invention by the inventor for experimental purposes. 2. A defense to liability for patent infringement when the infringement took place only to satisfy curiosity or to complete an experiment, rather than for profit.

highest and best use. Real estate. In valuing property, the use that will generate the most profit; esp. used to determine the fair market value of property subject to eminent domain. — Often shortened to best use. — Also termed most suitable use.

incidental use. Zoning. Land use that is dependent on or affiliated with the land's primary use.

most suitable use. See highest and best use.

nonconforming use. Zoning. Land use that is impermissible under current zoning restrictions but that is allowed because the use existed lawfully before the restrictions took effect.

public use. 1. Property. The public's beneficial right to use property or facilities subject to condemnation. See CONDEMNATION (2). 2. Patents. Any use of or offer to use a completed or operative invention in a nonsecret, natural, and intended manner. • A patent is invalid if the invention was in public use more than one year before the patent's application date. reasonable use. Use of one’s property for an appropriate purpose that does not unreasonably interfere with another’s use of property. See REASONABLE USE THEORY.

regular use. Insurance. A use that is usual, normal, or customary; as opposed to an occasional, special, or incidental use. • This term often appears in automobile-insurance policies in the definition of a nonowned automobile — that is, an automobile not owned by or furnished for the regular use of the insured. Nonowned automobiles are excluded from coverage under most liability policies.

superstitious use. A designation or use of property for religious purposes not legally recognized or tolerated (such as gifts either favoring an unrecognized religion or supporting the saying of prayers for the dead).

2. A habitual or common practice <drug use>.
3. A purpose or end served <the tool had several uses>.
4. A benefit or profit; esp., the right to take profits from land owned and possessed by another; the equitable ownership of land to which another person holds the legal title <cestui que use>. See CESTUI QUE USE. — use (yooz), vb.

contingent use. A use that would be a contingent remainder if it had not been limited by way of use. • An example is a transfer “to A, to the use of B for life, with the remainder to the use of C’s heirs.” — Also termed future use.

entire use. A use of property that is solely for the benefit of a married woman. • When used in the habendum of a trust deed for the benefit of a married woman, this phrase operates to keep her husband from taking anything under the deed. — Also termed entire benefit; sole use; sole and separate use.

executed use. Hist. A use that results from the combining of the equitable title and legal title of an estate, done to comply with the Statute of Uses’ mandate that the holder of an estate be vested with legal title to ensure the holder’s liability for feudal dues. See STATUTE OF USES.

executory use. See springing use.

future use. See contingent use.

official use. Hist. A use imposing a duty on a person holding legal title to an estate on behalf of another, such as a requirement that a feoffee to uses sell the estate and apportion the proceeds among several beneficiaries. • The Statute of Uses eliminated this type of use.

permissive use. Hist. A passive use resorted to before passage of the Statute of Uses in 1535 to avoid an oppressive feudal law (such as mortmain) by naming one person as the legal owner of property while allowing another to possess the property and enjoy the benefits arising from it.

present use. Hist. A use that has an immediate existence and that is subject to the Statute of Uses.

resulting use. A use created by implication and remaining with the grantor when the conveyance lacks consideration.

secondary use. See shifting use.

separate use. See entire use.

shifting use. A use arising from the occurrence of a certain event that terminates the preceding use. • In the following example, C has a shifting use that arises when D makes the specified payment: “to A for the use of B, but then to C when D pays $1,000 to E.” This is a type of conditional limitation. — Also termed secondary use. See conditional limitation under LIMITATION.

sole use. See entire use.

springing use. A use that arises on the occurrence of a future event. • In the following example, B has a springing use that vests when B marries: “to A for the use of B when B marries.” — Also termed executory use.

use/derivative-use immunity. See use immunity under IMMUNITY (3).

usee. See USE PLAINTIFF.

useful, adj. Patents. (Of an invention) having a practical application.

"When applied to a machine, ‘useful’ means that the machine will accomplish its purpose practically when applied in industry. The word is given a practical and not a speculative meaning." 60 Am. Jur. 2d Patents § 131 (1987).

useful life. The estimated length of time that depreciable property will generate income. • Useful life is used to calculate depreciation and amortization deductions. — Also termed depreciable life. See DEPRECIATION METHOD.

use immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

use in commerce. Trademarks. Actual use of a trademark in the sale of goods or services. • Use of a trademark in commerce is a prerequisite to trademark registration. useless-gesture exception useless-gesture exception. Criminal procedure. An exception to the knock-and-announce rule by which police are excused from having to announce their purpose before entering the premises to execute a warrant when it is evident from the circumstances that the authority and purpose of the police are known to those inside. See KNOCK-AND-ANNOUNCE RULE.

use plaintiff. Common-law pleading. A plaintiff for whom an action is brought in another’s name. For example, when the use plaintiff was an assignee (“A”) of a chose in action and had to sue in someone else’s name, the assignor (“B”) would appear first on the petition’s title: “B for the Use of A against C.” Also termed usee.

user (yooz-ar). 1. The exercise or employment of a right or property <the neighbor argued that an easement arose by his continuous user over the last 15 years>. Cf. NONUSER.

usque ad (os-kwee ad). [Law Latin] As far as; up to; until.

usque ad coelum (os-kwee ad see-lam). [Latin] Up to the sky <the owner of land also owns the space above the surface usque ad coelum>.

usual, adj. 1. Ordinary; customary. 2. Expected based on previous experience.

usuary (yoo-zhoor-ee). Civil law. A person who has the use (usus) of a thing to satisfy personal and family needs; a beneficiary. Also termed (in Roman law) usuarius.

usucaption (yoo-za-kap-shan), n. Civil law. The acquisition of ownership by prescription. Also termed usucapio (yoo-za-kay-pee-oh); usucaption (yoo-za-kay-pee-on or -an). — usucapt, vb. See PRESCRIPTION (1).

“There is no principle in all law which the moderns, in spite of its beneficial character, have been so loath to adopt and to carry to its legitimate consequences as that which was known to the Romans as Usucaption, and which has descended to modern jurisprudence under the name of Prescription.” Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 236 (17th ed. 1901).

usufruct (yoo-za-frakt), n. Roman & civil law. A right to use another’s property for a time without damaging or diminishing it, although the property might naturally deteriorate over time. In Roman law, the usufruct was considered an encumbrance. In modern civil law, the owner of the usufruct is similar to a life tenant, and the owner of the thing burdened is the naked owner. Also termed usufructus; perfect usufruct; (in Scots law) life-rent. Cf. HABITATION (3).

"Usufructus is . . . the right of using and enjoying property belonging to another provided the subsistence of the property remained unimpaired. More exactly, a usufruct was the right granted to a man personally to use and enjoy, usually for his life . . . , the property of another which, when the usufruct ended, was to revert intact to the dominus or his heir. It might be for a term of years, but even here it was ended by death, and in the ease of a corporation (which never dies) Justinian fixed the period at 100 years. A usufruct might be in land or buildings, a slave or beast of burden, and in fact in anything except things which were destroyed by use . . . , the reason, of course, being that it was impossible to restore such things at the end of the usufruct intact . . . ." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 181–82 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

legal usufruct. A usufruct established by operation of law, such as the right of a surviving spouse to property owned by the deceased spouse.

quasi-usufruct. A right to consume things that would otherwise be useless, such as money or food. Unlike a perfect usufruct, a quasi-usufruct actually involves alteration and diminution of the property used. — Also termed imperfect usufruct.

"The Roman jurists, therefore, would not acknowledge a usufruct of money, though, in their desire to carry out the wishes of testators, they came at length to recognize a quasi-usufruct. For testators, being seldom learned in the law, would often set forth as legacies in their wills the usufruct of a designated sum ... In such a case the person named as legatee was allowed to receive the amount ... on giving security that when he died the same amount should be paid out of his own estate to the heirs, the heir of the testator. The relation here, though bearing some resemblance to the usufruct, was really quite different; the person who received the money became absolute owner of it; the heir had no ownership, nothing but the assurance of receiving an equal amount at some future time." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 193 (1881). usufructuary (yoo-za-frak-choo-er-ee), adj. Of or relating to a usufruct; of the nature of a usufruct.

usufructuary, n. A person who has the right to the benefits of another's property; one having the right to a usufruct.

usura (yoo-syoor-a), [Latin] Civil law. 1. Money paid for the use of money; interest. 2. USURY. Pl. usurae (yoo-syoor-e).

usurae centesimae (yoo-syoor-e sen-tes-ee-mee). [Latin] Interest at the rate of 12% per year (1% per month), normally the highest rate allowed by law. • The Romans calculated interest rates by dividing the principal sum into one hundred parts, with one part being payable monthly as interest.

usura maritima (yoo-syoor-a ma-rit-a-ma). [Latin] Interest taken on a bottomry or respondentia bond, proportioned to the risk and so not restricted by a usury law.

usurious (yoo-zhoo-er-ees), adj. 1. Practicing usury . 2. Characterized by usury .

usurpation (yoo-ser-pay-shan or yoo-zar-pay-shan), n. The unlawful seizure and assumption of another's position, office, or authority. — usurp (yoo-serp or yoo-zarp), vb.

usuaption of advowson (ad-vow-zan). Hist. An injury consisting in the absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron from the advowson. • This happens when a stranger, without the right to do so, presents a clerk who is installed in office. See ADVOWSON.

usury (yoo-zhe-ree) n. 1. Historically, the lending of money with interest. 2. Today, the charging of an illegal rate of interest. 3. An illegally high rate of interest. — usurious (yoo-zhoo-er-ees), adj. — usurer (yoo-zher-ar), n.

usury law. A law that prohibits moneylenders from charging illegally high interest rates.

usus (yoo-sus or yoo-zas). [Latin "use"] Roman law. 1. The right to use another's property, without the right to the produce (fructus) of the thing. • Usus was a personal servitude; it gave the holder a right in rem. Cf. USUFRUCT.

"It is essentially a fraction of a usufruct, usus without the fructus. In strictness, there was no right to any fruits but this was somewhat relaxed in practice. The usury of a house might consume the fruits of the gardens in his household, but he might not sell them, as a usufructuary might." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 165 (2d ed. 1953).

2. A marriage brought about by the acquisition of marital power (manus) over the wife through an uninterrupted cohabitation of one year with the intention of living as husband and wife. • Usus was the first method of creating a marriage with manus (confarreatio and coemptio being the other two) to pass out of use. Cf. CONFARREATIO; COEMPTIO.

"Usus is the acquisition of [power over] a wife by possession and bears the same relation to coemptio as usucaption to a mancipation. A Roman citizen who bought some object of property and got possession of it, but not ownership, because he neglected to go through the mancipation prescribed by jus civile, might nevertheless become owner by usucaption, i.e. lapse of time; thus if the object was a movable, continuous possession for one year made him dominus. In like manner, if a man lived with a woman whom he treated as his wife, but whom he had not married by coemptio (or confarreatio), and the cohabitation lasted without interruption for a year, then at the end of that period the man acquired [power over] the woman as his wife, she passed to him in manus ...." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 100 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

usus bellici (yoo-sas [or -zas] bel-ee-sti). [Latin] Int'l law. Warlike objects or uses. • This phrase refers to items that, though not inherently of a military nature, are considered contraband because they are used by a belligerent to support its war effort.

Usus Feudorum (yoo-sas [or -zas] fyoo-dor-am). See FEUDORUM LIBRI.

ut currere solebat (at kar-ar-ee sa-lee-bat). [Latin] As it was wont to run. • This referred to the course of a stream.

ut de feodo (at dee fee-a-doh or fyoo-doh). [Law Latin] As of fee.

uterine (yoo-tor-in), adj. Born of the same mother but different fathers.

uterine brother. See BROTHER.

uterque (yoo-tor-kwee). [Latin] Each of two; both (considered separately).

uterque nostrum. See UTRUMQUE NOSTRUM.

utfangthief (at-fang-theef). See OUTFANGTHIEF.

uti (yoo-ti), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To use.

uti frui (yoo-ti froo-i). [Latin] Civil law. To have the full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance.

utilis (yoo-ta-lis), adj. [Latin] Civil law. Useful; beneficial; equitable. • This word appeared in phrases such as actio utilis (ak-shee-oh yoo-ta-lis), meaning “equitable action.”

utilitarian-deterrence theory. The legal theory that a person should be punished only if it is for the good of society — that is, only if the punishment would further the prevention of future harmful conduct. See hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM. Cf. RETRIBUTIVISM.

utilitarianism. A philosophy that the goal of public action should be the greatest happiness to the greatest number of people.

hedonistic utilitarianism. The theory that the validity of a law should be measured by determining the extent to which it would promote the greatest happiness to the greatest number of citizens. • This theory is found most prominently in the work of Jeremy Bentham, whose “Benthamite utilitarianism” greatly influenced legal reform in nineteenth-century Britain. Hedonistic utilitarianism generally maintains that pleasure is intrinsically good and pain intrinsically bad. Therefore, inflicting pain, as by punishing a criminal, is justified only if it results in a net increase of pleasure by deterring future harmful behavior. — Also termed Benthamism. See utilitarian-deterrence theory; Benthamite. Cf. RETRIBUTIVISM.

utility. 1. The quality of serving some function that benefits society. 2. Patents. Capacity to perform a function or attain a result claimed for protection as intellectual property. • In patent law, utility is one of the three basic requirements of patentability, the others being nonobviousness and novelty. 3. A business enterprise that performs essential public service and that is subject to governmental regulation.

public utility. A company that provides necessary services to the public, such as telephones, electricity, and water. • Most utilities operate as monopolies but are subject to governmental regulation.

utility fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

utility patent. See PATENT (3).

ut infra (at in-fra also uut). [Latin] As below.

uti possidetis (yoo-ti paah-si-dee-tis). [Latin] 1. Int’l law. The doctrine that old administrative boundaries will become international boundaries when a political subdivision achieves independence. 2. Roman law. An interdict ordering the parties to a lawsuit to maintain the possession of real property as it stands pending a decision on who owns it. Cf. UTRUBI.

uti rogas (yoo-ti roh-gas or -gas). [Latin] Roman law. As you ask. • This was inscribed on a ballot to indicate a vote in favor of a bill or candidate. — Abbr. u.r.

utlagare (at-lag-o-ree or at-la-gair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To put (an offender) outside the protection of the law. Cf. INLAGARE; OUTLAWRY (2).

utlagation (at-la-gay-shan), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The act of placing an offender outside the protection of the law; outlawry. — Also termed utlagatio. Cf. INLAGATION; OUTLAWRY (2).

utland (ət-lənd) [Old English] Hist. The outer portion of a lord’s demesne, used to support the lord’s tenants. — Also termed delantal (di-lan-tal). Cf. inland (2).

UTMA. abbr. UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINORS ACT.

utmost care. See highest degree of care under DEGREE OF CARE.

utrunque nostrum (yo̱r-əm-kwee nos-trəm). [Latin] Each of us. • This phrase usu. appeared in bonds. The accusative form is uterque nostrum.

ut supra (ət sə-prə also uut). [Latin] As above.

utter, vb. 1. To say, express, or publish <don’t utter another word until your attorney is present>. 2. To put or send (a document) into circulation; esp., to circulate (a forged note) as if genuine <she uttered a counterfeit $50 bill at the grocery store>. — utterance (for sense 1), uttering (for sense 2), n.

utter, adj. Complete; absolute; total <an utter denial>.

utter bar. See OUTER BAR.

utter barrister. See outer barrister under BARRISTER.

uttering. The crime of presenting a false or worthless instrument with the intent to harm or defraud. — Also termed uttering a forged instrument. See FORGERY.

uxore rapta et abducta (ək-sor-ə [also a-gər-ə] rap-tə et ab-dək-tə). See DE UXORE RAPTAE ET ABDUCTA.

uxorial (ək-sor-əl or a-gər-əl), adj. Of, relating to, or characteristic of a wife <uxorial property>.

uxoricide (ək-sor-ə-dəd or a-gər-əd). 1. The murder of one’s wife. 2. A man who murders his wife.
vacate, vb. 1. To nullify or cancel; make void; invalidate <the court vacated the judgment>. Cf. OVERRULE. 2. To surrender occupancy or possession; to move out or leave <the tenant vacated the premises>.

vacatio (va-kay-shee-oh). Civil law. Exemption; immunity; privilege; dispensation.

vacation, n. 1. The act of vacating <vacation of the office> <vacation of the court’s order>. 2. The period between one term of court and the beginning of the next; the space of time during which a court holds no sessions. 3. The traditional vacations in England were Christmas vacation, beginning December 24 and ending January 6; Easter vacation, beginning Good Friday and ending Easter Tuesday; Whit Sunday vacation, beginning on the Saturday before and ending the Tuesday after Whitsunday (i.e., Pentecost, the seventh Sunday after Easter); and the long vacation, beginning August 13 and ending October 23. 3. Loosely, any time when a given court is not in session. 4. Eccles. law. The act or process by which a church or benefice becomes vacant, as on the death or resignation of the incumbent, until a successor is appointed. — Also termed (in sense 4) vacatmara.

vacation barrister. See BARRISTER.

vacatur (va-kay-tar), n. [Law Latin “it is vacated”] 1. The act of annulling or setting aside. 2. A rule or order by which a proceeding is vacated.

vacatun (vay-ka-ti-yoor-a), n. VACATION (4).

vacua possessio (vak-yoo-a pa-zes-h]-ee-oh). [Latin “a vacant possession”] Roman & civil law. Free and unburdened possession, which a seller must give to a purchaser.

vacuus (vak-yoo-as), adj. [Latin] Hist. Empty; void; vacant; unoccupied.

vades (vay-deez), n. [Latin pl. of vas “a surety”] Pledges, sureties, bail; esp., security for a criminal defendant’s appearance in court. vadiare duellum (vad-ee-air-ee d[y]loo-el-am), vb. [Law Latin “to wage the duellum”] Hist. To give pledges mutually for engaging in trial by combat.

vadiare legem (vad-ee-air-ee lee-jam), vb. [Law Latin “to wage law”] Hist. To give security to make one’s law on a day assigned.

vadiatio legis (vad-ee-ay-shee-oh lee-jis). [Law Latin “wager of law”] See WAGER OF LAW.

vadimony (vad-a-moh-nee). Roman law. 1. A guarantee (originally backed by sureties) that a litigant would appear in court. 2. A solemn promise to this effect. — Also termed vadimonomium.

vadium mortuum (vay-dee-am mor-choo-am). [Law Latin “dead pledge”] A mortgage. • This was considered a “dead pledge” because an estate was given as security by the borrower, who granted to the lender the estate in fee, on the condition that if the money were not repaid at the specified time, the pledged estate would continue as the lender’s—it would be gone from, or “dead” to, the borrower (mortgagor). — Also termed mortuum vadium. See MORTGAGE.

vadium vivum (vay-dee-am vi-vam). [Law Latin “live pledge”] A living pledge, which exists when an estate is granted until a debt is paid out of its proceeds. • The pledge was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost; it was a “living pledge” because the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt. — Also termed vivum vadium; vi-f-gage.

2. Wages; salary.

vadium ponere (vay-dee-am poh-no-ree), vb. Hist. To take bail for the appearance of a person in court.

vagabond (vag-a-bond), n. Archaic. A homeless wanderer without means of honest livelihood; VAGRANT. • This term became archaic over the course of the 20th century, as vagrants won the right not to be forcibly removed from cities. In the 1980s and 1990s, vagabonds came to be known as street people and homeless people, or the homeless. — Also termed vagabundus (vag-a-ban-das).

“All idle persons or vagabonds [are] . . . divided into three classes, idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues; — all these are offenders against the good order, and blamishes in the government, of any kingdom. They are therefore all punished . . . rogues and vagabonds with whipping and imprisonment not exceeding six months . . . .” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 170 (1769).

vagabondage (vag-a-bon-dij). 1. The condition of a vagabond. 2. Vagabonds as a class. — Also termed (in sense 1) vagabondism; (in senses 1 & 2) vagabondry.

vagabundus (vag-a-ban-das). [Law Latin] See VAGABOND.

vagrancy (vay-gran-see), n. 1. The state or condition of wandering from place to place without a home, job, or means of support. • Vagrancy is generally considered a course of conduct or a manner of living rather than a single act. But under some statutes, a single act has been held sufficient to constitute vagrancy; one court held, for example, that the act of prowling about and creeping up on parked cars and their occupants at night, under circumstances suggesting an intent to commit a crime, constitutes vagrancy. See Smith v. Drew, 26 P.2d 1040 (Wash. 1933). Many state laws prohibiting vagrancy have been declared unconstitutionally vague. — Also termed vagrantism. 2. An instance of such wandering. Cf. LOITERING.

“Vagrancy is a status resulting from misconduct and in the form of a socially harmful condition or mode of life which has been defined and made punishable by law. Until recently it was a misdemeanor, or group of misdemeanors, in most states.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 494 (3d ed. 1982).

vagrant, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or characteristic of a vagrant; inclined to vagrancy. 2. Nomadically homeless.

vagrant, n. 1. At common law, anyone belonging to the several classes of idle or disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds. 2. One who, not having a settled habitation, strolls from place to place; a homeless, idle wanderer. • The term often refers to one who spends time in idleness or immorality, having no property and without any visible means of support. Under some statutes, a vagrant is an offender against or menace to the public peace, usu. liable to become a public burden. — Also termed vagabond. See VAGABOND.
vagrant

vagrancy. See vagrantism.

vague, adj. 1. Imprecise; not sharply outlined; indistinct. 2. (Of words) broadly indefinite; not clearly or concretely expressed; uncertain. 3. Characterized by haziness of thought.

vagueness. 1. Uncertain breadth of meaning <the phrase “within a reasonable time” is plagued by vagueness — what is reasonable?>. • Though common in writings generally, vagueness raises due-process concerns if legislation does not provide fair notice of what is required or prohibited, so that enforcement might well become arbitrary. 2. Loosely, ambiguity. See AMBIGUITY.

vagueness doctrine. Constitutional law. The doctrine — based on the Due Process Clause — requiring that a criminal statute state explicitly and definitely what acts are prohibited, so as to provide fair warning and preclude arbitrary enforcement. — Also termed void-for-vagueness doctrine. Cf. OVERBREADTH DOCTRINE.

valentia (va-len-shee-ə), n. [Law Latin from Latin valere “to be of value”] Hist. Value; worth. • In old indictments for larceny, this term often appeared to express the value of the things taken.

valid, adj. 1. Legally sufficient; binding . 2. Meritorious <that is a valid conclusion based on the facts presented in this case>. — validate, vb. — validation, validity, n.

valid agreement. See valid contract under CONTRACT.

validating statute. See STATUTE.

valid contract. See CONTRACT.

valise diplomatique (va-les di-ploh-ma-teek). See DIPLOMATIC POUCH.

valor (val-ər), n. [Latin] Hist. Value; worth; rate; a valuation. — Also spelled valour. See AD VALOREM.

valor maritagii (val-ər mar-a-tay-jee-l) [Latin]. The value of a marriage. • Under ancient tenures, this was the amount that a female ward forfeited to a guardian when the guardian had offered her a marriage without disparagement (inequality), and she refused. In feudal law, the guardian in chivalry had the right of tendering to a minor ward a suitable match, without disparagement. If the ward refused, she forfeited the value of the marriage (valor maritagii) to the guardian. — Also termed (in the accusative) valorem maritagii; (Scots law) avail of marriage.

"If an infant ward of a guardian in chivalry refused a match tendered by the guardian, he or she forfeited the value of the marriage (valorem maritagii) to the guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give to the guardian for such an alliance." 2 Alexander M. Burlin, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 572–73 (2d ed. 1867).

valuable, adj. Worth a good price; having financial or market value.

valuable consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

valuable improvement. See IMPROVEMENT.

valuable papers. Documents that, upon a person’s death, are important in carrying out the decedent’s wishes and in managing the estate’s affairs. • Examples include a will, title documents, stock certificates, powers of attorney, letters to be opened on one’s death, and the like. Some statutes require that, to be effective, a holographic will devising realty be found among the decedent’s valuable papers.

valuation, n. 1. The process of determining the value of a thing or entity. 2. The estimated worth of a thing or entity. — value, valuate, vb.

assessed valuation. The value that a taxing authority gives to property and to which the tax rate is applied.

special-use valuation. An executor’s option of valuating real property in an estate, esp. farmland, at its current use rather than for its highest potential value.

valuation date. See ALTERNATE VALUATION DATE.

valuation list. Hist. An inventory of all the ratable hereditaments in a parish, each item in the inventory recording the name of the occupier, the owner, the property, the extent of the property, the gross estimated rental, and the ratable value. • The list was traditionally prepared by the overseers of each parish.

value, n. 1. The monetary worth or price of something; the amount of goods, services, or money that something will command in an exchange.

actual cash value. Insurance. 1. Replacement cost minus normal depreciation. 2. See fair market value.

actual market value. See fair market value.

actual value. See fair market value.

agreed value. A property’s value that is fixed by agreement of the parties with the property. • An example is a list of property values contained in an insurance policy.

annual value. 1. The net yearly income derivable from a given piece of property. 2. One year’s rental value of property, less costs and expenses.

cash surrender value. Insurance. The amount of money payable when an insurance policy having cash value, such as a whole-life policy, is redeemed before maturity or death. — Abbr. CSV. — Also termed surrender value.

cash value. See full cash value.

clear annual value. The net annual value of property, after payment of taxes, interest on mortgages, and other charges.

clear market value. See fair market value.

clear value. Tax. For purposes of an inheritance tax, whatever remains of an estate after all claims against it have been paid.

fair market value. The price that a seller is willing to accept and a buyer is willing to pay on the open market and in an arm’s-length transaction; the point at which supply and demand intersect. — Abbr. PMV. — Also termed actual value; actual cash value; actual market value; cash value; clear market value; fair and reasonable value; fair cash market value; fair cash value; fair market value; fair value; full value; just value; market value; salable value; true value.

“[A] forced sale price is not fair value though it may be used as evidence on the question of fair value. Likewise, the fair value of salable assets is not what they would sell for in the slow process of the debtor’s trade as if the debtor were continuing business unhindered. The general idea of fair value is the amount of money the debtor could raise from its property in a short period of time, but not so short as to approximate a forced sale, if the debtor operated as a reasonably prudent and diligent businessman with his interests in mind, especially a proper concern for the payment of his debts.” David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 6–18, at 307 (1993).

fair value. See fair market value.

full cash value. Market value for property tax purposes; estimated value derived by standard appraisal methods. — Also termed cash value.

full value. See fair market value.

future value. The value, at some future time, of a present sum or a series of payments of money, calculated at a specific interest rate.

going-concern value. The value of a commercial enterprise’s assets or the enterprise itself as an active business with future earning power, as opposed to the liquidation value of the business or its assets. • Going-concern value includes, for example, goodwill. — Also termed going value. Cf. GOODWILL.

highest proved value. In a trover action, the greatest value (as proven by the plaintiff) that the converted property reached from the time of the conversion until trial. • This is the most that a plaintiff is entitled to recover.

intrinsic value. The inherent value of a thing, without any special features that might alter its market value. • The intrinsic value of a silver coin, for example, is simply the value of the silver within it.

just value. See fair market value.

liquidation value. 1. The value of a business or of an asset when it is sold in liquidation, as opposed to being sold in the ordinary course of business. 2. See liquidation price under PRICE.

market value. See fair market value.

most-suitable-use value. See optimal-use value.

net value. 1. Insurance. The excess of policyholder payments over the yearly cost of insurance; the part of an insured’s annual premium that, according to actuarial tables, the insurer must set apart to meet the insurer’s obligations to the insured. — Also termed reserve. 2. The fair market value of shares of stock.

new value. 1. A value (such as money) that is newly given. 2. The value obtained by taking a security, such as collateral, for any debt other than a preexisting debt.

optimal-use value. Tax. The highest and best use of a thing from an economic standpoint. • If a farm is worth more as a potential shopping center, the shopping-center value will control even if the transferee (that is, a donee or heir) continues to use the property as a farm. — Also termed most-suitable-use value.

par value. See PAR VALUE.

present value. See PRESENT VALUE.

residual value. See salvage value.

salable value. See fair market value.

salvage value. The value of an asset after it has become useless to the owner; the amount expected to be obtained when a fixed asset is disposed of at the end of its useful life. • Salvage value is used, under some depreciation methods, to determine the allowable tax deduction for depreciation. And under the UCC, when a buyer of goods breaches or repudiates the contract of sale, the seller may, under certain circumstances, either complete the manufacture of any incomplete goods or cease the manufacture and sell the partial product for scrap of salvage value. UCC § 2-704(2). — Also termed residual value; scrap value. See DEPRECIATION.

scrap value. See salvage value.

settlement value. The present value of a claim if settled immediately as opposed to pursuing it further through litigation.

surrender value. See cash surrender value.

true value. See fair market value.

use value. A value established by the utility of an object instead of its value upon selling or exchanging it.

value received. See VALUE RECEIVED.

2. The significance, desirability, or utility of something. 3. Sufficient contractual consideration. — value, vb. — valuation, n.

"Value also includes paying or securing a preexisting debt, and in this regard value is broader than common-law consideration. Thus, a debtor receives value in satisfying an antecedent claim (as by paying an overdue account or an outstanding loan or by transferring property to vindicate a preexisting interest in it) or in providing collateral for a previously unsecured creditor. It makes no difference that the debtor got nothing new, in terms of property added to her estate, at the time of the transfer." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 6-49, at 374 (1993).

value-added tax. See TAX.

value date. The date when the proceeds of a bill of exchange (e.g., a check) or of a foreign-exchange transaction (e.g., a sale of dollars for euros) become available for use. — Also termed here and there.

valued policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

valued-policy law. A statute requiring insurance companies to pay the full amount of the insurance to the insured in the event of a total loss, regardless of the true value of the property at the time of loss.

valuer. See APPRAISER.

value received. Consideration that has been delivered. • This phrase is commonly used in a bill of exchange or promissory note to show that it was supported by consideration.

valuta (va-loo-ta), n. [Italian fr. Latin] Value; worth; esp., the value of a currency in relation to that of the currency of some other country.

valvador (val-va-sor), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A principal vassal who, though not holding directly of the sovereign, held of those who did so; a vassal of the second degree or rank. — Also spelled valvassor. See VALVASOR.

VA mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

vandal. [fr. Latin Vandalus, a member of the Germanic tribe known as Vandals] A malicious destroyer or defacer of works of art, monuments, buildings, or other property.

vandalism, n. 1. Willful or ignorant destruction of public or private property, esp. of artistic, architectural, or literary treasures. 2. The actions or attitudes of one who maliciously or ignorantly destroys or disfigures public or private property; active hostility to anything that is venerable or beautiful. — vandalize, vb. — vandalistic, adj.

vara (vah-rah). A Spanish–American measure of length equal to about 33 inches. • Local usage varies, so that it may sometimes be more and sometimes less than 33 inches. In Mexican land grants, the measure is equal to 32.9927 inches.

variable annuity. See ANNUITY.

variable annuity contract. See CONTRACT.

variable cost. See COST (1).

variable life insurance. See INSURANCE.

variable rate. See INTEREST RATE.

variable-rate mortgage. See adjustable-rate mortgage under MORTGAGE. variance. 1. A difference or disparity between two statements or documents that ought to agree; esp., in criminal procedure, a difference between the allegations in a charging instrument and the proof actually introduced at trial. — Also termed variation.

fatal variance. A variance that either deprives the defendant of fair notice of the charges or exposes the defendant to the risk of double jeopardy. • Such a variance is grounds for reversing a conviction.

immaterial variance. A variance that is too slight to mislead or prejudice the defendant, and is thus harmless error.

2. A license or official authorization to depart from a zoning law. — Also termed (in sense 2) zoning variance. Cf. special exception (2); special-use permit.

area variance. A variance that permits deviation from zoning requirements about construction and placement, but not from requirements about use.

use variance. A variance that permits deviation from zoning requirements about use.

vas (vas), n. Civil law. A pledge or surety; esp., a surety in a judicial proceeding, whether civil or criminal. Pl. vades.

venire (va-nî-ree or -neer-ee or -nîr or -neer). 1. A panel of persons who have been selected for jury duty and from among whom the jurors are to be chosen. — Also termed array; jury panel; jury pool. 2. VENIRE FACIAS.

venire de novo. See venire facias de novo under VENIRE FACIAS.

venire facias (va-nî-ree [or -neer-ee or -nîr or -neer] fay-shee-as). A writ directing a sheriff to assemble a jury. — Often shortened to venire. — Also termed venire facias juratores (juur-ô-tor-eez).

venire facias ad respondendum (ad rees-pon-den-dam). A writ requiring a sheriff to summon a person against whom an indictment for a misdemeanor has been issued. • A warrant is now more commonly used.

venire facias de novo (dee or di noh-voh). A writ for summoning a jury panel anew because of some impropriety or irregularity in the original jury’s return or verdict so that no judgment can be given on it. • The result of a new venire is a new trial. In substance, the writ is a motion for new trial, but when the party objects to the verdict because of an error in the course of the proceeding (and not on the merits), the form of motion was traditionally for a venire facias de novo. — Often shortened to venire de novo.

venire facias tot matronas (tot ma-troh-nas). A writ requiring a sheriff to summon a jury of matrons to execute a writ de ventre inspiciendo. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO.

veniremember (va-nî-ree-men-bar or va-neer-ee or va-neer-). A prospective juror; a member of a jury panel. — Also termed venireman; venireperson; talesman. See TALESMAN.

venit et defendit (vee-nit et di-fen-dit). [Latin] Comes and defends. • This phrase appeared in old-style defensive pleading.

venit et dicit (vee-nit et di-sit). [Latin] Comes and says. • The phrase appeared in old-style pleading. Its remnant still occurs in some American jurisdictions: Now comes the plaintiff, and respectfully says . . .

vente aléatoire (a-lay-ô-twahr). A sale subject to an uncertain event.

vente à réméré (ah ray-may-ray). A conditional sale, in which the seller reserves the right to redeem or repurchase at the same price. • The term is used in Louisiana and in some parts of Canada.

venter (ven-tar), n. [Latin “womb”] 1. The womb of a wife or mother. 2. One of two or more women who are sources of the same man’s offspring.

“venter . . . is a term nowadays considered objectionable, as it refers to the woman merely as the possessor of a birth canal.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 910 (2d ed. 1995).

ventre inspiciendo. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO; venire facias tot matronas under VENIRE FACIAS.

venture. An undertaking that involves risk; esp., a speculative commercial enterprise.

venture capital. See CAPITAL.

venturer, n. One who risks something in a business enterprise.

venue (ven-yoo). [Law French “coming”] Procedure. 1. The proper or a possible place for the trial of a lawsuit, usu. because the place has some connection with the events that have given rise to the lawsuit. 2. The county or other territory over which a trial court has jurisdiction. Cf. JURISDICTION. 3. Loosely, the place where a conference or meeting is being held. 4. In a pleading, the statement establishing the place for trial. 5. In an affidavit, the designation of the place where it was made.

“Venue must be carefully distinguished from jurisdiction. Jurisdiction deals with the power of a court to hear and dispose of a given case; in the federal system, it involves questions of a constitutional dimension concerning the basic division of judicial power among the states and between state and federal courts. Venue is of a distinctly lower level of importance; it is simply a statutory device designed to facilitate and balance the objectives of optimum convenience for parties and witnesses and efficient allocation of judicial resources.” Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 2.1, at 10 (2d ed. 1993).

“The distinction must be clearly understood between jurisdiction, which is the power to adjudicate, and venue, which relates to the place where judicial authority may be exercised and is intended for the convenience of the litigants. It is possible for jurisdiction to exist though venue in a particular district is improper, and it is possible for a suit to be brought in the appropriate venue though it must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. The most important difference between venue and jurisdiction is that a party may consent to be sued in a district that otherwise would be an improper venue, and it waives its objection to venue if it fails to assert it promptly. This is in striking contrast to subject-matter jurisdiction, which cannot be conferred by the parties, if it has not been granted by Congress, whether by consent, waiver, or estoppel.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 42, at 257 (5th ed. 1994).

venue, change of. See CHANGE OF VENUE.

venue facts. Facts that need to be established in a hearing to determine whether venue is proper in a given court.

venville (ven-vil), n. Hist. A tenure peculiar to the area of Dartmoor forest in Devonshire, whereby tenants have certain rights in the forest.

veracious (va-ray-shas), adj. Truthful; accurate. — Also termed veridical.

veracity (va-ray-sat-ee), n. 1. Truthfulness <the witness’s fraud conviction supports the defense’s challenge to its veracity>. 2. Accuracy <you called into question the veracity of Murphy’s affidavit>. — veracious (va-ray-shas), adj.

veray (va-ray), adj. [Law French “true”] Hist. True. • This word is an older form of the French vrair.

verba (var-ba), n. pl. [Latin] Words — esp. oral as opposed to written words.

verbal, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or expressed in words. 2. Loosely, of, relating to, or expressed in spoken words.

verbal act. See ACT (2).

verbal-act doctrine. The rule that utterances accompanying conduct that might have legal effect are admissible when the conduct is material to the issue and is equivocal in nature, and when the words help give the conduct its legal significance.

verbal contract. See parol contract (1) under CONTRACT.

verbal note. Diplomacy. An unsigned memorandum informally reminding an official of a pending request, an unanswered question, or the like.

verbal will. See nuncupative will under WILL.

verbruikleening (ver-bruik-layn-ing), n. Roman Dutch law. A loan for use; COMMODATUM.

verderer (var-dor-ar), n. [fr. French verdier “caretaker of green things”] Hist. A judicial officer who, being in charge of the king’s forest, is sworn to preserve the vert (foliage) and venison, to keep the assizes, and to view, receive, and enroll attachments and presents on matters involving trespass. — Also spelled verderor.

“In all the forests there were a varying number of officers (usually four) elected in the county court, and styled Verderers. Manwood says that they should be ‘gentlemen of good account, ability, and living, and well learned in the laws of the forest.’ Their chief duty was to attend the forest courts; they served gratuitously; and they were immediately responsible to the crown. Possibly they were regarded as a check upon the Warden, as the coroner was upon the sheriff.” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 96 (7th ed. 1956).

verdict. 1. A jury’s finding or decision on the factual issues of a case. 2. Loosely, in a nonjury trial, a judge’s resolution of the issues of a case.

chance verdict. A now-illegal verdict, arrived at by hazard or lot. — Also termed gambling verdict; verdict by lot. compromise verdict. A verdict that is reached when jurors concede some issues so they can settle other issues in their favor.

defective verdict. A verdict on which a judgment cannot be based because of irregularities or legal inadequacies.

directed verdict. A judgment entered on the order of a trial judge who takes over the fact-finding role of the jury because the evidence is so compelling that only one decision can reasonably follow or because it fails to establish a prima facie case. — Also termed instructed verdict.

excessive verdict. A verdict that results from the jury’s passion or prejudice and thereby shocks the court’s conscience.

false verdict. A verdict so contrary to the evidence and so unjust that the judge may set it aside.

gambling verdict. See chance verdict.

general verdict. A verdict by which the jury finds in favor of one party or the other, as opposed to resolving specific fact questions. Cf. special verdict.

general verdict subject to a special case. Archaic. A court’s verdict rendered without regard to the jury’s general verdict, given when a party does not want to put the legal question on the record but merely wants the court to decide on the basis of a written statement of all the facts in the case, prepared for the opinion of the court by counsel on either side, according to the principles of a special verdict, whereupon the court decides the special case submitted and gives judgment accordingly.

general verdict with interrogatories. A general verdict accompanied by answers to written interrogatories on one or more issues of fact that bear on the verdict.

guilty verdict. A jury’s formal pronouncement that a defendant is guilty of the charged offense.

instructed verdict. See directed verdict.

joint verdict. A verdict covering two or more parties to a lawsuit.

legally inconsistent verdict. A verdict in which the same element is found to exist and not to exist, as when a defendant is acquitted of one offense and convicted of another, when the offenses arise from the same set of facts and an element of the second offense requires proof that the first offense has been committed.

open verdict. A verdict of a coroner’s jury finding that the subject “came to his death by means to the jury unknown” or “came to his death at the hands of a person or persons to the jury unknown.” • Such a verdict leaves open either the question whether any crime was committed or the identity of the criminal.

partial verdict. A verdict by which a jury finds a criminal defendant innocent of some charges and guilty of other charges.

perversive verdict. A jury verdict so contrary to the evidence that it justifies the granting of a new trial.

prisy verdict (priv-ee). Hist. A verdict given after the judge has left or adjourned the court, and the jury, having agreed, obtain leave to give their verdict privately to the judge out of court so that the jurors can be delivered from their confinement. • Such a verdict was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given in open court. This practice has been superseded by that of rendering a sealed verdict.

public verdict. A verdict delivered by the jury in open court.

quotient verdict. An improper verdict that a jury arrives at by totaling their individual damage awards and dividing by the number of jurors.

repugnant verdict. A verdict that contradicts itself in that the defendant is convicted and acquitted of different crimes having identical elements. • Sometimes the inconsistency occurs in a single verdict (repugnant verdict), and sometimes it occurs in two separate verdicts (repugnant verdicts). Both terms are used mainly in New York.

responsive verdict. Civil law. A verdict that properly answers the indictment with specific findings prescribed by statute, the possible findings being guilty, not guilty, and guilty of a lesser-included offense.

sealed verdict. A written verdict put into a sealed envelope when the jurors have agreed on their decision but when court is not in session at the time. • Upon delivering a sealed verdict, the jurors may separate. When court convenes again, this verdict is officially returned with the same effect as if the jury had returned it in open court before separating. This type of verdict is useful to avoid detaining the jurors until the next session of court.

special verdict. A verdict that gives a written finding for each issue, leaving the application of the law to the judge. Cf. general verdict. split verdict. 1. A verdict in which one party prevails on some claims, while the other party prevails on others. 2. Criminal law. A verdict finding a defendant guilty on one charge but innocent on another. 3. Criminal law. A verdict of guilty for one defendant and of not guilty for a codefendant.

true verdict. A verdict that is reached voluntarily — even if one or more jurors freely compromise their views — and not as a result of an arbitrary rule or order, whether imposed by the jurors themselves, the court, or a court officer.

verdict by lot. See chance verdict.

verdict contrary to law. A verdict that the law does not authorize a jury to render because the conclusion drawn is not justified by the evidence.

verdict subject to opinion of court. A verdict that is subject to the court’s determination of a legal issue reserved to the court upon the trial, so that judgment is ultimately entered depending on the court’s ruling on a point of law.

veredicto. See non obstante veredicto.

veredictum (ver-ə-dik-tam), n. Hist. A verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial.

verge (varj), n. Hist. 1. The area within 12 miles of the place where the king held his court and within which the king’s peace was enforced. • This area was commonly referred to as being in the verge. The verge got its name from the staff (called a “verge”) that the marshal bore. 2. The compass of the royal court, within which the lord steward and marshal of the king’s household had special jurisdiction. • Also termed Court of Verge. 3. The neighborhood of Whitehall, the section of London in which British government offices have traditionally been located. 4. An uncertain quantity of land from 15 to 30 acres. 5. A stick or rod by which a person, after holding the stick and swearing fealty, is admitted as a tenant to a copyhold estate. For tenant by the verge, see copyholder. • Also spelled verge.

vergens ad inopiam (var-jenz ad in-oh-pee-em), adj. [Latin] Civil law. Tending to become insolvent.

verger, n. One who carries a verge (a rod) as an emblem of office; esp., an attendant on a bishop or justice.

veridical (va-rid-ə-kal). See veracious.

verification, n. 1. A formal declaration made in the presence of an authorized officer, such as a notary public, by which one swears to the truth of the statements in the document. • Traditionally, a verification is used as a conclusion for all pleadings that do not tender issue. Cf. acknowledgment (4). 2. An oath or affirmation that an authorized officer administers to an affiant or deponent. 3. Loosely, acknowledgment (5). 4. See certified copy under COPY. 5. Certificate of Authority. 6. Any act of notarizing. • verify, vb. • verifier, n. Cf. jurat (1).

verify, vb. 1. To prove to be true; to confirm or establish the truth or truthfulness of; to authenticate. 2. To confirm or substantiate by oath or affidavit; to swear to the truth of.

verily, adv. Archaic. Truly; in fact; certainly.

veritas (ver-ə-tas or -tahs), n. [Latin] 1. Truth. 2. (cap.) An international institution of maritime underwriters for the survey and rating of vessels. • Founded in Belgium in 1828, it moved to Paris in 1832 and has long been represented all over the world. • Also termed Bureau Veritas.

verity (ver-ə-tee). Truth; truthfulness; conformity to fact.

vermenging (var-meng-ing), n. [Dutch “mingling”] The extinction of a debt when the debtor’s and the creditor’s interests merge, as in a corporate merger.

verna (var-na). Hist. A slave born in the slaveholder’s house.

versari (var-sair-i), vb. [Latin] 1. To be employed. 2. To be conversant.

versari in re illicita (var-sair-i in re i-lis-o-to). [Latin] To be engaged in an unlawful activity (as a bar to a claim for damages).

versus, prep. Against. • Abbr. v.; vs.

verus (veer-os), adj. [Latin] True; truthful; genuine; actual.

very heavy work. See WORK.

vessel. A ship, brig, sloop, or other craft used — or capable of being used — to navigate on water. • To qualify as a vessel under the Jones Act, the structure’s purpose must to some reasonable degree be the transportation of passengers, cargo, or equipment from place to place across navigable waters.

foreign vessel. A vessel owned by residents of, or sailing under the flag of, a foreign nation.

Jones Act vessel. A craft designed or used for transporting cargo or people on navigable waters, or that was being used for navigation at the time of a worker’s injury. • For an injured worker to qualify as a seaman, and to be entitled to recover under the Jones Act, the worker must have been assigned to a vessel. A craft qualifies as a vessel if it is designed or used primarily for transportation on navigable waters, or if it was being used for navigational purposes at the time the worker was injured. But if the injury occurred, for example, on a work platform that was securely anchored and had no independent means of navigation, the platform would not qualify as a vessel and a claim under the Jones Act would fail.

public vessel. A vessel owned and used by a nation or government for its public service, whether in its navy, its revenue service, or otherwise.

sea-going vessel. A vessel that — considering its design, function, purpose and capabilities — is normally expected both to carry passengers for hire and to engage in substantial operations beyond the boundary line (set by the Coast Guard) dividing inland waters from the high seas. • Typically excluded from the definition are pleasure yachts, tugs and towboats, fishing boats, and other vessels that do not ordinarily carry passengers for hire.

“Despite the important role a ‘vessel’ plays in maritime law, there is no settled definition of the term. Congress has defined a vessel as including ‘every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.’ 1 U.S.C.A. § 3. The Supreme Court has defined vessels as ‘all navigable structures intended for transportation.’ Cope v. Vallette Dry-Dock Co., 119 U.S. 625 (1887).” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 14 (3d ed. 1996).

seaworthy vessel. A vessel that can withstand the ordinary stress of the wind, waves, and other weather that seagoing vessels might ordinarily be expected to encounter. See SEEAWORTHY.

vest, vb. 1. To confer ownership of (property) upon a person. 2. To invest (a person) with the full title to property. 3. To give (a person) an immediate, fixed right of present or future enjoyment. 4. Hist. To put (a person) into possession of land by the ceremony of investiture. — vesting, n.

vested, adj. Having become a completed, consummated right for present or future enjoyment; not contingent; unconditional; absolute .

“(U)nfortunately, the word ‘vested’ is used in two senses. Firstly, an interest may be vested in possession, when there is a right to present enjoyment, e.g. when I own and occupy Blackacre. But an interest may be vested, even where it does not carry a right to immediate possession, if it does confer a fixed right of taking possession in the future.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 305 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

“A future interest is vested if it meets two requirements: first, that there be no condition precedent to the interest’s becoming a present estate other than the natural expiration of those estates that are prior to it in possession; and second, that it be theoretically possible to identify who would get the right to possession if the interest should become a present estate at any time.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 66–67 (2d ed. 1984).

vested in interest. Consummated in a way that will result in future enjoyment. • Reversion, vested remainders, and any other future use or executory devise that does not depend on an uncertain period or event are all said to be vested in interest.
vested in possession. Consummated in a way that has resulted in present enjoyment.

vetitive (vet-a-tiv), adj. Of, relating to, or having the power to veto.

vetitum namium (vet-a-tom nay-mee-am), n. [Law Latin “a prohibited taking”] Hist. See NAMIUM VETITUM.

veto (vee-toh), n. [Latin “I forbid”] 1. A power of one governmental branch to prohibit an action by another branch; esp., a chief executive’s refusal to sign into law a bill passed by the legislature. 2. VETO MESSAGE. Pl. vetoes. • veto, vb.

absolute veto. An unrestricted veto that is not subject to being overridden.

legislative veto. A veto that allowed Congress to block a federal executive or agency action taken under congressionally delegated authority. • The Supreme Court held the legislative veto unconstitutional in INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764 (1983). See DELEGATION DOCTRINE.

liberum veto (lib-ar-am). Hist. Formerly in Poland, the right of any single member of the diet to invalidate a measure.

limited veto. See qualified veto.

line-item veto. The executive’s power to veto some provisions in a legislative bill without affecting other provisions. • The U.S. Supreme Court declared the presidential line-item veto unconstitutional in 1998. See Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417, 118 S.Ct. 2091 (1998). • Also termed item veto.

negative veto. See qualified veto.

overridden veto. A veto that the legislature has superseded by again passing the vetoed act, usu. by a supermajority of legislators. • In the federal government, a bill vetoed by the President must receive a two-thirds majority in Congress to override the veto and enact the measure into law.
pocket veto. A veto resulting from the President’s failure to sign a bill passed within the last ten days of the legislative session.

qualified veto. A veto that is conclusive unless overridden by an extraordinary majority of the legislature. • This is the type of veto that the President of the United States has. — Also termed limited veto; negative veto.

suspensory veto (sa-spen-sa-ree). A veto that suspends a law until the legislature reconsiders it and then allows the law to take effect if repassed by an ordinary majority. — Also termed suspensive veto.

vetoer, n. One who vetoes. — Also termed vetoeist.

veto message. A document communicating the reasons for the executive’s not officially approving a proposed law. — Sometimes shortened to veto.

veto power. An executive’s conditional power to prevent an act that has passed the legislature from becoming law.

vetus jus (vee-tas jas). Roman & civil law. 1. The law of the Twelve Tables. See TWELVE TABLES. 2. Long-established or ancient law. 3. A law in force before the passage of a later law.

vex, vb. To harass, disquiet, and annoy.

vi et armis (vi et ahr-mis). [Latin] Hist. By or with force and arms. See trespass vi et armis under TRESPASS.

"The words ‘with force and arms,’ anciently ‘vi et armis,’ were, by the common law, necessary in indictments for offences which amount to an actual disturbance of the peace, or consist, in any way, of acts of violence; but it seems to be the better opinion, that they were never necessary where the offence consisted of a cheat, or non-feasance, or a mere consequential injury.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 240 (2d ed. 1826).

"vi et armis . . . was a necessary part of the allegation, in medieval pleading, that a trespass had been committed with force and therefore was a matter for the King’s Court because it involved a breach of the peace. In England, the term survived as a formal requirement of pleading until 1852.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 916 (2d ed. 1995).

view, n. 1. The common-law right of prospect — that is, an outlook from the windows of one’s house. 2. An urban servitude that prohibits the obstruction of the outlook from a person’s house. 3. A jury’s inspection of a place relevant to a case it is considering; the act or proceeding by which a tribunal goes to observe an object that cannot be produced in court because it is immovable or inconvenient to remove. • The appropriate procedures are typically regulated by state statute. At common law, and today in many civil cases, the trial judge’s presence is not required. The common practice has been for the jury to be conducted to the scene by “showers” who are commissioned for this purpose. Parties and counsel are generally permitted to attend, although this is a matter typically within the trial judge’s discretion. Cf. VIEW OF AN INQUEST. 4. In a real action, a defendant’s observation of the thing at issue to ascertain its identity and other circumstances surrounding it. Cf. DEMAND OF VIEW.

viewer. A person, usu. one of several, appointed by a court to investigate certain matters or to examine a particular locality (such as the proposed site of a new road) and to report to the court.

vocabio in jus (voh-kay-shoo-ee in jooz), n. [Latin] Roman law. A plaintiff's oral summoning of a defendant to go before a magistrate. • The vocabio in jus occurred when the plaintiff would summon the defendant in formal words to accompany the plaintiff.

vocation. A person's regular calling or business; one's occupation or profession.

vociferatio (voh-sif-er-ray-shoo-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. An outcry; HUE AND CRY.

voco (voh-koh). [Latin "I call"] Hist. I summon; I vouch. See VOCATIO IN JUS.

Voconian law (voh-koh-nee-in). See LEX VOCONIA.

voice exemplar. A sample of a person's voice used for the purpose of comparing it with a recorded voice to determine whether the speaker is the same person. • Although voiceprint identification was formerly inadmissible, the trend in recent years has been toward admissibility. See Fed. R. Evid. 901. Cf. VOICEPRINT.

voiceprint. A distinctive pattern of curved lines and whorls that are made by a machine that measures human vocal sounds for the purpose of identifying an individual speaker. • Like fingerprints, voiceprints are thought to be unique to each person.

void, adj. 1. Of no legal effect; null. • The distinction between void and voidable is often of great practical importance. Whenever technical accuracy is required, void can be properly applied only to those provisions that are of no effect whatsoever — those that are an absolute nullity. — void, avoid, vb. — voidness, n.

facially void. (Of an instrument) patently void upon an inspection of the contents. — Also termed void on its face.

void ab initio (ab inish-ee-oh). Null from the beginning, as from the first moment when a contract is entered into. • A contract is void ab initio if it seriously offends law or public policy, in contrast to a contract that is merely voidable at the election of one party to the contract.

void for vagueness. 1. (Of a deed or other instrument affecting property) having such an insufficient property description as to be unenforceable. 2. (Of a penal statute) establishing a requirement or punishment without specifying what is required or what conduct is punishable, and therefore void because violative of due process. — Also termed void for indefiniteness.

voidable. • Although sense 1 above is the strict meaning of void, the word is often used and construed as bearing the more liberal meaning of "voidable."

voidable, adj. Valid until annulled; esp., (of a contract) capable of being affirmed or rejected at the option of one of the parties. • This term describes a valid act that may be avoided rather than an invalid act that may be ratified. — voidability, n.

"Most of the disputed questions in the law of infancy turn upon the legal meaning of the word 'voidable' as applied to an infant's acts. The natural meaning of the word imports a valid act which may be avoided, rather than an invalid act which may be confirmed, and the weight of authority as well as reason points in the same direction. Certainly, so far as executed transfers of property are concerned the authority of the decisions clearly supports this view." 1 Samuel Williston, The Law Governing Sales of Goods § 12, at 28 (34 ed. 1948).

"The promise of an infant surety is voidable as distinguished from void. The infant may expressly disaffirm or assert the defense of infancy when sued at any time before the expiration of a reasonable time after majority." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 82 (1950).

voluntary manslaughter. See MANSLAYER.

voluntary petition. See PETITION.

voluntary pilot. Maritime law. A ship pilot who controls a ship with the permission of the vessel’s owner. • The vessel’s owner is personally liable for damage resulting from a collision caused by a voluntary pilot. Cf. COMPULSORY PILOT.

"If a vessel is in the hands of a harbor pilot at the time of the collision, the question arises whether the fault of the pilot is imputed to the vessel owner or operator.

American law draws an unwarranted distinction between the ‘voluntary pilot,’ who is taken on voluntarily, and the ‘compulsory pilot,’ who is mandated by a statute or local regulation. The voluntary pilot is considered to be the same as any crew member, and his fault is fully attributable to the vessel owner. A compulsory pilot’s fault, however, cannot be imputed to the shipowner personally; the doctrine of respondent superior does not apply. At most, the vessel is liable in rem since the compulsory pilot’s negligence is attributable to the ship. The distinction makes little sense in that it throws the loss upon potentially innocent parties and ignores the fact that the vessel owner commonly carries insurance against this liability. In any collision case, therefore, care should be taken to assert a maritime lien and to sue the vessel in rem if a compulsory pilot may be involved." Thomas J. Schoenbaum, Admiralty and Maritime Law § 13–1, at 450-51 (1987).

printed authorization to disburse money. 3. Hist. A person who calls on another person (the vouchee) as a witness, esp. in support of a warranty of title. 4. Hist. The tenant in a writ of right.

vouch to warranty. Hist. The calling into court of a person who has warranted lands, by the person warranted, to come and defend a lawsuit.

vouching-in. 1. At common law, a procedural device by which a defendant may give notice of suit to a third party who is liable over to the defendant on the subject-matter of the suit, so that the third party will be bound by the court's decision. • Although this device has been largely replaced by third-party practice, it still remains marginally available under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Philadelphia Ship Maintenance Co., 444 F.2d 727, 735 (3d Cir. 1971). 2. The invitation of a person who is liable to a defendant in a lawsuit to intervene and defend so that, if the invitation is denied and the defendant later sues the person invited, the latter is bound by any determination of fact common to the two lawsuits. See UCC § 2-607. 3. impleader.

vouch over, vb. To cite (a person) into court in one's stead.

voyage. Maritime law. The passing of a vessel by sea from one place, port, or country to another. • Courts generally hold that the term includes the entire enterprise, not just the route.

foreign voyage. A voyage to a port or place within the territory of a foreign nation. • If the voyage is from one port in a foreign country to another port in the same country, it is considered a foreign voyage.

wagonage (wag-ə-nij). 1. Transportation by a wagon. 2. The fee for carriage by wagon. 3. A group of wagons.

wai (wayt), n. A stolen article thrown away by a thief in flight, usu. through fear of apprehension. ● At common law, the rule was that if a wai is seized by a public officer or private person before the owner claims it, the title vests in the Crown, but today the general rule is that a wai passes to the state in trust for the true owner, who may regain it by proving ownership.

“Wais, bona usiata, are goods stolen, and waived or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. These are given to the king by the law, as a punishment upon the owner, for not himself pursuing the felon, and taking away his goods from him. And therefore if the party robbed do his diligence immediately to follow and apprehend the thief (which is called making fresh suit) or do convict him afterwards, or procure evidence to convict him, he shall have his goods again.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 286–87 (1765).

wainable (way-nə-bal), adj. Archaic. (Of land) plowable; tillable.

wainage (way-nij), n. Hist. The plow, team, and other implements used by a person (esp. a villein) to cultivate the soil; instruments of husbandry. — Also termed wainagium; waynagium (way-nay-je-am).

wait-and-see principle. A modification to the rule against perpetuities, under which a court may determine the validity of a contingent future interest based on whether it actually vests within the perpetuities period, rather than on whether it possibly could have vested outside the period. — Also termed second-look doctrine.

waiting clerk. Hist. An officer who waits in attendance on the court of chancery. ● The office of the waiting clerk was abolished in 1842 by the Court of Chancery Act, St. 5 & 6 Vict. ch. 103.

waiting period. A period that must expire before some legal right or remedy can be enjoyed or enforced. ● For example, many states have waiting periods for the issuance of marriage licenses or the purchase of handguns.

waive (wayv), n. Archaic. A woman who has by her conduct deprived herself of the protection of the law; a female outlaw. ● The term “outlaw” usu. referred only to a male. See OUTLAW.

waive, vb. 1. To abandon, renounce, or surrender (a claim, privilege, right, etc.); to give up (a right or claim) voluntarily. ● Ordinarily, to waive a right one must do it knowingly — with knowledge of the relevant facts. 2. To refrain from insisting on (a strict rule, formality, etc.); to forgo.

waiver (way-ər), n. 1. The voluntary relinquishment or abandonment — express or implied — of a legal right or advantage <waiver of notice>. ● The party alleged to have waived a right must have had both knowledge of the existing right and the intention of forgoing it. Cf. ESTOPPEL.

""Waiver" is often inexact defined as ‘the voluntary relinquishment of a known right.’ When the waiver is reinforced by reliance, enforcement is often said to rest on ‘estoppel.’ ... Since the more common definition of estoppel is limited to reliance on a misrepresentation of an existing fact, reliance on a waiver or promise as to the future is sometimes said to create a ‘promissory estoppel.’ The common definition of waiver may lead to the incorrect inference that the promisor must know his legal rights and must intend the legal effect of the promise. But ... it is sufficient if he has reason to know the essential facts." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 84 cmt. b (1981).

“Although it has often been said that a waiver is ‘the intentional relinquishment of a known right,’ this is a misleading definition. What is involved is not the relinquishment of a right and the termination of a reciprocal duty but the excuse of the nonoccurrence or of a delay in the occurrence of a condition of a duty.” E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 8.5, at 561 (1982).

express waiver. A voluntary and intentional waiver.
implied waiver. A waiver evidenced by a party’s decisive, unequivocal conduct reasonably inferring the intent to waive.

"An implied waiver may arise where a person has pursued such a course of conduct as to evidence an intention to waive a right, or where his conduct is inconsistent with any other intention than to waive it. Waiver may be inferred from conduct or acts putting one off his guard and leading him to believe that a right has been waived. Mere silence, however, is no waiver unless there is an obligation to speak." 28 Am. Jur. 2d Estoppel and Waiver § 160, at 845–46 (1966).

prospective waiver. A waiver of something that has not yet occurred, such as a contractual waiver of future claims for discrimination upon settlement of a lawsuit.

2. The instrument by which a person relinquishes or abandons a legal right or advantage <the plaintiff must sign a waiver when the funds are delivered>.

lien waiver. A written and signed waiver of a subcontractor’s mechanic’s lien rights, usu. submitted to enable the owner or general contractor to receive a draw on a construction loan.

waiver by election of remedies. A defense arising when a plaintiff has sought two inconsistent remedies and by a decisive act chooses one of them, thereby waiving the other.

waiver of claims and defenses. 1. The intentional relinquishment by a maker, drawer, or other obligor under a contract of the right to assert against the assignee any claims or defenses the obligor has against the assignor. 2. The contractual clause providing for such a waiver.

waiver of defenses. Real estate. A document by which a mortgagee acknowledges that the mortgage is good and valid for the full amount of the mortgage note. • This document ensures that the mortgagee has no defenses to the mortgage. — Also termed estoppel certificate; no-setoff certificate; declaration of no defenses.

waiver of exemption. 1. A debtor’s voluntary relinquishment of the right to an exemption from a creditor’s levy or sale of any part of the debtor’s personal property by judicial process. 2. The contractual clause expressly providing for such a waiver.

waiver of immunity. The act of giving up the right against self-incrimination and proceeding to testify. See IMMUNITY (3).

waiver-of-premium clause. Insurance. A provision for a waiver of premium payments after the insured has been disabled for a specified length of time, such as six months.

waiver of protest. A relinquishment by a party to a negotiable instrument of the formality of protest in case of dishonor. See PROTEST (2).

waiver of tort. The election to sue in quasi-contract to recover the defendant’s unjust benefit, instead of suing in tort to recover damages. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT.

"A person upon whom a tort has been committed and who brings an action for the benefits received by the tortfeasor is sometimes said to ‘waive the tort.’" 2nd Restatement § 529 (1937).

" ‘Waiver of tort’ is a misnomer. A party only waives a tort in the sense that he elects to sue in quasi-contract to recover the defendant’s unjust benefit rather than to sue in tort to recover damages; he has a choice of alternative remedies. But the tort is not extinguished. Indeed it is said that it is a sine qua non of both remedies that he should establish that a tort has been committed.” Lord Goff of Chieveley & Gareth Jones, The Law of Restitution 605 (3d ed. 1996).

waivery. Hist. The act of putting a woman outside the protection of the law. • At common law, a woman could not be “outlawed” because she was not considered “in law” — that is, she could not undertake legal proceedings on her own. By Bracton’s day, the effect of outlawing a woman was achieved by “waiving” her — the act being called waivery.

walk, vb. Slang. 1. To be acquitted <though charged with three thefts, Robinson walked each time>. 2. To escape any type of real punishment <despite the seriousness of the crime, Selvidge spent only two nights in jail, and when convicted had to pay a fine of only $750: he walked>.

walker, n. Hist. A forester who inspects an assigned area of land.

walkout. 1. STRIKE. 2. Loosely, the act of leaving a work assignment, meeting, or other event as a show of protest.

wall. An erection of stone, brick, or other material raised to varying heights, esp. inside or surrounding a building, for privacy, security, or enclosure.

ancient wall. A party wall that has stood for at least 20 years, thus giving each party an easement right to refuse to allow the other party to remove or substantially change the wall.

party wall. A wall that divides two adjoining, separately owned properties and that is shared by the two property owners as tenants in common. — Also termed common wall.

wallia (wah-lee-uh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A wall (such as a mound or bank) erected in marshy areas for protection against the sea; a seawall.

Walsh-Healey Act. A federal law, enacted in 1936, stipulating that government contractors must: (1) pay their workers no less than the prevailing minimum wage; (2) observe the eight-hour day and 40-hour workweek (with time-and-a-half for work exceeding those hours); (3) employ no convict labor and no females under 18 or males under 16 years of age; and (4) maintain sanitary working conditions. 41 USCA §§ 35 et seq.

wampum (wom-pam), n. Hist. Indian money consisting of shells, beads, or animal pelts. • In 1637, it became the first medium of exchange for the New England colonies by order of the General Court of Massachusetts, because England had not provided the colonies with a standard of exchange. The Court ordered that “wampampege should passe at 6 a penny for any sum under 12d.” Wampum was used as the medium of exchange, esp. for small transactions, until 1652 when the General Court ordered the first metallic currency.

wanlass (wahn-las). Hist. An ancient form of tenure requiring the tenant to drive deer to a stand so that the lord can take a shot. — Also spelled wanlace.

wantage (wahnt-ij), n. A deficiency of something; specif., a vessel’s deficiency of not being full, due to leakage.

want of consideration. The lack of consideration for a contract. See CONSIDERATION. Cf. FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

want of jurisdiction. A court’s lack of power to act in a particular way or to give certain kinds of relief. • A court may have no power to act at all, may lack authority over a person or the subject matter of a lawsuit, or may have no power to act until the prerequisites for its jurisdiction have been satisfied. — Also termed lack of jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

want of prosecution. Failure of a litigant to pursue the case <dismissal for want of prosecution>. — Also termed lack of prosecution; no progress. — Abbr. w.o.p.

want of repair. A defective condition, such as a condition on a highway making it unsafe for ordinary travel.

wanton (wahn-tan), adj. Unreasonably or maliciously risking harm while being utterly indifferent to the consequences. • In criminal law, wanton usu. connotes malice (in the criminal-law sense), while reckless does not. Cf. RECKLESS; WILFUL.

“Wanton differs from reckless both as to the actual state of mind and as to the degree of culpability. One who is acting recklessly is fully aware of the unreasonable risk he is creating, but may be trying and hoping to avoid any harm. One acting wantonly may be creating no greater risk of harm, but he is not trying to avoid it and is indifferent to whether harm results or not. Wanton conduct has properly been characterized as ‘vicious’ and rates extreme in the degree of culpability. The two are not mutually exclusive. Wanton conduct is reckless plus, so to speak.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 875–80 (3d ed. 1982).

wanton and reckless misconduct. See wanton misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

wanton misconduct. See MISCONDUCT.

wanton negligence. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

wantonness, n. Conduct indicating that the actor is aware of the risks but indifferent to the results. • Wantonness usu. suggests a greater degree of culpability than recklessness, and it often connotes malice in criminal-law contexts. — wanton, adj. Cf. RECKLESSNESS.

wapentake (wahp-an-tayk or wap-), n. [fr. Sax. waepen “weapons” + tac “touch”] Hist. In some English counties, a division corresponding to the hundred or ward in other counties. See HUNDRED. 2. The court within such a division. 3. A bailiff who works in such a court.

war. 1. Hostile conflict by means of armed forces, carried on between nations, states, or rulers, or sometimes between parties within the same nation or state; a period of such conflict <the Gulf War>.

civil war. An internal armed conflict between people of the same nation; esp. (usu. cap.), the war from 1861 to 1865, resulting from the Confederate states’ attempted secession from the Union.

warden of the cinque ports (singk ports). Hist. A magistrate with jurisdiction over the five cinque ports. • This office was created in imitation of the Roman policy of strengthening coasts against enemies. The warden, formally called the Lord Warden, presided over the Court of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, which was created in the 14th century and, over time, variously exercised civil, equity, and admiralty jurisdiction. — Formerly termed guardian of the cinque ports. See CINQUE PORTS.

ward-horn. Hist. The duty of keeping watch and ward with a horn to blow in the event of a surprise. See WATCH AND WARD.

ward-in-chancery. See WARD.

wardite. Hist. A fine that a tenant was required to pay upon failing to fulfill the duty of castle-guard. See CASTLE-GUARD.

wardmote (word-moht). Hist. 1. A court maintained in every London ward. — Also termed wardmote court; inquest. 2. A meeting of a ward.

ward of admiralty. See WARD.

wardpenny, n. Hist. 1. Money paid in lieu of military service. 2. Money paid to the sheriff or castellains in exchange for watching and warding a castle. — Also termed wardage; warth.

wardship. 1. Guardianship of a person, usu. a minor. 2. The condition of being a ward. 3. Hist. The right of the feudal lord to guardianship of a deceased tenant’s minor heir until the heir reached the age of majority.
wardship in chivalry. Wardship as incident to the tenure of knight-service.

wardship in copyholds. Wardship by which the lord is guardian of an infant tenant by special custom.

wardstaff, n. Hist. A staff carried by an authority; esp., a constable's or watchman's staff.

wardwit, n. Hist. 1. An immunity or exemption from the duty of warding or contributing to warding. 2. A fine for failing to watch and ward. — Also termed warwit; wardwite.

warectare (wor-ak-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin “to let lie fallow”] Hist. To plow land in the spring and then let it lie fallow for a better wheat crop the next year.

warehouse. A building used to store goods and other items.

bonded warehouse. A special type of private warehouse used to store products subject to customs duties. See WAREHOUSE SYSTEM.

warehouse book. A book used by merchants to account for quantities of goods received, shipped, and in stock.

warehouseman. See WAREHOUSE.

warehouseman's lien. See warehouser's lien under LIEN.

warehouser. One who, as a business, keeps or stores the goods of another for a fee. • The transaction in which a warehouser engages is a bailment for the benefit of both parties, and the bailee is liable for ordinary negligence. — Also termed warehouseman. See BAILEE.

warehouse receipt. A document evidencing title to goods stored with someone else; esp., a receipt issued by a person engaged in the business of storing goods for a fee. • A warehouse receipt, which is considered a document of title, may be a negotiable instrument and is often used for financing with inventory as security. See BAILMENT.

warehouser's lien. See LIEN.

warehouse system. A system of maintaining bonded warehouses so that importers can either store goods for reexportation without paying customs duties or store the goods without paying duties until the goods are removed for domestic consumption. See bonded warehouse under WAREHOUSE.

warehousing. 1. A mortgage banker's holding of mortgages until the resale market improves. 2. A corporation's giving of advance notice of a tender offer to institutional investors, who can then buy stock in the target company before public awareness of the takeover inflates the stock's price. See TENDER OFFER.

warfare. 1. The act of engaging in war or military conflict. See WAR. 2. Loosely, the act of engaging in any type of conflict.

biological warfare. The use of biological or infectious agents in war, usu. by delivering them via airplanes or ballistic missiles.

economic warfare. 1. A hostile relationship between two or more countries in which at least one tries to damage the other's economy for economic, political, or military ends. 2. The collective measures that might be taken to achieve such ends.

guerrilla warfare. Hostilities that are conducted by individuals or small groups who are usu. not part of an organized army and who fight by means of surprise attacks, ambushes, and sabotage. • Formerly, it was thought that the hostilities had to be conducted in enemy-occupied territory. Typically, guerrilla warfare is carried out only when geographical conditions are favorable and when the civilian population is at least partly cooperative.

land warfare. Hostilities conducted on the ground, as opposed to at sea or in the air.

WARN (worn). abbr. WORKER ADJUSTMENT AND RETRAINING NOTIFICATION ACT.

warning. The pointing out of a danger, esp. to one who would not otherwise be aware of it. • State and federal laws (such as 21 USC § 825) require warning labels to be placed on potentially dangerous materials, such as drugs and equipment.

warnistura (wor-na-st(y)oor-a), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Furniture; provision.

warnoth (wor-noht). Hist. A defunct custom by which a tenant who failed to pay rent on a set day had to pay double the amount due, and on failing a second time had to pay triple (and so on).

war power. The constitutional authority of Congress to declare war and maintain armed forces war-powers resolution. A resolution passed by Congress in 1973 (over the President’s veto) restricting the President’s authority to involve the United States in foreign hostilities without congressional approval, unless the United States or one of its territories is attacked. 50 USCA §§ 1541–1548.

warrant, n. 1. A writ directing or authorizing someone to do an act, esp. one directing a law enforcement officer to make an arrest, a search, or a seizure.

administrative warrant. A warrant issued by a judge at the request of an administrative agency. • This type of warrant is sought to conduct an administrative search. See administrative search under SEARCH.

anticipatory search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

arrest warrant. A warrant, issued only on probable cause, directing a law-enforcement officer to arrest and bring a person to court. — Also termed warrant of arrest.

bench warrant. A warrant issued directly by a judge to a law-enforcement officer, esp. for the arrest of a person who has been held in contempt, has been indicted, has disobeyed a subpoena, or has failed to appear for a hearing or trial.

blanket search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

compliance warrant. See warrant of commitment.

debt warrant. A warrant authorizing a warden or other prison official to carry out a debt sentence. • A debt warrant typically sets the time and place for a prisoner’s execution.

distress warrant. 1. A warrant authorizing a court officer to distraint property. See DISTRESS. 2. A writ allowing an officer to seize a tenant’s goods for failing to pay rent due to the landlord.

distress warrant. 1. A warrant directing a peace officer to rearrest an escaped prisoner. 2. Hist. A warrant granted to retake a prisoner who had escaped from a royal prison after being committed there. • The warrant was obtained on affidavit from the judge of the court in which the action had been brought, and was directed to all sheriffs throughout evacuation warrant. A warrant for the return of a fugitive from one jurisdiction to another. Cf. rendition warrant.

England, commanding them to retake and commit the prisoner to the nearest jail.

fugitive warrant. A warrant that authorizes law-enforcement officers to take into custody a person who has fled from one state to another to avoid prosecution or punishment.

general warrant. 1. Hist. A warrant issued by the English Secretary of State for the arrest of the author, printer, or publisher of a seditious libel, without naming the persons to be arrested. • General warrants were banned by Parliament in 1766.

“A practice had obtained in the secretaries office ever since the restoration, grounded on some clauses in the acts for regulating the press, of issuing general warrants to take up (without naming any person in particular) the authors, printers and publishers of such obscene or seditious libels, as were particularly specified in the warrant. When those acts expired in 1894, the same practice was inadvertently continued, in every reign and under every administration, except the four last years of queen Anne, down to the year 1763: when such a warrant being issued to apprehend the authours, printers and publishers of a certain seditious libel, its validity was disputed; and the warrant was adjudged by the whole court of king’s bench to be void, in the case of Money v. Leach. Trin. 5 Geo. III. E.R. After which the issuing of such general warrants was declared illegal by a vote of the house of commons.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 288 n1 (1769).

2. A warrant that gives a law-enforcement officer broad authority to search and seize unspecified places or persons; a search or arrest warrant that lacks a sufficiently particularized description of the person or thing to be seized or the place to be searched. • General warrants are unconstitutional because they fail to meet the Fourth Amendment’s specificity requirements.

“But though there are precedents of general warrants to search all suspected places for stolen goods, these are not at common law legal, because it would be extremely dangerous to leave it to the discretion of a common officer to arrest what person, or search what houses he thinks fit. And in the great case of Money v. Leach, it was declared by Lord Mansfield, that a warrant to search for, and secure the person and papers of the author, printer and publisher of a libel, is not only illegal in itself, but is so improper on the face of it, that it will afford no justification to an officer acting under its sanction. And by two resolutions of the House of Commons such general warrants were declared to be invalid.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 66 (2d ed. 1826).

justice’s warrant. See peace warrant.

landlord’s warrant. A type of distress warrant from a landlord to seize the tenant’s goods, to sell them at public sale, and to compel the tenant to pay rent or observe some other lease stipulation. See DISTRAIN; DISTRESS.

no-knock search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

outstanding warrant. An unexecuted arrest warrant.

peace warrant. A warrant issued by a justice of the peace for the arrest of a specified person. — Also termed justice’s warrant.

preliminary warrant. A warrant to bring a person to court for a preliminary hearing on probable cause.

rendition warrant. A warrant requesting the extradition of a fugitive from one jurisdiction to another. Cf. extradition warrant.

search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

surreptitious-entry warrant. A warrant that authorizes a law officer to enter and observe an ongoing criminal operation (such as an illegal drug lab).

tax warrant. An official process that is issued for collecting unpaid taxes and under which property may be seized and sold.

warrant of arrest. See arrest warrant.

warrant of commitment. A warrant committing a person to custody. — Also termed commitment warrant.

warrant upon indictment or information. An arrest warrant issued at the request of the prosecutor for a defendant named in an indictment or information. Fed. R. Crim. P. 9.

2. A document conferring authority, esp. to pay or receive money.

deposit warrant. A warehouse receipt used as security for a loan.

dock warrant. See DOCK RECEIPT.

interest warrant. An order drawn by a corporation on its bank directing the bank to pay interest to a bondholder.

municipal warrant. An order to draw money from a municipality’s treasury for the payment of the municipality’s expenses or debts.

tax-anticipation warrant. A warrant that is issued to raise public money and that is payable out of tax receipts when collected.

treasury warrant. An order in the form of a check on which government disbursements are paid.

3. An order by which a drawer authorizes someone to pay a particular sum of money to another.

county warrant. A warrant drawn by a county official, directing the county treasurer to pay a sum of money out of county funds to bearer, to a named individual, or to the named individual’s order.

4. subscription warrant.

warrant, vb. 1. To guarantee the security of (realty or personalty, or a person) <the store warranted the safety of the customer’s jewelry>. 2. To give warranty of (title); to give warranty of title to (a person) <the seller warrants the property’s title to the buyer>. 3. To promise or guarantee <warrant payment>.

“Even today lawyers use the verb ‘to warrant’ meaning to promise without necessarily indicating that the promise is a warranty.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 165 n.1 (3d ed. 1981).

4. To justify <the conduct warrants a presumption of negligence>. 5. To authorize <the manager warranted the search of the premises>.

Warrant Clause. The clause of the Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution requiring that warrants be issued on probable cause.

warrant creditor. See CREDITOR.

warrantee (wor-an-tee or wahr-). A person to whom a warranty is given.

warrantia chartae. See DE WARRANTIA CHARTAE.

warrantia custodiae (wa-ran-sho-ee-ka-stoh-dee-ee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ for a purchaser of land held in knight’s service against the seller (and heirs), who had warranted that the land was free of wardship when a wardship was later claimed.

warrantia diei. See DE WARRANTIA DIEL.

warrantizare (wor-an-ta-zair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To warrant by covenant (in a deed of conveyance) to defend the grantee’s title and possession. — Also spelled warrantizare.

warrantless arrest. See ARREST.

warrantless search. See SEARCH.

warrant of arrest. See arrest warrant under WARRANT (1). warrant of attorney. 1. POWER OF ATTORNEY (1).

2. Hist. Written authority given by a client to a lawyer to appear in court and to confess judgment in favor of a specified party. • It usu. instructed the attorney not to bring any action, seek a writ of error, or file a bill in equity that might delay the judgment. The warrant was typically given as security for an obligation on which judgment was authorized. Cf. CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT; COGNITIV.

"A warrant of attorney was not required to be under seal, though it generally was so. In order to guard against any imposition in procuring debtors to execute warrants of attorney or cognositis in ignorance of the effect of such instruments, it is provided that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or cognositis actionem, given by any person, shall not be of any force, unless there is present some attorney of one of the superior courts on behalf of such person, expressly named by him and attending at his request, to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognositis, before the same is executed ...." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 125 (11th ed. 1881).

warrant of commitment. See WARRANT (1).

warrant officer. See OFFICER (2).

warrantor (wor-an-tor or -tar or wahr-). A person who gives a warranty.

warrant recall, n. A procedure for removing from government computers information about canceled warrants in order to avoid repeated or mistaken arrests.

warrant to sue and defend. Hist. 1. Written authority given by a client to a lawyer to authorize commencement or defense of a lawsuit. 2. A special warrant from the Crown authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend on the party’s behalf.

warrant upon indictment or information. See WARRANT (1).

warranty (wor-an-tee or wahr-), n. 1. Property. A covenant by which the grantor in a deed promises to secure to the grantee the estate conveyed in the deed, and pledges to compensate the grantee with other land if the grantee is evicted by someone having better title. • The covenant is binding on the grantor’s heirs. See COVENANT (4). Cf. quitclaim deed under DEED.

collateral warranty. A warranty that is made by a stranger to the title, and that consequently runs only to the covenantee and not to the land.

general warranty. A warranty against the claims of all persons.

lineal warranty. Hist. A warranty existing when an heir derives title to land from the warrantor; a warranty from the same ancestor as the one from whom the land derived.

special warranty. A warranty against any person’s claim made by, through, or under the grantor or the grantor’s heirs.

2. Contracts. An express or implied promise that something in furtherance of the contract is guaranteed by one of the contracting parties; esp., a seller’s promise that the thing being sold is as represented or promised. • A warranty differs from a representation in four principal ways: (1) a warranty is an essential part of a contract, while a representation is usu. only a collateral inducement, (2) a warranty is always written on the face of the contract, while a representation may be written or oral, (3) a warranty is conclusively presumed to be material, while the burden is on the party claiming breach to show that a representation is material, and (4) a warranty must be strictly complied with, while substantial truth is the only requirement for a representation. Cf. CONDITION (3).

"T[wo] points must be borne in mind. In the first place, the words ‘condition’ and ‘warranty’ are not invariably kept as distinct as accuracy of definition demands; and in insurance law especially ‘warranty’ is very commonly used in the sense ascribed to ‘condition’ .... In the second place, the injured party, if he chooses to waive his right to repudiate the contract on breach of a condition, may still bring an action for such damages as he has sustained." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 223 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

The distinction between conditions and warranties is relatively modern so far as the terminology is concerned, and it will be found that in the older cases the word ‘warranty’ is frequently used to mean any term of the contract. There is some ground for regretting the modern usage. The difference between a condition and a warranty is that a breach of the former gives the innocent party the option of treating the whole contract as discharged, while a breach of the latter merely entitles the innocent party to claim damages, but does not discharge him from performing his own duties under the contract. In other words, the right to the other party’s performance is conditional upon conditions (but not warranties) being performed." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 145-46 (3d ed. 1981).

as-is warranty. A warranty that goods are sold with all existing faults. See AS IS.

construction warranty. A warranty from the seller or building contractor of a new home that the home is free of structural, electrical, plumbing, and other defects and is fit for its intended purpose.
deceptive warranty. A warranty containing false or fraudulent representations or promises.

express warranty. A warranty created by the overt words or actions of the seller. Under the UCC, an express warranty is created by any of the following: (1) an affirmation of fact or promise made by the seller to the buyer relating to the goods that becomes the basis of the bargain; (2) a description of the goods that becomes part of the basis of the bargain; or (3) a sample or model made part of the basis of the bargain. UCC § 2-313.

extended warranty. An additional warranty often sold with the purchase of consumer goods (such as appliances and motor vehicles) to cover repair costs not otherwise covered by a manufacturer's standard warranty, by extending either the standard-warranty coverage period or the range of defects covered. Also termed extended service warranty; extended service contract.

full warranty. A warranty that fully covers labor and materials for repairs. Under federal law, the warrantor must remedy the consumer product within a reasonable time and without charge after notice of a defect or malfunction. 15 USCA § 2304. Cf. limited warranty.

implied warranty. A warranty arising by operation of law because of the circumstances of a sale, rather than by the seller's express promise.

implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. A warranty — implied by law if the seller has reason to know of the buyer's special purposes for the property — that the property is suitable for those purposes. Sometimes shortened to warranty of fitness.

"Those unfamiliar with the differences between the warranty of merchantability (fitness for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used) and the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose often confuse the two; one can find many opinions in which the judges used the terms 'merchantability' and 'fitness for a particular purpose' interchangeably. Such confusion under the Code is inexcusable." | James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 9-10, at 527 (4th ed. 1995).

implied warranty of habitability. In a residential lease, a warranty from the landlord to the tenant that the leased property is fit to live in and that it will remain so during the term of the lease. Also termed covenant of habitability.

implied warranty of merchantability. A warranty that the property is fit for the ordinary purposes for which it is used. Some-times shortened to warranty of merchantability.

limited warranty. A warranty that does not fully cover labor and materials for repairs. Under federal law, a limited warranty must be clearly labeled as such on the face of the warranty. Cf. full warranty.

personal warranty. A warranty arising from an obligation to pay all or part of the debt of another.

presentation warranty. An implied promise concerning the title and credibility of an instrument, made to a payor or acceptor upon presentation of the instrument for payment or acceptance. UCC §§ 3-417, 3-418, 4-207(1).

transfer warranty. 1. An implied promise concerning the title and credibility of an instrument, made by a transferor to a transferee and, if the transfer is by indorsement, to remote transferees. UCC §§ 3-417, 4-207. 2. A warranty made by a transferee of a document of title upon a transfer of the document for value to the immediate transferee. UCC § 7-507.

warranty ab initio (ab i-nish-ee-oh). An independent subsidiary promise whose breach does not discharge the contract, but gives to the injured party a right of action for the damage sustained as a result of the breach. Cf. warranty ex post facto.

warranty against infringement. A merchant seller's warranty that the goods being sold do not violate any patent, copyright, trademark, or similar claim. The warranty does not arise if the buyer provides the seller with the specifications for the goods purchased.

warranty ex post facto (eks poht fak-toh). A broken condition for which the injured party could void the contract, but decides instead to continue the contract, with a right of action for the broken condition (which amounts to a breached warranty). See condition (2). Cf. warranty ab initio.

warranty of actual title. See warranty of title.

warranty of assignment. An assignor's implied warranty that he or she (1) has the rights assigned, (2) will do nothing to interfere with those rights, and (3) knows of nothing that impairs the value of the assignment.

warranty of authorship. Copyright. An author's contractual warranty that the work is an original work by that author.

warranty of merchantability. See implied warranty of merchantability.

warranty of title. A warranty that the seller or assignor of property has title to that property, that the transfer is rightful, and that there are no liens or other encumbrances beyond those that the buyer or assignee is aware of at the time of contracting. • This warranty arises automatically whenever anyone sells goods. — Also termed warranty of actual title.

written warranty. A warranty made in writing; specif., any written affirmation or promise by a supplier of a consumer product to a buyer (for purposes other than resale), forming the basis of the bargain and providing that the material or workmanship is free of defects or will be repaired or replaced free of charge if the product fails to meet the required specifications. 15 USCA § 2301.

Y2K warranty. See Y2K WARRANTY.

3. Insurance. A pledge or stipulation by the insured that the facts relating to the person insured, the thing insured, or the risk insured are as stated.

affirmative warranty. A warranty — express or implied — that facts are as stated at the beginning of the policy period. • An affirmative warranty is usu. a condition precedent to the policy taking effect.

executory warranty. A warranty that arises when an insured undertakes to perform some executory stipulation, such as a promise that certain acts will be done or that certain facts will continue to exist.

promissory warranty. A warranty that facts will continue to be as stated throughout the policy period, such that a failure of the warranty provides the insurer with a defense to a claim under the policy. — Also termed continuing warranty.

warranty ab initio. See WARRANTY (2).

warranty against infringement. See WARRANT-warranty deed. See DEED.

warranty ex post facto. See WARRANTY (2).

warranty of actual title. See warranty of title under WARRANTY (2).

warranty of assignment. See WARRANTY (2).

warranty of authorship. See WARRANTY (2).

warranty of title. See WARRANTY (2).

warren (wor-an or wahr-an). 1. A place for the preservation of certain wildlife (such as pheasants, partridges, or rabbits). 2. A privilege to keep wildlife or game in a warren. 3. The area to which the privilege extends.

free warren. A warren privilege giving the grantee the sole right to kill the wildlife to the extent of the grantee's warren area. — Also termed libera warrena.

"Free warren is a ... franchise, erected for preservation or custody ... of beasts and fowls of warren; which being ferae naturae, every one had a right to kill as he could; but upon the introduction of the forest laws ... these animals being looked upon as royal game and the sole property of our savage monarchs, this franchise of free warren was invented to protect them; by giving the grantee a sole and exclusive power of killing such game ... on condition of his preventing other persons. A man therefore that has the franchise of warren is in reality no more than a royal gamekeeper; but no man, not even a lord of a manor, could by common law justify sporting on another's soil, or even on his own, unless he had the liberty of free warren." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 38-39 (1766).

war-risk insurance. See INSURANCE.

Warsaw Convention. Int'l law. A treaty (to which the United States is a party) negotiated in Warsaw, Poland, in 1929, consisting of uniform rules governing claims made for personal injuries arising out of international air travel. Cited: MONTREAL AGREEMENT.

"Under the [Warsaw] Convention ... air carriers are absolutely liable up to a preset monetary ceiling for any accident in which a passenger suffers bodily injury or death, as long as the accident took place on board the aircraft or in the process of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking. The Convention limits the liability of the carrier for each passenger to the sum of 125,000 francs, unless the carrier and passenger by special contract agree to a higher limit of liability, or unless it can be established that the carrier has been guilty of willful misconduct. The Convention contains a two-year time limitation for bringing suit, and also absolves the carrier from liability upon a showing of due care on its part." 8A Am. Jur. 2d Aviation § 149, at 160-61 (1997).

warth. See WARDPENNY.

warwit. See WARWDIT.

war zone. Int'l law. A designated area, on land or at sea, within which the rights of neutral countries are not respected by belligerent countries.

wash transaction. See wash sale under SALE.

waste, n. 1. Permanent harm to real property committed by a tenant (for life or for years) to the prejudice of the heir, the reversioner, or the remainderman. • In the law of mortgages, any of the following acts by the mortgagor may constitute waste: (1) physical damage, whether intentional or negligent, (2) failure to maintain and repair, except for repair of casualty damage or damage caused by third-party acts, (3) failure to pay property taxes or governmental assessments secured by a lien having priority over the mortgage, so that the payments become delinquent, (4) the material failure to comply with mortgage covenants concerning physical care, maintenance, construction, demolition, or casualty insurance, or (5) keeping the rents to which the mortgagee has the right of possession. — Also termed vastam.

"The old action of waste was a mixed action, being founded in part on the statute of Gloucester (A.D. 1278), which provided that 'he which shall be attainted of waste shall lose the thing wasted, and moreover shall recompense thrice as much as the waste shall be taxed at.' The action was to recover the land in which waste had been done and the treble damages. The statute of Gloucester was imported into this country, but many variant statutes now regulate the subject." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 13 (3d ed. 1899).

active waste. See commissive waste.

affirmative waste. See commissive waste.

ameliorating waste (ə-meel-yə-ray-ting). A lessee’s unauthorized change to the physical character of a lessor’s property — technically constituting waste, but in fact resulting in improvement of the property. • Generally, equity will not enjoin such waste. — Also termed ameliorative waste.

commissive waste (ko-mis-iv). Waste caused by the affirmative acts of the tenant. — Also termed active waste; affirmative waste; voluntary waste.

double waste. Hist. The destruction occurring when a tenant having a duty to repair allows a house to deteriorate, and then unlawfully cuts down timber to repair it.

equitable waste. An abuse of the privilege of nonimpeachability for waste at common law, for which equity will restrain the commission of willful, destructive, malicious, or extravagant waste; esp., waste caused by a life tenant who, although ordinarily not responsible for permissive waste, flagrantly damages or destroys the property.

"A life tenant with the benefit of an express exemption from liability for voluntary waste will nevertheless be restrained in equity from committing acts of flagrant destruction to the premises; hence the (seemingly paradoxical) term, 'equitable waste'. A life tenant who has engaged in, or who threatens to engage in, reprehensible acts of voluntary waste will not be permitted unconcerningly to shield behind his legal right to commit waste to the detriment of those next entitled to enjoyment of the property, for this would be to abuse the legal right." Peter Butt, Land Law 114–15 (2d ed. 1988).

permissive waste. A tenant’s failure to make normal repairs to property so as to protect it from substantial deterioration.

voluntary waste. Waste resulting from some positive act of destruction. See commissive waste.

"Voluntary waste. This involves some positive act of injury to the property, diminishing its value for the person next in succession; it is a deliberate and active change to the property. Examples are altering the character of premises by demolishing internal walls and fittings or opening and working a mine on the land (but not working a mine already opened, for the pre-existence of the mine shows an intention on the part of the grantor that the profits from the mine are to be enjoyed by the life tenant). A life tenant is liable for voluntary waste, unless the instrument conferring the interest expressly exempts liability for voluntary waste." Peter Butt, Land Law 114 (2d ed. 1988).

2. Refuse or superfluous material, esp. that remaining after a manufacturing or chemical process <toxic waste>.

hazardous waste. Waste that — because of its quantity, concentration, or physical, chemical, or infectious characteristics — may cause or significantly contribute to an increase in mortality or otherwise harm human health or the environment. 42 USCA § 6903(5). — Also termed hazardous substance.

toxic waste. Hazardous, poisonous substances, such as dichlorodiphenyltrichloroethane (DDT). • Most states regulate the handling and disposing of toxic waste, and several federal statutes (such as the Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA); 42 USCA §§ 9601–9657) regulate the use, transportation, and disposal of toxic waste.

waste book. A merchant’s book for making rough entries of transactions before posting them into a journal. — Also termed blotter.
wastewater. See WATER.

wasting asset. See ASSET.

wasting property. A right to or an interest in something that is consumed in its normal use, such as a wasting asset, a leasehold interest, or a patent right.

wasting trust. See TRUST.

watch, n. Maritime law. 1. A division of a ship’s crew <port or starboard watch>. 2. The division of the day into time periods of service by officers and the crew <four-hour watch>.

watch, vb. Hist. To stand guard during the night.

watch and ward, n. Hist. A feudal duty that some tenants had to keep guard through continuous vigilance. • The phrase denotes keeping guard by night (watch) and by day (ward). — Also termed watching and warding.

water. 1. The transparent liquid that is a chemical compound of hydrogen and oxygen (H₂O). 2. A body of this liquid, as in a stream, river, lake, or ocean.

backwater. Water in a stream that, because of a dam or obstruction, cannot flow forward and sometimes flows back.

coast water. Tidewater navigable by an ocean vessel; all water opening directly or indirectly into the ocean and navigable by a vessel coming in from the ocean. — Also termed coastal water.

developed water. Water brought to the surface and made available for use by the party claiming the water rights.

diffused surface water. Water, such as rainfall runoff, that collects and flows on the ground but does not form a watercourse. • Surface water is usu. subject to different regulations from water flowing in a watercourse. — Often shortened to surface water. See COMMON-ENEMY DOCTRINE; WATERCOURSE.

excess water. Water that is flowing in a stream in addition to what may be termed adjudicated waters; any water not needed for the reasonable beneficial uses of those having priority rights. — Also termed surplus water.

floodwater. Water that escapes from a watercourse in large volumes and flows over adjoining property in no regular channel.

foreign water. Water belonging to another nation or subject to another jurisdiction.

inland waters. See INTERNAL WATERS.

internal waters. See INTERNAL WATERS.

navigable water. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

navigable water of the United States. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

percolating water. Water that oozes or seeps through the soil without a defined channel (such as rainwater or other water that has lost its status as part of a stream). • Percolating water usu. constitutes part of the land on which it is found.

posted water. (usu. pl.) A body of water that is reserved for the exclusive use of the person who owns the land surrounding it. • The owner secures the exclusive use by posting a notice prohibiting others from using the water.

private water. Nonnavigable water owned and controlled by one or more individuals and not subject to public use.

public water. Water adapted for purposes of navigation or public access.

subterranean water. Water naturally flowing, lying in an immovable body, or percolating beneath the earth’s surface.

surplus water. 1. Water running off irrigated ground; water not consumed by the irrigation process. 2. See excess water.

territorial waters. The waters under a state’s or nation’s jurisdiction, including both inland waters and surrounding sea (traditionally within three miles of the coastline). — Also termed marine belt; maritime belt.

tidewater. See TIDEWATER.

wastewater. 1. Water that escapes from the canals, ditches, or other receptacles of the lawful claimant; water that is not used by the appropriator and is permitted to run off the appropriator’s property. 2. Water that is left over, esp. after a chemical or manufacturing process.

water bayley (bay-lee). Hist. An officer (mentioned in the colony laws of New Plymouth in A.D. 1671) who primarily collects dues for fish taken out of the colony’s waters.

watercourse. A body of water flowing in a reasonably definite channel with bed and banks. — Also termed waterway.
"Once water joins a watercourse it becomes subject to state control; in appropriation states it becomes available for appropriation to private use according to state law . . . . [A] watercourse could be defined to include not only rivers and lakes, but even tiny brook flowing into them, all the gullies through which water flows to the brooks, the snowpack and rainfall that feed them, and the evaporating or transpiring water in the process of forming clouds. But we need not require scientists to trace water to such remote sources because it would be beyond the ability of governments to regulate these sources. Legal definitions are intended to define a point beyond which a state does not regulate water use. Usually that point is when water is not in a 'natural stream.'" David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 106–107 (3d ed. 1997).

ancient watercourse. A watercourse in a channel that has existed from time immemorial.

artificial watercourse. A man-made watercourse, usu. to be used only temporarily. • If the watercourse is of a permanent character and has been maintained for a sufficient length of time, it may be considered a natural watercourse to which riparian rights can attach.

"An artificial waterway or stream may, under some circumstances, have the characteristics and incidents of a natural watercourse. In determining the question, three things seem generally to be taken into consideration by the courts: (1) whether the way or stream is temporary or permanent; (2) the circumstances under which it was created; and (3) the mode in which it has been used and enjoyed." 78 Am. Jur. 2d Waters § 196, at 644 (1975).

natural watercourse. A natural stream of water flowing in a specific direction within a reasonably definite natural channel with banks. • A natural watercourse does not include surface water, which often flows intermittently and in an indefinite channel. In addition, a natural stream is distinguished from an artificial ditch or canal, which is typically not the subject of riparian rights. See RIPARIAN RIGHTS; WATER.

water district. A geographical subdivision created by a state or local government entity to provide the public with a water supply.

watered stock. See STOCK.

waterfront. n. Land or land with buildings fronting a body of water.

watergage. n. 1. A seawall. 2. An instrument used to measure water.

watergavel. n. Hist. A fee paid for a benefit (such as fishing) obtained from a body of water.

watermark. 1. A mark indicating the highest or lowest point to which water rises or falls.

high-water mark. 1. The shoreline of a sea reached by the water at high tide. • The high-water mark is usu. computed as a mean or average high tide and not as the extreme height of the water. 2. In a freshwater lake created by a dam in an unnavigable stream, the highest point on the shore to which the dam can raise the water in ordinary circumstances. 3. In a river not subject to tides, the line that the river impresses on the soil by covering it long enough to deprive it of agricultural value. — Also termed high-water line.

low-water mark. 1. The shoreline of a sea marking the edge of the water at the lowest point of the ordinary ebb tide. 2. In a river, the point to which the water recedes at its lowest stage.

2. The transparent design or symbol seen when paper is held up to the light, usu. to indicate the genuineness of the document or the document’s manufacturer.

water ordeal. See ORDEAL.

waterpower. 1. The force obtained by converting water into energy. 2. The riparian owner’s right consisting of the fall in the stream as it passes over or through the riparian owner’s land; the difference of the level between the surface where the stream first touches one’s land and the surface where the water leaves the land.

water right. (often pl.) The right to use water from a natural stream or from an artificial canal for irrigation, power, domestic use, and the like; RIPARIAN RIGHT. — Also termed aquatic right.

waterscape, n. An aqueduct or passage for water.

waterway. See WATERCOURSE.

waveson (wayv-son), n. Hist. Goods that float on the sea after a shipwreck. Cf. FLOTSAM; JET-SAM; LAGAN.

wax scot (wak skot), n. Hist. A duty on wax candles used in churches, usu. paid twice a year. — Also termed cerage (seer-ij); cerattium (si-ray-shee-sm).
way. 1. A passage or path. 2. A right to travel over another’s property. See RIGHT-OF-WAY.

private way. 1. The right to pass over another’s land. 2. A way provided by local authorities primarily to accommodate particular individuals (usu. at the individual’s expense) but also for the public’s passage.

way of necessity. See implied easement under EASEMENT.

waybill. See BILL OF LADING.

way-going crop. A grain crop, formerly sown by a tenant during a tenancy (esp. in Pennsylvania), that did not ripen until after expiration of the lease. In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the tenant was entitled to the crop.

way-leave, n. 1. A right-of-way (usu. created by an express grant) over or through land for the transportation of minerals from a mine or quarry. 2. The royalty paid for such a right.

waynagium (way-nay-jee-am). See WAINAGE.

wealth. 1. A large quantity of something. 2. The state of having abundant financial resources; affluence.

wealth maximization. An economic situation in which a change in the allocation of resources benefits the winner — i.e., the one who gains from the allocation — more than it harms the loser. — Also termed Kaldor-Hicks efficiency; potential Pareto superiority.

weapon. An instrument used or designed to be used to injure or kill someone.

concealed weapon. A weapon that is carried by a person but that is not visible by ordinary observation.

dangerous weapon. An object or device that, because of the way it is used, is capable of causing serious bodily injury.

deadly weapon. Any firearm or other device, instrument, material, or substance that, from the manner it is used or is intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death. — Also termed lethal weapon. Cf. DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITY.

deadly weapon per se. A weapon that is deadly in and of itself or would ordinarily result in death by its use . — Also termed per se deadly weapon.

lethal weapon. See deadly weapon.

wear, n. [fr. Saxon ware] “a taking”] Hist. A dam made of stakes interlaced by twigs of willows that are placed across a river to more easily accommodate the netting of fish. — Also termed weir.

wear and tear. Deterioration caused by ordinary use <the tenant is not liable for normal wear and tear to the leased premises>. — Also termed fair wear and tear.

"'Fair wear' is the deterioration caused by the reasonable use of the premises; ‘fair tear’ is the deterioration caused by the ordinary operation of natural forces. A tenant’s repairing covenant commonly exempts the tenant from the obligation to repair damage characterisable as ‘fair wear and tear’ (sometimes called ‘reasonable wear and tear’). In the absence of such an exempting provision, a covenant to repair requires the repairing of damage characterisable as fair wear and tear. Where a covenant to repair exempts the tenant from liability for ‘fair wear and tear’, he is not responsible for deterioration or dilapidation caused by ‘the reasonable use of the house by the tenant and the ordinary operation of natural forces.’” Peter Butt, Land Law 256 (2d ed. 1988).

natural wear and tear. The depreciation of property resulting from its ordinary and reasonable use.

Webb-Pomerene Act. A federal law, originally enacted in 1918, that provides a qualified exemption for an export business against the prohibitions of the antitrust laws. 15 USC §§ 61 et seq.

"The Webb-Pomerene Act was passed to aid and encourage our manufacturers and producers to extend our foreign trade. Congress believed that American firms needed the power to form joint export associations in order to compete with foreign cartels, but while Congress was willing to create an exemption from the antitrust laws to serve this narrow purpose, the exemption created by the Webb-Pomerene Act was carefully hedged in to avoid substantial injury to domestic interests. Organization under the Webb-Pomerene Act does not give an export association the right to agree with foreign competitors to fix prices . . . or establish exclusive markets . . . .” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 262, at 296 (1996).

wedding. See MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

wedge principle. The principle that an act is wrong in a specific instance if, when raised to a general level of conduct, it would injure humanity.

"[T]here is the familiar argument from the 'wedge principle,' which is used to deny the possibility of looking at particular circumstances in applying moral rules." Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 315 (1957).

Whiteley rule. See FELLOW-OFFICER RULE.

White model. Labor law. A method for determining whether a union member's state-law claim against the employer is preempted by federal law, by focusing on whether state law permits the claim to be waived by a private contract. ● In Lingle v. Norge Division of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 U.S. 399, 108 S.Ct. 1877 (1988), the Supreme Court held that a union member's state-law retaliatory-discharge claim was not preempted by the Labor-Management Relations Act because the claim could be resolved without interpreting the collective-bargaining agreement. There are at least two models for applying the Lingle test: the White model, which focuses on whether the claim is negotiable or nonnegotiable (that is, whether state law allows the claim to be waived by a private contract) and the Marcus model, which focuses on the independence of the claim in relation to the collective-bargaining agreement. Under the White model, all negotiable claims (those wai-vable by private contract) are necessarily preempted because their resolution will require an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. A nonnegotiable claims (one that state law does not permit to be waived by private contract) will be preempted only if its resolution requires an interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement. The White model is named for the author of the law-review article in which it was proposed. Rebecca Homer White, Section 301's Preemption of State Law Claims: A Model for Analysis, 41 Ala. L. Rev. 377 (1990). Cf. MARCUS MODEL. See LINGLE TEST.

closed will. See mystic will.

conditional will. A will that depends on the occurrence of an uncertain event for the will to take effect.

conjoint will. See joint will.

contingent will. A will that takes effect only if a specified event occurs.

counter will. See mutual will.

double will. See mutual will.

duplicate will. A will executed in duplicate by a testator who retains one copy and gives the second copy to another person. • The rules applicable to wills apply to both wills, and upon application for probate, both copies must be tendered into the registry of the probate court.

holographic will (hol-a-graf-ik). A will that is entirely handwritten by the testator. • In many states, a holographic will is valid even if not witnessed. — Also termed olographic will.

inofficious will. See inofficious testament under TESTAMENT.

international will. A will that is executed according to formalities provided in an international treaty or convention, and that will be valid although it may be written in a foreign language by a testator domiciled in another country.

invalid will. A will that fails to make an effective disposition of property.

joint and mutual will. A will executed by two or more people — to dispose of property they own separately, in common, or jointly — requiring the surviving testator to dispose of the property in accordance with the terms of the will, and showing that the devises are made in consideration of one another. • The word “joint” indicates the form of the will. The word “mutual” describes the substantive provisions. — Also termed joint and reciprocal will.

joint will. A single will executed by two or more testators, usu. disposing of their common property by transferring their separate titles to one devisee. — Also termed conjoint will.

last will. The most recent will of a deceased; the instrument ultimately fixing the disposition of real and personal property at the testator’s death.

living will. See LIVING WILL.

lost will. An executed will that cannot be found at the testator’s death. • Its contents can be proved by parol evidence in many jurisdictions, but in some states a lost will creates a rebuttable presumption that it has been revoked.

mariner’s will. See soldier’s will.

mutual will. (usu. pl.) One of two separate wills in which two persons, usu. a husband and wife, establish identical or similar testamentary provisions disposing of their estates in favor of each other. • It is also possible (though rare) for the testators to execute a single mutual will, as opposed to separate ones. And it is possible (though, again, rare) for more than two parties to execute mutual wills. — Also termed reciprocal will; counter will; double will; mutual testament.

mystic will. Civil law. A secret will signed by the testator, sealed and delivered to a notary in the presence of three to seven witnesses, accompanied by the testator’s declaration that it is a valid will. • The notary is then required to indorse on the envelope containing the will a statement of all the facts surrounding the transaction, and this is signed by the notary and all the witnesses. — Also termed mystic testament; secret will; secret testament; closed will; closed testament; sealed will; sealed testament.

nonintervention will. A will that authorizes the executor to settle and distribute the estate without court supervision.

notarial will. A will executed by a testator in the presence of two witnesses and a notary public.

nuncupative will (nang-kya-pay-tiv or nang-kyoo-pa-tiv). An oral will made in contemplation of imminent death from an injury recently incurred. • Nuncupative wills are invalid in most states, but in those states allowing them, the amount that may be conveyed is usu. limited by statute, and they traditionally apply only to personal property. — Also termed oral will; unwritten will; verbal will.

“Nuncupative (i.e., oral) wills are by statute in almost all States required to be proved by two (sometimes three) witnesses, who were present and heard the testamentary words.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 299 (1935).

oligraphic will. See holographic will.

oral will. A will made by the spoken declaration of the testator and usu. dependent on oral testimony for proof.

pourover will (por-oh-var). A will giving money or property to an existing trust. Cf. pourover trust under TRUST.

prenuptial will (pree-nap-shal). A will executed before marriage. • At common law, marriage automatically revoked a spouse’s will, but modern statutes usu. provide that marriage does not revoke a will (although divorce does). Unif. Probate Code § 2-508. — Also termed antenuptial will.

reciprocal will. See mutual will.

sealed will. See mystic will.

seaman’s will. See soldier’s will.

secret will. See mystic will.

self-proved will. A will proved by the testator’s affidavit instead of by the live testimony of attesting witnesses.

soldier’s will. A soldier’s informal oral or written will that is usu. valid despite its non-compliance with normal statutory formalities, as long as the soldier was in actual service at the time the will was made. — Also termed seaman’s will; mariner’s will; military testament.

unnatural will. A will that distributes the testator’s estate to strangers rather than to the testator’s relatives, without apparent reason.

unofficious will. See inofficious testament under TESTAMENT.

unsolemn will. Civil law. A will in which an executor is not named.

unwritten will. See nuncupative will.

verbal will. See nuncupative will.

will contest. Wills & estates. The litigation of a will’s validity, usu. based on allegations that the testator lacked capacity or was under undue influence.

willful, adj. Voluntary and intentional, but not necessarily malicious. — Sometimes spelled willful. — willfulness, n. Cf. WANTON.

“The word ‘willful’ or ‘willfully’ when used in the definition of a crime, it has been said time and again, means only intentionally or purposely as distinguished from accidentally or negligently and does not require any actual impropriety; while on the other hand it has been stated with equal repetition and insistence that the requirement added by such a word is not satisfied unless there is a bad purpose or evil intent.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 875–76 (3d ed. 1982).

“Almost all of the cases under [Bankruptcy Code § 523(a)(6)] deal with the definition of the two words ‘willful’ and ‘malicious.’ Initially one might think that willful and malicious mean the same thing. If they did, Congress should have used one word and not both. Most courts feel compelled to find some different meaning for each of them.” David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-30, at 531 (1993).

willful and malicious injury. Bankruptcy. Under the statutory exception to discharge, damage to another entity (such as a creditor) caused by a debtor intentionally performing a wrongful act — without just cause or excuse — that the debtor knew was certain or substantially certain to cause injury. 11 USCA § 523(a)(6).

willful and wanton misconduct. Conduct committed with an intentional or reckless disregard for the safety of others, as by failing to exercise ordinary care to prevent a known danger or to discover a danger. — Also termed willful indifference to the safety of others.

willful and wanton negligence. See gross negligence (2) under NEGLIGENCE.

willful blindness. Deliberate avoidance of knowledge of a crime, esp. by failing to make a reasonable inquiry about suspected wrongdoing despite being aware that it is highly probable. • A person acts with willful blindness, for example, by deliberately refusing to look inside an unmarked package after being paid by a known drug dealer to deliver it. Willful blindness creates an inference of knowledge of the crime in question.

willful, continued, and obstinate desertion. See obstinate desertion under DESERTION.

willful indifference to the safety of others. See WILLFUL AND WANTON MISCONDUCT.

willful infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

willful misconduct. See MISCONDUCT.

willful misconduct of employee. The deliberate disregard by an employee of the employer’s interests, including its work rules and standards of conduct, justifying a denial of unemployment compensation if the employee is terminated for the misconduct.

willful murder. See MURDER.

willful neglect. See NEGLECT.

willful negligence. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

willfulness. A condition shown by the intentional disregard of a known duty necessary to another’s safety of person or property, and the complete lack of care for another’s life, person, or property. — Also termed legal willfulness.

willful tort. See intentional tort under TORT.

willful wrong. See intentional wrong under WRONG.

Williams Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1968, that amended the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 by requiring investors who own more than 5% of a company’s stock to furnish certain information to the SEC and to comply with certain requirements when making a tender offer.

Wills Act. 1. STATUTE OF WILLS (1). 2. An 1837 English statute that allowed people to dispose of every type of property interest by will and that required every will to be attested by two witnesses. — Also termed (in sense 2) Lord Langdale’s Act.

will substitute. A document or instrument that attempts to dispose of an estate in the same or similar manner as a will, such as a trust or a life-insurance plan.

Winchester, Statute of. Hist. A statute passed in the 13th year of the reign of Edward I, requiring every man to provide himself with armor to keep the peace, recognizing and regulating the offices of high and petty constables, organizing the police, and enforcing the old Saxon police laws. • It was repealed in 1827 by the Criminal Statutes (England) Repeal Act. St. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, ch. 27.

Winchester measure. Hist. The standard weights and measures of England, originally kept at Winchester.

windfall. An unanticipated benefit, usu. in the form of a profit and not caused by the recipient.

windfall-profits tax. See TAX.

winding up, n. The process of settling accounts and liquidating assets in anticipation of a partnership’s or a corporation’s dissolution. Cf. DISSOLUTION (3). — wind up, vb. — wind up, n.

window-dressing. The deceptive arrangement of something, usu. facts or appearances, to make it appear more attractive or favorable. • The term is often used to describe the practice of some financial managers, esp. some managers of mutual funds, to sell certain positions at the end of a quarter to make an investment’s quarterly performance appear better than it actually was.

window tax. See TAX.

wire fraud. See FRAUD.

wiretapping, n. Electronic or mechanical eavesdropping, usu. done by law-enforcement officers under court order, to listen to private... conversations. • Wiretapping is regulated by federal and state law. — wiretap, vb. — wiretap, n. — Often shortened to tapping. See BUGGING; EAVESPY. Cf. PEN REGISTER.

wish, vb. 1. To desire; to hope. 2. To will; to devise; to give.

witan (wit-an). [Anglo-Saxon “wise men”] Hist. The members of the king’s council who sat to assist the king in administrative and judicial matters. • Among the members were ealdormen, bishops, abbots, high officers, and occasionally the king’s friends and relatives.

witchcraft. The practices of a witch, esp. in black magic; sorcery. • Under the Witchcraft Act of 1541 (33 Hen. 8, ch. 8) and the Witchcraft Act of 1603 (1 Jac. ch. 12), witchcraft was a felony punishable by death without benefit of clergy. These acts were repealed in 1736, and the last execution in England for witchcraft occurred in 1716. In the United States, the most conspicuous (and nearly the last) persecution for witchcraft occurred in Salem, Massachusetts, where some 20 people were hanged for this offense in 1692.

wite (wit). Hist. A penal fine exacted by the Crown or other authority for a serious crime, such as murder. — Also spelled wyte.

witenagemot (wit-a-næ-gæ-moht). [Anglo-Saxon “a meeting of the wise”] Hist. A national assembly of noblemen, high ecclesiastics, and other great thanes of England who advised and aided the king in the general administration of the government. • Its composition depended on the will of the king. It passed out of existence with the Norman Conquest (1066). Although it was a precursor to the British Parliament, that was a separate growth — not a continuation of the witenagemot. — Also spelled witenagemot: witenagemote.

witepenny. Hist. In early English law, money paid in satisfaction of a wite.

with all deliberate speed. See DELIBERATE SPEED, WITH ALL.

with all faults. See AS IS.

withdrawal, n. 1. The act of taking back or away; removal <withdrawal of consent>. 2. The act of retracting from a position, or situation <withdrawal from the moot-court competition>. 3. The removal of money from a depository <withdrawal of funds from the checking account>. 4. RENUNCIATION (2) <withdrawal from the conspiracy to commit arson>. — withdraw, vb.

withdrawal of charges. The removal of charges by the one bringing them, such as a prosecutor. See NOLLE PROSEQUI.

withdrawal of counsel. An attorney’s termination of his or her role in representing a party in a lawsuit. • An attorney usu. must obtain the court’s permission to withdraw from a case. Such permission is usu. sought by a written motion (1) explaining the reason for the requested withdrawal (often, a conflict between attorney and client over a matter such as strategy or fees), and (2) stating whether the client agrees.

withdrawing a juror. The act or an instance of removing a juror, usu. to obtain a continuance in a case or, sometimes in English practice, to end the case, as when the case has settled, the parties are too anxious to proceed to verdict, or the judge recommends it because the action is not properly before the court.

withdrawing record. A plaintiff’s removing of the nisi prius or trial record to prevent the case from being tried, usu. either before the jury is sworn or afterwards with the consent of defense counsel.

witheram (with-ær-næm), n. [fr. Saxon weor “other” + naem “a taking”] Hist. A reciprocal taking or distress in place of a previous one. See CAPIAS IN WITHERAM.

withersake (with-ær-sæk). Archaic. An enemy; esp., a deliberately faithless renegade.

withheld sentence. See suspended sentence under SENTENCE.

withholding, n. 1. The practice of deducting a certain amount from a person’s salary, wages, dividends, winnings, or other income, usu. for tax purposes; esp., an employer’s practice of taking out a portion of an employee’s gross earnings and paying that portion to the government for income-tax and social-security purposes. 2. The money so deducted. — withhold, vb.

withholding of evidence. The act or an instance of obstructing justice by stifling or suppressing evidence knowing that it is being sought in an official investigation or a judicial proceeding. See OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE. withholding tax. See TAX.

without day. See GO HENCE WITHOUT DAY.

without delay. 1. Instantly; at once. 2. Within the time reasonably allowed by law.

without impeachment of waste. (Of a tenant) not subject to an action for waste; not punishable for waste. • This clause is inserted in a lease to give a tenant the right to take certain actions (such as cutting timber) without being held liable for waste. But a tenant cannot abuse the right and will usu. be held liable for maliciously committing waste. — Also termed absque impetitione fasti.

without notice. Lacking actual or constructive knowledge. • To be a bona fide purchaser, one must buy something "without notice" of another's claim to the item or of defects in the seller's title. To be a holder in due course, one must take a bill or note "without notice" that it is overdue, has been dishonored, or is subject to a claim. UCC § 3-302(a)(2). See bona fide purchaser under PURCHASER.

without prejudice, adv. Without loss of any rights; in a way that does not harm or cancel the legal rights or privileges of a party <dismissed without prejudice>. See dismissal without prejudice under DISMISSAL.

without recourse. (In an indorsement) without liability to subsequent holders. • With this stipulation, one who indorses an instrument indicates that he or she has no further liability to any subsequent holder for payment. — Also termed sans recours.

without reserve. Of or relating to an auction at which an item will not be sold unless the highest bid exceeds a minimum price.

with reserve. Of or relating to an auction at which an item will not be sold unless the highest bid exceeds a minimum price.

with strong hand. With force. • In common-law pleading, this term implies a degree of criminal force, esp. as used in forcible-entry statutes.

witness, n. 1. One who sees, knows, or vouches for something . 2. One who gives testimony, under oath or affirmation (1) in person, (2) by oral or written deposition, or (3) by affidavit <the prosecution called its next witness>. — witness, vb.

"The term 'witness,' in its strict legal sense, means one who gives evidence in a cause before a court; and in its general sense includes all persons from whose lips testimony is extracted to be used in any judicial proceeding, and so includes deponents and affiants as well as persons delivering oral testimony before a court or jury." 97 C.J.S. Witnesses § 1, at 350 (1967).

"Every witness is an editor: he tells you nothing he saw and heard, for that would be impossible, but what he saw and heard and found significant, and what he finds significant depends on his preconceptions." Patrick Devlin, The Criminal Prosecution in England 66 (1960).

accomplice witness. An accomplice in a criminal act. • A defendant cannot be convicted solely on the testimony of an accomplice witness.

adverse witness. See hostile witness.

alibi witness. A witness who testifies that the defendant was in a location other than the scene of the crime at the relevant time; a witness that supports the defendant's alibi.

attesting witness. One who vouches for the authenticity of another's signature by signing an instrument that the other has signed <proof of the will requires two attesting witnesses>.

character witness. A witness who testifies about another person's character traits or community reputation. See character evidence under EVIDENCE.

competent witness. A witness who is legally qualified to testify. • A lay witness who has personal knowledge of the subject matter of the testimony is competent to testify. Fed. R. Evid. 601-602.

corroborating witness. A witness who confirms or supports someone else's testimony.

credible witness. A witness whose testimony is believable.

disinterested witness. A witness who is legally competent to testify and has no private interest in the matter at issue.
expert witness. A witness qualified by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education to provide a scientific, technical, or other specialized opinion about the evidence or a fact issue. Fed. R. Evid. 702–706. — Also termed skilled witness. See EXPERT; DAUBERT TEST.

going witness. Archaic. A witness who is about to leave a court’s jurisdiction, but not the country. ● An example is the witness who leaves one state to go to another.

grand-jury witness. A witness who is called to testify in a matter under inquiry by a grand jury.

hostile witness. A witness who is biased against the examining party or who is unwilling to testify. ● A hostile witness may be asked leading questions on direct examination. Fed. R. Evid. 611(c). — Also termed adverse witness.

interested witness. A witness who has a direct and private interest in the matter at issue.

lay witness. A witness who does not testify as an expert and who therefore may only give an opinion or make an inference that is based on firsthand knowledge and helpful in understanding the testimony or in determining facts. Fed. R. Evid. 701.

material witness. A witness who can testify about matters having some logical connection with the consequential facts, esp. if few others, if any, know about those matters.

prosecuting witness. A person who files the complaint that triggers a criminal prosecution and whose testimony the prosecution usu. relies on to secure a conviction.

qualified witness. A witness who, by explaining the manner in which a company’s business records are made and kept, is able to lay the foundation for the admission of business records under an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803(6).

rebuttal witness. A witness who contradicts or attempts to contradict evidence previously presented.

res gestae witness. A witness who, having been at the scene of an incident, can give a firsthand account of what happened. See RES GESTAE.

skilled witness. See expert witness.

subscribing witness. One who witnesses the signatures on an instrument and signs at the end of the instrument to that effect.

swift witness. See zealous witness.

target witness. 1. The person who has the knowledge that an investigating body seeks. 2. A witness who is called before a grand jury and against whom the government is also seeking an indictment.

turncoat witness. A witness whose testimony was expected to be favorable but who becomes (usu. during the trial) a hostile witness.

zealous witness (zel- as). A witness who is unduly zealous or partial to one side of a lawsuit and shows bias through extreme readiness to answer questions or volunteer information advantageous to that side. — Also termed swift witness.

witnesseth, vb. Shows; records. ● This term, usu. set in all capitals, commonly separates the preliminaries in a contract, up through the recitals, from the contractual terms themselves, but modern drafters increasingly avoid it as an antiquarian relic. Traditionally, the subject of this verb was This Agreement: the sentence, boiled down, was This Agreement witnesseth [i.e., shows or records] that, whereas [the parties have agreed to contract with one another], the parties therefore agree as follows . . . . Many modern contracts erroneously retain the Witnesseth even though a new verb appears in the preamble: This Agreement is between [one party and the other party]. After the preamble is a period, followed by an all-capped WITNESSETH. It is an example of a form retained long after its utility, and most lawyers do not know what it means or even what purpose it once served.

witness fee. See FEE (1).

witnessing part. See ATTESTATION CLAUSE.

witness jurat. See JURAT.

witness-protection program. A federal or state program in which a person who testifies against a criminal is assigned a new identity and relocated to another part of the country to avoid retaliation by anyone convicted as a result of that testimony. ● The Federal Witness Protection Program was established by the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970 and is administered by the marshals of the U.S. Justice Department.

witness stand. The space in a courtroom, usu. a boxed area, occupied by a witness while testify-witness stand

— Often shortened to stand. — Also termed witness box.

witness tampering. The act or an instance of obstructing justice by intimidating, influencing, or harassing a witness before or after the witness testifies. • Several state and federal laws, including the Victim and Witness Protection Act of 1982 (18 USCA § 1512), provide criminal penalties for tampering with witnesses or other persons in the context of a pending investigation or official proceeding. See obstruction of justice.

witword (wit-word). Hist. A legally allowed claim; esp., the right to vindicate ownership or possession by one's affirmation under oath.

wobbler. Slang. A public offense that may be either a felony or a misdemeanor.

wolf's head. Hist. An outlaw, who was formerly often referred to as carrying a wolf's head (caput lupinum) and to be no more than a wild beast or wolf who could be slain and whose head could be carried to the king. — Also termed woolferthfod. See outlaw.

“Outlawry is the last weapon of ancient law, but one that it must often use. As has been well said, it is the sentence of death pronounced by a community which has no police constables or professional hangmen. To pursue the outlaw and knock him on the head as though he were a wild beast is the right and duty of every law-abiding man. ‘Let him bear the wolf’s head;’ this phrase is in use even in the thirteenth century.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 476 (2d ed. 1888).

Women’s Suffrage Amendment. See Nineteenth Amendment.

wood-corn, n. Hist. A quantity of oats or grain paid by customary tenants to a lord for the privilege of picking up dead or broken wood.

wood-geld (wuud-geld). Hist. 1. Money paid for the privilege of taking wood from a forest. 2. Immunity from paying money for this privilege. — Also termed pudzeld.

wood-leave. Hist. A license or right to cut down, remove, and use standing timber.

wood-mote (wuud-moht). See Court of Attachments.

Wood-Plea Court. Hist. A court held twice a year in Clun Forest, in Shropshire, to determine matters of wood and agistments.

woodshedding. See horsshedding.

woodward (wuud-word), n. Hist. A forest officer who patrols and protects the forest.

woolfethfod. See wolf’s head.

word of art. See term of art.

words actionable in themselves. Language that is libelous or slanderous per se. See slander per se under slander; libel per se under libel.

words of limitation. Language in a deed or will — often nonliteral language — describing the extent or quality of an estate. • For example, under long-standing principles of property law, the phrasing “to A and her heirs” creates a fee simple and does not give anything to A’s heirs. See limitation (4).

words of negotiability. See negotiable words.

words of procreation (proh-kree-ay-shan). Language in a deed essential to create an estate tail, such as an estate “to A and the heirs of his body.”

words of purchase. Language in a deed or will designating the persons who are to receive the grant. • For example, the phrasing “to A for life with a remainder to her heirs” creates a life estate in A and a remainder in A’s heirs. See purchase (2).

work, n. 1. Physical and mental exertion to attain an end, esp. as controlled by and for the benefit of an employer; labor.

additional work. 1. Work that results from a change or alteration in plans concerning the work required, usu. under a construction contract; added work necessary to meet the performance goals under a contract. 2. See extra work.

extra work. In construction law, work not required under the contract; something done or furnished in addition to the contract’s requirements; work entirely outside and independent of the contract and not contemplated by it. • A contractor is usu. entitled to charge for extra work consisting of labor and materials not contemplated by or subsumed within the original contract, at least to the extent that the property owner agrees to a change order. Materials and labor not contemplated by the contract, but that are required by later changes in the plans and specifications, are considered to be extra work. — Also termed additional work.

Heavy work. Work that involves frequent lifting and carrying of large items. • Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker’s physical limitations, heavy work involves lifting no more than 100 pounds, with frequent lifting or carrying of objects weighing up to 50 pounds. 20 CFR § 404.1567(d).

Light work. Work that involves some limited lifting and moving. • Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker’s physical limitations, light work includes walking, standing, sitting while pushing or pulling arm or leg controls, and lifting no more than 20 pounds, with frequent lifting or carrying of objects that weigh up to 10 pounds. 20 CFR § 404.1567(b).

Medium work. Work that involves some frequent lifting and moving. • Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker’s physical limitations, medium work includes lifting up to 50 pounds, with frequent lifting or carrying of objects weighing up to 25 pounds. 20 CFR § 404.1567(c).

Sedentary work. Work that involves light lifting and only occasional walking or standing. • Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker’s physical limitations, sedentary work involves lifting of no more than ten pounds, occasionally carrying small items such as docket files and small tools, and occasional standing or walking. 20 CFR § 404.1567(a).

Semi-skilled work. Work that may require some alertness and close attention, such as inspecting items or machinery for irregularities, or guarding property or people against loss or injury. 20 CFR § 404.1568(b). — Also written semiskilled work.

Skilled work. Work requiring the worker to use judgment, deal with the public, analyze facts and figures, or work with abstract ideas at a high level of complexity. 20 CFR § 404.1568(c).

Unskilled work. Work requiring little or no judgment, and involving simple tasks that can be learned quickly on the job. 20 CFR § 404.1568(a).

Very heavy work. Work that involves frequent lifting of very large objects and frequent carrying of large objects. • Under the Social Security Administration regulations for describing a worker’s physical limitations, very heavy work involves lifting 100 pounds or more, and frequent lifting or carrying of objects weighing 50 pounds or more. 20 CFR § 404.1567(e).

Copyright. An original expression, in fixed or tangible form (such as paper, audiotape, or computer disk), that may be entitled to common-law or statutory copyright protection. • A work may take many different forms, including art, sculpture, literature, music, crafts, software, and photography.

Work, vb. 1. To exert effort; to perform, either physically or mentally <lawyers work long hours during trial>. 2. To function properly; to produce a desired effect <the strategy worked>. 3. Patents. To develop and commercially exploit (the invention covered by a patent) <the patent owner failed to work the patent>.

“A patentee has the exclusive right to make, use, or sell the invention. 35 U.S.C.A. § 154. The right includes the right to refrain from making, using, or selling the invention. In many foreign countries, the inventor is obliged to ‘work’ the patent and if he does not do so, he can be required to grant a compulsory license to others who wish to exploit the invention. But an American patentee is under no such duty, although there are antitrust implications involved in the failure to work a patent.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 128–29 (2d ed. 1990).

Work and labor. Hist. A common count in an action of assumpsit for the work and labor performed and materials furnished by the plaintiff. See ASSUMPSIT.

Worker. One who labors to attain an end; esp., a person employed to do work for another.

Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act. A federal law that requires an employer to provide notice of a plant closing or mass layoff, 60 days before the closing or layoff, to the employees, the state-dislocated-workers unit, and the chief elected official of the unit of local government where the plant closing or layoff is to occur. 29 USCA §§ 2101–2109. — Abbr. WARN.

Workers’ compensation. A system of providing benefits to an employee for injuries occurring in the scope of employment. • Most workers’ compensation statutes hold the employer strictly liable and bar the employee from suing in tort. — Also termed workmen’s compensation; employers’ liability. — Abbr. WC.

“Workers’ compensation laws were designed to provide employees with expansive protection against the conse-workers' compensation. See finance bill under BILL (6).

working control. See CONTROL.

working interest. Oil & gas. The right to the mineral interest granted by an oil-and-gas lease. The term is so called because the lessee acquires the right to work on the lease property to search, develop, and produce oil and gas, and the obligation to pay all costs. See ROYALTY. Also termed leasehold interest; operating interest.

working papers. 1. WORK PERMIT. 2. Accounting. The records kept by an independent auditor of the procedures followed, tests performed, information obtained, and conclusions reached in an audit.

work-in-process. A product being manufactured or assembled but not yet completed. Also termed work-in-progress.

work made for hire. See WORK FOR HIRE.

workmen's compensation. See WORKERS' COMPENSATION.

work of necessity. Work reasonably essential to the public's economic, social, or moral welfare as determined by the community standards at a particular time, and excepted from the operation of blue laws. See BLUE LAW.

workout. 1. The act of restructuring or refinancing overdue loans. 2. Bankruptcy. A debtor's agreement, usu. negotiated with a creditor or creditors out of court, to reduce or discharge the debt. — work out, vb.

work permit. An alien's documentary work authorization from the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, it is illegal for an employer to hire an alien who lacks a work permit. 8 USCA § 1324(a)(1). Also termed working papers.

work product. Tangible material or its intangible equivalent — in unwritten or oral form — that was either prepared by or for a lawyer or prepared for litigation, either planned or in progress. Work product is generally exempt from discovery or other compelled disclosure. The term is also used to describe the products of a party's investigation or communications concerning the subject matter of a lawsuit if made (1) to assist in the prosecution or defense of a pending suit, or (2) in reasonable anticipation of litigation. — Also termed attorney work product.

work-product privilege. See work product.

work-product rule. The rule providing for qualified immunity of an attorney’s work product from discovery or other compelled disclosure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3). • The exemption was primarily established to protect an attorney’s litigation strategy. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947). — Also termed work-product immunity; work-product privilege; work-product exemption.

Although the work-product rule has often been spoken of as creating a ‘privilege’, it is a qualified one that does not grant full immunity from discovery. To the extent the term ‘privilege’ causes confusion between the work-product rule and the absolute privilege for confidential communications between attorney and client, it is important to keep in mind this distinction... Rule 26(b)(3) provides that work-product material is subject to discovery ‘only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has substantial need of the materials in the preparation of the party’s case and that the party is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means.’” 8 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2025, at 371, 373–74 (2d ed. 1994).

work-release program. A correctional program allowing a prison inmate — primarily one being readied for discharge — to hold a job outside prison. — Also termed work-furlough program. See halfway house.

works. 1. A mill, factory, or other establishment for manufacturing or other industrial purposes; a manufacturing plant; a factory. 2. Any building or structure on land.

ew works. Civil law. A structure newly commenced on a particular estate. • A denunciation of new works is a remedy allowed for an adjacent landowner whose property will be injured if the structure is completed.

public works. Structures (such as roads or dams) built by the government for public use and paid for by public funds.

work stoppage. A cessation of work; strike.

world. 1. The planet Earth <the world has limited natural resources>. 2. All the Earth’s inhabitants; the public generally <the world will benefit from this discovery>. 3. All persons who have a claim or acquire an interest in a particular subject matter .

World Bank. A U.N. bank established in 1945 to provide loans that aid in economic development, through economically sustainable enterprises. • Its capital derives from U.N. member states’ subscriptions and by loans on the open market. — Also termed International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

World Court. See international court of justice.

Worship conducted by a religious society according to the society’s system of ecclesiastical authority, ritual propriety, and rules and regulations. 2. Worship under public authority. 3. Worship in a public place, without privacy or concealment. 4. Worship allowed by all members of the public equally.

2. English law. A title of honor or dignity used in addressing certain magistrates or other high officers.

wort (wart), n. Archaic. A country farm; a curtilage. — Also termed worth.

worth, n. 1. The monetary value of a thing; the sum of the qualities that render a thing valuable and useful, expressed in the current medium of exchange. 2. The emotional or sentimental value of something. 3. The total wealth held by a person or entity. 4. WORT.

worthier-title doctrine. 1. Hist. At common law, the doctrine holding that if a beneficiary of a will would receive an identical interest as an heir under the laws of intestacy, the person takes the interest as an heir rather than as a beneficiary. • The doctrine has been abolished in most states. 2. Properly. The doctrine that favors a grantor’s intent by construing a grant as a reversion in the grantor instead of as a remainder in the grantor’s heirs. See remainder; reversion.

worthiest blood, n. Hist. A descendant that, in a given legal system, is given preference in the laws of descent. See primogeniture.

“Thus sons shall be admitted before daughters; or, as our male lawgivers have somewhat uncomplaisantly expressed it, the worthiest blood shall be preferred. As if John Stiles hath two sons, Matthew and Gilbert, and two worthiest of blood

doughters, Margaret and Charlotte, and dies; first Matthew, and (in case of his death without issue) then Gilbert shall be admitted to the succession in preference to both the daughters." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 213 (1769).

worthless, adj. Totally lacking worth; of no use or value.

worthless check. See bad check under CHECK.

worthless security. See SECURITY.

worthy, adj. Having worth; possessing merit; valuable.

wounded feelings. Injuries resulting from insults, indignity, or humiliation, as distinguished from the usual mental pain and suffering consequent to physical injury.

wounding. 1. An injury, esp. one involving a rupture of the skin. 2. An injury to feelings or reputation. 3. Hist. An aggravated type of assault and battery in which one person seriously injures another.

wraparound mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

wreck, n. 1. SHIPWRECK. 2. Goods cast ashore from a wrecked vessel and not claimed by the owner within a specified period (such as one year).

wreckfree, adj. (Of a port, etc.) exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the Crown.

writ (rit). A court’s written order, in the name of a state or other competent legal authority, commanding the addressee to do or refrain from doing some specified act.

"[W]rits have a long history. We can trace their formal origin to the Anglo-Saxon formulae by which the king used to communicate his pleasure to persons and courts. The Anglo-Norman writs, which we meet with after the Conquest, are substantially the Anglo-Saxon writs turned into Latin. But what is new is the much greater use made of them, owing to the increase of royal power which came with the Conquest." W.S. Holdsworth, Sources and Literature of English Law 28 (1925).

alias writ. An additional writ issued after another writ of the same kind in the same case. • It derives its name from a Latin phrase that formerly appeared in alias writs: sicut alias praecipimus, meaning "as we at another time commanded." Cf. alias execution under EXECUTION.

alternative writ. A common-law writ commanding the person against whom it is issued either to do a specific thing or to show cause why the court should not order it to be done.

close writ. Hist. 1. A royal writ sealed because the contents were not deemed appropriate for public inspection. Cf. patent writ; clause rolls. 2. A writ directed to a sheriff instead of to a lord.

concurrent writ. A duplicate of an original writ (esp. a summons), issued either at the same time as the original writ or at any time while the original writ is valid.

counterpart writ. A copy of an original writ, to be sent to a court in another county when a defendant resides in, or is found in, that county.

extraordinary writ. A writ issued by a court exercising unusual or discretionary power. • Examples are certiorari, habeas corpus, mandamus, and prohibition. — Also termed prerogative writ.

ground writ. Hist. A writ issued in a county having venue of an action in order to allow a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum or of fieri facias to be executed in a county where the defendant or the defendant’s property was found. • These two writs could not be executed in a county other than the county having venue of the action until a ground writ and then a testatum writ were first issued. This requirement was abolished in 1852. Cf. TESTATUS.

judicial writ. 1. A writ issuing from the court to which the original writ was returnable; a writ issued under the private seal of the court and not under the great seal of England. Cf. original writ. 2. Any writ issued by a court.

junior writ. A writ issued at a later time than a similar writ, such as a later writ issued by a different party or a later writ on a different claim against the same defendant.

optional writ. At common law, an original writ issued when the plaintiff seeks specific damages, such as payment of a liquidated debt. • The writ commands the defendant either to do a specified thing or to show why the thing has not been done.

original writ. A writ commencing an action and directing the defendant to appear and answer. • In the United States, this writ has been largely superseded by the summons. At common law, this type of writ was a mandatory letter issuing from the court of chancery under the great seal, and in the king's name, directed to the sheriff of the county where the injury was alleged to have occurred, containing a summary statement of the cause of complaint, and requiring the sheriff in most cases to command the defendant to satisfy the claim or else appear in court to account for not satisfying it. — Sometimes shortened to original. See SUMMONS.

patent writ (pay-tant). Hist. An open writ; one not closed or sealed up. Cf. close writ.

peremptory writ (per-emp-to-ree). At common law, an original writ issued when the plaintiff seeks only general damages, as in an action for trespass. • The writ, which is issued only after the plaintiff gives security for costs, directs the sheriff to have the defendant appear in court.

pluries writ. See PLURIES.

prerogative writ. See extraordinary writ.

testatum writ (tes-tay-tam). See TESTATUM.

viconiell writ (vi-kon-tee-al). Hist. A writ triable in the county court. • In the 13th–14th centuries, civil litigation could originate in the county court either by oral plaint or by a writ from the Chancery ordering the sheriff to do justice in a case. The writ that began such a proceeding was called viconiell because it was addressed to the sheriff. See VICONTIEL (2).

"Viconiell write were of two sorts, the one founded on Torts, the other on Contracts. The viconiel writes adapted for torts, were those of trespass, repligari facias, nuisance, and others of the like nature; and those of matters of contract were called writs of justiciei, which was a command to the sheriff to do justice between the parties...." 1 George Crompton, Practice Common—Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King’s Bench and Common Pleas vii–viii (3d ed. 1787).

writ de haereticò comburendo. See DE HAERETICO COMBURENDÒ.

write-down, vb. Accounting. To transfer a portion of the cost of an asset to an expense account because the asset’s value has decreased.

write off, vb. To remove (an asset) from the books, esp. as a loss or expense <the partnership wrote off the bad debt>.

writer of the tallies. English law. An officer of the Exchequer who writes on the tallies the letters of tellers’ bills. See TALLY.

Writer to the Signet. Scots law. A member of the oldest and leading society of Scottish solicitors, originally a clerk in the Scottish Secretary of State’s office responsible for preparing warrants, writs, charters, and precepts.

write-up, n. 1. A memorandum of a conference between an employer and an employee, usu. held to discuss the employee’s poor work performance or a disciplinary action against the employee. 2. A publication (such as a newspaper article) about a particular person, thing, or event.

write-up, vb. Accounting. To increase the valuation of an asset in a financial statement to reflect current value. • With a few minor exceptions, this is generally not permitted.

writing, n. Any intentional recording of words in a visual form, whether in the form of handwriting, printing, typewriting, or any other tangible form.

writing obligatory, n. A bond; a written obligation, as technically described in a pleading.

writ of ad quod damnum. See AD QUOD DAMNUM.

writ of aiel (ay-al). See AIEL (2).

writ of assistance. 1. A writ to enforce a court’s decree transferring real property, the title of which has been previously adjudicated. 2. Hist. A writ issued by the Court of Exchequer ordering the sheriff to assist in collecting a debt owed the Crown. 3. Hist. In colonial America, a writ issued by a superior colonial court authorizing an officer of the Crown to enter and search any premises suspected of containing contraband. • The attempted use of this writ in Massachusetts — defeated in 1761 — was one of the acts that led to the American Revolution.

writ of association. Hist. English law. A writ whereby certain persons (usu. the clerk of assize and subordinate officers) were directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants so that there would be an adequate supply of commissioners for the assizes.

writ of attachment. See ATTACHMENT (3).

writ of capias. See CAPIAS.

writ of certiorari. See CERTIORARI.

writ of coram nobis. See CORAM NOBIS.

writ of coram vobis. See CORAM VOBIS.

writ of course. A writ issued as a matter of course or granted as a matter of right. — Also termed writ of right.

writ of covenant. Hist. A writ for one claiming damages as a result of a breach of a promise under seal or other covenant. — Also termed breve de conventione (breev or bree-vee dee kən-vən-shən-ə). "The writ of covenant (breve de conventione) is not mentioned by Glanvill; but it appears within a short time after the publication of his book and already in the early years of Henry III. It can be had 'as of course,' at all events when the tenement that is in question is of small value. Before Henry's death it has become a popular writ. ... The great majority of actions of covenant are brought merely in order that they may be compromised. We doubt whether any principle was involved in the choice; but may infer that the procedure instituted by this writ was cheap and expeditious for those who wished to get to their final concord." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 216–17 (2d ed. 1899).

writ of debt. See DEBT (4).

writ of deceit. Hist. A writ against one who deceives and damages another by acting in the other's name.

writ of ejectment. The writ in an action of ejectment for the recovery of land. See EJECTMENT.

writ of entry. A writ that allows a person wrongfully dispossessed of real property to enter and retake the property.

writ of error. 1. A writ issued by an appellate court directing a lower court to deliver the record in the case for review. Cf. ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

"The writ of error is the most common of all the forms of remedial process available to an unsuccessful party after a final determination of the merits of the action, and is in common use in this country at the present time, where the common-law modes of procedure are followed. Its object ... is to obtain a reversal of the judgment, either by reason of some error in fact affecting the validity and regularity of the legal decision itself, or on account of some mistake or error in law, apparent upon the face of the record, from which the judgment appears to have been given for the wrong party." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 337, at 558 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

writ of error coram nobis. See CORAM NOBIS.

writ of error coram vobis. See CORAM VOBIS.

2. Hist. A writ issued by a chancery court, at the request of a party who was unsuccessful at trial, directing the trial court either to examine the record itself or to send it to another court of appellate jurisdiction to be examined, so that some alleged error in the proceedings may be corrected.

writ of recaption. Hist. A writ allowing a plaintiff to recover goods and damages from a defendant who makes a second distress while a reprieve action for a previous distress is pending. See RECAPTION.

writ of replevin. See REPLEVIN (2).

writ of restitution. 1. The process of enforcing a civil judgment in a forcible-entry-and-detainer action or enforcing restitution on a verdict in a criminal prosecution for forcible entry and detainer.

2. Any writ of restitution for the premises immediately on the rendition of a verdict of guilty on an indictment for forcible entry and detainer; and the operation of such writ of restitution is not suspended by an appeal by the defendant.” 35 Am. Jur. 2d Forcible Entry and Detainer § 61, at 931 (1967).

writ of review. A general form of process issuing from an appellate court to bring up for review the record of the proceedings in the court below; the common-law writ of certiorari.

writ of right. See WRIT OF COURSE.

writ of second deliverance. See DELIVERANCE (4).

writ of sequestration. A writ ordering that a court be given custody of something, or ordering that something not be taken from the jurisdiction, such as the collateral for a promissory note. • Such a writ is used during litigation, often so that the object will be available for attachment or execution after judgment.

writ of summons. English law. A writ by which, under the Judicature Acts of 1873–1875, all actions were commenced. See SUMMONS.

writ of supersedeas. See SUPERSEDEAS.

writ of supervisory control. A writ issued to correct an erroneous ruling made by a lower court either when there is no appeal or when an appeal cannot provide adequate relief and the ruling will result in gross injustice.

writ of threats. See SECURITATE FACIS.

writ of tolt (tohtl). See TOLT.

writ of trial. Hist. English law. By the Civil Procedure Act of 1852, a writ ordering an action brought in a superior court to be tried in an inferior court or before the undersheriff. • It was superseded by the County Courts Act of 1867, ch. 142, § 6 authorizing a defendant, in certain cases, to obtain an order that an action is to be tried in a county court. St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 42.

writ of waste. Hist. A writ to recover damages against a tenant who committed waste. See WASTE (1).

“After waste had been actually committed, the ancient corrective remedy, in a court of common law, was by a writ of waste 1606

writ of waste for the recovery of the place wasted, and treble damages as a compensation for the injury done to the inheritance.” 78 Am. Jur. 2d Waste § 29, at 417 (1975).

writ pro retorno habendo (proh ri-tor-noh ha-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin “for return to be had”] Hist. A writ ordering the return of goods to a defendant who, upon the plaintiff’s default, obtained a favorable judgment in a replevin action.

writ system. The common-law procedural system under which plaintiff commenced an action by obtaining the appropriate type of original writ.

written contract. See CONTRACT.

written directive. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE.

written law. Statutory law, together with constitutions and treaties, as opposed to judge-made law. — Also termed jus scriptum; lex scripta.

written testimony. See TESTIMONY.

written warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

wrong, n. Breach of one’s legal duty; violation of another’s legal right. — wrong, vb.

“A wrong may be described, in the largest sense, as anything done or omitted contrary to legal duty, considered in so far as it gives rise to liability.” Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 68 (1896).

“A wrong is simply a wrong act — an act contrary to the rule of right and justice. A synonym of it is injury, in its true and primary sense of injuria (that which is contrary to jus) . . . .” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 227 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

civil wrong. A violation of noncriminal law, such as a tort, a breach of contract or trust, a breach of statutory duty, or a defect in performing a public duty; the breach of a legal duty treated as the subject matter of a civil proceeding. Cf. CRIME.

continuing wrong. An ongoing wrong that is capable of being corrected by specific enforcement. • An example is the nonpayment of a debt.

intentional wrong. A wrong in which the mens rea amounts to intention, purpose, or design. — Also termed willful wrong.

legal wrong. An act that is a violation of the law; an act authoritatively prohibited by a rule of law.

moral wrong. An act that is contrary to the rule of natural justice. — Also termed natural wrong.

positive wrong. A wrongful act, wilfully committed.

private wrong. An offense committed against a private person and dealt with at the instance of the person injured.

public wrong. An offense committed against the state or the community at large, and dealt with in a proceeding to which the state is itself a party. • Not all public wrongs are crimes. For example, a person that breaches a contract with the government commits a public wrong, but the offense is a civil one, not a criminal one.

real wrong. An injury to the freehold.

transitory wrong. A wrong that, once committed, belongs to the irrevocable past. • An example is defamation.

willful wrong. See intentional wrong.

wrong of negligence. A wrong in which the mens rea is a form of mere carelessness, as opposed to wrongful intent.

wrong of strict liability. A wrong in which the mens rea is not required because neither wrongful intent nor culpable negligence is a necessary condition of responsibility.

wrongdoer, n. One who violates the law <both criminals and tortfeasors are wrongdoers>. — wrongdoing, n.

XR. abbr. EX-RIGHTS.

XW. abbr. EX-WARRANTS.

xylon (zi-lon), n. [fr. Greek xulon “wood”] Archaic. A Greek punishment apparatus similar to stocks.

XYY-chromosome defense. Criminal law. A defense, usu. asserted as the basis for an insanity plea, whereby a male defendant argues that his criminal behavior is due to the genetic abnormality of having an extra Y chromosome, which causes him to have uncontrollable aggressive impulses. • Most courts have rejected this defense because its scientific foundations are uncertain. See INSANITY DEFENSE. — Also termed XYY defense.

"As one commentator has suggested ... 'an attorney defending an XYY individual will be required to call upon both a geneticist and a psychiatrist to give expert testimony. The geneticist’s role would be to testify with respect to the individual’s genetic structure, any distinguishing characteristics which are relevant to an insanity defense, and the result of family studies designated to determine the influence of genetics and environment on the development of this individual. The psychiatrist’s testimony would focus upon the defendant’s mental capacity or condition.’ But in the absence of sound medical support for an XYY defense, courts are understandably unsympathetic to defense efforts to obtain such expert testimony.” Wayne R. LaFave & Austin W. Scott, Jr., Criminal Law § 4.8, at 380 (2d ed. 1986) (quoting Note, 57 Geo. L.J. 892, 902-03 (1969)).

XYY syndrome. The abnormal presence of an extra Y chromosome in a male, theoretically resulting in increased aggressiveness and antisocial behavior often resulting in criminal conduct. See XYY-CHROMOSOME DEFENSE.
ages resulting from a tortious injury that caused the decedent’s death. — Also termed death action; death case. Cf. SURVIVAL ACTION.

yardstick theory. Antitrust. A method of determining damages for lost profits (and sometimes overcharges) whereby a corporate plaintiff identifies a company similar to the plaintiff but without the impact of the antitrust violation. Cf. BEFORE-AND-AFTER THEORY; MARKET-SHARE THEORY.

“...To the extent that either the markets or firms being compared are dissimilar, the yardstick theory will not produce a trustworthy estimate of what the plaintiff would have earned but for the defendant’s conduct. The method therefore works best in markets that are both local and relatively homogeneous.” Herbert Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law § 16.7, at 454 (1985).

yea and nay (yay / nay). Yes and no. • In old records, this was a mere assertion and denial without the necessity of an oath.

half-year. In legal computation, a period of 182 days.

natural year. Hist. The period of 365 days and about 6 hours, or the time it takes the earth to orbit the sun.

Year 2000 warranty. See Y2K WARRANTY.

year and a day. The common-law time limit fixed for various purposes, such as claiming rights, exemptions, or property (such as rights to wreckage or strays) or for prosecuting certain acts—so called because a year was formerly counted to include the first and last day, meaning that a year from January 1 was December 31, so a year and a day would then mean a full year from January 1 through January 1. — Also termed year and day; (formerly in Scots law) zeir and day. See YEAR-AND-A-DAY RULE; YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE.

year-and-a-day rule. Criminal law. The common-law principle that an act causing death is not homicide if the death occurs more than a year and a day after the act was committed. • In Latin, the phrase year and a day was commonly rendered annus et dies.

“It has long been the rule that no one can be convicted of the murder or manslaughter of another person who does not die within a year and a day of the blow received or other cause of death. ‘Day’ was here added merely to indicate that the 365th day after that of the injury must be included. Such an indication was rendered necessary by an old rule (now obsolete) that, in criminal law, in reckoning a period ‘from’ the doing of any act, the period was (in favour of prisoners) to be taken as beginning on the very day when this act was done.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 105 (16th ed. 1952).

“The phrase ‘year and a day,’ in this test [for proving causation of a person’s death], means no more than a year. The accepted method of computing time today is by excluding the first day and including the last. Thus a year from January first is the first day of the following January. In ancient times, however, there was a tendency to include both the first day and the last day so that a year from January first was thought of as the thirty-first of the following December, and ‘the day was added that there might be a whole year.’ The use of this peculiar phrase to mean just a year in the homicide cases has found expression in some of the statutes. Other enactments have wisely dropped this ancient jingle.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 778 (3d ed. 1982).

“Several centuries ago, when doctors knew very little about medicine, the judges created an absolute rule of law: one cannot be guilty of murder if the victim lives for a year and a day after the blow. The difficulty in proving that the blow caused the death after so long an interval was obviously the basis of the rule. Now that doctors know infinitely more, it seems strange that the year-and-a-day rule should survive to the present, but it has done so in most of the American states, either by judicial decision or by statute.” Wayne R. LaFave & Austin W. Scott, Jr., Criminal Law § 3.12, at 299 (2d ed. 1986).

year and day. See YEAR AND A DAY.

Year Books. Hist. Books of cases anonymously and fairly regularly reported covering primarily the period from the reign of Edward I to the time of Henry VIII. The title “Year Books” derives from their being grouped under the regnal years of the sovereigns in whose reigns the reported cases were cited. The reports were probably originally prepared by law teachers and students and later by professional reporters or scribes. — Also written Year-Books; yearbooks; yearbooks. — Also termed terms.

“(F)rom 1300 there is a continuous stream of reports of arguments in the common pleas. The reports were written in Anglo-French, the language of courtly speech. Their authorship is unknown, and they are referred to by the generic name ‘year-books’ … If we have to account for their beginning, the most likely explanation is that they arose from a case-method of instruction in the law school which served the apprentices of the Bench before the emergence of the inns of court … For the same reason, the contemporary value of the earliest reports lay not in their historical authenticity as precedents but in the ideas and suggestions which they contained … Once the age of experiment was over, the reports settled into a more uniform and at times apparently single series … The year-books did not end at any fixed date. What has usually been taken as their end is the result of two concurrent factors: the advent of printing, and the practice of identifying reports by the name of the author.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 205–07 (3rd ed. 1990).

year, day, and waste. Hist. A right of the Crown to the profits and waste for a year and a day of the land of persons convicted of petty treason or felony (unless the lord made redemption), after which the Crown had to restore the property to the lord of the fee. The right was abrogated by the Corruption of Blood Act of 1814. — Also termed (in Law French) ann, jour, et wast; (in Law Latin) annus, dies, et wastum.

year-end dividend. See DIVIDEND.

year in mourning. See ANNUM LUCTUS.

Year of Our Lord. See ANNO DOMINI.

year-to-year tenancy. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

yeas and nays. The affirmative and negative votes on a bill or resolution before a legislative body.

yeoman (yoh-man). 1. Hist. An attendant in a royal or noble household. 2. Hist. A commoner; a freeholder (under the rank of gentleman) who holds land yielding 40 shillings per year.

“A yeoman is he that hath free land of forty shillings by the year; who was thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo [an upright and law-abiding man].” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 394 (1765).

yeoman of the guard. A member of a corps of officers whose primary duties are to ceremonially guard the English royal household. • A yeoman is usu. at least six feet tall, is of the best rank under the gentry, and is generally exempt from arrest on civil process. — Also termed yeoman of the guard of the royal household.

yeomanry. 1. The collective body of yeomen. 2. Volunteer cavalry units in Great Britain, later transferred to the Territorial Army.

yeven (yev-on or yiv-on). Hist. Given; dated. — Also spelled yeoven (yoh-van).

Yick Wo doctrine (yik woh). The principle that a law or ordinance that gives a person or entity absolute discretion to give or withhold permission to carry on a lawful business is in violation of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064 (1886).

yield, n. Profit expressed as a percentage of the investment. — Also termed yield on investment; return. See RATE OF RETURN.

coupon yield. The annual interest paid on a security (esp. a bond) divided by the security’s par value. — Also termed nominal yield.

current yield. The annual interest paid on a security (esp. a bond) divided by the security’s current market price.

discount yield. The yield on a security sold at a discount.

earnings yield. The earnings per share of a security divided by its market price. • The higher the ratio, the better the investment yield. — Also termed earnings-price ratio. Cf. PRICE-EARNINGS RATIO.

net yield. The profit or loss on an investment after deducting all appropriate costs and loss reserves.

nominal yield. See coupon yield.
yield, vb. 1. To give up, relinquish, or surrender (a right, etc.) <yield the floor>. 2. Hist. To perform a service owed by a tenant to a lord <yield and pay>. See YIELDING AND PAYING.

yield on investment. See YIELD.

yield spread. The differences in yield between various securities issues.

yield to maturity. The rate of return from an investment if the investment is held until it matures. — Abbr. YTM. Cf. TIME VALUE.

yokelet (yohk-lit), n. Hist. A small farm requiring only one yoke of oxen to till it.

yoman. See YEOMAN.

York, custom of. Hist. A custom prevalent in York whereby a male intestate's effects were divided according to the doctrine of pars rationabilis ("a reasonable part") — that is, one-third each to the widow, children, and administrator, one-half to the administrator if the man was married but had no children or was single but had children, or all to the administrator if the man was single with no children.

York Statute of. Hist. An English statute passed in York in the twelfth year of Edward II's reign, and including provisions on the subject of attorneys, witnesses, and the taking of inquests by nisi prius.

York–Antwerp rules. A set of rules relating to the settlement of maritime losses and disputes arising from bills of lading. Although these rules have no statutory authority, they are incorporated into almost all bills of lading.

zap. See intersubjective zap.

ZBA. abbr. zero-bracket amount.

Z-bond. See accrual bond under bond (3).

zealous witness. See witness.

zeir and day (yeer). See year and day. • Zeir is an obsolete graphic variant of year.

zero-bracket amount. A tax deduction formerly available to all individual taxpayers, regardless of whether they itemized their deductions. • In 1944 this was replaced by the standard deduction. — Abbr. ZBA. See standard deduction under deduction.

zero-coupon bond. See bond (3).

zero-coupon security. See security.

zero-rate mortgage. See mortgage.

zetetic (zi-tet-ik), adj. Hist. Proceeding by inquiry; investigative. — Also spelled zetetick.

zipper clause. An integration clause, esp. in a labor agreement. See integration clause.

zone. 1. An area that is different or is distinguished from surrounding areas <zone of danger>, 2. An area in a city or town that, through zoning regulations, is under particular restrictions as to building size, land use, and the like <the capitol is at the center of the height-restriction zone>.

holding zone. Temporary, low-density zoning used until a community determines how the area should be rezoned.

zone-of-danger rule. Torts. The doctrine allowing the recovery of damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress if the plaintiff was both located in the dangerous area created by the defendant’s negligence and frightened by the risk of harm.

zone of employment. Workers’ compensation. The physical place of employment within which an employee, if injured there, can receive compensation. Cf. scope of employment.

zone of interests. The class or type of interests or concerns that a statute or constitutional guarantee is intended to regulate or protect. • To have standing to challenge a ruling (esp. of an administrative agency), the plaintiff must show that the specific injury suffered comes within the zone of interests protected by the statute on which the ruling was based.

zone of privacy. Constitutional law. A range of fundamental privacy rights that are implied in the express guarantees of the Bill of Rights. See penumbra; right of privacy.

zone search. See search.

zoning, n. The legislative division of a region, esp. a municipality, into separate districts with different regulations within the districts for land use, building size, and the like. — zone, vb.

aesthetic zoning. Zoning designed to preserve the aesthetic features or values of an area.

bonus zoning. See incentive zoning.

cluster zoning. Zoning that favors planned-unit development by allowing a modification in lot size and frontage requirements under the condition that other land in the development be set aside for parks, schools, or other public needs. — Also termed density zoning. See planned-unit development.

conditional zoning. Zoning in which a governmental body (without definitively committing itself) grants a zoning change subject to conditions that are usu. not imposed on similarly zoned property.

"Conditions imposed are designed to protect adjacent land from the loss of use value which might occur if the newly authorized use was permitted without restraint of any kind. Thus, conditional zoning seeks to minimize the potentially deleterious effect of a zone change on neighboring properties through reasonably conceived conditions which harmonize the landowner’s need for rezoncontract zoning. 1. Zoning according to an agreement, by which the landowner agrees to certain restrictions or conditions in exchange for more favorable zoning treatment. • This type of contract zoning is usu. considered an illegal restraint of the government's police power, because by private agreement, the government has committed itself to a particular type of zoning. 2. Rezoning of property to a less restrictive classification subject to the landowner's agreement to observe specified limitations on the use and physical development of the property that are not imposed on other property in the zone. • This device is esp. used when property is located in a more restrictive zone that borders on a less restrictive zone.

cumulative zoning. A method of zoning in which any use permitted in a higher-use, less intensive zone is permissible in a lower-use, more intensive zone. • For example, under this method, a house could be built in an industrial zone but a factory could not be built in a residential zone.

density zoning. See cluster zoning.

Euclidean zoning (yo-klid-ee-on). Zoning by specific and uniform geographical division. • This type of zoning takes its name from the Supreme Court case that approved it: Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114 (1926).

exclusionary zoning. Zoning that excludes a specific class type of business from a district.

floating zoning. Zoning that creates exceptional-use districts, as needed, within ordinary zoned districts.

incentive zoning. A relaxation in zoning restrictions (such as density limits) that offer an incentive to a developer to provide certain public benefits (such as building low-income housing units). • Also termed bonus zoning.

interim zoning. Temporary emergency zoning pending revisions to existing ordinances or the development of a final zoning plan. • Also termed stopgap zoning.

inverse zoning. Zoning that attempts to disperse particular types of property use rather than concentrate them.

partial zoning. Zoning that affects only a portion of a municipality's territory, and that is usu. invalid because it contradicts the comprehensive zoning plan. • Also termed piece-meal zoning.

private zoning. The use of restrictive covenants in private agreements to restrict the use and occupancy of real property. • Private zoning often covers such things as lot size, building lines, architectural specifications, and property uses.

reverse spot zoning. Zoning of a large area of land without regard for the zoning of a small piece of land within that area.

"When parcels around a given property are rezoned to allow for higher uses leaving an island of less intensive use, reverse spot zoning is the result." Donald G. Hagman & Julian Conrad Juergensmeyer, Urban Planning and Land Development Control Law § 5.4, at 136 (2d ed. 1986).

spot zoning. Zoning of a particular piece of land without regard for the zoning of the larger area surrounding the land.

"To the popular mind, spot zoning means the improper permission to use an 'island' of land for a more intensive use than permitted on adjacent properties. The popular definition needs several qualifications .... The set of facts usually involves an 'island' of more intensive use than surrounding property .... Usually the 'island' is small .... Furthermore, the term is not properly applied to development permission that comes about by variance or special exception. Rather, the term refers to a legislatively-created use, not a rezoning, or to a situation in which the 'island' is created by the original ordinance." Donald G. Hagman & Julian Conrad Juergensmeyer, Urban Planning and Land Development Control Law § 5.4, at 136 (2d ed. 1986).

stopgap zoning. See interim zoning.

zoning map. The map that is created by a zoning ordinance and shows the various zoning districts.

zoning ordinance. A city ordinance that regulates the use to which land within various parts of the city may be put. • It allocates uses to the various districts of a municipality, as by allocating residences to certain parts and businesses to other parts. A comprehensive zoning ordinance usu. regulates the height of buildings and the proportion of the lot area that must be kept free from buildings.

zoning variance. See VARIANCE (2).

zygonomic (zig-noh-mik). adj. Of, relating to, or involving an act whose evolution directly abridges the freedom of a person who bears a duty in the enjoyment of a legal advantage. • This rather abstract term was coined by the philosopher Albert Kocourek in his book Jural Relations (1927). Cf. MESONOMIC.

zygocephalum (zi-ga-sef-a-lam), n. [Greek fr. zygo-"yoke, pair" + kephalos "head"] Hist. A measure of land, esp. the amount that can be plowed in one day.

zygostates (zi-goh-stay-teez), n. [Greek] Roman law. An officer who resolved controversies over weight; a public weigher.

Legal Maxims

In the first edition of this dictionary, published in 1891, Henry Campbell Black remarked that the book contained "a complete collection of legal maxims," adding: "These have not been grouped in one body, but distributed in their proper alphabetical order through the book. This is believed to be the more convenient arrangement" (p. iv). Although it might indeed have been more convenient for readers who knew the maxims they wanted to look up—as 19th-century readers might have been apt to—spreading Latin sentences throughout the book is decidedly inconvenient for most dictionary users today. We have therefore collected them for ease of reference.

Of course, many scholars have long been intolerant of those who use maxims to decide cases. As James Fitzjames Stephen, one of the great 19th-century legal scholars, incisively put it before Black's work appeared:

It seems to me that legal maxims in general are little more than pert headings of chapters. They are rather minims than maxims, for they give not a particularly great but a particularly small amount of information. As often as not, the exceptions and disqualifications to them are more important than the so-called rules. ¹

Other scholars have been equally derisive. ²

But there is an element of fun in legal maxims: they sometimes express surprising insights—and these from ancient writers. Though they will not clinch arguments, they will delight many readers who have a historical bent.

This collection of maxims has been carefully researched and retranslated by two classicists, Edwin Carawan and Alison Parker, whose splendid work has made the collection a reliable work of scholarship. Their bibliography of works cited appears on page 1701.

2. For a collection of critical comments, see Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 552 (2d ed. 1995.)
Ab abusu ad usum non valet consequentia. A conclusion about the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria. No injury is done by things long acquiesced in.

Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est ut concessio non sit inanis. Such number and sense is to be given to abbreviations that the grant may not be void.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loco in quo petitur. We must consider a person absent who is not in that place in which he is sought.

Absentia ejus qui reipublicae causa abest neque ei neque aliis damnosa esse debet. The absence of a person who is abroad in service to the state ought to be prejudicial neither to that person nor to another. Dig. 50.17.140.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. A simple proposition needs no expositor.

Abundans cautela non nocet. Abundant caution does no harm.

Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur, suum principale. An accessory does not lead, but follows, its principal.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. An accessory follows the nature of his principal.

Accipere quid ut justitiam facias non est tam accipere quam extorquere. To accept anything as a reward for doing justice is rather extorting than accepting.

Accusare nemo debet se, nisi coram Deo. No one is obliged to accuse himself, except before God.

Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audiendus, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit. A person who makes an accusation after a reasonable time has passed is not to be heard unless the person makes a satisfactory excuse for the omission.

A communi observantia non est recedendum. There should be no departure from common observance (or usage).

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta. Outward acts indicate the thoughts hidden within.

Acta in uno judicio non probant in alio nisi inter easdem personas. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it is between the same parties.

Actio non datur non damnificato. An action is not given to one who is not injured.

Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make a person guilty unless the mind is guilty. • Properly, Actus non reum (q.v.).

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona. A personal action dies with the person.

Actio quaelibet in sua via. Every action proceeds in its own course.

Actore non probante, reus absolvitur. If the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant is acquitted.

Actori incumbit onus probandi. The burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff.

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit non est audiendus. A pleader ought not to be heard who advances a proposition contrary to the rule (of law).

Actor sequitur forum rei. The plaintiff follows the forum of the thing in dispute.

Actus curiae neminem gravabit. An act of the court will prejudice no one.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. An act of God does wrong to no one. • That is, no one is responsible in damages for inevitable accidents.

Actus inceptus cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiae personae, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest. An act already begun whose completion depends upon the will of the parties may be recalled; but if it depends on consent of a third person or on a contingency, it cannot be recalled.

Actus judiciarius coram non judice irritus habetur; de ministeriali autem a quocunque provenit ratum esto. A judicial act before one not a judge (or without jurisdiction) is void; as to a ministerial act, from whomsoever it proceeds, let it be valid.

Actus legis nemini est damnosus. An act of the law prejudices no one.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. An act of the law does no one wrong.

Actus legitiimi non recipiunt modum. Acts required by law admit of no qualification.

Actus me invito factus non est meas actus. An act done (by me) against my will is not my act.

Actus non reum facit nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make a person guilty unless his mind (or intention) is guilty. 3 Co. Inst. 54; 107.

Actus repugnans non potest in esse produci. A repugnant act cannot be brought into being (that is, cannot be made effectual).

Actus servi, in iis quibus opera ejus communiter adhibita est, actus domini habeatur. The act of a servant in those things in which he is usually employed is considered the act of his master.

Additio probat minoritatem. An addition proves inferiority. • That is, if it be said that a person has a fee tail, it is less than if the person has the fee.

Ad ea quae frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. The laws are adapted to those cases that occur more frequently.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio. The denomination and explanation ought to be derived from the more worthy.

Adjvvari quippe nos, non decipi, beneficio oportet. Surely we ought to be helped by a benefit, not be entrapped by it.

Ad officium justiciariorum spectat unicum coram eis placitanti justitiam exhibere. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to everyone pleading before them.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio, nisi impediatur sententia. A relative is to be referred to the nearest antecedent, unless prevented by the sense.

Ad quaestiones facti non respondent judices; ad quaestiones legis non respondent juratores. Judges do not answer questions of fact; jurors do not answer questions of law.

Ad quaestiones legis judices, et non juratores, responden. Judges, and not jurors, answer questions of law.

Ad recte docendum oportet primum inquirere nomina, quia rerum cognitio a nominibus rerum dependet. In order rightly to comprehend a thing, it is necessary first to inquire into the names, for a right knowledge of things depends upon their names.

Adversus extraneos vitiosa possessio prodesse solet. Possession though faulty is usually sufficient against outsiders. • Prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitos non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit. No one is held to answer for the effects of superior force or accidents, unless his own fault has contributed.

Aedificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. It is not lawful to build upon one's own land what may be injurious to another.

Aedificatum solo solo cedit. What is built upon the land goes with the land.

Aedificia solo cedunt. Buildings go with the land.

Aequior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The law's disposition is more impartial than man's.

Aequitas agit in personam. Equity acts upon the person.
Aequitas est correctio legis generaliter latae qua parte deficit. Equity is the correction of some part of the law where by reason of its generality it is defective.

Aequitas ignorantiae opitulatur, oscillantiae non item. Equity assists ignorance but not complacency (or carelessness).

Aequitas non facit jus, sed juri auxiliatur. Equity does not create a right, but aids the right.

Aequitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law.

Aequitas supervacua odit. Equity abhors superfluous things.

Aequum et bonum est lex legum. What is equitable and good is the law of laws.

Aestimatio praeteriti delicti ex postremo facto nunquam crescit. The assessment of a past offense never increases from a subsequent fact.

Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo. Your motive gives a name to your act.

Affectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus. The intention is punished even if the object is not achieved.

Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis. A person connected by marriage to someone connected by marriage to me is no connection of mine.

Affirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. The proof is incumbent upon the one who affirms, not on the one who denies.

Affirmantis est probare. The person who affirms must prove.

Agentes et consentientes pari poena plectentur. Acting and consenting parties will be liable to the same punishment.

A jure suo cadunt. They fall from their right. That is, they lose their right.

A justitia (quasi a quodam fonte) omnia jura emanant. From justice, as from a fountain, all rights flow.

Aliena negotia exacto officio geruntur. The business of another is conducted with scrupulous attention.

Alienatio licet prohibeat, consensu tamen omnium in quorum favorem prohibita est potest fieri; et quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. Even if alienation is prohibited, it may yet take place by the consent of all in whose favor it is prohibited; it is in the power of anyone to renounce a right introduced for his own benefit.

Alienatio rei praefertur juri accrescendi. Alienation of property is favored over the right to accumulate.

A l'impossible nul n'est tenu. No one is bound to do what is impossible.

Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneat inpunita quod alias non concederetur. Something is conceded that otherwise would not be conceded, so that a wrong not remain unpunished.

Aliquis non debeat esse judex in propria causa, quia non potest esse judex et pars. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act both as judge and party.

Aliud est celeare, aliud tacere. To conceal is one thing, to be silent another.

Aliud est distinctio, aliud separatio. Distinction is one thing, separation another.

Aliud est possidere, aliud esse in possessione. It is one thing to possess, another to be in possession.

Aliud est vendere, aliud vendenti consensus. To sell is one thing, to give consent to the seller another.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. A person making contradictory allegations is not to be heard.

Allegans suam turgitudoinem non est audiendus. A person alleging his own wrong is not to be heard.

Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat. What is not relevant if proved ought not to have been alleged.
Allegatio contra factum non est admitterenda. An allegation contrary to the deed (or fact) is not admissible.

Alterius circumventio alii non praebet actionem. A deception practiced upon one person does not give a cause of action to another.

Alternativa petition non est audienda. An alternative petition is not to be heard.

Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est accipienda. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against the party who offers it.

Ambiguis casibus semper praesumitur pro rege. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.

Ambiguitas contra stipulatorem est. A dubious expression is construed against the party using it.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur. A latent ambiguity in wording is resolved by evidence; for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact is resolved by extrinsic evidence.

Ambiguitas verborum patens nulla verificatio excluditur. A patent ambiguity is not removed by extrinsic evidence (or is never helped by averment).

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it.

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitae supremum exitum. The will of a decedent is ambulatory (that is, can be altered) until the last moment of life.

Angliae jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem. The laws of England are favorable in every case to liberty.

Animus ad se omne jus ducit. The mind brings every right unto itself. ● Often explained: It is to the intention that all law applies.

Animus hominis est anima scripti. The intention of the person is the soul of the instrument.

Anniculus trecentesimo sexagesimo-quinto die dicitur, incipiente plane non exacto die, quia annum civiliter non ad momenta temporum sed ad dies numeramur. We call a child a year old on the 365th day, when the day is clearly begun but not ended, because we calculate the civil year not by moments, but by days.

Annu a nec debitum judex non separat ipse. Even the judge apportions neither annuities nor debt.

Annum est mora motus quo suum planeta pervolvet circulum. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit.

Annum inceptus pro completo habetur. A year begun is held as completed. ● Said to be of very limited application.

A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarie negative, licet non affirmativum. From impossibility to nonexistence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative.

Apices juris non sunt jura. Legal niceties are not law.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanen. Those captured by pirates or robbers remain free.

A piratis et latronibus capta dominium non mutant. Things captured by pirates or robbers do not change their ownership.

Applicatio est vita regulae. The application is the life of a rule.

Aqua cedit solo. The water goes with the ground. ● A grant of the land includes the water on it.

Aqua currit et debit currere ut currere solebat. Water runs and ought to run as it was wont to run.

Arbitramentum aequum tribuit cuique suum. A just arbitration renders to each his own.

Arbitrium est judicium. An award is a judgment.
 Arbor dum crescit; lignum dum crescere nescit. It is a tree while it is growing; wood when it cannot grow.

A rescriptis valet argumentum. An argument from rescripts (i.e., original writs in the register) is valid.

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege. An argument drawn from authority is the strongest in law.

Argumentum ab impossibili plurimum valet in lege. An argument deduced from an impossibility has the greatest validity in law.

Argumentum ab inconvenienti plurimum valet in lege. An argument drawn from what is unsuitable (or improper) has the greatest validity in law. Co. Litt. 66a.

Argumentum a divisione est fortissimum in jure. An argument based on a subdivision of the subject is most powerful in law.

Argumentum a majori ad minus negative non valet; valet e converso. An argument from the greater to the lesser is of no force in the negative; conversely (in the affirmative) it is valid.

Argumentum a simili valet in lege. An argument by analogy (from a similar case) has force in law.

Arma in armatos sumere jura sinunt. The laws permit taking up arms against the armed.

Assignatus utitur jure auctoris. An assignee is clothed with the rights of the principal.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus neque auxilium. From the highest remedy to an inferior action there is no recourse or assistance.

Auctoritates philosophorum, medicorum et poëtarum sunt in causis allegandae et tenendae. The authoritative opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be adduced and regarded in causes.

Aucupia verborum sunt judice indigna. Quibbling over words is unworthy of a judge.

Audi alteram partem. Hear the other side. No one should be condemned unheard.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law there is to be no departure.

Baratriam committit qui propter pecuniam justitiam baractat. A person is guilty of baratry who sells justice for money.

Bastardus non potest habere haeredem nisi de corpore suo legitime procreatam. A bastard cannot have an heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body.

Bastardus nullius est filius, aut filius populi. A bastard is nobody’s son, or the son of the people.

Bello parte cedunt republicae. Things acquired in war go to the state.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione. Blessed is the exposition when a thing is saved from destruction.

Beneficium invito non datur. A privilege or benefit is not granted against a person’s will.

Beneficium non datur nisi officii causa. A benefice is not granted except on account or in consideration of duty.

Beneficium principis debet esse mansurum. The benefaction of a prince ought to be lasting.

Benigne faciendae sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire. Constructions (of written instruments) are to be made liberally, for the simplicity of laymen, in order that the matter may have effect rather than fail; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor.

Benigne faciendae sunt interpretationes propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire. Constructions (of written instruments) are to be made liberally, for the simplicity of laymen, in order that the matter may have effect rather than fail (or become void); and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words.
Benignior sententia in verbis generalibus seu dubiis est preferenda. The more favorable construction is to be preferred in general or doubtful expressions.

Benignius leges interpretandae sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur. Laws are to be more liberally interpreted so that their intent may be preserved.

Bigamus seu trigamus, etc., est qui diversis temporibus et successice duas seu tres uxorres habuit. A bigamus or trigamus, etc., is one who has had two or more wives in succession, each at a different time. 3 Co. Inst. 88.

Bis dat qui cito dat. He pays twice who pays promptly.

Bis idem exigi bona fides non patitur, et in satisfactionibus non permititur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. Good faith does not allow the same thing to be exacted twice; and in satisfying claims, it is not permitted that more should be done after satisfaction has once been rendered.

Bonae fidei non congruit de apicibus juris disputare. It is incompatible with good faith to insist on the extreme subtleties of the law.

Bonae fidei possessor in id tantum quod ad se pervenerit tenetur. A possessor in good faith is liable only for that which he himself has obtained (literally, what has come to him). 2 Co. Inst. 285.

Bona fide possessor facit fructus consumptos suos. A possessor in good faith is entitled to the fruits (or produce) that he consumes.

Bona fides exigit ut quod convenit fiat. Good faith demands that what is agreed upon shall be done.

Bona fides non patitur ut bis idem exigatur. Good faith does not allow payment to be exacted twice for the same thing.

Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictioinem (or justitiam). It is the role of a good judge to enlarge (or use liberally) his jurisdiction (or remedial authority).

Boni judicis est ampliare justitiam. It is the role of a good judge to enlarge or extend justice.

Boni judicis est causas litium dirimere. It is the role of a good judge to remove causes of litigation.

Boni judicis est judicium sine dilatione mandare executioni. It is the role of a good judge to render judgment for execution without delay.

Boni judicis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oriatur. It is the role of a good judge to dispose of litigations so that one suit should not grow from another. 5 Coke 31a.

Bonum defendentis ex integra causa; malum ex quolibet defectu. A good outcome for the defendant comes from a sound case; a bad outcome from some defect.

Bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum. A thing good from necessity is not good beyond the limits of the necessity.

Bonus judex secundum aequum et bonum judicat, et aequitatem stricto jure praebet. A good judge decides according to fairness and the good and prefers equity to strict law.

Breve ita dicitur, quia rem de qua agitur, et intentionem potestis, paucis verbis breviter enarrat. A writ is called a “breve” because it briefly states, in few words, the matter in dispute, and the object of the party seeking relief.

Breve judiciale debet sequi suum originale, et accessorium suum principale. A judicial writ ought to follow its original, and an accessory its principal.

Breve judiciale non cedit pro defectu formae. A judicial writ does not fail for a defect of form.

Brevia, tam originalia quam judicialia, patiuntur anglica nomina. Writs, original as well as judicial, bear English names.

Cancellarii angliae dignitas est, ut secundus a rege in regno habitet. The dignity of the chancellor of England is (such) that he is considered in the realm from the sovereign.

Carcer ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos, dari debet. Imprisonment should be imposed for keeping people in confinement, not for punishing them (further). Co. Litt. 260a.

Carcer non supplicii causa sed custodiae constitutus. A prison is established not for the sake of punishment, but for detention under guard.

Casus fortuitus non est sperandus, et nemo tenetur divinare. A chance event is not to be expected, and no one is bound to foresee it.

Casus fortuitus non est supponendus. A chance event is not to be presumed.

Casus omissus et oblivioni datus dispositioni communis juris relinquitur. A case omitted and forgotten (not provided for in statute) is left to the disposal of the common law.

Casus omissus pro omisso habendus est. A case omitted is to be held as (intentionally) omitted.

Catalla juste possessa amitti non possunt. Chattels rightly possessed cannot be lost.

Catalla reputantur inter minima in lege. Chattels are considered in law among things of least consequence.

Causa causae est causa causati. The cause of a cause is the cause of the effect.

Causa causantis causa est causati. The cause of the thing causing is the cause of the effect.

Causa ecclesiae publicis aequiparatur; et summa est ratio quae pro religioni facit. The cause of the church is equal to public causes; and paramount is the reason that acts in favor of religion.

Causae dotis, vitae, libertatis, fisci sunt inter favorabilia in lege. Causes of dower, life, liberty, revenue are among the things favored in law.

Causae ecclesiae publicis causis aequiparantur. The causes of the church are equal to public causes.

Causa et origo est materia negotii. The cause and origin of a matter are the substance of it. "The law regards the original act": as in the case of a man who attempts suicide in madness, but dies after regaining sanity; such is not suicide. 1 Coke 99.

Causa patet. The reason is obvious.

Causa proxima non remota spectatur. The immediate and not the remote cause is considered.

Causa vaga et incerta non est causa rationabilis. A vague and uncertain cause is not a reasonable cause.

Caveat emptor. Let the buyer beware.

Caveat emptor qui ignorare non debit quod jus alienum emit. Let the buyer beware, for he ought not act in ignorance when he buys what another has right to.

Caveat venditor. Let the seller beware.

Caveat viator. Let the traveler beware.

Cavendum est a fragmentis. Beware of fragments.

Certa debet esse intentio et narratio et certum fundamentum et certa res quae deducitur in judicium. The design and narration ought to be certain, the foundation certain, and the matter certain that is brought into court to be tried.

Certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be rendered certain.

Cessante causa, cessat effectus. The cause ceasing, the effect ceases.

Cessante ratione legis cessat et ipsa lex. When the reason of the law ceases, the law itself also ceases.

Cessante statu primitivo, cessat derivativus. When the original estate comes to an end, the derivative estate is also at an end.

Cessa regnare, si non vis judicare. Cease to reign if you wish not to adjudicate.

C’est le crime qui fait la honte, et non pas vêchafaud. It is the crime that causes the shame, and not the scaffold.

Cestuy que doit inheriter al père doit inher-iter al fill. The person who should have inher-Clausulae inconsuetae semper inducunt suspicionem. Unusual clauses always arouse suspicion.

Clausula generalis de residuo non ea complectitur quae non ejusdem sint generis cum ipsis quae speciatim dicta fuerant. A general clause of remainder does not embrace those things that are not of the same kind as those that had been specially mentioned.

Clausula generalis non referatur ad expressa. A general clause does not refer to things expressly mentioned.

Clausula quae abrogationem exclusit ab inimico non valet. A clause that precludes abrogation is invalid from the beginning.

Clausula vel dispositio inutilis per prae- sumptionem remotam vel causam ex post facto non fulcitur. A useless clause or disposition is not supported by a remote presumption or by a cause arising afterwards. • A useless clause or disposition is one that expresses no more than the law by intendment would have supplied; it is not supported by a remote presumption or foreign intendment of some purpose, in regard whereof it might be material, or by a cause arising afterwards that may induce an operation of those idle words.

Cognitionis poenam nemo meretur. No one deserves punishment for his thoughts.

Cognitionis poenam nemo patitur. No one is punished for his thoughts.

Cognomen majorum est ex sanguine tractum, hoc intrinsicum est; agnomen extrinsecum ab eventu. The cognomen is derived from the blood of ancestors and is intrinsic; an agnomen (or honorary title) arises from an event, and is extrinsic.

Cohaeeredes una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Coheirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right that they possess.

Collegium est societas plurium corporum simul habitantium. A college is a society of several people dwelling together.

Commenda est facultas recipiendi et retinendi beneficium contra jus positivum a suprema potestate. A commendam is the... power of receiving and retaining a benefice contrary to positive law, by supreme authority.

Commercium jure gentium commune esse debet et non in monopolium et privatum paucorum quaeestum convertendum. Commerce, by the law of nations, ought to be common and not converted into a monopoly and the private gain of a few.

Commodum ex injuria sua non habere debet. (The wrongdoer) should not derive any benefit from his own wrong.

Communis error facit jus. A common error (one often repeated) makes law.

Communis error non facit jus. A common error does not make law.

Compendia sunt dispedia. Abridgments are hindrances. Shortcuts or time-saving measures are often a loss. Coke continues, Melius est petere fontes. Co. Litt. 305b.

Compromissarii sunt judices. Arbitrators are judges.

Compromissum ad similitudinem judiciorum redigitur. A compromise is brought into affinity with judgments.

Conatus quid sit non definitur in jure. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

Concessio per regem fieri debet de certitudine. A grant by the king ought to be made of a certainty. Coke explains, “If the king grants to me that I shall not be sheriff, without showing of what county, it is void for uncertainty.” 9 Coke 46b.

Concessio versus concedentem latam interpretationem habere debet. A grant ought to have a liberal interpretation against the grantor.

Concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To make laws agree with laws is the best mode of interpreting them.

Concordia parvae res crescent et opulentia litiges. Small means increase by concord and litigations by opulence.

Conditio beneficialis, quae statum construct, benignae secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem quae statum destruct stricte, secundum verborum proprietatem, accipienda. A beneficial condition that creates an estate ought to be construed favorably, according to the intention of the words; but a condition that destroys an estate is odious and ought to be construed according to the strict sense of the words.

Conditio dicitur cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse confertur. It is called a condition when something is given for an uncertain event that may or may not come into existence.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjecta. An unlawful condition is considered unconnected.

Conditiones quaelibet odiosae; maxime autem contra matrimonium et commercium. Any conditions are odious, but especially those against matrimony and commerce.

Conditio praecedens adimpleri debet prius quam sequatur effectus. A condition precedent ought to be fulfilled before the effect can follow.

Confessio facta in judicio omni probatione major est. A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof.

Confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur et quodammodo sua sententia damnatur. A person who has confessed his guilt when arraigned is considered to have been tried and is, as it were, condemned by his own sentence.

Confirmare est id quod prius infirmum fuit simul firmare. To confirm is to make firm at once what before was not firm.

Confirmare nemo potest priusquam jus ei acciderit. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him.

Confirmatio est nulla ubi donum praecedens est invalidum. A confirmation is null where the preceding gift is invalid.

Confirmatio omnes supplet defectus, licet id quod actum est ab initio non valuit. Confirmation supplies all defects, even if that which has been done was not valid at the beginning.

Confirmat usum qui tollit abusum. One confirms a use who removes an abuse.
Conjunctio mariti et feminae est de jure naturae. The union of husband and wife derives from the law of nature.

Conscientia dicitur a con et scio, quasi seire cum Deo. Conscience is so called from con and scio, to know, as it were, with God.

Consecratio est periodus electionis; electio est praebamula consecrationis. Consecration is the termination of election; election is the preamble of consecration.

Consensus est voluntas plurium ad quos res pertinent, simul juncta. Consent is the joint will of several people to whom the thing belongs.

Consensus facit legem. Consent makes law. A contract constitutes law between the parties agreeing to be bound by it.

Consensus, non concubitus, facit matrimonium. Consent, not coition (or sharing a bed), constitutes marriage.

Consensus, non concubitus, facit nuptias vel matrimonium, et consentire non possunt ante annos nubiles. Consent, not coition (or sharing a bed), constitutes nuptials or marriage, and persons cannot consent before marriageable years.

Consensus tollit errorem. Consent removes an error. A person cannot object to something he has consented to.

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinent simul juncta. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject matter.

Consentientes et agentes pari poena plectentur. Those consenting and those perpetrating will receive the same punishment.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra (ante) annos nubiles. Persons cannot consent to marriage before marriageable years.

Consequentiae non est consequentia. The consequence of a consequence does not exist.

Consilia multorum quaeruntur (requiruntur) in magnis. The advice of many is sought in great affairs.

Consortio malorum me quoque malum facit. The company of wicked men makes me also wicked.

Constitutiones tempore posteriores potiores sunt his quae ipsas praecesserunt. Later laws prevail over those that preceded them.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisesedes et tabulas haberet, suarumque rerum constitutionem fecisset. It is a settled principle that what ought to be considered the home of each of us is where he has his dwelling, keeps his records, and has established his business.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam. The construction of the law does not work an injury.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called a usurpation than a custom.

Consuetudo debet esse certa. Custom ought to be fixed.

Consuetudo debet esse certa, nam incerta pro nulla (nullius) habetur. Custom ought to be fixed, for if variable it is held as null (or of no account).

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum. Custom is the best expounder of the law.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis. Custom and common usage overcome the unwritten law if it is special; and interpret the written law if the law is general.

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem. Custom observed by reason of a certain and reasonable cause supersedes the common law.

Consuetudo, licet sit magnae auctoritatis, nunquam tamen praecudicat manifestae veritati. A custom, even if it is of great authority, is never prejudicial to plain truth.
Legal Maxims

Consuetudo loci observanda est. The custom of the place is to be observed.

Consuetudo manerii et loci observanda est. The custom of a manor and place is to be observed.

Consuetudo neque injuria oriri neque tolli protest. A custom can neither arise nor be abolished by a wrong.

Consuetudo non habitur (trahitur) in consequentiam. Custom is not held as (or drawn into) a precedent.

Consuetudo praescripta et legitima vincit legem. A prescriptive and lawful custom overrides the law.

Consuetudo regni Angliae est lex Angliae. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci. A custom once disallowed cannot again be introduced.

Consuetudo tollit communem legem. Custom takes away the common law.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem. Custom overrides common law.

Consuetudo volentes ducit, lex nolentes trahit. Custom leads the willing; law drags the unwilling.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. A contemporaneous exposition is the best and most powerful in the law. A statute is best explained by following the construction put upon it by judges who lived at the time it was made, or soon after.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictarios. An issue requires terms of contradiction. (That is, there can be no issue without an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other.)

Contractus est quasi actus contra actum. A contract is, as it were, act against act.

Contractus ex turpi causa vel contra bonos mores nullus est. A contract founded on a wrongful consideration or against good morals is null.

Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt. Contracts receive legal validity from the agreement of the parties.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibit; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit. A person acts contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; a person acts in fraud of the law who, without violating the wording, circumvents the intention. Dig. 1.3.29.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum. There is no disputing against one who denies first principles.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio. No prescription runs against a person unable to act (or bring an action).

Contrariorum contraria est ratio. The reason of contrary things is contrary.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permettit. The law never allows anything contrary to truth.

Contractatio rei alienae animo furandi est furtum. Touching or taking another’s property with an intention of stealing is theft.

Conventio omnis intuitur clausula rebus sic stantibus. Every contract is to be understood as being based on the assumption of things remaining as they were (that is, at the time of its conclusion).

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare. An agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right. That is, it cannot prevent the application of general rules of law, or render valid any contravention of law.

Conventio vincit legem. The express agreement of the parties overrides the law.

Convicia si irascaris tua divulgas; spreta exolescunt. If you are moved to anger by insults, you spread them abroad; if despised, they die out.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu. Coupling words together shows that they ought to be understood in the same sense.
Corporalis injuria non recipit aestimationem de futuro. A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from proceedings yet in the future.

Corpus humanum non recipit aestimationem. The person of a human being can have no price put on it.

Creditorum appellatione non hi tantum accipiuntur qui pecuniam crediderunt, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causa debetur. Under the name of creditors are included not only those who have lent money, but also all to whom a debt is owed from any cause.

Crescente malitia crescere debet et poena. With increase of malice, punishment ought also to increase.

Crimen falsi dicitur, cum quis illicitus, cui non fuerit ad hoc a data auctoritas, de sigillo regis rapto vel invento brevia cartasve consignaverit. It is called “crimen falsi” when anyone to whom power has not been given for such purposes has illicitly signed writs or grants with the king’s seal, either stolen or found.

Crimen laesae majestatis omnia alia crimina excedit quoad poenam. The crime of treason exceeds all other crimes in its punishment.

Crimen omnia ex se nata vitiat. Crime taints everything that springs from it.

Crimen trahit personam. The crime brings with it the person. • That is, the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it is committed jurisdiction over the person of the offender.

Crimina morte extinguuntur. Crimes are extinguished by death.

Cuiunque alicud conceditur, conceditur etiam et id sine quo res ipsa non esse potuit. To whomever anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing itself could not exist.

Cuiunque alicus quid concedit concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. To whomever anyone grants a thing he is considered also to grant that without which the thing itself could not be (the sine qua non). 11 Coke 52.

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest. To whom jurisdiction is given, those things also are considered to be granted without which the jurisdiction cannot be exercised. • That is, the grant of jurisdiction implies the grant of all powers necessary to its exercise.

Cui jus est donandi eidem et vendendi et concedendi jus est. A person who has a right to give has also a right to sell and to grant.

Cuilibet in arte sua perito est credendum. Credence should be given to a person skilled in his art (that is, when speaking of matters connected with that art).

Cuilibet licit juri pro se introducto renunciare. Anyone may waive or renounce the benefit of a principle or rule of law that exists only for his protection.

Cui licet quod majus non debet quod minus est non licere. A person who has authority to do the more important act ought not to be debarred from doing what is of less importance.

Cui pater est populus non habet ille patrem. That person to whom the people is father has not a father.

Cuique in sua arte credendum est. Everyone is to be believed in his own area of expertise.

Cujus est commodum, ejus debet esse incommodum. The person who has the advantage should also have the disadvantage.

Cujus est commodum, ejus est onus. The person who has the benefit has also the burden.

Cujus est dare, ejus est disponere. The person who has a right to give has the right of disposition. • That is, the bestower of a gift has a right to regulate its disposal.

Cujus est divisio, alterius est electio. When one of two parties has the division (of an estate), the other has the choice (of the shares). • In partition between co-partners, where the division is made by the eldest, the rule in English law is that she shall choose her share last.

Cujus est dominium, ejus est periculum. The risk lies upon the owner.
Cujus est instituere, ejus est abrogare. Whoever can institute can also abrogate.

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum. The person who owns the soil owns up to the sky. • One who owns the surface of the ground owns, or has an exclusive right to everything that is upon or above it to an indefinite height.

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos. Whoever owns the soil owns everything up to the sky and down to the depths.

Cujus juris (i.e., jurisdictio) est principale, ejusdem juris erit accessorium. An accessory matter is subject to the same jurisdiction as its principal.

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, ejus consulto dati donatio est. A thing given by mistake can be recovered; if given purposely, it is a gift. Dig. 50.17.53.

Cujusque rei potissima pars est principium. The principal part of everything is the beginning.

Culpa caret qui scit sed prohibere non potest. A person is free of blame who knows but cannot prevent.

Culpae poena par esto. Let the punishment be equal to the crime.

Culpa est immiscere se rei ad se non pertinenti. It is a fault for anyone to meddle in a matter not pertaining to him.

Culpa lata dolo aequiparatur. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Culpa tenet (teneat) suos auctores. A fault binds (or should bind) its own authors.

Cum actio fuerit mere criminalis, institutio poterit ab initio criminaliter vel civiliter. When an action is purely criminal, it can be instituted from the beginning either criminally or civilly.

Cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verbis? When the proofs of facts are present, what need is there of words?

Cum aliquis renunciaverit societati, solvitur societas. When any partner has renounced the partnership, the partnership is dissolved.

Cum confitente sponte mitius est agendum. One making a voluntary confession is to be dealt with more leniently.

Cum de lucro duorum quaeritur melior est causa possidentis. When there is a question of gain between two people, the cause of the possessor is the better.

Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est. When two clauses in a will are found to be contradictory, the last in order prevails.

Cum duo jura concurrunt in una persona, aequum est ac si essent in duobus. When two rights meet in one person, it is the same as if they were in two persons.

Cum in corpore dissentitur, apparat nullam esse actionem. When there is a disagreement in the substance, there is clearly no acceptance.

Cum in testamento ambigae aut etiam perperam scriptum, est beneigne interpretari, et secundum id quod creditum est cogitatum credendum est. When an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs in a will, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with the testator’s probable meaning.

Cum legitimae nuptiae factae sunt, patrem liberis sequuntur. Children born under a legitimate marriage follow the condition of the father.

Cum par delictum est duorum, semper oneratur petitor, et melior habetur possessoris causa. Where two parties are equally at fault, the claimant always is at the disadvantage, and the party in possession has the better cause.

Cum quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When that which I do is of no effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can (that is, in some other way).

Curatus non habet titulum. A curate has no title (to tithes).

Curia cancellariae officina justitiae. The court of chancery is the workshop of justice.

Curia parliamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit. The court of parliament is governed by its own laws.
Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur. An overseer and captious interpretation in the law is rejected.

Currit tempus contra desides et sui juris contemptores. Time runs against the indolent and those who are not mindful of their rights.

Cursus curiae est lex curiae. The practice of the court is the law of the court.

Custome serra prise stricte. Custom shall be construed strictly.

Custos statum haereditis in custodia existentis meliorem, non deteriorem, facere potest. A guardian can make the estate of an heir living under his guardianship better, not worse.

Damnnum sine injuria esse potest. There can be damage without any act of injustice.

Dans et retinens nihil dat. One who gives and yet retains (possession) does not give effectually (literally, gives nothing).

Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt. Give the things which are yours while they are yours; after death they are not yours.

Datur digniori. It is given to the more worthy.

Debet esse finis litium. There ought to be a limit to litigation.

Debet quis juri subjacere ubi delinquit. Any offender should be subject to the law of the place where he offends.

Debet sua cuique domus esse perfugium tuissimum. Every person’s house should be his safest refuge.

Debile fundamentum fallit opus. A weak foundation frustrates the work (built on it).

Debita sequuntur personam debitoris. Debts follow the person of the debtor. That is, debts belong to no locality and may be collected wherever the debtor can be found.

Debitor non praesumitur donare. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift.

Debitorum pactiobus creditorum petitionio nec tolli nec minui potest. The creditors’ suit can be neither quashed nor diminished by the contracts of their debtors.

Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci. Debt and contract belong to no particular place.

Deceptis, non decipientibus, jura subvenient. The laws help persons who have been deceived, not those deceiving.

Decet (tamen) principem servare leges qui bus ipse servatus est. It is proper (nonetheless) for the prince to preserve the laws by which he himself is preserved.

Decimae de decimatis solvi non debent. Tithes ought not to be paid from that which is given for tithes.

Decimae de jure divino et canonica institutione pertinent ad personam. Tithes belong to the parson by divine right and canonical institution.

Decimae non debent solvi ubi non est annua renovatio, et ex annuatis renovantibus simul semel. Tithes ought not to be paid where there is not an annual renovation, and from annual renovations once only.

Decipi quam fallere est tutius. It is safer to be deceived than to deceive.

Decreta conciliorum non ligant reges nostros. The decrees of councils do not bind our kings.

Deficiente uno sanguine, non potest esse haeres. For lack of one blood, he cannot be heir. Coke explains, “The blood of the father and of the mother are but one inheritable blood, and both are necessary to procreation of an heir.” 3 Coke 41.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quaestio, sed de scientia sive sit error juris sive facti. The good faith and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his knowledge may be impugned if there is an error either of law or of fact.

De jure decimarum, originem ducens de jure patronatus, tunc cognitio spectat at legem civilem, i.e., communem. With regard to the right of tithes, deducing its origin from the right of the patron, then the cognizance of them belongs to the civil law, i.e., common law.
De jure judices, de facto juratores, respondent. The judges answer regarding the law, the jury on the facts.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. A deegated authority cannot be delegated.

Delegatus non potest delegare. A delegate (or deputy) cannot appoint another.

Delicatus debitor est odiosus in lege. A luxurious debtor is hateful in the law.

Delinquens per iram provocatus puniri de-bet mitius. A wrongdoer provoked by anger ought to be punished less severely. 3 Co. Inst.
55.

De majori et minori non variant jura. Concerning greater and lesser, rights do not vary (or justice does vary).

De minimis non curat lex. The law does not notice or concern itself with trifling matters.

De molendino de novo erecto non jacet prohibitio. A prohibition does not lie against a newly erected mill.

De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa.
When the death of a human being is concerned, no delay is long.

Denominatio fieri debet a dignioribus. Denomination should be made from the more worthy.

De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantia non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles. As to the proper name, it is not to be regarded when there is no error in substance; because names are changeable, but things are immutable.

De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio. The rule is the same respecting things that do not appear and things that do not exist.

De nullo quod est sua natura indivisible et divisionem non patitur nullam partem habebit vidua, sed satisfaciat ei ad valentiam. A widow shall have no part from that which in its own nature is indivisible and is not susceptible of division; but let (the heir) satisfy her with an equivalent.

De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum. For no tenement that is held for a term is there the oath of homage, but there is the oath of fealty.

Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitiva. Power that is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived.

Derogatur legi cum pars detrahitur; abro-gatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. There is derogation from a law when part of it is taken away; there is abrogation of a law when it is abolished entirely.

Designatio justiciariorum est a rege; juris-dictio vero ordinaria a lege. The appointment of justices is by the king, but their ordinary jurisdiction is by the law.

Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum facit cessare tacitum. The designation of one is the exclusion of the other; and what is expressed prevails over what is implied.

De similibus ad similia eadem ratione proceendum est. From like things to like things we are to proceed by the same rule. • That is, we are allowed to argue from the analogy of cases.

De similibus idem est judicium. Concerning like things the judgment is the same.

Deus solus haeredem facere potest, non homo. God alone, and not man, can make an heir.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Sunday is not a judicial day.

Dies inceptus pro completo habetur. A day begun is held as complete.

Dies incertus pro conditione habetur. An uncertain day is considered as a condition.

Dilaciones in lege sunt odiosae. Delays in law are odious.

Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum. Discretion is to discern through law what is just.

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum.
Discretion consists in knowing what is just in law.
Disparata non debent jungi. Dissimilar things ought not to be joined.

Dispensatio est mali prohibit provida relaxatio, utile et statua necessitate pensata; et est de jure domino regi concessa, propter impossibilitatem praevidendi de omnibus particularibus. A dispensation is the provident relaxation of a malum prohibitum weighed from utility or necessity; and it is conceded by law to the king on account of the impossibility of foreknowledge concerning all particulars.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, because it wounds a common right.

Disseisinam satis facit qui uti non permittit possessorcum, vel minus commodum, licet omnino non expellat. A person commits disseisin if he does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes the possessor’s enjoyment less useful, even if the disseisor does not expel the possessor altogether. Co. Litt. 331.

Dissimilium dissimilis est ratio. Of dissimilar the rule is dissimilar.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria. Injury is wiped out by reconciliation.

Distingueda sunt tempora; aliud est facere, aliud perficere. Times must be distinguished; it is one thing to do a thing, another to complete it.

Distingueda sunt tempora; distingue tempora, et concordabis leges. Times are to be distinguished; distinguish times, and you will harmonize laws.

Divinatio, non interpretatio, est quae omnino recedit a litera. It is a guess, not interpretation, that altogether departs from the letter.

Divortium dicitur a divertendo, quia vir divertitur ab uxore. Divorce is so called from divertendo, because a man is diverted from his wife.

Dolo facit qui petit quod redditurus est. A person acts with deceit who seeks what he will have to return.

Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum. An agreement induced by fraud will not preserve itself (will not stand).

Dolosus versatur in generalibus. A deceiver deals in generalities.

Dolum ex indicis perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear proofs.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor does not prejudice the successor.

Dolus circitu non purgatur. Fraud is not purged by circuity.

Dolus est machinatio, cum aliud dissimulat aliud agit. Deceit is an artifice, since it pretends one thing and does another.

Dolus et fraus nemini patrocinentur (patrocinari debent). Deceit and fraud should excuse or benefit no one (they themselves require some excuse).

Dolus latet in generalibus. Fraud lurks in generalities.

Dolus versatur in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities.

Dominium non potest esse in pendent. The right of property cannot be in abeyance.

Dominus capitalis loco haeredis habetur, quoties per defectum vel delictum extinguitur sanguis sui tenentis. The supreme lord takes the place of the heir, as often as the blood of the tenant is extinct through deficiency or crime.

Dominus non maritatibus pupilli in semel. A lord cannot give a ward in marriage but once.

Dominus rex nullum habere potest parem, multo minus superiorem. The king cannot have an equal, much less a superior.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. Everyone’s house is his safest refuge.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum sit. Everyone’s house should be his safest refuge and shelter.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious.
Legal Maxims

Donari videtur quod nullo jure cogente conceditur. That is considered to be given which is granted when no law compels.

Donatio non praesumitur. A gift is not presumed.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta; ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditio nondum fuerit subsequuta. Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect; for example, if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed.

Donatio perficitur possessione accipientis. A gift is rendered complete by the possession of the receiver.

Donatio principis intelligitur sine prejudicilicio tertii. A gift of the prince is understood without prejudice to a third party.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere antequam donatarius incipiat possidere. A donor never ceases to have possession until the donee obtains possession.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur. Laws sometimes sleep but never die.

Dos de dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be sought from dower.

Dos rationabilis vel legitima est cujuslibet mulieris de quocunque tenemento tertia pars omnium terrarum et tenementorum, quae vir suus tenuit in dominio suo ut de feudo, etc. Reasonable or legitimate dower belongs to every woman of a third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in his demesne, as of fee, etc.

Doti lex favet; praemium pudoris est, ideo parcuratur. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity; therefore let it be preserved.

Do ut des. I give that you may give.

Do ut facias. I give that you may do.

Droit ne done plus que soit demaunde. The law gives no more than is demanded.

Droit ne poet pas morier. Right cannot die.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non licet. It is not lawful to have two wives at one time.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Two cannot possess one thing each in entirety.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessor esse non potest. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot belong to two persons.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confringendas aut impungandas, ratio et auctoritas. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning everything; reason and authority.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur. The law does not allow a duplication of possibility.

Eadem causa diversis rationibus coram judicibus ecclesiasticis et secularibus ventilatur. The same cause is argued upon different principles before ecclesiastical and secular judges.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex. (If) the reason is the same, the law is the same.

Eadem mens praesumitur regis quae est juris et quae esse debet, praesertim in dubiis. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be the same as that of the law, and the same as what it ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters.

Ea est accipienda interpretatio quae vitio caret. That interpretation is to be received that is free from fault.

Ea quae commendandi causa in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam apparent venditorem non obligant. Those things that, by way of commendation, are stated at sales, if they are openly apparent, do not bind the seller.

Ea quae dari impossibilitia sunt, vel quae in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur. Those things that cannot be given, or that are not in the nature of things, are considered as not added (as no part of the agreement).

Ea quae in curia nostra rite acta sunt debitae executione demandari debent. Those things that are properly transacted in our court ought to be committed to a due execution.

Ea quae raro accidunt non temere in agendis negotiis computantur. Those things that rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business, without sufficient reason.

Ecclesia ecclesiae decima solvere non debet.
A church should not pay tithes to a church.

Ecclesia est domus mansionalis omnipotentis dei. The church is the mansionhouse of the omnipotent God.

Ecclesia est infra aetatem et in custodia domini regis, qui tenetur jura et haeredi-tates ejusdem manu tenere et defendere.
The church is underage and in the custody of the king, who is bound to uphold and defend its rights and inheritances.

Ecclesia fungitur vice minoris; meliorem conditionem suam facere potest, deteriorem nequaquam. The church enjoys the privilege of a minor; it can make its own condition better but not worse.

Ecclesiae magis favendum est quam personae. The church is to be more favored than the parson (or an individual).

Ecclesia non morit. The church does not die.

Effectus sequitur causam. The effect follows the cause.

Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat. The burden of the proof rests upon the person who affirms, not the one who denies.

Ei nihil turpe, cui nihil sat. Nothing is immoral to the person to whom nothing is enough.

Eisdem modis dissolvitur obligatio quae nascitur ex contractu, vel quasi, quibus contrahtitur. An obligation that arises from a contract or quasi contract is dissolved in the same ways in which it is contracted.

Ejus est interpretari cuius est condere. It is that person’s to interpret whose it is to enact.

Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle. A person who can will (exercise volition) has a right to refuse to will (withhold consent).

Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle. A person may consent tacitly who can consent expressly.

Ejus est periculum cuius est dominium aut commodum. He who has the dominion or advantage has the risk.

Ejus nulla culpa est cui parere necesse sit.
No guilt attaches to a person who is compelled to obey.

Electa una via, non datur recursus ad al-teram. When one way has been chosen, no recourse is given to another.

Electio intera libera et spontanea separatio unius rei ab alia, sine compulsione, consistens in animo et voluntate. Election is an internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will.

Electiones fiant rite et libere sine interrup-tione aliqua. Let elections be made in due form and freely, without any interruption.

Electio semel facta, et placuit testatum, non patitur regressum. An election once made, and a plea witnessed (or intent shown), allows no going back.

Emptor emit quam minimo potest; venditor vendit quam maxim potest. The buyer buys as little as possible; the vendor sells for as much as possible.

En exchange il covient que les estates soient egales. In an exchange it is desirable that the estates be equal.

Enitia pars semper praeferenda est propter privilegium aetatis. The part of the elder sister is always to be preferred on account of the privilege of age.

Enumeratio infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius.
Specification of one thing is an exclusion of the other.

Eodem ligamine quo ligatum est dissolvitur.
An obligation is dissolved by the same bond by which it is contracted.
Eodem modo quo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur. It is discharged in the same way as it is created.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, dissolvitur. In the same way as anything is constituted, it is dissolved (or destroyed). 6 Coke 53.

Equitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law.

Errores ad sua principia referre est refellere. To refer errors to their origin is to refute them.

Errores scribentis nocere non debent. The mistakes of the scribe (or copyist) ought to do no harm.

Error fucatus nuda veritate in multis est probabilior; et saepenumbero rationibus vincit veritatem error. Error artfully colored is in many instances more probable than naked truth; and frequently error conquers truth by argumentation.

Error juris nocet. An error of law injures.

Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat. Mistake in the name never injures if the identity of the thing is certain.

Error qui non resistitur approbatur. An error that is not resisted is approved.

Error scribentis nocere non debet. The error of a scribe (or copyist) ought not to injure.

Erubescit lex filios castigare parentes. The law blushes when children correct their parents.

Est aliquid quod non oportet etiam si licet; quicquid vero non licet certe non oportet. There is that which is not proper, even though permitted; but whatever is not permitted is certainly not proper.

Est autem vis legem simulans. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Est boni judicis ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the role of a good judge to extend the jurisdiction.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox. The voice of the legislators themselves is like a living voice. • That is, the provisions of a statute are to be understood and interpreted as practical rules for real circumstances. Coke adds, Rebus et non verbis legem imponimus. 10 Coke 101.

Estoveria sunt ardendi, arandi, construendi et claudiendi. Estovers (tenants' rights to material at hand) are for burning, plowing, building, and fencing.

Est quiddam perfectius in rebus licitis. There is something more perfect in things that are permitted.

Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est aequum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim nocumentum nota esse oportet et expedite. It is not just and proper that one who speaks ill of a bad person should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the wrongdoings of bad people should be known.

Eventus varios res nova semper habet. A novel matter always produces various results.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from what precedes and what follows.

Exception ejus rei cuius petitur dissoluto nulla est. There is no exception based on the very matter for which a solution is being sought.

Exception falsi est omnium ultima. The exception for falsehood is last of all.

Exception firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis. An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted.

Exception firmat regulam in contrarium. An exception affirms an opposite rule.
Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quae exceptionem perimit. There is no exception against an action that extinguishes the exception.

Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. An exception proves a rule concerning things not excepted.

Exceptio quae firmat legem exponit legem. An exception that confirms the law expounds the law.

Exceptio quoque regulam declarat. The exception also declares the rule.

Exceptio semper ultima ponenda est. An exception is always to be put last.

Excessus in jure reprobatur. Excess in law is condemned.

Excessus in re qualibet jure reprobatur communi. Excess in anything at all is condemned by common law.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. That excuses or extenuates a wrong in capital causes which does not have the same effect in civil suits.

Ex diuturnitate temporis omnia praesumuntur solenniter esse acta. From length of time, all things are presumed to have been done in due form.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. An action does not arise from a fraud.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium. Execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment.

Executio est finis et fructus legis. Execution of the law is its end and fruition.

Executio legis non habet injuriam. Execution of the law cannot work an injury.

Ex facto jus oritur. The law arises out of the fact.

Ex frequenti delicto augetur poena. Punishment increases with repeated offense. 2 Co. Inst. 479.

Ex maleficio non oritur contractus. A contract does not arise out of an illegal act.

Ex malis moribus bonae leges natae sunt. Good laws are born from evil morals.

Ex multitudine signorum colligitur identitas vera. From a great number of signs true identity is ascertained.

Ex nihilo nihil fit. From nothing nothing comes.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. No action arises on a contract without a consideration.

Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. From an illicit contract no action arises.

Expedit rei publicae ne sua re quis male utatur. It is to the advantage of the state that a person should not make bad use of his own property.

Expedit rei publicae ut sit finis litium. It is to the advantage of the state that there should be a limit to litigation.

Experientia per varios actus legem facit. Experience through various acts makes law.

Expositio quae ex visceribus causae nascitur, est aptissima et fortissima in lege. An exposition that springs from the vitals of a cause is the fittest and most powerful in law.

Expressa nocent, non expressa non nocent. Things expressed do harm; things not expressed do not.

Expressa non prosunt quae non expressa proderunt. There is no benefit in expressing what will benefit when unexpressed.

Expressio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur. The expression of those things that are tacitly implied is of no consequence.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. ● Also termed Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius or enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius.

Expressum facit cessare tacitum. Something expressed nullifies what is unexpressed.
Ex procedentibus et consequentibus optima fit interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from things proceeding and following (i.e., the context).

Ex territum juss dicenti impune non paretur. One who gives a judgment outside his jurisdiction is disobeyed with impunity. • There is no punishment for disobeying. Dig. 2.1.20.

Extra legem positus est civiliter mortuus. An outlaw is dead as a citizen.

Extra territum juss dicenti non paretur impune. One who gives a judgment outside his jurisdiction is not obeyed with impunity. • Anyone who executes such a judgment may be punished. 10 Coke 77.

Extremis probatis praesumuntur media. Extremes having been proved, intermediate things are presumed.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. No action arises out of a wrongful consideration.

Factum cuique suum, non adversario, nocere debet. Anyone’s act should injure himself, not his adversary.

Factum infectum fieri nequit. What is done cannot be undone.

Factum negantis nulla probatio. No proof is incumbent on a person who denies a fact.

Factum non dicitur quod non perseverat. That is not said to be done which does not last.

Factum unius alteri nocere non debet. The deed of one should not hurt the other.

Facultas probationum non est angustanda. The capability of offering proofs is not to be narrowed.

Falsae demonstrationes legatum non perimt. A legacy is not destroyed by an incorrect description.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpore (persona) constat. False description does not injure or vitiates, provided the thing or person intended has once been sufficiently described. • Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpora (persona) constat. False description does not injure or vitiates, provided the thing or person intended has once been sufficiently described. • Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative.

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. False in one thing, false in everything.

Fama, fides, et oculus non patiuntur ludum. Reputation, plighted faith, and eyesight do not endure deceit.

Fama, quaes suspicione inducta, oriri debet apud bonos et graves, non guidem malevolos et maledicis, sed providas et fides dignas personas, non semel sed saepius, quia clamor minuit et defamatio manifestat. Report, which induces suspicion, ought to arise from good and grave men; not, indeed, from malevolent and malicious men, but from cautious and credible persons; not only once, but frequently, for clamor diminishes, and defamation manifests.

_Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit._ A person who flees judgment confesses guilt.

_Fatuus, apud jurisconsultos nostros, accipitur pro non compos mentis; et fatuus dicitur, qui omnino desipit._ “Fatuous,” among our jurisconsults, is applied to a man not of sound mind; one is also called “fatuous” who is altogether foolish.

_Fatuus praesumitur qui in proprio nomine errat._ A person is presumed to be incompetent who makes a mistake in his own name (that is, does not know his own name).

_Favorabilia in lege sunt fiscus, dos, vita, libertas._ The treasury, dower, life, and liberty are things favored in law.

_Favorabiliiores rei potius quam actores ha-bentur._ Defendants are rather to be favored than plaintiffs.

_Favorabiliiores sunt executiones alii process-sibus quibuscunque._ Executions are preferred to all other processes whatever.

_Favores ampliandi sunt; odia restringenda._
Favorable inclinations are to be enlarged; amimosities restrained.

_Felonia, ex vi termini, significat quodlibet capitale crimine felleo animo perpetratum._
Felony, by force of the term, signifies any capital crime perpetrated with a malicious intent.

_Felonia implicatur in quolibet prodizione._
Felony is implied in every treason.

_Feodum est quod quis tenet ex quacunque causa, sive sit tenementum sive redditus._ A fee is what anyone holds from whatever cause, whether tenement or rent.

_Feodum simplex quia feodum idem est quod haereditas, et simplex idem est quod legit-tum vel purum; et sic feodum simplex idem est quod haereditas legitima vel haereditas pura._ “Fee simple” is so called because fee is the same as inheritance and simple is the same as lawful or pure; and thus fee simple is the same as a lawful inheritance or a pure inheritance.

_Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii._
The hurrying of justice is the stepmother of misfortune.

_Fiat justitia ruat caelum._ Let justice be done, though the heaven should fall.

_Fiat prout fieri consuevit, nil temere novan-dum._ Let it be done as it is accustomed to be done; let no innovation be made rashly.

_Fictio cedit veritati; fictio juris non est ubi veritas._ Fiction yields to truth; where the truth appears, there is no fiction of law.

_Fictio est contra veritatem, sed pro veritate habetur._ Fiction is contrary to the truth, but it is regarded as truth.

_Fictio juris non est ubi veritas._ Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

_Fictio legis inique operatur alicui damnum vel injuriarum._ Fiction of law works unjustly if it works loss or injury to anyone.

_Fictio legis neminem laedit._ A fiction of law injures no one.

_Fides est obligatio conscientiae alicujus ad intentionem alterius._ A trust is an obligation of conscience of one to the will of another.

_Fides servanda est._ Faith must be observed. ● An agent must not violate the confidence reposed in him or her.

_Fides servanda est; simplicitas juris gentium praevaleat._ Faith is to be preserved; the simplicity of the law of nations should prevail.

_Fieri non debet, sed factum valet._ It ought not to be done, but if done it is valid.

_Filiatio non potest probari._ Filiation cannot be proved. ● That is, the husband is presumed to be the father of a child born during covture.

_Filius est nomen naturae, sed haeres nomen juris._ “Son” is a name of nature, but “heir” a name of law.

_Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris._ A child in the mother’s womb is part of the mother’s vitals.
Finis est amicabilis compositio et finalis concordia ex concensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum. A fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord, the king, or his justiciies.

Finis finem litibus imponit. A fine puts an end to litigation.

Finis rei attendendus est. The end of a thing is to be attended to.

Finis unius diei est principium alterius. The end of one day is the beginning of another.

Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis. The operation of law is firmer and more powerful than the will of man.

Flumina et portus publica sunt, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est. Rivers and ports are public; and therefore the right of fishing is common to all.

Foeminae ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remotae sunt. Women are excluded from all civil and public charges or offices.

Foeminae non sunt capaces de publicis officiis. Women are not qualified for public offices.

Forma dat esse. Form gives being.

Forma legalis forma essentialis. Legal form is essential form.

Forma non observata, infertur adnullatio actus. When form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred.

Forstellarium est pauperum depressor, et totius communis et patriae publicus inimicus. A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy of the whole community and the country.

Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man.

Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is stronger and more powerful than that of man.

Fractionem diei non recipit lex. The law does not regard a fraction of a day.

Frater fratri uterino non succedit in haereditate paterna. A brother shall not succeed a uterine brother in the paternal inheritance.

Fraus est celare fraudem. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud.

Fraus est odiosa et non praesumenda. Fraud is odious and not to be presumed.

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent. Fraud and deceit should excuse no one.

Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant. Fraud and justice never dwell together.

Fraus latet in generalibus. Fraud lies hidden in general expressions.

Fraus meretur fraudem. Fraud deserves fraud.

Frequentia actus multum operatur. The frequency of an act has much effect. Continual usage establishes a right.

Fructus augent haereditatem. Fruits enhance an inheritance.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur. Hanging fruits are considered part of the parcel of land.

Fructus perceptos villae non esse constat. It is agreed that gathered fruits are not a part of the farm.

Frumenta quae sata sunt solo cedere intellignunt. Grain that has been sown is understood to belong to the soil.

Frustra agit qui judicium prosequi nequit cum effectu. A person sues in vain who cannot prosecute his judgment with effect.

Frustra est potentia quae nunquam venit in actum. Power that never comes to be exercised is useless.

Frustra expectatur eventus cujus effectus nullus sequitur. An event is mainly awaited from which no effect follows.
Frustra feruntur leges nisi subditis et obedientibus. Laws are made to no purpose except for those who are subject and obedient.

Frustra fit per plura quod fieri potest per pauciora. That is done vainly through many measures if it can be accomplished through fewer.

Frustra legis auxilium quaerit qui in legem committit. Vainly does a person who offends against the law seek the help of the law.

Frustra petis quod max es restiturus. Vainly you seek what you are soon to restore.

Frustra petis quod statim alteri reddere cogeris. Vainly you seek what you will immediately be compelled to give back to another.

Frustra probatur quod probatum non relevat. It is useless to prove what if proved would not aid the matter in question.

Furiosi nulla voluntas est. An insane person has no will.

Furiosus absentis loco est. An insane person is considered as absent.

Furiosus nullum negotium contrahere (gerere) potest (quia non intelligit quod agit). An insane person cannot make a contract (because he doesn’t understand what he is doing).

Furiosus solo furore punitur. An insane person is punished by insanity alone.

Furiosus stipulari non potest nec aliquod negotium agere, qui non intelligit quid agit. An insane person who knows not what he does cannot make a bargain or transact any business.

Furor contrahi matrimonium non sinit, quia consensus opus est. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed.

Furtum est contractatio rei alienae fraudulentia, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerat. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another’s property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it had been.

Furtum non est ubi initium habet detentio per dominium rei. There is not theft where the holder has a beginning of detention (began holding the object) through ownership of the thing.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum. A general expression is to be construed generally.

Generale nihil certi implicit. A general expression implies nothing certain.

Generale tantum valet in generalibus quantum singulare in singulis. What is general has as much validity among things general as what is particular does among things particular.

Generalia praecedunt, specialia sequuntur. Things general precede; things special follow.

Generalia specialia non derogant. Things general do not restrict (or detract from) things special.

Generalia sunt praeponenda singularibus. General things are to be put before particular things.

Generalia verba sunt generaliter intelligenda. General words are to be understood in a general sense.

Generalibus specialia derogant. Things special restrict things general.

Generalis clausula non porrigitur ad ea quae ante specialiter sunt comprehensa. A general clause does not extend to those things that have been previously provided for specifically.

Generalis regula generaliter est intelligenda. A general rule is to be understood generally.

Glossa viperina est quae corrodit viscera textus. It is a poisonous gloss that gnaws away the vitals of the text.

Grammatica falsa non vitiat chartam. False grammar does not vitiate a deed.

Gravius est divinam quam temporalem laedere majestatem. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty.
Habemus optimum testem, confitentem reum. We have the best witness, a confessing defendant.

Haeredem Deus facit, non homo. God, and not man, makes the heir.

Haeredipetae suo propino quo vel extraneo, periculosos sane custodi, nullus committatur. Let no ward be entrusted to the next heir in succession, whether his own relation or a stranger, as the next heir is surely a dangerous guardian. Co. Litt. 88b.

Haereditas est successio in universum jus quod defunctus habuerat. Inheritance is the succession to every right possessed by the late possessor.

Haereditas nihil aliud est quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuerat. The right of inheritance is nothing other than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased.

Haereditas nunquam ascendit. An inheritance never ascends.

Haeredum appellatione veniunt haeredes haeredium in infinitum. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity.

Haeres est alter ipse, et filius est pars patris. An heir is another self, and a son is a part of the father.

Haeres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis. A person is an heir by either right of property or right of representation.

Haeres est eadem persona cum antecessore. The heir is the same person as the ancestor.

Haeres est nomen collectivum. "Heir" is a collective noun.

Haeres est nomen juris, filius est nomen naturae. "Heir" is a term of law; "son" is one of nature.

Haeres est pars antecessoris. An heir is a part of the ancestor.

Haeres haeredis mei est meus haeres. The heir of my heir is my heir.

Haeres legitimus est quem nuptiae demonstrant. The lawful heir is the one whom the marriage indicates (i.e., who is born in wedlock).

Haeres minor uno et viginti annis non respondet, nisi in casu dotis. An heir under 21 years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of the dower.

Hoc servabitur quod initio convenit. That shall be preserved which is useful in the beginning.

Home ne sera puny pur suer des briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A person shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether the person is right or wrong.

Hominum causa jus constitutum est. Law was established for the benefit of humankind.

Homo potest esse habilis et inabilis diversis temporibus. A person may be capable and incapable at different times.

Homo vocabulum est naturae; persona juris civilis. "Man" (homo) is a term of nature; "person" (persona), a term of civil law.

Hora non est multum de substantia negotii, licet in appello de ea aliquando fiat mentio. The hour is not of much consequence to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; caeteri proditores vel praedones sunt. Enemies are those upon whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates.

Ibi semper debet fieri triatio ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. A trial should always be held where the jurors can have the best information.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be made certain.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, sed id magis certum est quod de semetipso est certum. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself.
Idem agens et patiens esse non potest. The same person cannot be both agent and patient (i.e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done).

Idem est facere et nolle prohibere cum possis. It is the same thing to commit an act and to refuse to prohibit it when you can.

Idem est facere et non prohibere cum possis; et qui non prohibit cum prohibere possit in culpa est (aut jube!). It is the same thing to commit an act and not to prohibit it when you can; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is at fault (or does the same as ordering it to be done).

Idem nihil dicere et insufficienter dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing and not to say enough. To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner.

Idem est non esse et non apparere. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. What does not appear on the record is considered nonexistent.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus sed probatio. It is the same thing not to be proved and not to exist; the law is not deficient but the proof.

Idem est scire aut scire debe re aut potuisse. To be bound to know or to have been able to know is the same as to know.

Idem non esse et non apparere. It is the same thing not to exist and not to appear.

Idem semper antecedenti proximo refertur. Idem (the same) always refers to the nearest antecedent.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum. True identity is collected from a great number of signs.

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat. That which is perfect which is complete in all its parts.

Id possimus quod de jure possimus. We are able to do that which we can do lawfully.

Id quod est magis remotum non trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni casu. That which is more removed does not draw to itself what is more closely joined, but to the contrary in every case.

Id quod nostrum est sine facto nostro ad alium transferri non potest. What belongs to us cannot be transferred to another without our act (or deed).

Id solum nostrum quod debitis deductis nostrum est. That alone is ours which is ours after debts have been deducted.

Id tantum possimus quod de jure possimus. We can do only what we can lawfully do.

Ignorantia eorum quae quis scire tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things that anyone is bound to know does not excuse.

Ignorantia excusatur non juris sed facti. Ignorance of fact is excused but not ignorance of law.

Ignorantia facti excusat, ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of fact excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse. Every person must be considered cognizant of the law; otherwise, there is no limit to the excuse of ignorance.

Ignorantia judicis est calamitas innocentis. The ignorance of the judge is the misfortune of the innocent.

Ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of the law does not excuse.

Ignorantia juris quod quisque scire tenetur neminem excusat. Ignorance of the law, which everyone is bound to know, excuses no one.

Ignorantia juris sui non praecudicat juri. Ignorance of one's right does not prejudice the right.

Ignorantia legis neminem excusat. Ignorance of law excuses no one.

Ignorantia praesumitur ubi scientia non probatur. Ignorance is presumed where knowledge is not proved.

Ignorare legis est lata culpa. To be ignorant of the law is gross neglect of it.
Legal Maxims

Ignoratis terminis artis, ignoratur et ars. Where the terms of an art are unknown, the art is also unknown.

Ignoscitur ei qui sanguinem suum qualiter redemptum voluit. A person is forgiven who chose to purchase his own blood (or life) upon any terms whatsoever. • Whatever a person may do under the fear of losing life or limb will not be held binding upon him in law. 1 Bl. Com. 127.

Illud quod alias licitum non est, necessitas facit licitum, et necessitas inducit privilegium quod jure privatum. That which is not otherwise lawful, necessity makes lawful; and necessity brings in as a privilege what is denied by right. 10 Coke 61.

Illud quod alteri unitur extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it again be detached.

Immobilia situm sequuntur. Immovables follow (the law of) their locality.

Imperii majestas est tutelae salus. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.

Imperitia culpae annumeratur. Unskillfulness is considered a fault (as blamable conduct or neglect).

Imperitia est maxima mechanicorum poena. Unskillfulness is the greatest punishment of mechanics (i.e., from its effect in making them liable to those by whom they are employed).

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds.

Impius et crudelis judicandus est qui libertati non favet. A person is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est. There is no obligation to perform impossible things.

Impotentia excusat legem. Powerlessness excuses (or dispenses with) law. • The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses nonperformance or nonenforcement. 2 Bl. Com. 127.

Impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. Impunity provides a constant inclination to wrongdoing. 4 Coke 45.

Impunitas semper ad deteriorea invitat. Impunity invites (an offender) to ever worse offenses.

In aequali jure melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties have equal rights, the condition of the possessor is the better.

In alta proditione nullus potest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo. In high treason no one can be an accessory but only a principal.

In alternativis electio est debitoris. The debtor has the choice among alternatives.

In ambigua voce legis ea potius accipiendae est significatio quae vitio careat; praeeratim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit. In an ambiguous expression of the law, the meaning will be preferred that is free of defect, especially when the intent of the law can be gathered from it.

In ambiguis casibus semper praesumitur pro regis. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.

In ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eas profulisset. In ambiguous expressions, the opinion (or meaning) of the person who made them is chiefly to be regarded.

In ambiguo sermone non utrumque dicimus sed id duntaxat quod volumus. When the language we use is ambiguous, we do not use it in a double sense, but merely in the sense that we intend.

In Anglia non est interregnum. In England there is no interregnum. • The heir to the throne is understood to succeed from the instant of his predecessor’s death or removal.

In atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus licet non sequatur effectus. In the more atrocious crimes, the intent (or attempt) is punished even if the effect does not follow.

In casu extremee necessitatis omnia sunt communia. In a case of extreme necessity, everything is in common.
Incaute factum pro non facto habetur. An alteration done carelessly (inadvertently) will be taken as not done. Dig. 28.4.1.

Incendium aere alieno non exuit debitorem. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt.

Incerta pro nullis habentur. Things uncertain are considered as nothing.

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege prospecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice upon any single clause of it.

Incivile est, nisi tota sententia inspecta, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to give an opinion on any part of a passage without examining the whole.

In civilibus ministerium excusat, in criminibus non item. In civil matters, agency (or service) excuses, but not so in criminal matters.

In claris non est locus conjecturis. In obvious instances there is no room for conjectures.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. See Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Incoulas domicilium facit. Literally, the domicile makes the residents. • That is, the principal place of residence establishes legal residency. Often rendered conversely, Incola domicilium facit (residence creates domicile).

In commodato haec pactio, ne dolus praestetur, rata non est. In a loan for use (commodatum), a pact excluding liability for fraud is invalid. • Often extended to contracts for loans in general. Dig. 13.6.17.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum. An inconvenience does not solve (or demolish) an argument.

In conjunctivis oportet utramque partem esse veram. In conjunctive constructions, each part must be true.

In consimilis casu consimile debet esse remedium. In a similar case, the remedy should be similar.

In consuetudinibus non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. In customs, not length of time but the soundness of the reason should be considered.

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. In contracts, the interpretation or construction should be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.

In contractibus, rei veritas potius quam scriptura perspicui debet. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded rather than the writing.

In contractibus tacite insunt quae sunt moris et consuetudinis. In contracts, matters of custom and usage are tacitly implied. • A contract is understood to contain the customary clauses, although they are not expressed.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est. In the contract of sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller.

In conventionibus, contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectari placuit. In agreements, the intention of the contracting parties should be regarded more than their words.

Incorporalia bello non adquiruntur. Incorporal things are not acquired by war.

In criminalibus probationes debent esse luce clariores. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than light.

In criminalibus sufficit generalis malitia intentionis cum facto paris gradus. In criminal cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient if combined with an act of equal or corresponding degree.

In criminalibus voluntas reputabitur pro facto. In criminal matters, the intent will be reckoned as the deed. • In criminal attempts or conspiracy, the intention is considered in place of the act. 3 Inst. 106.

Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power.
Indefinitum aequipollet universali. The undefined is equivalent to the whole.

Indefinitum supplet locum universalis. The undefined supplies the place of the whole.

Independenter se habet assecuratio a viaggio navis. The route insured is distinct from the voyage of the ship.

Index animi sermo. Speech is the index of the mind.

Indictment de felony est contra pacem domini regis, coronam et dignitatem suam, in genere et non in individuo; quia in Anglia non est interregnum. Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity, in general and not in his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. In disjunctive constructions, it is sufficient if either part is true.

In dubiis benigniora praeserva sunt. In doubtful cases, the more liberal constructions are to be preferred.

In dubiis magis dignum est accipiendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be accepted.

In dubiis non praesumitur pro testamento. In doubtful cases, there is not presumption in favor of the will.

In dubio, haec legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. In a doubtful case, the construction of the law is what the words indicate.

In dubio, pars mitior est sequenda. In a doubtful case, the gentler course is to be followed.

In dubio, pro lege fori. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum (is to be favored).

In dubio, sequendum quod tutius est. In a doubtful case, the safer course is to be followed.

In eo quod plus sit semper inest et minus. The lesser is always included in the greater.

Inesse potest donationi modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, or cause; as (ut) introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum magis de bona quam de malo lex intendit. In an act (or deed) that may be considered good or bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad.

Infans non multum a furioso distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet. In things favored, what does good is more regarded than what does harm.

In favorem vitae, libertatis, et innocentiae omnia praesumuntur. All presumptions are in favor of life, liberty, and innocence.

In fictione juris semper aequitas existit. In a fiction of law there is always equity. • A legal fiction is always consistent with equity.

In fictione juris semper subsistit aequitas. In a legal fiction equity always abides (or prevails).

Infinitum in jure reprobatur. That which is endless is condemned in law.

In generalibus versatur error. Error dwells in general expressions.

In genere quicunque aliquid dicit, sive actor sive reus, necesse est ut probat. In general, whoever alleges anything, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it.

In haeredes non solent transire actiones quae poenales ex maleficio sunt. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs.

In his enim quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extentio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made.
In his quae de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alijus patriae vel loci non est alleganda. In those things that by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be adduced.

Iniquissima pax est antepowenda justissimo bello. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others to do so.

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem. It is unjust for anyone to be judge in his own cause.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is unjust for freeborn individuals not to have the free disposal of their own property.

In judicis minori aetati succurratur. In judicial proceedings, allowance is made for a minor (in age).

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. In court no one is trusted except those sworn.

In jure non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is regarded.

Injuria fit ei cui conviciunm dictum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to the person of whom an insult was said, or concerning whom an infamous song was made.

Injuria non excusat injuriam. A wrong does not excuse a wrong.

Injuria non praesumitur. A wrong is not presumed.

Injuria propria non cadet beneficiunm facientis. No benefit shall accrue to a person from his own wrongdoing.

Injuria servi dominum pertingit. The servant's wrongdoing reaches the master. The master is liable for injury done by his servant.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere. It is unjust to give judgment or opinion concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law.

In majore summa continetur minor. In the greater sum is contained the less.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur, non exitus. In criminal offenses, the intention is regarded, not the event.

In maleficio ratihabitio mandato comparatur. In delict (or tort), ratification is equivalent to authorization. Dig. 43.16.1.15.

In maxima potentia minima licentia. In the greatest power there is the least license.

In mercibus illicitis non sit commerbum. Let there be no commerce in illicit goods.

In novo casu novum remedium apponendum est. In a novel case a new legal remedy must be applied.

In obscuris inspici solere quod verisimilium est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. In obscure cases it is usual to regard what is more probable or what is more often done.

In obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases, we follow what is least so.

In odium spoliatoris omnia praesumuntur. Everything is presumed to the prejudice of the despoiler.

In omni actione ubi duae concurrentes distriptiones, videlicet in rem et in personam, illa districton tenenda est quae magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses (or forms of distraint) concur, that is in rem and in personam, the distraint is to be chosen that is more dreaded and that binds more firmly. Bracton 372.

In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In all contracts, whether express or implied, there must be something given in exchange. 2 Bl. Com. 444.

In omnibus (fere) poenalibus judiciis, et aetati et imprudentiae succurritur. In almost all penal judgments, allowance is made for age (or youth) and lack of discretion. Dig. 50.17.108.
In omnibus obligationibus, in quibus dies non ponitur, praesenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no date is fixed (for performance), the thing is due the same day.

In omnibus quidem, maxime tamen in jure, aequitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but especially in those that concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded.

In omni re nascitur res quae ipsam rem exterminat. In everything, the thing is born that ends the thing itself.

In pari causa possessor potior haberī debet. When two parties have equal claims, the possessor should be considered the stronger.

In pari causa potior est condītio possessīnītis. When two parties have equal claims, the position of the possessor is the stronger.

In pari delicto meliōr est condītio possessīnītis. When both parties are equally at fault, the position of the possessor is the better.

In pari delicto potior est condītio defendentītis. Where both parties are equally in the wrong, the position of the defendant is the stronger.

In poenalibus causis benignius interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more liberal interpretation is to be made.

In praeparatoriiīs ad judiciuin favetūr actoriī. In things preparatory to trial, the plaintiff is favored.

In praesentia majoris potestatis, minor potestas cessat. In the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases.

In pretio emptionis et venditionis naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In setting the price for buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to get the better of each other.

In propria causa nemo judex. No one can be judge in his own cause.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus. In whatever matter one offends, in that the person is rightfully to be punished. • Coke refers to forfeiture of the office abused. Co. Litt. 233b.

In rebus manifestis errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. A person errs who adduces authorities on the law in matters self-evident; because obvious truths need not be proved.

In re communi neminem dominorum jure facere quicumqam, invitō altero, posse. In common property no one of the coproprietors can do (or make) anything against the will of the other. Dig. 10.3.28.

In re dubia benigniorem interpretationem sequi non minus justius est quam tutius. In a doubtful matter, to follow the more liberal interpretation is as much the more just as it is the safer course.

In re dubia magis iniitiatio quam affermatio intelligenda. In a doubtful matter, the negation is to be understood rather than the affirmation.

In re lupanari testes lupanares admittertur. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes will be admitted as witnesses.

In re pari potiorem causam esse probibentis constat. Where the parties have equal rights (in common property), it is an established principle that the one prohibiting has the stronger cause. Dig. 10.3.28.

In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiae. It is extremely unjust to assign anyone the privilege of judgment in his own cause.

In republica maxime conservanda sunt jura belli. The laws of war must be especially preserved in the state.

In restitutionem, non in poenam, haeres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpreta-tio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions.

Insanus est qui, abjecta ratione, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. The person is insane who, having cast aside reason, does everything with violence and rage.

In satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, it is not permitted that more be received than has been received once for all (i.e., after payment in full).

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another.

In stipulationibus cum quaeritur quid actum sit, verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. In agreements, when there is a question whether action has been taken, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them. Dig. 45.1.38.18.

In stipulationibus id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, there is regard to the time at which we reach agreement.

In suo quisque negotio hebetior est quam in alieno. Everyone is less perceptive (of flaws) in his own business than in that of another.

Intentio caeca mala. A concealed intention is an evil one.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. The intention ought to be subject to the laws, not the laws to the intention.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. My intent gives a name to my act.

Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse praejudicium facere saepe constitutum est. It has been often decided that matters transacted between other parties cannot cause prejudice (to those who were not involved).

Inter arma silent leges. Amid the arms of war the laws are silent.

Interdum venit ut exceptio quae prima facie justa videtur tamen inique noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea that seems prima facie just is nevertheless injurious and unfair.

Interest reipublicae ne maleficia remaneant impunita. It is in the interest of the state that crimes not remain unpunished.

Interest reipublicae ne sua quis male utatur. It is in the interest of the state that no one misuse his own property.

Interest reipublicae quod homines conserventur. It is in the interest of the state that people should be protected.

Interest reipublicae res judicatas non rescindit. It is in the interest of the state that judgments already given not be rescinded.

Interest reipublicae suprema hominum testamenta rata haberi. It is in the interest of the state that a person's last will should be held valid.

Interest reipublicae ut carceres sint in tuto. It is in the interest of the state that prisons should be secure.

Interest reipublicae ut pax in regno conservetur et quaeque paci adversentur provide declinentur. It is in the interest of the state to preserve peace in the kingdom and prudently to decline whatever is adverse to it.

Interest reipublicae ut quilibet re sua bene utatur. It is in the interest of the state that each person make good use of his own property.

Interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium. It is in the interest of the state that there be a limit to litigation.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus est optimum interpretandi modus. To interpret and reconcile laws so they harmonize is the best mode of construction.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Such a construction should be made that the measure may take effect rather than fail.

Interpretatio talis in ambiguis semper fienda est ut evitetur inconvenientis et absurdum. In ambiguities, a construction should always be found such that what is unsuitable and absurd may be avoided.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit praescriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not remove a prescription (or acquisition by long use) once it has been obtained.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur. In wills we examine the intention of the testator more fully.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testantium interpretantur. In wills the intentions of the testators are more fully (or liberally) construed.
Intestatus decedit qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit aut non jure fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo haeres exstitit. A person dies intestate who either has made no will at all or has not made it legally, or when the will that he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or when there is no living heir.

In toto et pars continetur. In the whole the part also is included.

In traditionibus scriptorum (chartarum) non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum (factum) est, inspicitur. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said but what is done is to be considered.

Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis. Useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur. A person who discovers a libel and does not destroy it is punished.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accessit. Let the surety be held for the true amount unless he agreed for a certain amount.

In verbis non verba sed res et ratio quaeren-da est. In wording, it is not the words but the substance and the meaning that is to be sought.

Invito beneficium non datur. No benefit is given to one unwilling. • No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig.
50.17.69.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur. In discourse it is not the point from which but the end to which it is drawn that should be regarded.

Ipsae leges cupiunt ut jure regantur. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right.

Ira furor brevis est. Anger is a short insanity.

Ita lex scripta est. So the law is written.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio.
Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulantid hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. A way is a right of going or walking for a human being, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Judex aequitatem semper spectare debet. A judge ought always to regard equity.

Judex ante oculos aequitatem semper habere debet. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat nec propositione domesticae voluntatis, sed justa leges et jura pronunciet. A good judge should do nothing from his own preference or from the prompting of his private desire; but he should pronounce according to law and justice.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur.
The judge is condemned when the guilty party is acquitted.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata. The judge ought to give judgment according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex est lex loquens. The judge is the speaking law.

Judex habere debet duos sales, salem sapientiae, ne sit insipidus, et salem con-scientiae, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts: the salt of wisdom, lest he be foolish; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish.

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause.

Judex non potest injuriam sibi datum pu-nire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself.

Judex non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff himself demands.

Judicandum est legibus non exemplis. Judgment must be given by the laws, not by exam-pies.
Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiae suae. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their judgments.

Judicia in curia regis non adnihilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attincatam adnullentur. Let judgments in the king's court not be invalidated but remain in force until annulled by error or attain. 2 Inst. 360.

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora. The later decisions are stronger in law.

Judicia sunt tanguam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipientur. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta (or sayings) of the law, and are received as truth.

Judiciis posterioribus fides est adhibenda. Trust should be put in the later decisions.

Judicii officium suum excedenti non pertur. A judge who exceeds his office (or jurisdiction) is not obeyed.

Judici satis poena est quod Deum habet ultorem. It is punishment enough for a judge that he has God to take vengeance upon him.

Judicis est in pronuntiando sequi regulam, exceptione non probata. It is the proper role of a judge in rendering his decision to follow the rule, when the exception has not been proved.

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. It is the proper role of a judge to decide according to the allegations and proofs.

Judicis est jus dicere, non dare. It is the the proper role of a judge to state the right, not to endow it. Generally interpreted, it is the duty of the judge to administer justice and not to make law.

Judicis officium est opus diei in die suo perficere. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day.

Judicis officium est ut res ita tempora rerum quaerere; quaesito tempore tutus eris. It is the duty of a judge to inquire into the timing of events as much as the matters themselves; by inquiring into the time, you will be safe.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by a person who is not its proper judge (not in the proper jurisdiction) is of no consequence. 10 Coke 76.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. Judgment is, as it were, a pronouncement of the right (or a saying of the law).

Judicium non debet esse illusorium, suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory (or deceptive); it ought to have its proper effect. 2 Co. Inst. 341.

Judicium redditur in invitum, in praesumptione legis. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against one's will.

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. A judgment is always taken for truth.

Juncta juvant. Things joined together are helpful.

Jura ecclesiastica limitata sunt infra limites separatos. Ecclesiastical laws are limited within separate bounds.

Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituantur. Laws are abrogated or repealed by the same means by which they are made.

Juramentum est indivisible, et non est admittendum in parte verum et in parte falsum. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be accepted as partly true and partly false.

Jura naturae sunt immutabilia. The laws of nature are unchangeable.

Jura publica anteferenda privatis. Public rights are to be preferred to private.

Jura publica ex privato promiscue decidi non debent. Public rights ought not to be determined in confusion, from private considerations. In Coke's example, the validity of a sheriff's warrant is not affected by a dispute among the parties. Co. Litt. 181b.

Jurare est Deum in testem vocare, et est actus divini cultus. To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion.
Jura regis specialia non conceduntur per generalia verba. The special rights of the king are not granted by general words.

Jura sanguinis nullo jure civili dirimi possunt. The rights of blood (or kinship) cannot be destroyed by any civil law.

Juratores debent esse vicini, sufficientes et minus suspecti. Jurors ought to be neighbors, of sufficient means and free from suspicion (literally, less suspected).

Juratores sunt judices facti. The jurors are the judges of fact.

Juratus creditur in judicio. In judgment a person who has sworn an oath is believed.

Jure naturae aequum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem. By the law of nature, it is just that no one should be enriched to the detriment and injury of another.

Juri non est consonum quod aliquis accessorius in curia regis convicatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit attinctus. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king’s court before anyone has been attained of the fact (i.e., under sentence of attainer for committing the act). The accessory should not be convicted before the principal is proved guilty. 2 Co. Inst. 183.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicsendi. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice.

Juris effectus in executione consistit. The effect of law (or of a right) consists in the execution.

Juris ignorantia est cum jus nostrum ignoramus. It is ignorance of law when we do not know our own right.

Juris praepetcta sunt haec, honeste vivere, alterum non laedere, suum cuique tribuere. These are the precepts of the law: to live honorably, not to injure another, to render to each person his due.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanae rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scientia. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of the just and the unjust. Just. Inst. 1.1.1.

Jurisprudentia legis communis Angliae est scientia socialis et copiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a social science comprehensive in scope.

Juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti verum ignorantiam non nocere. Ignorance of law is prejudicial to everyone, but ignorance of fact is not.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. For the good of commerce, the right of survivorship has no place among merchants.

Jus accrescendi praefertur oneribus. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances.

Jus accrescendi praefertur ultimae voluntati. The right of survivorship is preferred to a last will.

Jus civilis est quod sibi populus constituit. The civil law is what a people has established for itself.

Jus descendit, et non terra. A right descends, and not the land.

Jus dicere (et) non jus dare. To state the right (and) not to endow it. Generally interpreted, to declare the law (and) not to make it.

Jus est ars boni et aequi. Law is the science of what is good and just.

Jus est norma recti et quicquid est contra normam recti est injuria. The law is the rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury.

Jus et fraus nunquam cohabit. Right and fraud never abide together.

Jus ex injuria non oritur. A right does not arise from a wrong.

Jus in re inhaerit ossibus usufructuarii. A right in the thing cleaves to the person (literally, the bones) of the usufructuary.
Legal Maxims

Jusjurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. The form of taking an oath differs in language, but agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that God is invoked.

Jusjurandum inter alios factum nec nocere nec prodesse debet. An oath made between third parties ought neither to hurt nor to profit.

Jus naturale est quod apud homines eandem habet potentiam. Natural right is that which has the same force among (all) mankind.

Jus non habenti tute non paretur. It is safe not to obey a person who has no right.

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest. A public right cannot be changed by agreements of private parties.

Jus quo universitates utuntur est idem quo habent privati. The right that corporations exercise is the same as the right that individuals possess.

Jus respicit aequitatem. Law regards equity.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori. An additional or enhanced right for the possessor accrues to the successor.

Justitia est constans et perpetua voluntas jus suum cuique tribuendi. Justice is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every person his due.

Justitia est virtus excellens et Altissimo complacens. Justice is an excellent virtue and pleasing to the Most High.

Justitia firmatur solium. By justice the throne is strengthened.

Justitia nemini neganda est. Justice is to be denied to no one.

Justitia non est neganda, non differenda. Justice is not to be denied or delayed.

Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem, solum veritatem spectat justitiae. Justice knows neither father nor mother; justice looks to truth alone.

Justum non est aliquem antenatum mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habetur. It is not just to make a bastard after his death an elder child who all his life has been accounted legitimate.

Jus vendit quod usus approbavit. The law dispenses what use has approved.

La conscience est la plus changeante des règles. Conscience is the most changing of rules.

La ley favours la vie d'un home. The law favors a man's life.

La ley favours l'inheritance d'un home. The law favors a man's inheritance.

La ley voit plus tost suffer un mischiefe que un inconvenience. The law will sooner suffer a mischief than an inconvenience.

Lata culpa dolo aequiparatur. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Le contrat fait la loi. The contract makes the law.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditio sola. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone.

Legatus regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur, et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills.

Legem enim contractus dat. The contract gives the law.

Legem terrae amittentes perpetuam infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt. Those who lose the law of the land thereby justly incur an eternal stigma of infamy.

Leges Angliae sunt tripartitae: jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.
Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima. The practice of adding and annulling laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Coke pref.

Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. Laws that humans have made are born, live, and die.

Leges naturae perfectissimae sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it that can stand forever.

Leges non verbis sed rebus sunt impositae. Laws are imposed on affairs, not words.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones.

Leges suum ligent latorem. Laws should bind their own author.

Leges vigilantibus, non dormientibus subveniunt. The laws aid those who keep watch, not those who sleep (that is, the vigilant, not the negligent).

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege naturae utendum est. Where man-made laws fail, the law of nature must be used.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam. The construction of law does not do wrong.

Legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The interpretation of law obtains the force of law.

Legislatorum est viva vox, rebus et non verbis legem imponere. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on (actual) affairs and not on (mere) words.

Legis minister non tenetur, in executione officii sui, fugere aut retrocedere. The minister of the law is not bound, in the execution of his office, either to flee or to retreat.

Legitime imperanti parere necesse est. One who commands lawfully must be obeyed.

Legitimus haeres et filius est quem nuptiae demonstrant. A lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage declares to be lawful.

Le ley de Dieu et ley de terre sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favor le commun et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both promote and favor the common and public good of the land.

Le ley est le plus haut inheritance que le roy ad, car par le ley, il mesme et tous ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul inheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Le salut du peuple est la supreme loi. The safety of the people is the highest law.

Les fictions naissent de la loi, et non la loi des fictions. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

Les lois ne se chargent de punir que les actions exterieures. Laws undertake to punish only outward actions.

Lex aequitate gaudet. Law delights in equity.

Lex aequitate gaudet; appetit perfectum; est norma recti. The law delights in equity; it covets perfection; it is a rule of right.

Lex aliquando sequitur aequitatem. The law sometimes follows equity.

Lex Angliae est lex misericordiae. The law of England is a law of mercy.

Lex Angliae non patitur absurdum. The law of England does not allow an absurdity.

Lex Angliae nunquam matris sed semper patris conditionem imitari partum judicat. The law of England rules that the offspring always follows the condition of the father, never that of the mother.

Lex Angliae nunquam sine parliamento mutari potest. The law of England can never be changed without (act of) parliament.
Lex beneficia est rei consimilis remedium praestat. A beneficial law affords a remedy in a similar case.

Lex citius tolerare vult privatum damnum quam publicum malum. The law would sooner endure a private loss than a public evil.

Lex contra id quod praesumit probationem non recipit. The law accepts no proof against that which it presumes.

Lex deficere non potest in justitia exhibenda. The law cannot fail in dispensing justice.

Lex de futuro, judex de praeterito. The law (provides) for the future, the judge for the past.

Lex dilationes semper exhorret. The law always abhors delays.

Lex est ab aeterno. The law is from eternity.

Lex est dictamen rationis. Law is the dictate of reason.

Lex est norma recti. Law is a rule of right.

Lex est ratio summa, quae jubet quae sunt utilia et necessaria, et contraria prohibet. Law is the highest form of reason, which commands what is useful and necessary and forbids the contrary.

Lex est sanctio sancta, jubens honesta et prohibens contraria. Law is a sacred sanction, commanding what is right and prohibiting the contrary.

Lex est tutissima cassis; sub clypeo legis nemo decipitur. Law is the safest helmet; under the shield of the law no one is deceived.

Lex favet doti. The law favors dower.

Lex fingit ubi subsistit aequitas. Law creates a fiction where equity abides.

Lex intendit vicinum vicini facta scire. The law presumes that one neighbor knows the actions of another.

Lex judicat de rebus necessario faciendis quasi re ipsa factis. The law judges of things that must necessarily be done as if actually done.

Lex necessitatis est lex temporis, i.e., instantis. The law of necessity is the law of time, i.e., time present.

Lex neminem cogit ad vana seu inutilia peragenda. The law forces no one to do vain or useless things.

Lex neminem cogit ostendere quod nescire praesumitur. The law forces no one to make known what he is presumed not to know.

Lex nemini facit injuriam. The law does wrong to no one.

Lex nemini operatur iniquum, nemini facit injuriam. The law works an injustice to no one and does wrong to no one.

Lex nil facit frustra, nil jubet frustra. The law does nothing in vain and commands nothing in vain.

Lex non a rege est violanda. The law is not to be violated by the king.

Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. The law does not compel to impossible ends.

Lex non curat de minimis. The law is not concerned with matters of least consequence.

Lex non deficit in justitia exhibenda. The law does not fail in showing justice.

Lex non exacte definit, sed arbitrio boni viri permittit. The law does not define exactly, but trusts in the judgment of a good man.

Lex non favet votis delicatorum. The law does not favor the wishes of the fastidious.

Lex non intendit aliquid impossibile. The law does not intend anything impossible.

Lex non patitur fractiones et divisiones statuum. The law does not tolerate fractions and divisions of estates. 1 Coke 87a.

Lex non praecipit inutilia, quia inutilis labor stultus. The law does not command useless things, because useless labor is foolish.

Lex non requirit verificari quod appareat curiae. The law does not require that to be proved which is apparent to the court.
Lex plus laudatur quando ratione probatur. The law is more praised when it is consonant with reason.

Lex posterior derogat priori. A later statute repeals an earlier one.

Lex prospicit, non respicit. The law looks forward, not backward.

Lex punit mendaciam. The law punishes falsehood.

Lex rejetit superflua, pugnantia, incongrua. The law rejects superfluous, contradictory, and incongruous things.

Lex repubrat moram. The law disapproves of delay.

Lex respicit aequitatem. Law regards equity.

Lex scripta si cesset, id custodiri oportet quod moribus et consuetudine inductum est; et, si qua in re hoc defecerit, tunc id quod proximum et consequens ei est; et, si id non apparet, tunc jus quo urbs Romana utitur servari oportet. If the written law fails, that which is drawn from manners and custom ought to be observed; and, if that is in any manner defective, then what is next and consistent with it; and, if that does not appear, then the law that Rome uses should be followed.

Lex semper dabit remedium. The law will always give a remedy.

Lex semper intendit quod convenit rationi. The law always intends what is agreeable to reason.

Lex spectat naturae ordinem. The law regards the order of nature.

Lex succurrat ignoranti. The law assists the ignorant.

Lex succurrat minoribus. The law assists minors.

Lex uno ore omnes alloquitur. The law speaks to all with one mouth.

Lex vigilantibus, non dormientibus, subvenit. Law aids the watchful, not the sleeping.

Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem. The return of money does not free the party presenting it (from liability).

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Liberty is the natural power of doing whatever one pleases, except what is prevented by law or force.

Libertas inaequilabilis res est. Liberty is a priceless good.

Libertas non recipit aestionem. Freedom does not admit of valuation.

Libertas omnibus rebus favorabili est. Liberty is more favored than all things.

Libertates regales ad coronam spectantes ex concessione regum a corona exterrant. Royal franchises relating to the Crown have emanated from the Crown by grant of kings.

Libertinum ingratum leges civiles in pristiam servitutem redignunt; sed leges Anglorum semel manus spendit absque liberum judicant. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a person once manumitted as ever after free.

Liberum corpus nullam recipit aestionem. The body of a free person allows no price to be set upon it. Dig. 9.3.7.

Liberum est cuique apud se explorare an expediat sibi consilium. Everyone is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to him.

Librorum appellazione continentur omnia volumina, sive in charta, sive in membra- na sint, sive in quavis alia materia. Under the name of books are contained all volumes, whether upon paper, or on parchment, or on any other material.

Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis, tamen potest fieri declaratio praecedens quae sortiatur effectum interveniente novo actu. Even if the grant of a future interest is inoperative, yet a declaration precedent may be made that may take effect, provided a new act intervenes.
Licita bene miscentur, formula nisi juris obstet. Lawful acts are well joined together, unless some form of law prevents it.

Ligeantia est quasi legis essentia; est vinculum fidei. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of the law; it is the bond of faith.

Ligeantia naturalis nullis clausitis coercetur, nullis metis refragenatur, nullis finibus premitur. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, curbed by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

Ligna et lapides sub armorum appellantione non continentur. Sticks and stones are not contained under the name of arms.

Linea recta est index sui et obliqui; lex est linea recta. A right line is an index of itself and of an oblique; law is a right line. Co. Litt. 158b.

Linea recta semper praefertur transversali. The right line is always preferred to the collateral.

Literae patentes regis non erunt vacuae. Letters patent of the king will not be void.

Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, sive in rem, sive in personam sit. The word "lis" (a lawsuit) signifies every action, whether it is in rem or in personam.

Litus est quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached.

L’obligation sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration, or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect.

Locus contractus regit actum. The place of the contract governs the act.

Locus pro solutione redivitus aut pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandus. The place for the payment of rent or money is to be strictly observed according to the condition of the lease or obligation.

Longa patientia trahitur ad consensum. Long sufferance is construed as consent.

Longa possessio est pacis jus. Long possession is a right of peace.

Longa possessio jus parit. Long possession begets a right.

Longa possessio parit jus possidendi et tollit actionem vero domino. Long possession produces the right of possession and deprives the true owner of his action.

Longum tempus et longus usus qui excedit memoriam hominum sufficit pro jure. Long time and long use beyond the memory of men suffice for right.

Loguendum ut vulgus, sentiendum ut docti. We should speak as the common people; we should think as the learned.

L’ou le ley done chose, la ceo done remedie a vener a ceo. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover.

Lubricum linguæ non facile trahendum est in poenam. A slip of the tongue ought not to be easily subject to punishment.

Lucrum facere ex pupilli tutela tutor non debet. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward.

Lunicus, qui gaudet in lucidis intervallis. A person is (still) a lunatic who enjoys lucid intervals.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. • When an agreement’s words are susceptible of both a favorable and unfavorable meaning, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned to assign all offices will be construed to apply to assignable offices.

Magister rerum usus; magistra rerum experimentia. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sunt appelés les deux grandes charters. Magna Carta and the Charter of the Forest are called the two great charters.

Magna culpa dolus est. Great fault (or gross negligence) is equivalent to fraud.
Magna negligentia culpa est; magna culpa dolus est. Great negligence is fault; great fault is fraud.

Maihemium est homicidium inchoatum. Mayhem is incipient homicide.

Maihemium est inter crimina majora minimum, et inter minora maximum. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest among small.

Maihemium est membri mutilatio, et dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliqua parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnandum. Mayhem is the mutilation of a limb, and can be said (to occur) when a person is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in a fight.

Major continet in se minus. The greater includes the less.

Maiore poena affectus quam legibus statuta est non est infamis. A criminal afflicted with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous. 4 Co. Inst. 66.

Major haereditas venit unicuique nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than comes from parents.

Majori summae minor inest. The lesser is included in the greater sum.

Major numerus in se continet minorem. The greater number contains in itself the less.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.

Majus est delictum seipsum occidere quam alium. It is a greater crime to kill one’s self than another.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam; sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed; but in the construction of instruments, bad grammar, as far as possible, is to be avoided.

Maledicta expositio quae corruptit textum. It is a cursed construction that corrupts the text.

Maleficia non debent remanere impunita, et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished, and impunity affords continual incitement to wrongdoing. 4 Coke 45.

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur. Evil deeds are distinguished by their evil purposes.

Malitia est acida, est mali animi affectus. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind.

Malitia supplet aetatem. Malice makes up for age.

Malitiis hominem est obviandum. The malicious designs of men must be thwarted. • Also found as Malum hominem est obviandum.

Malum non habet efficientem sed deficientem causam. Evil has not an efficient but a deficient cause.

Malum non praesumitur. Evil is not presumed.

Malum quo communius eo pejus. The more common the evil, the worse.

Malus usus est abolendus. An evil custom ought to be abolished.

Mandata licta strictam recipiunt interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful ones receive a wide and an expansive interpretation.

Mandatarius terminos sibi positos transfregi non potest. A mandatory cannot exceed the bounds of his authority.

Mandatum nisi gratuittum nullum est. Unless a mandate is gratuitous (without payment), it is not a mandate.

Manifesta probatione non indigent. Obvious facts are not in need of proof.

Maris et faeminae conjunctio est de jure naturae. The union of male and female is founded on the law of nature.

Matrimonia debent esse libera. Marriages ought to be free.
Matrimonium subsequens tollit peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage removes preceding fault.

Matter en ley ne serra mise en bouche del jurors. Matter of law shall not be put into the mouths of jurors.

Maturiora sunt vosta mulierum quam virorum. The wishes of women are of quicker maturity than those of men. • That is, women arrive earlier at eligibility for marriage. 6 Coke 71.

Maxime ita dicta quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur. A maxim is so called because its dignity is chiefest and its authority is the most certain, and because it is most approved by all.

Maxime paci sunt contraria vis et injuria. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong.

Maximus erroris populus magister. The people are the greatest master of error.

Meliorem conditionem suam facere potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam. A minor can improve or make his condition better, but in no way worse.

Melior est causa possidentis. The cause of the possessor is preferable.

Melior est conditio defendentis. The condition of the defendant is the better.

Melior est conditio possidentis et rei quam actoris. Better is the condition of the possessor, and that of the defendant (is better) than that of the plaintiff.

Melior est conditio possidentis, ubi neuter jus habet. Better is the condition of the possessor where neither of the two has the right.

Melior est justitia vere praeveniens quam severe puniens. Justice that truly prevents a crime is better than that which severely punishes it.

Melius est in tempore occurrere quam post causam vulneratum remedium quaerere. It is better to oppose in time than to seek a remedy after a wrong has been inflicted. • Coke introduces this maxim with the phrase ne per negligentiam damnum incurrat: “lest he incur damage through negligence.” 2 Co. Inst. 299.

Melius est jus deficiens quam jus incertum. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire. It is better to suffer every wrong than to consent to wrong.

Melius est recurrere quam male currere. It is better to run back than to run wrong (or badly). • It is better to retrace one’s steps than to proceed improperly.

Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est. In wills, the intention of the testator is to be regarded.

Mentiri est contra mentem ire. To lie is to go against the mind.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet. The term “merchandise” belongs to movable things only.

Mercis appellatione homines non contineri. Under the name of merchandise human beings are not included.

Merito beneficium legis amittit qui legem ipsam subvertere intendit. A person deservedly loses the protection of the law who attempts to overturn the law itself.

Merx est quidquid vendi potest. Merchandise is whatever can be sold.

Meum est promittere, non dimittere. It is mine to promise, not to discharge.

Minatur innocentibus qui parcit nocentibus. A person threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.

Minima poena corporalis est major qualibet pecuniaria. The smallest bodily punishment is greater than any pecuniary one.

Minime mutanda sunt quae certam habuerunt interpretationem. Things that have had a fixed interpretation are to be altered as little as possible.

Minimum est nihilo proximum. The least is next to nothing.
Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis, nec etiam convenire. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree.

Minor jurare non potest. A minor cannot take an oath.

Minor minorem custodire non debet; alios enim prae sumitur male regere qui sequum regere nescit. A minor ought not be a guardian of a minor, for he is presumed to govern others ill who does not know how to govern himself.

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori aetati, nisi in causa dotis, propter favorem. A minor is not bound to answer during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

Minor qui infra aetatem 12 annorum fuerit utlagari non potest nec extra legem poni, quia ante aetatem, non est sub legem aliquam nec in decennia. A minor who is under 12 years of age cannot be outlawed nor placed beyond the law, because before such age he is not under any law nor in a decennary.

Minor septemdecim annis non admittitur fore executorum. A person under 17 years of age is not admitted to be an executor.

Minus solvit qui tardius solvit; nam et tempore minus solvitur. A person pays too little who pays too late; for, from the delay, the payment is less.

Misera est servitus ubi jus est vagum aut incertum. It is a miserable slavery where the law is vague or uncertain.

Mitius imperanti melius paretur. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed.

Mobilia non habent situm. Movable have no fixed site or locality.

Mobilia personam sequuntur, immobilia situm. Movable things follow the person; immovable ones, their locality.

Mobilia sequuntur personam. Movable follow the person.

Modica circumstantia facti jus mutat. A small circumstance attending an act alters the right.

Modus de non decimando non valet. A prescription not to pay tithes is void.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem. Customary form and the agreement of the parties overcome the law. One of the first principles relative to the law of contract. 2 Coke 73.

Modus legem dat donationi. Custom (or form) gives law to a gift.

Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetae fit omnium rerum conveniens et justa aestimatio. Money is the just medium and measure of all exchangeable things, for by the medium of money a suitable and just estimation of all things is made.

Monetandi jus comprehenditur in regalibus quae nunquam a regio spectro abdicantur. The right of coining is included among those rights of royalty that are never relinquished by the kingly scepter.

Mora reprobatur in lege. Delay is disapproved of in law.

Mors dicitur ultimum supplicium. Death is called the extreme penalty.

Mors omnia solvit. Death dissolves all things.

Mortis momentum est ultimum vitae momentum. The moment of death is the last moment of life.

Mortuus exitus non est exitus. A dead issue is not issue. That is, a child born dead is no child.

Mos retinendus est fidelissimae vetustatis. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.

Mulcta damnun famae non irrogat. A fine does not impose a loss of reputation.

Multa conceduntur per obliquum quae non conceduntur de directo. Many things are conceded indirectly that are not allowed directly.

Multa fidem promissa levant. Many promises lessen confidence.
Multa ignoramus quae nobis non laterent si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris. We are ignorant of many things that would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors were familiar to us.

Multa in iure communi contra rationem disputandi pro communi utilitate introducta sunt. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, that are contrary to logical reasoning. Co. Litt. 70b.

Multa multo exercitacione facilius quam regulis percepies. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.

Multa non vetat lex quae tamen tacite damnavit. The law does not forbid many things that yet it has silently condemned.

Multa transeunt cum universitate quae non per se transeunt. Many things pass with the whole that would not pass separately.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit. Many men know many things; no one knows everything.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et quaestiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion: the simpler questions are, the more lucid they are.

Multiplicata transgressiones crescat poenae inflictio. The infliction of punishment should increase with the repetition of the offense. Coke continues, Ex frequenti delicto augetur poena (q.v.). 2 Co. Inst. 479.

Multitudinem decem faciunt. Ten make a multitude.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium. The multitude of those who err does not produce indulgence for error.

Multitudo imperatorum perdit curiam. A multitude of ignorant practitioners destroys a court.

Multa utilius est pausa idonea effundere, quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. It is much more useful to pour forth a few suitable things than to burden mankind with many useless things.

Natura appetit perfectum, ita et lex. Nature aspires to perfection, and so does the law.

Naturae vis maxima; natura bis maxima. The force of nature is greatest; (and, as some say,) nature is doubly greatest. 2 Co. Inst. 564.

Natura fide jussionis sit strictissimi juris et non durat vel extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de tempore ad tempus. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and does not endure or should not be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time.

Naturae est quidlibet dissovli eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be dissolved in the same way in which it is bound.

Natura non facit saltum, ita nec lex. Nature makes no leap, and neither does the law.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supervacuum. Nature makes no vacuum, and the law nothing purposeless.

Nec curia deficeret in justitia exhibenda. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice.

Necessarium est quod non potest alter se habere. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci. Necessity is the law of time and place.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod operatur idem in cicilibus. Necessity excuses or extenuates delinquency in capital cases, but does not have the same effect in civil cases.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum. Necessity makes lawful what otherwise is unlawful.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata. Necessity creates a privilege with regard to private rights.

Necessitas non habet legem. Necessity has no law.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata. Public necessity is greater than private necessity.
Necessitas quod cogit defendit. Necessity defends what it compels.

Necessitas sub lege non continetur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum. Necessity is not restrained by law; since what otherwise is not lawful necessity makes lawful.

Necessitas vincit legem. Necessity overcomes the law.

Necessitas vincit legem; legum vincula irrident. Necessity overcomes the law; it laughs at the fetters of laws.

Nec tempus nec locus curririt regi. Neither time nor place thwarts the king.

Nec veniam effuso sanguine casus habet. Where blood has been spilled, the case is unpardonable.

Nec veniam, laeso numine, casus habet. Where the Divinity has been insulted, the case is unpardonable.

Negatio conclusionis est error in lege. The denial of a conclusion is error in law.

Negatio destructit negationem, et ambae faciunt affirmationem. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative.

Negatio duplex est affirmatio. A double negative is an affirmative.

Negligentia semper habet infortunium comitem. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion.

Neminem laedit qui jure suo utitur. A person who exercises his own rights injures no one.

Neminem oportet esse sapientiorem legibus. No one ought to be wiser than the laws.

Nemo admittendus est inhabilitare seipsum. No one is allowed to incapacitate himself.

Nemo agit in seipsum. No one acts against himself.

Nemo alienae rei, sine satisdatione, defensor idoneus intelligitur. No one is considered a competent defender of another's property, without security.

Nemo alieno nomine lege agere potest. No one can sue at law in the name of another.

Nemo aliquam partem recte intelligere potest, antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit. No one can properly understand any part of a thing until he has read through the whole again and again.

Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiendo est. No one testifying to his own wrong is to be heard as a witness.

Nemo bis punitur pro eodem delicto. No one is punished twice for the same offense.

Nemo cogitationis poenam patitur. No one suffers punishment for his thoughts.

Nemo cogit tur rem suam vendere, etiam justo pretio. No one is bound to sell his property, even for a just price.

Nemo contra factum suum (proprium) venire potest. No one can contradict his own deed. 2 Co. Inst. 66.

Nemo damnum facit, nisi qui id fecit quod facere jus non habet. No one does damage except the person who did what he has no right to do.

Nemo dare potest quod non habet. No one can give that which he does not have.

Nemo dat qui non habet. No one gives who does not possess.

Nemo debet bis puniri pro uno delicto. No one ought to be punished twice for the same offense.

Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa. No one should be twice troubled for the same cause.

Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa. No one ought to be twice troubled for one and the same cause.

Nemo debet bis vexari, si constet curiae quod sit pro una et eadem causa. No one ought to be twice troubled, if it appears to the court that it is for one and the same cause of action.
Nemo debet esse judex in propria causa. No one should be judge in his own cause.

Nemo debet immiscere se rei alienae ad se nihil pertinenti. No one should interfere in another's business that does not at all concern him.

Nemo debet in communione invitus teneri. No one should be retained in a partnership against his will.

Nemo debet locupletari aliena jactura. No one ought to be enriched at another's expense.

Nemo debet locupletari ex alterius incommodo. No one ought to be enriched out of another's disadvantage.

Nemo debet rem suam sine factu aut defectu suo amittere. No one should lose his property without his own act or negligence.

Nemo de domo sua extrahi potest. No one can be dragged (taken by force) from his own house. Dig. 50.17.103.

Nemo duobus utatur officiis. No one should exercise two offices.

Nemo ejusdem tenementi simul potest esse haeres et dominus. No one can be at the same time heir and lord of the same tenement.

Nemo enim aliquam partem recte intelligere possit antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit. No one may be able rightly to understand one part before he has again and again read through the whole.

Nemo est haeres viventis. No one is an heir of someone living.

Nemo est supra leges. No one is above the laws.

Nemo ex alterius facto praegravari debet. No one ought to be burdened in consequence of another's act.

Nemo ex consilio obligatur. No one is bound for the advice he gives.

Nemo ex dolo suo proprio relevetur aut auxilium capiat. Let no one be relieved or gain advantage by his own fraud.

Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem. No one acquires a right of action from his own wrong (or deception).

Nemo ex suo delicto meliorem suam conditionem facere potest. No one can improve his condition by his own wrong.

Nemo inauditus condemnari debet, si non sit contumax. No one ought to be condemned unheard, unless he is obstinate (in refusing to appear).

Nemo in propria causa testis esse debet. No one can be a witness in his own cause.

Nemo jus sibi dicere potest. No one can give judgment for himself.

Nemo militans Deo implicitur secularibus negotiis. No one warring for God should be troubled by secular business.

Nemo nascitur artifex. No one is born an expert. • Wisdom in the law is acquired only through diligent study. Co. Litt. 97b.

Nemo patriam in qua natus est exuere, nec ligeantiae debitum ejurare possit. No one can cast off his native land or refuse the obligation of allegiance to it.

Nemo plus commodi haeredi suo relinquit quam ipse habuit. No one leaves a greater asset to his heir than he had himself.

Nemo plus juris ad alienum transferre potest quam ipse habet. No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself might have. Dig. 50.17.54.

Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patriam. No one can verify by the country against a record. • Certain matters of record cannot be contested in court. 2 Co. Inst. 380.

Nemo potest esse dominus et haeres. No one can be both owner and heir.

Nemo potest esse simul actor et judex. No one can be at the same time suitor and judge.

Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus. No one can be at the same time tenant and landlord (of the same tenement).

Nemo potest exuere patriam. No one can cast off his own country.
Nemo potest facere per alium quod per se non potest. No one can do through another what he cannot do by himself.

Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest facere per directum. No one can do indirectly what he cannot do directly.

Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam. No one can change his purpose to the injury of another.

Nemo potest nisi quod de jure potest. No one is able to do a thing, unless he can do it lawfully.

Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferre quam ipse habet. No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself (actually) has. Co. Litt. 309.

Nemo potest sibi debere. No one can owe to himself.

Nemo præsens nisi intelligat. One is not present unless he understands.

Nemo præsumitur alienam posteritatem suae praetulisse. No one is presumed to have preferred another’s posterity to his own.

Nemo præsumitur donare. No one is presumed to make a gift.

Nemo præsumitur esse immemor suae æternæ salutatis, et maxime in articulo mortis. No one is presumed to be forgetful of his eternal welfare, and especially at the point of death.

Nemo præsumitur ludere in extremis. No one is presumed to trifle at the point of death.

Nemo præsumitur malus. No one is presumed to be bad.

Nemo prohibitur plures negotiationes sive artes exercere. No one is prohibited from exercising several kinds of business or arts.

Nemo prohibitur pluribus defensionibus uti. No one is forbidden to employ several defenses.

Nemo prudens punit ut praeterita revocetur, sed ut futura praeventiatur. No one who is wise gives punishment so that past deeds may be revoked, but so that future deeds may be prevented.

Nemo punitur pro alieno delicto. No one is punished for the crime or wrong of another.

Nemo punitur sine injuria, faci, seu defal-ta. No one is punished unless for some wrong, act, or default.

Nemo qui condemnare potest absolvere non potest. No one who can condemn is unable to acquit.

Nemo sibi esse judex vel suis jus dicere debet. No one ought to be his own judge or to administer justice in cases where his relations are concerned.

Nemo sine actione expetitur, et hoc non sine breve sive libello conventionali. No one goes to trial without an action, and no one can bring an action without a writ or bill.

Nemo tenetur ad impossibile. No one is bound to an impossibility.

Nemo tenetur armare adversarium contra se. No one is bound to arm his adversary against himself.

Nemo tenetur divinare. No one is bound to foretell the future.

Nemo tenetur edere instrumenta contra se. No one is bound to produce writings against himself.

Nemo tenetur informare qui nescit sed quis-quis scire quod informat. No one who is ignorant of a thing is bound to give information of it, but everyone is bound to know what he gives information of.

Nemo tenetur jurare in suam turpitudinem. No one is bound to swear to his own criminality.

Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum. No one is bound to betray himself. In other words, no one can be compelled to incriminate himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. No one is bound to accuse himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum infortuniiis et periculis exponere. No one is bound to expose himself to misfortune and dangers.
Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere. No one is bound to betray himself.

Nemo unquam judicet in se. Let no one ever be a judge in his own cause.

Nemo unquam vir magnus fuit sine aliquo divino afflatu. No one was ever a great man without some divine inspiration.

Nemo videtur fraudur eos qui scient et consentiunt. No one is considered as deceiving those who know and consent.

Neque leges neque senatus consulta ita scribi possunt ut omnes casus qui quandoque inciderint comprehendantur; sed sufficit ea quae plurimum accidunt contineri. Neither laws nor acts of senate can be so written as to include all cases that have happened at any time; it is sufficient that those things that usually occur are encompassed. Dig. 1.3.10. pr.

Ne quid in loco publico vel itinere fiat. Let nothing be done (put or erected) in a public place or way. • The title of an interdict in the Roman law.

Nigrum nunquam excedere debet rubrum. The black should never go beyond the red. • That is, the text of a statute should never be read in a sense more comprehensive than the rubric, or title.

Nihil aliud potest rex quam quod de jure potest. The king can do nothing but what he can do legally.

Nihil consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus. Nothing is so opposite to consent as force and fear.

Nihil dat qui non habet. A person gives nothing who has nothing.

Nihil de re accrescit ei qui nihil in re quando jus accresceret habet. Nothing from a property accrues to a person who had no interest in the property when the right accrued. Co. Litt. 188.

Nihil dictum quod non dictum prius. Nothing is said that was not said before.

Nihil est enim liberale quod non idem justum. For there is nothing generous that is not at the same time just.

Nihil est magis ratione consentaneum quam eodem modo quodque dissolvere quo conflatum est. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that everything should be dissolved in the same way as it was made.

Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat. An error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the person.

Nihil habet forum ex scena. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

Nihil infra regnum subditos magis conservat in tranquillitate et concordia quam debita legum administratio. Nothing better preserves the subjects of the realm in tranquillity and concord than a due administration of the laws. 2 Co. Inst. 188.

Nihil iniquius quam aequitatem nimis intendere. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far.

Nihil in lege intolerabilius est (quam) tandem rem diverso jure censeri. Nothing in law is more intolerable than that the same case should be subject (in different courts) to different views of the law.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est. Nothing is more just than what is necessary.

Nihil nequam est praesumendum. Nothing wicked is to be presumed.

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum. Nothing is perfect while something remains to be done.

Nihil peti potest ante id tempus quo per rerum naturam persolvit possit. Nothing can be demanded before the time when, in the nature of things, it can be paid.

Nihil possumus contra veritatem. We have no power against truth.

Nihil praescribitur nisi quod possidetur. There is no prescription for what is not possessed.

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum. Nothing that is against reason is lawful.
Nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. Nothing that is improper is lawful. Co. Litt. 66a.

Nihil simul inventum est et perfectum. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali aequitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Nothing is so consonant with natural equity as that each thing should be dissolved by the same means as it was bound.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali aequitati quam voluntatem domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre ratam haberi. Nothing is more conformable to natural equity than to confirm the will of an owner who desires to transfer his property to another.

Nihil tam naturale est quam eo genere quidque dissolvere quo colligatum est. Nothing is so natural as that an obligation should be dissolved by the same principle by which it was contracted.

Nihil tam naturale est quam eo genere quidque dissolvere quo colligatum est; ideo verborum obligatio verbis tollitur; nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensus dissolvitur. Nothing is so natural as to dissolve anything in the way in which it was bound together; therefore the obligation of words is taken away by words; the obligation of mere consent is dissolved by the contrary consent.

Nihil tam proprium imperio quam legibus vivere. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live according to the law.

Nil agit exemplum litem quod lite resolvit. A precedent accomplishes nothing if it settles one dispute by raising another.

Nil facit error nominis cum de corpore vel persona constat. An error in the name is immaterial when the body or person is certain.

Nil sine prudenti fecit ratione vetustas. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason.

Nil temere novandum. Nothing should be rashly changed.

Nimia certitudo certitudinem ipsum destruit. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Too much subtlety in law is condemned.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur, et talis certitudo certitudinem confundit. Too great subtlety is disapproved of in law, and such certainty confounds certainty.

Nimium altercando veritas amittitur. By too much quarreling truth is lost.

Nobiles magis plectuntur pecunia, plebes vero in corpore. The higher classes are more punished in money, but the lower in person.

Nobiles sunt qui arma gentilitia antecessorum suorum proferre possunt. The gentry are those who are able to produce the heraldic arms of their own ancestors.

Nobiliores et benigniores praesumptiones in dubiis sunt praerendae. When in doubt, the more generous and kind presumptions are to be preferred.

Nobilitas est duplex, superior et inferior. There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.

Nomen est quasi rei notamen. A name is, as it were, the distinctive sign (or signifier) of a thing.

Nomen non sufficit si res non sit de jure aut de facto. A name does not suffice if the thing does not exist by law or by fact.

Nomina si nescis, perit cognitio rerum. If you do not know the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes.

Nomina si nescis, perit cognitio rerum; et nomina si perdas, certe distinctio rerum perditur. If you do not know the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes; and, if you lose the names, the distinction of the things is certainly lost.

Nomina sunt mutabilia, res autem immobiles. Names are mutable, but things immutable.

Nomina sunt notae rerum. Names are the marks of things.
Nomina sunt symbola rerum. Names are the symbols of things.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, quae competunt in limitationem veram. Words ought not to be accepted to import a false description when they are consistent with a true definition.

Non alio modo puniatur aliquis, quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio. A person may not be punished otherwise than according to what the sentence enjoins.

Non aliter a significatione verborum recedet oportet quam cum manifestum est aliquid sensisse testatorem. We must depart from the (ordinary) significance of words only when it is evident that the testator had a different understanding. Dig. 32.69. pr.

Non auditur perire volens. One who wishes to perish is not heard.

Non bis in idem (or imperative, ne bis in idem). Not twice for the same thing. That is, a person shall not be twice tried for the same crime. This maxim of the civil law expresses the same principle as the familiar rule against "double jeopardy."

Non concedantur citationes priusquam exprimatur super qua re fieri decet citatio. Summons should not be granted before it is expressed upon what ground a summons should be issued.

Non consentit qui errat. A person who errs does not consent.

Non dat qui non habet. A person who does not have does not give.

Non debo melioris conditionis esse quam auctor meus a quo jus in me transit. I ought not to be in better condition than the person to whose rights I succeed.

Non deberet alii nocere quod inter alios actum esset. A person ought not to be injured by what has taken place between other parties.

Non debet actori licere quod reo non permittitur. What is not permitted to the defendant ought not to be allowed to the plaintiff.

Non debet adduci excepto ejus rei cujus petitur dissoluto. An exception (or plea) should not be made upon the very matter of which a determination is sought (in the case at hand).

Non debet alii nocere quod inter alios actum est. A person ought not to be prejudiced by what has been done between others.

Non debet alteri per alterum iniqua conditioni inferri. An unfair condition ought not to be brought upon one person by the act of another.

Non debet cui plus licet quod minus est non licere. A person who is permitted to do the greater thing ought not to be forbidden to do the lesser.

Non debet dici tendere in praecidium ecclesiasticum liberatatis quod pro rege et republica necessarium videtur. What seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to tend to the prejudice of spiritual liberty.

Non decet homines dedere causa non cognita. It is unbecoming to surrender people when no cause has been shown.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi. A person is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived.

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

Non differunt quae concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things that agree in substance, even if not in the same words, do not differ.

Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evitacionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that even if the vendor has not given a special guarantee, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows.

Non erit alia lex Romae, alia Athaenis; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et semperina, et immortalis continebit. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. There is no closer (or firmer) link among men than an oath.

Non est certandum de regulis juris. There is no disputing rules of law.

Non est consonum rationi quod cognitione accessorii in curia christianitatis impeditur, ubi cognitione causae principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. There is no disputing against a person who denies first principles.

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum qui toto tempore vitae suae pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elderborn a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahantur. It is not an innovation to adapt earlier laws to later ones. Dig. 1.3.26.

Non est recedendum a communi observantia. There should be no departure from a common observance.

Non est regula quin fallat. There is no rule that may not deceive (or disappoint).

Non est reus nisi mens sit rea. A person is not guilty unless his mind is guilty.

Non est singulis concedendum quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumult.

Non exemplis sed legibus judicandum est. Not by examples but by the laws must judgment be made.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals.

Non facias malum ut inde veniat bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. The laws consist not in reading but in understanding.

Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law.

Non jus, sed seisina facit stipitem. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock (from which the inheritance must descend).

Non licet quod dispendio licet. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted.

Non nasci et natum mori paria sunt. Not to be born and to be born dead are equivalent.

Non obligat lex nisi promulgata. A law is not binding unless it has been promulgated.

Non observata forma, infertur adnullatio actus. When the form has not been observed, an annulment of the act is inferred.

Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follows.

Non omne damnum inducit injuriuam. Not every loss produces an injury (i.e., gives a right to action).

Non omne quod licet honestum est. Not everything that is permitted is honorable.

Non omnium quaer a majoribus nostris constitueta sunt ratio reddi potest. Reason cannot always be given for the institutions of our ancestors.

Non pertinet ad judicem secularem cognoscere de iis quae sunt mere spiritualia an-nexa. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things that are merely spiritual.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere. It is not incumbent on the possessor of property to prove that his possessions belong to him.

Non potest adduci exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitor dissoluto. An exception cannot be brought upon the same matter whose determination is at issue (in the action at hand).

Non potest probari quod probatum non relevat. That cannot be proved which, when proved, is irrelevant.

Non potest quis sine brevi agere. No one can sue without a writ.

Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuria et damno aliorum. The king cannot confer a favor that occasions injury and loss to others.

Non potest rex subditum renitentem onerare impositionibus. The king cannot load a subject with impositions against his consent.

Non potest videri desisse habere qui nunquam habuit. A person cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing who never had it.

Non praestat impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. A thing that has no effect in law is not an impediment.

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, inspicitur. Not what has been said but what has been done is regarded.

Non refert an quis assensum suum praefert verbis an rebus ipsis et factis. It is immaterial whether a person gives assent by words or by acts themselves and deeds.

Non refert quid ex aequipollentibus fiat. It does not matter which of two equivalents happens.

Non refert quid notum sit judici, si notum non sit in forma judici. It matters not what is known to the judge if it is not known to him judicially.

Non refert verbis an factis fit revocatio. It does not matter whether a revocation is made by words or by acts.

Non respondebit minor, nisi in causa dotis, et hoc pro favore doti. A minor shall not answer except in a case of dower, and here in favor of dower.

Non solent quae abundant vitiare scripturas. Superfluous expressions do not usually vitiate writings.

Non solum quid licet sed quid est convenientiae considerandum, quia nihil quod inconveniens est licitum. Not only what is permitted but what is proper is to be considered, because nothing improper is lawful.

Non sunt longa ubi nihil est quod demere possis. There is no proximity where there is nothing that you can omit.

Non temere credere est nervus sapientiae. Not to believe rashly is the sinew of wisdom.

Non valebit felonis generatio nec ad haereditatem paternam vel maternam; si autem ante feloniam generationem fecerit, talis generatio succedit in haereditate patris vel matris a quo non fuerit felonia perpetrata. The offspring of a felon cannot succeed either to a maternal or paternal inheritance; but if the felon had offspring before the felony, the offspring may succeed to the inheritance of the father or mother by whom no felony was committed.

Non valet confirmatio, nisi ille, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit sit in possessione. Confirmation is not valid unless the person who confirms is in possession either of the thing or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless that person to whom confirmation is made is in possession.

*Non valet donatio nisi subsequatur tradi-

Non valet exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitor dissoluto. An exception based on the very matter of which the determination is sought is not valid.
Non valet impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. An impediment that does not derive its effect from the law has no force.

Non verbis sed ipsis rebus leges imponimus. Not upon words, but upon affairs themselves do we impose laws.

Non videntur qui errant consentire. They who err are not considered as consenting.

Non videntur rem amittere quibus propria non fuit. They are not considered as losing a thing if it was not their own.

Non videtur consensum retinuisse si quis ex praescripto minantis aliquod immutavit. If a person has changed anything at the demand of a party threatening, he is not considered to have maintained his consent.

Non videtur perfecte cujusque id esse quod ex casu auferri potest. A thing is not considered completely to belong to anyone if it can be taken from him by chance (or occasion).

Non videtur quisquam id capere quod ei necesse est alii restituere. A person is not considered to acquire property in a thing that he must restore to another. Dig. 50.17.51.

Non videtur vim facere qui jure suo utitur et ordinaria actione experitur. A person is not judged to use force who exercises his own right and proceeds by ordinary action.

Noscitur a sociis. It is known from its associates.

Noscitur ex socio qui non cognoscitur ex se. A person who is not known for himself is known from his associate.

Notitia dicitur a noscendo; et notitia non debet claudicare. Notice is named from knowledge; and notice ought not to limp (that is, be imperfect).

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non praeteritis. A new enactment ought to impose form upon what is to come, not upon what is past. A new regulation should not apply retroactively but from its enactment. 2 Co. Inst. 292.

Novatio non praesumitur. A novation is not presumed.

Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat. Novelty does not as much benefit by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not make a new right, but declares the old.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum; quia judicium est juris dictum, et per judicium jus est noviter revelatum quod diu fuit velatum. A new judgment does not make a new right, but declares the old; because adjudication is the declaration of a right, and by adjudication the right is newly revealed which has long been hidden. 10 Coke 42.

Noxa caput sequitur. The injury follows the head or person. Liability to make good an injury caused by a slave attaches to the master. Dig. 2.14.7.4.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. A naked agreement (i.e., without consideration) does not create an obligation. Dig. 2.14.7.4.

Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem. Bare reason and naked agreement do not bind any debtor.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa praeter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Naked agreement (nudum pactum) is where there is no consideration besides the agreement; but when there is a consideration, an obligation is created and it gives a right of action.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio. Naked agreement (nudum pactum) is that from which no action arises.

Nul charter, nul vente, ne nul done vault perpetually, si le donor n'est seise al temps de contracts de deux droits, sc. del droit de possession et del droit de propriete. No grant, no sale, no gift, is valid forever unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seised of two rights, namely, the right of possession and the right of property.

Nulla curia quae recordum non habet potest imponere finem neque aliquem mandare carceri; quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curias de recordo. No court that Nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest. There can be no sale without a price.

Nulla impossibilitia aut inhonesta sunt praesumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilis. No impossible or dishonorable things are to be presumed; but things true, honorable, and possible.

Nulla pactione effici potest ne dolus praestetur. No agreement is sufficient to effect that there be no liability for fraud. Dig. 2.14.27.3.

Nulla virtus, nulla scientia locum suum et dignitatem conservare potest sine modestia. Without moderation, no virtue, no knowledge can preserve its place and dignity.

Nulle règle sans faute. There is no rule without fault.

Nulle terre sans seigneur. No land without a lord.

Nulli enim res sua servit jure servitutis. No one can have a servitude over his own property.

Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no person ought to have (such) power among us that we should not follow better (opinions) if anyone presents them.

Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differentem rectum vel justitiam. We shall sell to no one, deny to no one, or delay to no one, equity or justice.

Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia. No crime is greater than disobedience.

Nullum exemplum est idem omnibus. No example is the same for all purposes.

Nullum iniquum est praesumendum in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law.

Nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. No marriage, there no dower.

Nullum simile est idem. Nothing that is like another is the same. • That is, no likeness is exactly identical.

Nullum simile est idem nisi quatuor pedibus currit. Nothing similar is identical, unless it runs on all fours.

Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit. No simile runs upon four feet (on all fours). • No simile holds in every respect.

Nullum tempus aut locus occurrit regi. No time or place bars the king.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi. Lapse of time does not bar the right of the Crown. • Literally, no time runs against the king.

Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicae. No time runs against the commonwealth (or state).

Nullus alius quam rex possit episcopo demandare inquisitionem faciendum. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria. No one can gain advantage by his own wrong.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alia actio subest. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo.

Nullus dicitur accessorius post feloniam sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et confortavit. No one is called an accessory after the fact but that person who knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him.

Nullus dicitur feto principalis nisi actor aut qui praesens est, abettans aut auxilians actorem ad feloniam faciendam. No one is called a principal felon except the party actually committing the felony, or the party who was present aiding and abetting the perpetrator in its commission.

Nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur. No one is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause.

Nullus jus alienum forisfacere potest. No one can forfeit another's right.
Nullus recedat e curia cancellaria sine remedio. Let no one depart from the court of chancery without a remedy.

Nullus videtur dolo facere qui suo jure utitur. No one is to be regarded as acting by fraud who exercises his legal right.

Nul ne doit s'enrichir aux depens des autres. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

Nul prendra advantage de son tort desmesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong.

Nul sans damage avera error ou attaint. No one shall have error or attain unless there has been damage.

Nunquam crescit ex post facto praeteriti delicti aetimatio. The valuation (or assessment of damage) for a past offense is never increased by what happens subsequently. Dig. 50.17.138.1.

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. One never resorts to the extraordinary but when the ordinary fails.

Nunquam fictio sine lege. There is no fiction without law.

Nunquam nimis dicitur quod nunquam satis dicitur. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much.

Nunquam praescribitur in falso. There is never prescription in case of falsehood (or forgery).

Nunquam res humanae prospere succedunt ubi negliguntur divinae. Human affairs never prosper when divine ones are neglected.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit. Not sharing a bed but consent makes the marriage.

Obedientia est legis essentia. Obedience is the essence of the law.

Obtemporandum est consuetudini rationabiliter tanquam legi. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed like law.

Occupantis fiunt derelicta. Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant.

Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege prae- sumenda. Odious and dishonest acts are not to be presumed in law.

Odiosa non prae summuntur. Odious things are not presumed.

Officia judiciaalia non concedantur antequam vacent. Judicial offices ought not to be granted before they are vacant.

Officia magistratus non debent esse venalia. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold.

Officit conatus si effectus sequatur. The attempt becomes of consequence if the effect follows.

Officium nemini debet esse damnosum. An office ought to be injurious to no one.

Omissio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur. The omission of those things that are silently implied is of no consequence.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum. Every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer.

Omne crimen ebrietatis et incendit et detegit. Drunkenness both inflames and reveals every crime.

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. Every right has been derived from consent, established by necessity, or confirmed by custom.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, even if the less worthy is more ancient.

Omne magnum exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitate compensatur. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by its public utility.

Omne majus continet in se minus. Every greater thing contains in itself the less.
Omne majus dignum continet in se minus dignum. Every more worthy thing contains in itself the less worthy.

Omne majus minus in se completitur. Every greater thing embraces in itself the lesser.

Omne principale trahit ad se accessorium. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory.

Omne quod solo inaedificatur solo cedit. Everything that is built on the soil belongs to the soil.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora habent limitationem. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods.

Omnes licentiam habere his quae pro se indulta sunt renunciare. All have liberty to renounce these things that have been granted in their favor.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solent quae probantur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent people are accustomed to admit those things that are approved by those who are skilled in their profession.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est. Every will is consummated by death.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviorsa sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter.

Omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatum. All presumptions are against one who wrongfully dispossesses another (a despoiler).

Omnia praesumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved.

Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta. All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done.

Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regular-ly and with due formality until the contrary is proved.

Omnia quae jure contrahuntur contrario jure pereunt. All obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary.

Omnia quae sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri. All things that are the wife’s belong to her husband.

Omnia rite esse acta praesumuntur. All things are presumed to have been done in due form.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicior sequitur ex bonis et veris praemissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment follows from good and true premises and the verdicts of jurors.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. Every consent removes an error. 2 Co. Inst. 123.

Omnis definitio in jure civil or periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti posit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown.

Omnis exceptione est ipsa quoque regula. Every exception is itself also a rule.

Omnis indemnatus pro innoxio legibus habetur. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent.

Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilize prodest. Every innovation disturbs by its novelty more than it benefits by its usefulness.

Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contraritates amoveantur. Every interpretation of instruments is to be made, if it can be, so that all contradictions may be removed.

Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation explains, or extends, or restricts.

Omnis nova constitutio futuris (tempori- bus) formam imponere debit, non praeteritis. Every new statute ought to prescribe a form for the future, not the past.
Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim. Every person is a human being, but not every human being a person.

Omnis privatio praesupponit habitum. Every privation presupposes possession. "Every discontinuance is a privation ... and he cannot discontinue that estate which he never had." Co. Litt. 339a.

Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within fixed times.

Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priore aequiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect and is equivalent to a prior command.

Omnis regula suas patitur exceptiones. Every rule of law allows its own exceptions.

Omnium contributio servitutur quod pro omnibus datum est. What has been given for all should be compensated by the contribution of all.

Omnium rerum quarum usus est, potest esse abusus, virtute solo excepta. Of everything of which there is a use, there can be abuse, virtue alone excepted.

Opinio quae favet testamento est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be definite.

Oportet quod certa sit res quae venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be definite.

Optima enim est legium interpres consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. Dig. 1.3.37.

Optima est lex quae minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; optimus judex qui minimum sibi. It is the best law that leaves the least to the discretion of the judge; the best judge is he who leaves least to himself.

Optimam esse legem quae minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certitudo ejus praestat. The law is the best that leaves the least discretion to the judge; this advantage results from its certainty.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particularis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpreter of a statute is (when all the separate parts of it have been considered) the statute itself.

Optimus interpres rerum usus. Usage is the best interpreter of things.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretare ut leges legibus accordan. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make laws agree with laws.

Optimus judex qui minimum sibi. He is the best judge who (leaves) the least to his own discretion.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. When order of pleading has been preserved, the law is also preserved.

Origine propria neminem posse voluntate sua eximi manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can be stripped of his origin (or be banished from his place of origin).

Origo rei inspici debet. The origin of a thing ought to be regarded.

Pacta convenita quae neque contra leges neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts that have been entered neither illegally nor with fraud must in all respects be observed.

Pacta dant legem contractui. Agreements give law to the contract.

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. Private contracts cannot restrict (or take away from) public law.

Pacta quae contra leges constitutionesque vel contra bonos mores fiunt nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. It is a matter of unquestionable law that contracts against the laws and statutes, or against moral standards, have no force.
Pacta quae turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Contracts founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed.

Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. There is no derogation from public law by private contracts.

Pacto aliquid licitum est quod sine pacto non admittitur. By agreement (or contract) something is permitted that, without agreement, is not allowed. • Coke continues, "but not in violation of public law." Co. Litt. 166.

Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognitionis. "Parent" is a general name for every kind of relationship.

Parentum est liberos alere etiam nothos. It is the role of parents to support their children even when illegitimate.

Paria copulantur paribus. Similar things unite with similar.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. When opinions are evenly divided, the defendant is acquitted. 4 Co. Inst. 64.

Par in parem imperium non habet. An equal has no power over an equal.

Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum. When any essential part has been removed, the whole is removed (or destroyed).

Partus ex legitimo thor no certius noscit matrem quam génitorem suum. The offspring of a legitimate bed does not know his mother more certainly than his father.

Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follows the condition of the mother (literally, the womb).

Parum est latam esse sententiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that judgment has been given if it is not committed to execution.

Parum proficit seire quid fieri debet si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It does little good to know what ought to happen, if you do not know how it will take effect.

Pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant. The father is the man whom the marriage indicates. • This expresses the idea that a child born to a married woman is presumed begotten by her husband.

Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrat. The father is he whom the marriage indicates.

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be wearied with labors and expenses.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate consistere. Parental authority should consist in devotion, not dread.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima. Offenses against nature are the most serious.

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpae quam facit patrocinium defensionis adiungit. A person adds one offense to another, who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defense.

Pendente lите nihil innovetur. During litigation, let nothing be changed.

Per alluvionem id videtur adici, quod ita paulatim adicitur ut intelligere non possimus quantum quoque momento temporis adiciatur. That is considered "added by allusion" which accumulates so gradually that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41.1.7.1.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suae perfectionis vel naturae modum. That is perfect which lacks nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature.

Periculosum est res novas et inusitatias inducere. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things.

Periculum rei venditae, nondum traditae, est emptoris. The purchaser assumes the risk for a thing sold, but not yet delivered.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. Those who preserve the words of an oath but deceive the ears of those who accept it are perjurers. • Coke adds, "By ancient law of England, in all oaths equivocation is utterly condemned." 3 Co. Inst. 166.

Perpetua lex est nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quae abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law that precludes abrogation is void from the outset.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. By reasoning we come to legal reason.

Per rerum naturam factum negantis nulla probatio est. By the nature of things, a person who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Persona conjuncta aequiparatur interesse proprio. A personal connection is equivalent to one's own interest.

Persona est homo cum statu quodam consideratus. A person is a human being considered with reference to a certain status.

Personae vice fungitur municipium et decuria. Towns and boroughs act in the role of persons.

Personalia personam sequuntur. Personal things follow the person.

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Plain truths are not to be proved.

Per varios actus legem experientia facit. In the course of various acts, experience frames the law.

Pirata est hostis humani generis. A pirate is an enemy of the human race.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt. Two negative pleas do not form an issue.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus. Let the parties have full and speedy justice.

Pluralis numerus est duobus contentus. The plural number is satisfied with two.

Plures cohaeredes sunt quasi unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several coheirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right that they possess.

Plures participes sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod unum ius habent. Several coheirs (or parcellers) are as one body in that they have one right. Co. Litt. 164.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. Examples hurt more than offenses.

Plus peccat auctor quam actor. The instigator of a crime is a worse offender than the perpetrator.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis quam auriti decem. One eyewitness is better than ten ear-witnesses.

Plus vident oculi quam oculus. Several eyes see more than one.

Poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniit. Let punishment be inflicted on a few, dread upon all.

Poenae potius molliendae quam exasperandae sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated.

Poenae sunt restringendae. Punishments should be restrained.

Poena ex delicto defuncti haeres teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be bound by a penalty for the crime of the deceased.

Poena non potest, culpa perennis erit. Punishment cannot be, guilt will be, perpetual.

Poena suos tenere debet actores et non alios. Punishment should take hold of the guilty (who commit the wrong), and not others. Bracton 380b.

Poena tolle potest, culpa perennis erit. The punishment can be removed, but the guilt will be perpetual.

Politiae legibus, non leges politiis, adaptandae. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, not the laws to politics.

Ponderatur testes, non numerantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

Posito uno oppositorum negatur alterum. One of two opposite positions having been affirmed, the other is denied.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot.
Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse haeredem. Possession by the brother in fee simple makes the sister an heir.

Possessio pacifica per annos 60 facit jus. Peaceable possession for 60 years gives a right.

Posteriora derogant prioribus. Later things restrict (or detract from) earlier ones.

Posthumus pro nato habetur. A posthumous child is considered as though born (before the father's death).

Postliminium fingt eum qui captus est semper in civitate fuisse. Postliminy (restoration of rights) imagines that a person who has been captured has never left the state. • A person captured by the enemy, who later returns, is restored to all his former rights. Just. Inst. 1.12.5.

Potentia debet sequi justitiam, non antecedere. Power ought to follow, not to precede, justice.

Potentia inutilis frustra est. Useless power is in vain.

Potentia non est nisi ad bonum. Power is not conferred but for the (public) good.

Potestas stricte interpretatur. A power should be strictly interpreted.

Potestas suprema seipsum dissolvere potest, ligare non potest. Supreme power can dissolve (or release), but cannot bind, itself.

Potest quis renunciare, pro se et suis, quod pro se introductum est. A person may relinquish, for himself and his heirs, a right that was introduced for his own benefit.

Potior est conditio defendentis. Stronger is the condition of the defendant (than that of the plaintiff).

Potior est conditio possidentis. Stronger is the condition of the possessor.

Praedium servit praeedio. Land is under servitude to land. • A servitude is not a personal right, but attaches to the dominant tenement.

Praeponera consilia raro sunt prospera. Hasty counsels are seldom prosperous.

Praescriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Prescription is a title derived from usage and time, given substance by the authority of law. Co. Litt. 113.

Praescriptio et executio non pertinent ad valorem contractus, sed ad tempus et modum actionis instituendae. Prescription and execution do not affect the validity of the contract, but affect the time and manner of bringing an action.

Praesentare nihil aliud est quam praeesto dare seu offerre. To present is nothing other than to give or offer on the spot.

Praesentia corporis tollit errem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errem demonstrationis. The presence of the body cancels an error in the name; the truth of the name cancels an error in the description.

Praestat cautela quam medela. Prevention is better than cure.

Praesumatur pro justitia sententiae. Let there be a presumption of sentence's justice.

Praesumitur pro legitimatione. There is a presumption in favor of legitimacy.

Praesumptio ex eo quod plerumque fit. A presumption arises from what generally happens.

Praesumptiones sunt conjecturae ex signo verisimili ad probandum assumpta. Presumptions are conjectures based upon indications of probable truth, assumed for the purpose of establishing proof.

Praesumptio violenta plena probatio. Forceful presumption is full proof.

Praesumptio violenta valet in lege. Forceful presumption is effective in law.

Praetextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. What is illegal ought not to be admitted under pretext of legality.

Praxis judicium est interpres legum. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws.
Pretium succedit in locum rei. The price takes the place of the thing sold.

Prima pars aequitatis aequalitas. The first part of equity is equality.

Primo executienda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstruatur oratio, sita lex sine argumentis. The force of a word is to be first examined, lest by the fault of diction the sentence be destroyed or the law be without arguments.

Princeps et respublica ex justa causa possunt rem meam auferre. The king and the commonwealth can take away my property for just cause.

Princeps legibus solutus est. The emperor is not bound by statutes. Dig. 1.3.31.

Principalis debet semper excuti antequam perveniatur ad fidei jussores. The principal should always be exhausted before resorting to the sureties.

Principia probant, non probantur. Principles prove; they are not proved.

Principii obsta. Oppose beginnings. Oppose a thing in its inception in order to have any success against it.

Principiorum non est ratio. There is no reasoning of principles.

Principium est potissima pars cujusque rei. The beginning is the most powerful part of each thing.

Prior tempore, potior jure. Earlier in time, stronger in right.

Privatio praesupponeit habitum. Deprivation presupposes possession.

Privatis pactionibus non dubium est non laedi jus caeterorum. There is no doubt that the rights of others (not party to the agreement) cannot be prejudiced by private agreements.

Privatorum conventio juri publico non derogat. An agreement of private persons does not derogate from public law.

Privatum commodo publico cedit. Private yields to public advantage.

Privatum incommodum publico bono pensatur. Private disadvantage is made up for by public good.

Privilegium est beneficium personale et extinguitur cum persona. A privilege is a benefit belonging to a person, and it dies with the person.

Privilegium est quasi privata lex. A privilege is, as it were, a private law.

Privilegium non valet contra republicam. A privilege has no force against the commonwealth.

Probandi necessitas incumbit illi qui agit. The necessity of proving rests upon the one who sues (or claims some right). Just. Inst. 2.20.5.

Probationes debent esse evidentes, (id est) perspicuae et faciles intelligi. Proofs ought to be evident, (that is) clear and easily understood.

Probatis extremis, praesumitur media. When the extremes have been proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed.

Processus legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus. The process of the law is heavy hardship; the execution of the law crowns (or rewards) the work.

Prohibitur ne quis faciat in suo quoque nocere posset alieno. It is prohibited for anyone to do on his own property what may injure another’s.

Proles sequitur sortem paternam. The offspring follows the condition of the father.

Propinquor excludit propinquum; propinquus remotum; et remotus remotorem. A nearer relation excludes a near one; a near relation excludes one distant (or removed); a distant relative excludes one yet more removed. Co. Litt. 10.

Proposito indefinita aequipollet universali. An indefinite proposition is equal to a general one.

Pro possessione praesumitur de jure. From possession arises a presumption of right.
Pro possessore habetur qui dolo injuriave desit possidere. A person is considered a possessor who has ceased possession through fraud or injury.

Proprietas totius navis carinae causam sequitur. The property of the whole ship follows the condition of the keel.

Proprietates verborum observandae sunt. The proprieties (i.e., proper meanings) of words are to be observed.

Prosecutio legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus. Litigation is a heavy hardship, but execution of the law crowns (or rewards) the work.

Protectio trahit subjectionem, subjectio protectionem. Protection brings submission; submission (brings) protection.

Proviso est providere praesentia et futura, non praeterita. A proviso is to provide for things present and future, not past.

Prudenter agit qui praecepto legis obtemperat. A person acts prudently who obeys the precept of law.

Pueri sunt de sanguine parentum, sed pater et mater non sunt de sanguine puorum. Children are of the blood of their parents, but the father and mother are not of the blood of their children.

Pupillus pati posse non intelligitur. A pupil is not considered able to suffer. • That is, a pupil is not competent to permit or do what would be prejudicial to him. Dig. 50.17.110.2.

Quae ab hostibus capiuntur, statim capientium fiunt. Things taken from public enemies immediately become the property of the captors.

Quae ab initio inutilis fuit institutio, ex post facto convalescere non potest. An institution void in the beginning cannot acquire validity by a subsequent act.

Quae ab initio non valent, ex post facto convalescere non possunt. Things invalid from the beginning cannot be made valid by a subsequent act.

Quae accessionum locum obtinent, extinguntur cum principales res peremptae furint. When the principal is extinguished, those things that are accessory to it are also extinguished. Dig. 33.8.2.

Quae ad unum finem locuta sunt, non debent ad alium detorqueri. What speaks to one purpose ought not to be twisted to another.

Quae cohaerent personae a persona separari nequeunt. Things that belong to the person cannot be separated from the person.

Quae communi legi derogant stricte interpretantur. (Statutes) that derogate from the common law should be strictly construed.

Quae contra rationem juris introducta sunt, non debent trahi in consequiam. Things introduced contrary to the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents. • “We do find divers precedents ... which are utterly against law and reason and for that void.” 12 Coke 75.

Quaecunque intra rationem legis inueniuntur, intra legem ipsam esse judicantur. Whatever appears within the reason of the law is considered within the law itself.

Quae dubitationis causa tollendae inseruntur communem legem non laedunt. Whatever is inserted for the purpose of removing doubt does not hurt the common law.

Quae dubitationis tollendae causa contractibus inseruntur juss commune non laedunt. Clauses inserted in agreements to remove ambiguity do not prejudice the general law. Dig. 50.17.51.

Quae incontinenti (vel certo) fiunt inesse videntur. Things that are done immediately (or with certainty) are considered part of the same transaction. Co. Litt. 236b.

Quae in curia acta sunt rite agi praesumuntur. What is done in court is presumed to be rightly done.

Quae in partes dividi nequœunt solida a singulis praestantur. Things (such as services) that cannot be divided into parts are rendered entire by each severally.

Quae inter alios acta sunt nemini nocere debent, sed prodesse possunt. Transactions between others can benefit, but should not injure, anyone who is not party to them.
Quae in testamento ita sunt scripta ut intelligi non possint, perinde sunt ac si scripta non essent. Things that are so written in a will that they cannot be understood are as if they had not been written.

Quae legi communi derogant non sunt trahenda in exemplum. Things that derogate (or detract) from the common law are not to be drawn into precedent.

Quae legi communi derogant stricte interpretantur. Things that derogate (or detract) from the common law are construed strictly.

Quaelibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Every grant is to be construed most strongly against the grantor.

Quaelibet jurisdictio cancellos suos habet. Every jurisdiction has its boundaries.

Quaelibet poena corporalis, quamvis minima, major est qualibet poena pecuniaria. Every corporal punishment, although the very least, is greater than any pecuniary punishment.

Quae mala sunt inchoata in principio vix bono peraguntur exitu. Things bad in the commencement seldom end well.

Quae non fieri debent, facta valent. Things that ought not to be done are held valid when they have been done.

Quae non valeant singula, juncta juvant. Things that may not avail individually have effect when united.

Quae praeter consuetudinem et morem majorum fiunt, neque placent neque recta videntur. What is done contrary to the custom and usage of our ancestors neither pleases nor is considered right.

Quae propter necessitatem recepta sunt, non debent in argumentum trahi. Things that are accepted as a matter of necessity ought not to be brought into the argument. Dig. 50.17.162.

Quaeras de dubiis, legem bene discere si vis. Inquire into doubtful points if you wish to understand the law well.

Quaere de dubiis, quia per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. Inquire into doubtful points, because through reasoning we arrive at legal reason.

Quae rerum natura prohibentur nulla lege confirmata sunt. What is prohibited by the nature of things can be confirmed by no law.

Quae singula non prosunt, juncta juvant. Things that are of no advantage individually are helpful when taken together.

Quae sunt minoris culpae sunt majoris infamiae. Offenses that are of lesser guilt are of greater infamy.

Qualitas quae inesse debet, facile praesumitur. A quality that ought to be inherent is easily presumed.

Quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus, non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione justiciariorum. How long a time should be "reasonable" the law does not define; it depends on the discretion of the judges.

Quam rationabilis debet esse finis, non definitur, sed omnibus circumstantiis inspectis pendet ex justiciariorum discretione. How reasonable a fine should be is not defined, but depends on the discretion of the judges, after all the circumstances have been considered.

Quamvis aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Although in itself a thing may not be bad, yet if it serves as a bad example, it is not to be done.

Quamvis lex generaliter loquitur, restringenda tamen est, ut cessante ratione et ipsa cessat. Although a law speaks generally, it must bear some restriction, since the law ceases (or loses effect) when the reason ceases.

Quando aliquid conceditur, conceditur id sine quo illud fieri non possit. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which it cannot take effect.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When anything is commanded, everything by which it can be accomplished is also commanded.
Quando aliquid per se non sit malum, tam men si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. When anything by itself is not evil, and yet if it is an example for evil, it is not to be done.

Quando aliquid prohibetur ex directo, pro-hibetur et per obliquum. When anything is prohibited directly, it is also prohibited indirectly.

Quando aliquid prohibetur, prohibetur omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When anything is prohibited, everything by which it is arrived at is prohibited.

Quando aliquid prohibetur, pro dice videtur et id sine quo res uti non potest.
When a person grants a thing, he is supposed to grant that also without which the thing cannot be used.

Quando charta continet generalem clausu-lam, posteaque descendit ad verba specialia quae clausulae generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. When a deed contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words that are consistent with the general clause, the deed is to be construed according to the special words.

Quando de una et eadem re, duo onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientia alterius, de integro onerabitur. When two persons are liable concerning one and the same thing, if one makes default, the other must bear the whole liability.

Quando dispositio referri potest ad duas res, ita quod secundum relationem unam vitiatur et secundum alteram utilis sit, tum facienda est ratio ad illum ut valeat dispositio. When a disposition can refer to two matters, so that according to one reference it would be void and by another it would be effective, reference must be made to the latter, so that the disposition may take effect.

Quando diversi desiderantur actus ad ali-quem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. When different acts are required to the formation of any estate, the law chiefly regards the original act.

Quando duo jura concurrunt in una persona, aequum est ac si essent in diversis.
When two rights run together in one person, it is the same as if they were in separate persons.

Quando jus domini regis et subditi concur-runt, jus regis praeferri debet. When the right of the sovereign king and of the subject run together (or clash), the right of the king ought to be preferred.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, conces-dere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When the law grants anything to anyone, it is considered to grant that without which the thing itself cannot be (the sine qua non). 5 Coke 47.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, omnia incidentia tacite conceduntur. When the law gives anything to anyone, it gives tacitly all that is incident to it.

Quando lex est specialis, ratio autem gen-eralis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. When the law is special, but its reason is general, the law is to be understood generally.

Quando licit id quod majus, videtur licere id quod minus. When the greater is allowed, the lesser is considered to be allowed also.

Quando plus fit quam fieri debet, videtur etiam illud fieri quod faciendum est. When more is done than ought to be done, that at least is considered as performed that should have been performed.

Quando quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When what I do does not have effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can.

Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When the thing is of no force as I do it, let it have as much as it can have.

Quando verba et mens congruunt, non est interpretationi locus. When the words and the mind agree, there is no room for interpretation.

Quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason for it general, the statute is to be construed generally.

Quemadmodum ad quaestionem facti non respondent judices, ita ad quaestionem juris non respondent juratores. In the same manner that judges do not answer questions of fact, so jurors do not answer questions of law.

Qui accusat integrae famae sit et non criminosa. Let the one who accuses be of honest reputation and not implicated in a crime.

Qui acquirit sibi acquirit haeredibus. A person who acquires for himself acquires for his heirs.

Qui adimit medium dirimit finem. A person who takes away the means destroys the end.

Qui aliquid statuerit parte inaudita altera, aequum licet dixerit, haud aequum fecerit. One who has decided anything without hearing the other party, even though he has said what is right, has done wrong.

Qui alterius jure utitur, eodem jure uti debet. A person who uses the right of another ought to use the same right.

Qui bene distinguuit bene docet. One who distinguishes well teaches well.

Qui bene interrogaet bene docet. One who questions well teaches well.

Qui cadit a syllaba cadit a tota causa. One who fails in a syllable fails in his whole cause.

Qui concedit aliquid, concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit (sine quo concessio est irrita). A person who grants anything is considered as granting that without which the thing itself could not be (without which the grant is invalid). More precisely, Cuicunque aliquis quid concedit (q.v.). 11 Coke 52.

Qui confirmat nihil dat. A person who confirms gives nothing.

Qui contemnit praeceptum, contemnit praeceptum. A person who shows contempt for the precept shows contempt for the author (or advocate) or it.

Quicquid acquiritur servo, acquiritur domino. Whatever is acquired by the servant is acquired for the master.

Quicquid demonstratae rei additur satix demonstratae frustra est. Whatever is added to the description of a thing already sufficiently described is of no effect.

Quicquid est contra normam recti est injuria. Whatever is against the rule of right is a wrong.

Quicquid in excessu actum est, lege prohibetur. Whatever is done in excess is prohibited by law.

Quicquid judicis auctoritati subjicitur, novitati non subjicitur. Whatever is subject to the authority of a judge is not subject to innovation.

Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. Whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to it.

Quicquid recipitur, recipitur secundum modum recipientis. Whatever is received is received according to the direction of the recipient.

Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis. Whatever is paid is paid according to the direction of the payer.

Quicquid cum alio contrahit, vel est vel debet esse non ignorant conditionis ejus. A party who contracts with another either is or ought to be cognizant of that party's condition. Otherwise, he is not excusable. Dig. 50.17.19.

Qui dat finem dat media ad finem necessaria. A person who gives an end gives the necessary means to that end.

Qui destruit medium destruit finem. A person who destroys the means destroys the end.

Qui doet inheriter al pere, doit inheriter al filz. One who ought to inherit from the father ought to inherit from the son.

Quidquid enim sive dolo et culpa venditoris accidit in eo venditor securus est. For concerning anything that occurs without deceit and guilt on the part of the vendor, the vendor is secure.

Quid sit jus, et in quo consistit injuria, legis est definire. What constitutes right, and wherein lies the injury, it is the function of the law to declare.

Quid turpi ex causa promissum est non validet. A promise arising from a wrongful cause is invalid.
Quieta non movere. Not to disturb what is settled.

Qui evertit causam evertit causatum futurum. One who overthrows the cause overthrows its future effects.

Qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur, inter liberos non computentur. They who are born of an illicit union should not be counted among children.

Qui facit id quod plus est, facit id quod minus est, sed non convertitur. A person who does that which is more does that which is less, but not vice versa.

Qui facit per alium facit per se. A person who acts through another acts himself. The acts of an agent are considered the acts of the principal.

Qui habet jurisdictionem absolvendi, habet jurisdictionem ligandi. One who has jurisdiction for dissolving (an obligation) has jurisdiction to bind.

Qui haeret in litera, haeret in corte. One who clings to the letter clings to the shell (or surface).

Qui ignorat quantum solvere debet, non potest improbus videri. A person who does not know what he ought to pay cannot be regarded as dishonest. Also in reverse order: Non potest improbus videri qui ignorant quantum solvere debet. Dig. 50.17.99.

Qui in jus dominiumve alterius succedit jure ejus uti debet. One who succeeds to another’s right or property ought to use that person’s right. That is, the successor has the same rights and liabilities as attached to that property or interest in the hands of the assignor.

Qui in utero est, pro jam nato habetur quoties de ejus commodo quaeritur. A child in the womb is considered as born, whenever there is a question of benefit to the child.

Qui jure suo utitur, nemini facit injuriam. A person who exercises his proper right harms no one.

Qui jussu judicis aliquod fecerit non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. A person who has done anything by order of a judge is not considered to have acted in fraud, because it is necessary to obey.

Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se inducto. Anyone may renounce a right introduced for his own benefit.

Qui male agit odit lucem. A person who does wrong hates the light (of discovery).

Qui mandat ipse fecisse videtur. A person who commands (a thing to be done) is considered to have done it himself.

Qui melius probat, melius habet. The party who gives better proof has the better (right). Often rendered, he who proves more recovers more.

Qui nascitur sine legitimo matrimonio, matrem sequitur. A child who is born out of lawful matrimony follows the condition of the mother.

Qui non cadunt in constantem virum, vani timores sunt aestimandi. Those fears are considered vain (or frivolous) that do not affect a man of stable character.

Qui non habet, ille non dat. Who has not gives not.

Qui non habet in aere, luat in corpore, ne quis pecetur impune. Let him who has not (the wherewithal to pay) in money pay in his person (i.e., by corporal punishment), lest anyone be wronged with impunity.

Qui non propulsat injuriam quando potest infert. A person who does not repel an injury when he can brings it on.

Qui obstruit aditum destruit commodum. A person who obstructs an entrance destroys a conveniency.

Qui omne dicit nihil excludit. A person who says all excludes nothing.

Qui parcit nocentibus innocentes punit. A person who spares the guilty punishes the innocent.

Qui peccat ebrios, luat sobrios. Let him who offends while drunk be punished when sober.

Qui per alium facit per seipsum facere videtur. A person who does anything through another is considered as doing it himself.

Qui per fraudem agit frustra agit. A person who acts fraudulently acts in vain.

Qui potest et debet vetare, tacens jubet. A person who can and ought to forbid a thing (as much as) orders it, if he keeps silent.

Qui primum peccat ille facit rixam. Who first offends causes the quarrel.

Qui prior est tempore potior est jure. The person who is prior in time is stronger in right.

Qui pro me aliquid facit, mihi fecisse videtur. A person who does something in my behalf is considered to have done it to me (for me). ● “To do a service for a man is to do it to him.” 2 Co. Inst. 500.

Qui providet sibi, providet haeredibus. A person who provides for himself provides for his heirs.

Qui rationem in omnibus quaerunt rationem subvertunt. They who seek a reason for everything subvert reason.

Qui sciens solvit indebitum donandi consilio id videtur fecisse. A person who knowingly pays what is not due is considered to have done it with the intention of making a gift.

Qui semel actionem renunciaverit, amplius repetere non potest. A litigant who has once renounced his action cannot bring it any longer.

Qui semel malus, semper praesumitur esse malus in eodem genere. A person who is once bad is always presumed to be bad in the same kind of affair.

Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus. A person who feels the benefit ought also to feel the burden.

Qui sentit onus, sentire debet et commodum. A person who feels the burden ought also to feel the benefit.

Quisquis est qui velit jurisconsultus haberi, continuet studium, velit a quocunque docer. Whoever there is who wishes to be regarded as a jurisconsult (legal expert) should prolong his study and be willing to be taught by everyone.

Qui tacet consentire videtur. A party who is silent appears to consent.

Qui tacet consentire videtur ubi tractatur de ejus commodo. A party who is silent is considered as assenting, when his advantage is debated.

Qui tacet non utique fatetur, sed tamen verum est eum non negare. A person who is silent does not indeed confess, but yet it is true that he does not deny.

Qui tardius solvit minus solvit. A person who pays too late pays less (than he ought).

Qui vult decipi, decipiatur. Let one who wishes to be deceived be deceived.

Quod ab initio non valet, (in) tractu temporis non convalescet. What is ill from the outset will not be cured by passage of time.

Quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines aequales sunt. All men are equal as far as natural law is concerned.

Quod aedificatur in area legata cedit legato. Whatever is built upon land given by will passes with the gift of the land.
Quod alias bonum et justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum efficitur. What is otherwise good and just, if it is sought by force or fraud, becomes bad and unjust.

Quod alias non fuit licitum necessitas licitum facit. Necessity makes lawful what otherwise was unlawful.

Quod approbo non reprobo. What I approve I do not disapprove.

Quod a quoque poenae nomine exactum est id eidem restituerre nemo cogitur. What has been exacted from someone as a penalty no one is obliged to restore to him.

Quod attinet ad jus civile, servi pro nullis habentur, non tamen et jure naturali, quia, quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines aequali sunt. So far as the civil law is concerned, slaves are not reckoned as nonentities, but not so by natural law, for so far as regards natural law, all men are equal.

Quod constat clare, non debet verificari. What is clearly agreed need not be proved.

Quod constat curiae, opere testium non indiget. What appears true to the court needs not the help of witnesses.

Quod contra juris rationem receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. What has been admitted against the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents.

Quod contra legem fit, pro infecto habetur. What is done contrary to the law is considered as not done.

Quodcunque aliquis ob tutelam corporis sui fecerit jure id fecisse videtur. Whatever one does in defense of his person, he is considered to have done legally.

Quod datum est ecclesiae, datum est Deo. What has been given to the church has been given to God.

Quod demonstrandi causa additur rei satis demonstratae, frustra fit. What is added for the sake of demonstration to a thing sufficiently demonstrated is done to no purpose.

Quod dubitas, ne feceris. When in doubt, do not do it.

Quod enim semel aut bis existit, praeter- eunt legislatores. Legislators pass by that which happens but once or twice.

Quod est ex necessitate nunquam introduci- tur, nisi quando necessarium. What is introduced of necessity is never introduced except when necessary.

Quod est in convenientiis aut contra rationem non permissum est in lege. What is unsuitable or contrary to reason is not allowed in law.

Quod est necessarium est licitum. What is necessary is lawful.

Quod fieri debeat facile praesumitur. That which ought to be done is easily presumed.

Quod fieri non debet, factum valet. What ought not to be done, when done, is valid.

Quod inconsulto fecimus, consultius revocemus. What we have done without due consideration we should revoke with better consideration.

Quod initio non valet, tractu temporis non valet. What is void in the beginning does not become valid by passage of time.

Quod initio vitiosum est non potest tractu temporis convalescere. What is defective in origin cannot be mended by passage of time.

Quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. What in the civil law (literally, written law) is called jus, in the law of England is said to be rectum (right).

Quod in minori valet, valebit in majori; et quod in majori non valet, nec valebit in minori. What avails in the less will avail in the greater; and what does not avail in the greater will not avail in the less.

Quod in uno similium valet, valebit in alte- ro. What avails in one of two similar things will avail in the other.

Quod ipsis, qui contraxerunt, obstat, et successoribus eorum obstabit. That which bars those who have contracted will bar their successors also.
Quod jussu alterius solvitur pro eo est quasi ipsi solutum esset. That which is paid at the bidding of another has the same effect as if it had been paid to that person himself. The party who has a debt paid for him is in the same position as though the money were paid to him directly. Dig. 17.180.

Quod meum est, sine facto sive defectu meo amitti seu in alium transferri non potest. What is mine cannot be lost or transferred to another without my own act or default.

Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest. What is mine cannot be taken away without me (i.e., my consent).

Quod minus est in obligationem videtur deductum. That which is the lesser is held to be imported into the contract.

Quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium. What natural reason has established among all men is called the law of nations.

Quod necessarie intelligitur id non deest. What is necessarily understood is not lacking.

Quod necessitas cogit, defendit. What necessity compels, it justifies.

Quod non apparat non est, et non apparat judicialiter ante judicium. What appears not does not exist, and nothing appears judicially before judgment.

Quod non capit Christus, capit fiscus. What Christ (or the church) does not take, the treasury takes.

Quod non habet principium non habet finem. What has no beginning has no end.

Quod non legitur non creditur. What is not read is not believed.

Quod non valet in principali, in accessorio seu consequenti non valebit; et quod non valet in magis propinquo, non valebit in magis remoto. What is not valid in the principal will not be valid in the accessory or consequence; and what has no effect in the nearer instance will be of no effect in the more remote.

Quod nullius esse potest, id ut alicuius fieret nulla obligatio valet efficere. What can belong to no one no agreement (or obligation) can make property of anyone. Dig. 50.17.182.

Quod nullius est, est domini regis. That which belongs to nobody belongs to our lord the king.

Quod nullius est id ratione naturali occupanti conceditur. What belongs to no one, by natural reason becomes property of the first occupant. Dig. 41.1.3.

Quod nullum est, nullum producit effectum. That which is null produces no effect.

Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet supportari. What touches (or concerns) all ought to be supported by all.

Quod per me non possum, nec per alium. What I cannot do in person, I also cannot do through the agency of another.

Quod per recordum probatum non debet esse negatum. What is proved by the record ought not to be denied.

Quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto. What the people have last enacted, let that be the established law.

Quod principi placuit legis habet vigorem; utpote cum lege regia, quae de imperio ejus lata est, populus ei et in eum omne suum imperium et potestatem conferat. A decision of the emperor has the force of law; for, by the royal law that has been made concerning his authority, the people have conferred upon him all their sovereignty and power. Dig. 1.4.1.

Quod prius est verius est; et quod prius est tempore potius est jure. What is prior is truer; and what comes earlier in time is stronger in right.

Quod pro minore licitum est et pro majore licitum est. What is lawful in the lesser is also lawful in the greater.

Quod pure debitur praesenti die debitur. That which is due unconditionally is due the same day.

Quodque dissolvitur eodem modo quo ligitur. In the same manner that anything is bound, it is unbound.
Quod quis ex culpa sua damnum sentit, non intelligitur damnum sentire. The damage that any person suffers by his own fault he is not considered to suffer as damage. Dig. 50.17.203.

Quod quisquis norit, in hoc se exercet. Let every one employ himself in what he knows.

Quod quis sciens indebitum dedit hanc, ut postea repeteret, repetere non potest. What one has paid knowing that it is not owed, with the intention of reclaiming it afterwards, he cannot recover. Dig. 12.6.50.

Quod remedio destituit ipsa re valet si culpa absit. What is without a remedy is by that very fact valid if there is no fault.

Quod semel aut bis existit praetereunt legislares. Legislators pass over what happens (only) once or twice.

Quod semel meum est amplius meum esse non potest. What is once mine cannot be any more completely mine.

Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest. That which in making his election a man has once decided, he cannot afterwards disavow.

Quod solo inaedificatur solo cedit. Whatever is built on the soil goes with the soil.

Quod sub certa forma consequum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem. That which has been granted or reserved under a certain form is not to be drawn into valuation or compensation.

Quod subintelligitur non deest. What is understood is not lacking.

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. What is tacitly understood does not appear to be lacking.

Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit. The law does not require what is vain and useless.

Quod vero contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. But what has been admitted contrary to the reason of law ought not to be drawn into precedents.

Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur. As a thing is bound, so it is unbound.

Quo modo quid constituitur eodem modo dissoluatur. In whatever mode a thing is constituted, in the same manner it is dissolved.

Quorum praetextu nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantium confirmat praemissa. "Quorum praetexta" neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms what went before.

Quotiens dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum libertatem respondendum est. Whenever there is an interpretation doubtful as to liberty (or slavery), the decision must be in favor of liberty.

Quotiens idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum accipiat quae rei gerendae aptior est. Whenever the same words express two meanings, that is to be taken most strongly which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end.

Quoties in stipulationibus ambiguus oratio est, commodissimum est id accipi quod res de quo agitur in tuto sit. Whenever in stipulations the expression is ambiguous, it is most proper to give it that interpretation by which the subject matter may be in safety.

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba expressa tenderit. Whenever there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made.

Quum de lucro duorum quaeratur, melior est conditio possidentis. When there is a question of gain (to one) of two parties, the condition of the possessor is the better.

Quum in testamento ambiguae aut etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpre- tari et secundum id quod credibile est cogitationum, credendum est. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning (of the testator).

Quum principalis causa non consistit, ne ea quidem quae sequuntur locum habent. When the principal cause does not stand, neither do the accessories (or consequences) obtain.
Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur. Ratification is equal to a command.

Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis. Reason is the source and formal cause of custom.

Ratio est legis anima, mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; when the reason of the law has been changed, the law is also changed.

Ratio et auctoritas duo clarissima mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world.

Ratio in jure aequitas integra. Reason in law is perfect equity.

Ratio legis est anima legis. The reason of the law is the soul of the law.

Ratio non clauditur loco. Reason is not confined to any place.

Ratio potest allegari deficiency lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. A reason can be adduced when the law is defective, but it must be a true and legal reason, and not sicious (or apparent).

Receditur a placitis juris potius quam injuriae et delicta maneant impunita. One departs from settled rules of law, rather than let crimes and wrongs remain unpunished.

Recorda sunt vestigia vetustatis et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth.

Recurrendum est ad extraordinarium quando non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.

Reddenda singula singulis. Each must be put in each separate place. That is, the several terms or items apply distributively, or each to its proper object.

Regula est, juris quidem ignorantiam cquiv nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. The rule is that ignorance of the law is harmful (or prejudicial) to anyone, but ignorance of a fact is not. Ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct, but not ignorance of law.

Regula pro lege, si deficit lex. If the law is inadequate, the maxim serves in its place.

Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda. As a rule, a contract not to alienate my property is not binding.

Reipublicae interest voluntates defunctorum effectum sortiri. It is in the interest of the state that the wills of the dead should have their (intended) effect.

Rei turpis nullum mandatum est. There is no mandate for a thing immoral (or illegal). Hence, there is no action for failing to act upon such a mandate. Dig. 17.1.6.3.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. Coke explains, “Relatio is a fiction of law to make a nullity of a thing ab initio”; obstacles are removed for the one purpose, ut res magis valeat, that the matter have effect. 3 Coke 28.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio. Reference should always be made in such a manner that a disposition (in a will) may have effect.

Relativorum cognito uno, cognoscitur et alterum. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is also known.

Religio sequitur patrem. Religion follows the father. The father’s religion is prima facie the infant’s religion.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur. A person commanding not too strictly is better obeyed.

Remoto impedimento, emergit actio. When the impediment has been removed, the action arises.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is prevented from taking an oath.

Repellitur exceptione cedendarum actio- num. (The litigant) is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem. Money refused releases the person paying (or offering payment).

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge.
Rerum ordo confunditur, si uniuque jurisdiction non servetur. The order of things is confounded if the proper jurisdiction of each is not maintained.

Rerum progressus ostendunt multa, quae in initio praecaveri seu praedixerit non possunt. The course of events reveals many things that in the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the manager and disposser of his own matters.

Res accendunt lumina rebus. Matters will throw light upon (other) matters.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory follows its principal.

Res denominatur a principalius parte. A thing is named from its more essential (or primary) part.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficuis ipsam quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain.

Res generalem habet significationem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis naturae sive speciei, comprehendit. The word "things" has a general signification, because it comprehends corporeal as well as incorporeal objects, of whatever sort, nature, or species.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of one’s own right.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Things done between others ought not to injure an outsider (not party to them).

Res inter alios judicatae nullum aliis praecjudicium faciunt. Matters adjudged in the lawsuits of others do not prejudice those who were not parties to them.

Res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A matter adjudged makes white black; black white; the crooked straight; the straight crooked.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A matter adjudged is taken for truth.

Res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis. A thing that has no owner naturally belongs to the first taker.

Resoluto jure concedentis, resolvitur jus concessum. When the right of the grantor has been extinguished, the right granted is extinguished.

Res periiit domino suo. The destruction of the thing is a loss to its owner.

Res per pecuniam aestimatur, et non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to things.

Respiciendum est judicati nequid aut durius aut remissius constituerat quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiae gloria affectanda est. The person judging must see to it that nothing should be either more severely or more leniently construed than the cause itself demands; neither for severity nor clemency is glory to be sought after.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another’s ward.

Respondeat superior. Let the principal answer.

Responsio unius non omnino audiatur. The answer of one witness should not be heard at all.

Res propria est quae communis non est. A thing is private that is not common.

Res quae intra praesidia perductae nondum sunt quanguam ab hostibus occupatae, ideo postlimini non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things that have not yet been brought within the enemy’s camp, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed.

Res sacra non recipit aestimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation.

Res sua nemini servit. No one can have a servitude over his own property.

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden.

Res excipiendo fit actor. The defendant by a plea (or exception) becomes plaintiff.

Res laesae majestatis punitur, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish.

Re, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, junctura vestes sumere pacta solent. Compacts usually take their clothing from the thing itself, from words, from writings, from consent, from delivery, from the joining together.

Rex non debet esse sub homine sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law.

Rex non potest fallere nec falli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived.

Rex non potest peccare. The king can do no wrong.

Rex nunquam moritur. The king never dies.

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of riverbanks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself.

Roy n'est lie per ascun statute, si il ne soit expressemant nosme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem justitiam et judicium: veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et judicium in jure. An oath has in it three components—truth, justice, and judgment: truth in the party swearing, justice and judgment in the judge (administering the oath).

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, does not make perjury.

Sacrilegus omnium praedonum cupiditatem et seclerum superat. A sacrilegious person surpasses the greed and wickedness of all other robbers.

Saepe constitutum est res inter alios judicatas alis non praecidicar. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties.

Saepenumero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis ammittitur. Frequently where propriety of words is given attention, the meaning of truth is lost.

Saepe viatorem nova, non vetus, orbita falsit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, that deceives the traveler.

Salus populi (est) suprema lex. The safety of the people is the supreme law. • The phrase is sometimes put in the imperative: Salus populi suprema lex esto (let the safety of the people be the supreme law).

Salus reipublicae suprema lex. The safety of the state is the supreme law.

Salus ubi multi consiliarii. Where there are many counselors, there is safety.

Sanguinis conjunctio benevolentia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes human beings through benevolence and family affection.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise person begins from the end, and what is first in intention is last in execution.

Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio. A wise man does everything advisedly.

Sapiencia legis nummario pretio non est a estimanda. No price in money is to be put upon the wisdom of the law.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permisium, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the mark of a wise judge to suppose that he is permitted only so much as has been committed and entrusted to him.
Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivilos. It is better to seek the sources than to follow tributaries.

Scientia sciolorum est mixta ignorantia.
The knowledge of smatterers is ignorance diluted.

Scientia utrimque par pares contrahandentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and assents to it.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you make an agreement.

Scire et scire debere aequiparantur in jure.
To know a thing and to be bound to know it are regarded in law as equivalent.

Scire leges non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws is to observe not their (mere) words, but their force and power.

Scire proprie est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing in its reason and by its cause.

Scribere est agere. To write is to act.

Scriptae obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are undone by writing, and the obligation of mere consent (or naked agreement) is dissolved by a bare consent to the contrary.

Secta est pugna civilis, sicut actores armant-tur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniantur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle; just as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and, as it were, girded with swords, so (against them) the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended as though by shields.

Secta quae scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet. A suit that relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing.

Secundum naturam est commoda cujusque rei eum sequi quem sequentur incommoda.
It is according to nature that the advantages in any matter should come to the person to whom the disadvantages will attend.

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus.
Business entrusted to several people is done more reliably, and (several) eyes see more than (one) eye does.

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock.

Semel civis semper civis. Once a citizen, always a citizen.

Semel malus semper praesumitur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same kind of affair.

Semper in dubii benigniora praefereenda sunt. In dubious cases, the more favorable constructions are always to be preferred.

Semper in dubii id agendum est, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quum aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always in doubtful cases that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the safest condition, except when it has been drawn up clearly contrary to law.

Semper in obscuris quod minimum est se-quimur. In obscure cases we always follow what is least obscure.

Semper in stipulationibus et in caeteris con-tractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts, we always follow what was done (or agreed to). Dig.
50.17.34.

Semper ita fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio.
Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail.

Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit. The necessity of proving always rests upon the claimant.

Semper praesumitur pro legitimatione pue-orum, et filiation non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy of children, and filiation cannot be proved.

Semper praesumitur pro negante. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies.
Semper praesumitur pro sententia. The presumption is always in favor of a judgment (or sentence).

Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire mandare creditur. A person who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is always believed to authorize it.

Semper sexus masculinus etiam faemini num continet. The masculine gender always includes the feminine as well. Dig. 32.63.

Semper specialia generalibus insunt. Special clauses are always included in general ones.

Senatores sunt partes corporis regis. Senators are part of the body of the king.

Sensus verborum est anima legis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law.

Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in miitiori sensu. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are always to be received in their milder sense.

Sensus verborum ex causa dicendi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject matter.

Sententia a non judice lata nemini debet nociere. A judgment pronounced by one who is not a judge should harm no one.

Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never becomes a final judgment (i.e., res judicata).

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio leg-is vim obtinet. The judgment creates the right, and the interpretation of the law obtains the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur. The judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth.

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest. An interlocutory judgment may be revoked, but not a final one.

Sententia non furtur de rebus non liquidis. Judgment is not given upon matters that are not clear.

Sequid debet potentia justitiam, non praecedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it.

Sermo index animi. Speech is an index of the mind.

Servanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur. The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed.

Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. Personal services follow the person (of the lord). • Such “personal services” were those “annexed to the person of the Mesne, as homage, fealty, etc.” 2 Co. Inst. 374.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander (without a guide), and everything will be in a state of uncertainty to everyone.

Si alicujus rei societas sit et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases.

Si alicuius ex solemnibus deficiat, cum aequitas poscit subveniendum est. If anything is lacking from formal requirements, when equity requires, it will be supplied.

Si assuetis mederi possis, nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini detriorem faciat. Everyone ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor’s.

Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may be taken with effect.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. So use your own as not to injure another’s property.

Sicut natura nil facit per saltum, ita nec lex. Just as nature does nothing with a leap, so neither does the law.
Si duo in testamento pugnantia reperientur, ultimum est ratum. If two conflicting provisions are found in a will, the latter is decisive.

Sigillum est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal.

Si judicas, cognosce. If you judge, understand.

Silent leges inter arma. Laws are silent amid arms.

Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If the better are those whom love leads, the greater number are those whom fear corrects.

Similitudo legalis est casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Legal similarity is a similar reason that governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A simple recommendation does not bind.

Simplex et pura donatio duci poterit ubi nulla est adjuncta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification has been annexed.

Simplicitas est legibus amica, et nimia subtletas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is a friend to the laws, and too much subtlety in law is condemned.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest. Without possession, prescription (Roman usucapio) cannot proceed.

Singuli in solidum tenentur. Each individual is bound for the whole.

Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequentatur. If it is not clear what was done (or agreed upon), the consequence will be that we follow what is commonly done in the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50.17.34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quae ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there is no inference that leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical but in a popular and ordinary sense.

Si plures conditiones ascriptae fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est ponderum; et ad veritatem copulative requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera, si divisim, quilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtenebare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If several conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly: if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or the other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true.

Si plures sint fidejussiores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, however many they will be in number, they are individually liable for the whole.

Si quid in nomine, cognomine, praenomine, agnomine legatarii testator erravit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, praenomen, or title of the legatee, when there is certainty about the person, the legacy is nonetheless valid.

Si quid universitati debetur, singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. If anything is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes.

Si quis cum totum petisset partem petat, exceptio rei judicatae vocet. If anyone sues for a part when he should have sued for the whole, the judgment should constitute res judicata (again another suit).

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian commits fraud against his ward, he is to be removed from the guardianship.

Si quis praegnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If anyone dies leaving his wife pregnant, he is not considered as having died childless.
Si quis unum percusserit cum alium percuteret vellet, in felonia tenetur. If a person kills one when he meant to kill another, he is held guilty of felony.

Si suggestio non sit vera, literae patentes vacuae sunt. If the suggestion is not true, the letters patent are void.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum emaptor in venditore. If the property is taken from him by eviction, whether whole or in part, the purchaser has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21.2.1.

Socii mei socius meus socius non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner.

Sola ac per se senectus donationem, testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate gift, will or transaction.

Solemnitates juris sunt observandae. The solemnities of law must be observed.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil.

Solo cedit quod solo inaedificatur. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil.

Solus Deus haeredit facit. God alone makes the heir.

Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui soli- dum potest solvere. No one is understood to be in a state of solvency except the one who can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50.16.114.

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii. A partnership is also dissolved by the death of a partner.

Solvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur. It is released by the bond with which it is bound.

Spes impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity supplies a constant inclination to wrongdoing.

Spoliatius debet ante omnia restitui. A party forcibly deprived of possession ought first of all to have restitution.

Spoliatius episcopus ante omnia debet restiti- tui. A bishop despoiled of his see ought, above all, to be restored.

Spondet peritiam artis. He promises (to use) the skill of his art. That is, he engages to do the work in a skillful manner.

Sponte virum fugiens mulier et adultera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponsi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord and committing adultery should lose her dower, unless she is taken back by her husband of his own accord.

Stabit praesumptio donec probetur in contrario. A presumption will stand until proof is given to the contrary.

Stare decisis et non quieta movere. Literally, to stand by previous decisions and not to disturb settled matters. To adhere to precedents, and not to depart from established principles.

Stat pro ratione voluntas. The will stands in place of a reason.

Stat pro ratione voluntas populi. The will of the people stands in place of a reason.

Statuta pro publico commodo late interpre- tantur. Statutes made for the public advantage ought to be broadly construed.

Statuta suo clauduntur territorio, nec ultra territorium disponunt. Statutes are confined to their own territory and have no extraterritorial effect.

Statutum affirmativum non derogat com- muni legi. An affirmative statute does not take away from the common law.

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. A statute is to be understood generally when the words of the statute are special but its reason is general.

Statutum speciale statuto speciali non derogat. One special statute does not take away from another special statute.

Sublata causa tollitur effectus. Remove the cause and the effect ceases.
Sublata veneratione magistratum, respublica ruit. When respect for magistrates has been destroyed, the commonwealth perishes.

Sublato fundamento, cadit opus. When the foundation has been removed (or demolished), the structure collapses.

Sublato principali, tollitur adjunctum. When the principal has been taken away, the adjunct is also taken away.

 Succurritur minori; facilis est lapsus juvenitis. Aid is given to a minor; easy is the slip-up of youth (i.e., youth is liable to err).

Summa caritas est facere justitiam singulis et omni tempore quando necesses fuerit. The greatest charity is to do justice to each individual and at every time when it is necessary.

Summa est lex quae pro religione facit. The highest law is the one that acts on behalf of religion.

Summa ratio est quae pro religione facit. The highest reason is that which acts in favor of religion. Also found in indirect form, Summam esse rationem quae pro religione facit.

Summum jus, summa iuris. The highest right is the utmost injury. That is, law too rigidly interpreted produces the greatest injustice.

Superficies solo cedit. The surface goes with the land. That is, whatever is attached to the land forms part of it.

Superflua non nocent. Superfluities do no injury.

Suppressio veri, expressio falsi. Suppression of the truth (is equivalent to) the expression of what is false.

Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi. Suppression of the truth (is equivalent to) the suggestion of what is false.

Surplusagium non nocet. Extraneous matter does no harm. Superfluous allegations, not proper to the case, should have no effect.

Tacita quaedam habentur pro expressis. Certain things though unexpressed are considered as expressed.

Talis interpretatio semper fienda est ut evitetur absurdum, et inconveniens, et ne judicium sit illusorium. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and improper is avoided, and so that the judgment is not a mockery.

Talis non est eadem, nam nullum simile est idem. "Such" is not "the same," for nothing similar is the same thing.

Tantum bona valent, quantum vendi possunt. Things are worth as much as they can be sold for.

Tantum concessum quantum scriptum. So much is granted as is written.

Tantum habent de lege, quantum habent de justitia. (Precedents) have value in the law to the extent that they represent justice.

Tantum operatur fictio in casu ficto quantum veritas in casu vero. A legal fiction operates to the same extent and effect in the supposed case as the truth does in a real case.

Tantum praescriptum quantum possessum. There is only prescription insofar as there has been possession.

Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contempitores. For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against those who are inactive and show little respect for their own rights.

Tempus ex suapte natura seminullem effectricem habet. Time, of its own nature, has no effectual force.

Tempus mortis inspiciendum. (One must) look to the time of death.

Tenor est qui legem dat feudo. It is the tenor that gives law to the fee. That is, the tenor of the feudal grant regulates its effect and extent.

Terminus annorum certus debet esse et determinatus. A term of years ought to be certain and definite (with a fixed end).

Terminus et (ac) feodum non possunt constare simul in una eademque persona. Term and fee cannot both be vested in one and the same person at the same time.

_Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur._ Land lying unoccupied is given to the occupant.

_Terra transit cum onere._ Land passes with the incumbrances.

_Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent._ Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation.

_Testamentum est voluntatis nostrae justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit._ A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which anyone wishes done after his death. • Or, as Blackstone renders it, a testament is “the legal declaration of a man’s intentions which he wills to be performed after his death.” 2 Bl. Com. 499.

_Testamentum omne morte consummatum._ Every will is completed by death.

_Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplienda secundum veram intentionem suam._ The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

_Testibus deponentibus in pari numero, dignioribus est credendum._ When the number of witnesses giving testimony is equal on both sides, the more trustworthy are to be believed.

_Testibus, non testimoniiis, credendum est._ The witnesses must be believed, not (simply) their testimony.

_Testimonia ponderanda sunt, non numeranda._ Testimonies are to be weighed, not counted.

_Testis de visu praeponderat aliis._ An eyewitness outweighs others.

_Testis nemo in sua causa esse potest._ No one can be a witness in his own cause.

_Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem._ One eyewitness is worth more than ten earwitnesses.

_Testmoignes ne poent testifir le negative, mes l’affirmative._ Witnesses cannot testify to a negative; they must testify to an affirmative.

_Timores vani sunt aestimandi qui non cadunt in constantem virum._ Those fears must be considered vain (or frivolous) that do not affect a man of steady character.

_Titius haeres esto._ Let Titius be my heir. • Titius was the Roman counterpart of John Doe.

_Titulus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est._ Title is the just cause of possessing that which is ours.

_Tolle voluntatem et erit omnis actus indifferens._ Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent.

_Totum praefertur unicuique parti._ The whole is preferred to any single part.

_Tout ce que la loi ne defend pas est permis._ Everything that the law does not forbid is permitted.

_Toute exception non surveillée tend à prendre la place du principe._ Every exception not watched tends to assume the place of the principle.

_Tractent fabrilia fabri._ Let smiths perform the work of smiths.

_Traditio loqui facit chartam._ Delivery makes the deed (document) speak.

_Traditionibus et usucapionibus, non nudis pactis, transferuntur rerum dominia._ Rights of property are transferred by delivery and by prescription (founded on lengthy possession), not by naked agreements.

_Traditio nihil amplius transferre debet vel potest ad eum qui accipit quam est apud eum qui tradit._ Delivery neither can nor should transfer anything more to the recipient than is in possession of the one who delivers.

_Trado tibe ecclesiam._ I deliver this church (or living) to you.

_Transgressione multiplicata, crescat poenae inflictio._ When transgression is repeated, let the infliction of punishment be increased. 2 Co. Inst. 479.

_Transit in rem judicatam._ It passes into a judgment.
Transit terra cum onere. The land passes with its burdens.

Tres faciunt collegium. Three form a corporation.

Triatio ibi semper debet fieri ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. Trial ought always to be held where the jurors can have the better information.

Triennalis pacificus possessor beneficii est inde securus. The undisturbed possessor of a benefit for three years is thereafter secure (from challenge).

Turpis est pars quae non convenit cum suo toto. The part is bad that does not accord with its whole.

Tuta est custodia quae sibimet creditur. The guardianship is secure that is entrusted to itself alone.

Tutius erratur ex parte mitiori. It is safer to err on the gentler side (or on the side of leniency).

Tutius est rei incumbere quam personae. It is safer to rely upon a thing than upon a person. Real security is safer than personal security.

Tutius semper est errare in acquietando quam in puniendo, ex parte misericordiae quam ex parte justitiae. It is always safer to err in acquitting than in punishing, (and) on the side of mercy than of justice.

Tutor incertus dari non potest. An uncertain person cannot be given or appointed as tutor.

Tutor in rem suam auctor fieri non potest. A tutor cannot act for his own interest.

Tutor praesumitur intus habere, ante redditas rationes. A tutor is presumed to have funds in his own hands until his accounts have been rendered.

Tutor rem pupilli emere non potest. A tutor cannot purchase the property of his ward.

Ubi aliquid conceditur, conceditur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing itself cannot exist.

Ubi aliquid impeditur propter unum, eo remoto, tollitur impedimentum. When anything is impeded by reason of one thing, when that is removed, the impediment is removed.

Ubi cessat remedium ordinarium, ibi decurrit ad extraordinarium. When a common remedy ceases to be of service, recourse is had to an extraordinary one.

Ubi culpa est, ibi poena subesse debet. Where the fault is, there the punishment should be imposed.

Ubicunque est injuria, ibi damnum sequitur. Wherever there is a legal wrong, there damage follows.

Ubi damna dantur victus victori in expensis condemnari debet. Where damages are awarded, the party that did not succeed ought to be adjudged to pay expenses for the party that prevailed.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus. Where there is the same reason, there is the same law.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus; et de similibus idem est judicium. Where there is the same reason, there is the same law; and the same judgment should be rendered on comparable facts.

Ubi est forum, ibi ergo est jus. Where the forum (or place of jurisdiction) is, there accordingly is the law.

Ubi et dantis et accipientis turpitudo versatur, non posse repeti dicimus; quotiens autem accipientis turpitudo versatur, repeti posse. Where there is misconduct on the part of both giver and receiver, we say the thing cannot be recovered; but as often as the misconduct is on the side of the receiver (alone), it can be recovered.

Ubi factum nullum, ibi fortia nulla. Where there is no fact, there are no strong points.

Ubi jus, ibi remedy. Where there is a right, there is a remedy.

Ubi jus incertum, ibi jus nullum. Where the right is uncertain, there is no right.

Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima.
Legal Maxims

Where the law compels someone to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and legal.

Ubi lex deest, praetor supplet. Where the law is deficient, the praetor supplies the deficiency.

Ubi lex est specialis et ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda est. Where the law is special and the reason of it is general, it ought to be taken as general.

Ubi lex non distinguat, nec nos distinguere debemus. Where the law does not distinguish, we ought not to distinguish.

Ubi major pars est, ibi totum. Where the greater part is, there is the whole.

Ubi matrimonium, ibi dos. Where there is marriage, there is dower.

Ubi non adest norma legis, omnia quasi pro suspectis habenda sunt. Where there is no rule of law, everything must be held, as it were, suspect.

Ubi non est condendi auctoritas, ibi non est parendi necessitas. Where there is no authority to establish (a rule), there is no necessity to obey.

Ubi non est directa lex, standum est arbitrio judicis, vel procedendum ad similia. Where there is not direct law, one must rely on the judgment of the judge or refer to similar cases.

Ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio quoad mundum. Where there is not law, there is not transgression, as far as this world is concerned.

Ubi non est manifesta injustitia, judices habentur pro bonis viris, et judicatum pro veritate. Where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth.

Ubi non est principalis, non potest esse accessorius. Where there is no principal, there can be no accessory.

Ubi nulla est conjectura quae ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate non grammatica sed populari ex usu. Where there is no inference that would lead in another direction, the words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not strictly according to grammar but according to popular usage.

Ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. Where there is no marriage, there is no dower.

Ubi onus ibi emolumentum. Where the burden is, there is the profit or advantage.

Ubi periculum, ibi et lucrum collocatur. Where the risk is, there also the profit accrues.

Ubi pugnantiæ inter se in testamento jubeantur, neutrum ratum est. When two directions conflicting with each other were given in a will, neither is held valid.

Ubi quid generaliter conceditur, inest haec exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque. Where a thing is granted in general terms, this exception is implied: if there is not anything contrary to law and right.

Ubi quis delinquit ibi punietur. Where anyone commits an offense, there will be punished.

Ubi verba conjuncta non sunt, sufficit alterum esse factum. Where words are not conjoined, it is enough that one or another (of the things enumerated) has been done.

Ultima voluntas testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Ultimum supplicium esse mortem solam interpretamur. We consider death alone to be the extreme punishment.

Ultra posse non potest esse et vice versa. What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse (what cannot exist is not possible).

Una persona vix potest supplere vices duarum. One person can scarcely supply the place of two.

Unaquaque gleba servit. Every lump of earth (on the land) is subject to the servitude.

Uniuscujusque contractus initium spectandum est et causa. The beginning and cause of each and every contract must be considered.

Unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur. Let the evidence of one witness not be heard at all.

Universalia sunt notiora singularibus. Things universal are better known than things particular.

Universitas vel corporatio non dicitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi major pars id faciat. A university or corporation is not said to take any action unless the action was resolved by it as a body, even if a greater part of the body should act.

Un ne doit priser advantage de son tort demesne. One should not take advantage from his own wrong.

Uno absurdo dato, infinita sequuntur. When one absurdity has been allowed, an infinity follows.

Unumquodque dissolvitur eodem ligamine quo ligatur. Everything is dissolved by the same binding by which it is bound together.

Unumquodque eodem modo dissolvitur quo colligatur. Any obligation is discharged in the same manner as it is constituted.

Unumquodque eodem modo quo colligatum est dissolvitur. In the same manner in which anything was bound, it is loosened.

Unumquodque est id quod est principalius in ipso. That which is the principal part of a thing is the thing itself.

Unumquodque ligamen dissolvitur eodem ligamine qui et ligatur. Every obligation is dissolved in the same manner in which it is contracted.

Unumquodque principiorum est sibimet ipsi fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Each and every one of the general principles is its own pledge of trust, and plain truths need not be proved.

Unusquisque debet esse gnarus conditionis ejus cum quo contrahit. Everyone ought to be cognizant of the condition of the person with whom he makes contract.

Usucapio constituta est ut aliquid litium finis esset. Prescription (Roman usucapio) was instituted that there might be some end to lawsuits. Dig. 41.10.5.

Usus est dominium fiduciariurn. Use is a fiduciary ownership.

Usus fit ex iteratis actibus. Usage arises from repeated acts.

Utile per inutile non vitiatur. What is useful is not vitiated by the useless.

Ut poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniit. So that punishment afflicts few, (and) fear affect all. ● Blackstone cites Cicero (pro Cluentio 46) emphasizing deterrence. 4 Bl. Com. 11.

Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. That the matter may have effect rather than fail.

Uxor et filius sunt nomina naturae. Wife and son are names of nature.

Uxor non est sui juris sed sub potestate viri. A wife is not in her own right (i.e., she cannot act independently), but under the power of her husband.

Uxor sequitur domicilium viri. A wife follows the domicile of her husband.

Vagabundum nuncupamus eum qui nullibi domicilium contraxit habitations. We call the person a vagabond who has acquired nowhere a domicile of residence.

Valeat quantum valere potest. Let it have effect as far as it can have effect.

Vana est illa potentia quae nunquam venit in actum. Vain is that power that never comes into action.

Vani timores sunt aestimandi, qui non cadunt in constantem virem. Those fears are to be considered groundless that do not affect a man of steady character.

Vani timoris justa excusatio non est. There is no legal excuse based on a groundless fear.

Velle non creditur qui obsequitur imperio patris vel domini. A person is not presumed to act of his own will who obeys the orders of his father or his master.
Legal Maxims

Vendens eandem rem duobus falsarius est. A vendor is fraudulent if he sells the same thing to two (separate) buyers.

Veniae facilitas incentivum est delinquendi. Ease of winning pardon is an incentive to committing crime.

Verba accipienda sunt secundum subjectam materiam. Words are to be interpreted according to the subject matter.

Verba accipienda ut sortiantur effectum. Words are to be taken so that they may have some effect.

Verba aequivoca ac in dubio sensu posita intelliguntur digniori et potentiore sensu. Equivocal words and those in a doubtful sense are understood in the more suitable and more effective sense.

Verba aliquid operari debent—debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to have some effect—words ought to be understood so as to have some effect.

Verba aliquid operari debent; verba cum effectu sunt accipienda. Words ought to have some effect; words must be taken so as to have effect.

Verba artis ex arte. Terms of art (should be explained) from the art.

Verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. The words of deeds are taken most strongly against the person offering them.

Verba cum effectu accipienda sunt. Words must be taken so as to have effect.

Verba currentis monetae tempus solutionis designant. The words “current money” refer to the time of payment.

Verba debent intelligi cum effectu. Words ought to be understood with effect.

Verba debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to be so understood that they may have some effect.

Verba dicta de persona intelligi debent de conditione personae. Words spoken of the person are to be understood of the condition of the person.

Verba generalia generaliter sunt intelligenda. General words are to be understood generally.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel aptitudinem personae. General words are limited to the capability of the subject matter or the aptitude of the person.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel personae. General words are limited to the capability of the subject matter or of the person.

Verba illata (relata) inesse videntur. Words referred to are considered as if incorporated.

Verba in differenti materia per prius, non per posterius, intelligenda sunt. Words referring to a different subject are to be understood by what goes before, not by what follows.

Verba intelligenda sunt in casu possibili. Words are to be understood in reference to a possible case.

Verba intentioni, et non e contra, debent inservire. Words should be subject to the intention, not the reverse.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Words are to be so understood that the matter may have effect rather than fail.

Verba mere aequivoca, si per communem usum loquendi in intellectu certo sumuntur, talis intellectus praferendus est. When words are purely equivocal, if by common usage of speech they are taken in a certain meaning, such meaning is to be preferred.

Verba nihil operari melius est quam absurde. It is better that words should have no effect than an absurd effect.

Verba non tam intuenda quam causa et natura rei, ut mens contrahentium ex eis potius quam ex verbis apparet. The words (of a contract) are not to be looked to so much as the cause and nature of the matter, so that the intention of the contracting parties may appear from these rather than from the (mere) words.

Verba offendit possunt, impro ab eis recedere licet, ut verba ad sanctum intellectum reducantur. The words can be faulted—indeed, it is permitted to depart from them, in order that the words may be restored to a sensible meaning.

Verba ordinatio, quando verificari possunt in sua vera significacione, trahi ad extraneum intellectum non debent. When the words of an ordinance can be made true in their true signification, they ought not to be warped to a foreign meaning.

Verba posteriora propter certitudinem addita, ad priora quae certitudine indigent, sunt referenda. Later words added for the purpose of certainty are to be referred to preceding words in which certainty is wanting.

Verba pro re et subjecta materia accipi debent. Words should be taken most in favor of the thing and the subject matter.

Verba quae aliquid operari possunt non debent esse superfusa. Words that can have some effect ought not to be (treated as) superfluous.

Verba quantumvis generalia ad aptitudinem restringuntur, etiamsi nullam aliam patenentur restrictionem. Words, howsoever general, are confined to fitness (i.e., to harmonize with the subject matter), even if they would bear no other restriction.

Verba relata hoc maxime operantur per referentiam ut in eis inesse videntur. Words to which reference is made have, by the reference, this particular effect, that they are considered to be incorporated in those (clauses). Words to which reference is made in an instrument have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clause referring to them.

Verba relata inesse videntur. Words to which reference is made are considered incorporated.

Verba secundum materiam subjectam intelligi nemo est qui nescit. There is no one who does not know that words should be understood according to the subject matter.

Verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiori sensu. Words are always to be taken in their milder sense.

Verba strictae significationis ad latam extendi possunt, si subsit ratio. Words of a strict signification can be given a wide signification if there is reason for it.

Verba sunt indices animi. Words are indications of the intention.

Verbis standum ubi nulla ambiguities. One must abide by the words where there is no ambiguity.

Verbum imperfecti temporis rem adhuc imperfectam significat. The verb in the imperfect tense indicates a matter as yet incomplete.

Veredictum quasi dictum veritatis; ut judicium quasi juris dictum. A verdict is, as it were, the saying of the truth, in the same manner that a judgment is the saying of the law (or right).

Veritas demonstrationis tollit errorem nominis. The truth of the description removes the error of the name.

Veritas habenda est in juratore; justitia et judicium in iudice. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment in a judge.

Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi. Truth fears nothing but to be hidden.

Veritas nimium altercando amittitur. By too much quarreling the truth is lost.

Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The truth of the name takes away the error of the description.

Veritatem qui non libere pronunciat, proditor est veritatis. One who does not speak the truth freely is a traitor to the truth.

Via antiqua via est tuta. The old way is the safe way.

Via trita est tutissima. The beaten road is the safest.

Via trita, via tuta. The beaten way is the safe way.
Vicarius non habet vicarium. A deputy does not have a deputy.

Vicini viciniora praesumuntur scire. Neighbors are presumed to know things of the immediate vicinity.

Videtur qui surdus et mutus ne poet faire alienation. A deaf and mute person is considered not to be able to alienate.

Vigilantibus et non dormientibus jura subveniunt. The laws aid the vigilant, not those who sleep.

Vim vi repellere licet, modo fiat moderamine inculpatae tutelae, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad propulsandam injuriam. It is lawful to repel force by force; but let it be done with the self-control of blameless defense—not to take revenge, but to repel injury.

Viperina est expositio quae corrodit viscera textus. That is a vipersous exposition that gnaws away the innards of the text.

Vir et uxor consentur in lege una persona. Husband and wife are considered one person in law.

Vis legibus est inimica. Force is inimical to the laws.

Vitium clericici nocere non debet. A clerical error ought not to prejudice.

Vitium est quod fugi debet, ne, si rationem non invenias, max legem sine ratione esse clamem. It is a fault that ought to be avoided, that if you do not discover the reason, you quickly exclaim that the law is without reason.

Vix uilla lex fieri potest quae omnibus commoda sit, sed si majori parti prospiciat, utilis est. Scarcely any law can be made that is advantageous to all; but if it benefits the majority, it is useful.

Vocabula artium explicanda sunt secundum definitiones prudentium. Terms of art are to be explained according to the definitions of those who are experienced in that art.

Volenti non fit injuria. There is no injury to one who consents.

Voluit sed non dixit. The person willed but did not say.

Voluntas donatoris in charta doni sui manifeste expressa observetur. The will of the donor, if clearly expressed in the deed of his gift, should be observed.

Voluntas et propositum distinguunt maleficia. The will and the purpose distinguish crimes.

Voluntas facit quod in testamento scriptum valeat. The will (of the testator) gives validity to what is written in the will.

Voluntas in delictis non exitus spectatur. In offenses, the will and not the outcome is regarded.

Voluntas reputatur pro facto. The will is to be taken for the deed.

Voluntas testatoris ambulatoria est usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is ambulatory right up until his death. That is, he may change it at any time.

Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam. The will of the testator should receive a broad and liberal interpretation.

Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Vox emissa volat; litera scripta manet. The uttered voice flies; the written letter remains.

The Constitution of the United States of America

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the Second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to the House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—
And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Section 9. The Migration or Importation of Such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or for-

Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greater Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the Executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.
Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under the Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be a Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or, in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.

Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and Judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.
No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected with the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

Article V

The Congress, wherever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

ARTICLES IN ADDITION TO, AND AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY CONGRESS, AND RATIFIED BY THE LEGISLATURES OF THE SEVERAL STATES PURSUANT TO THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF THE ORIGINAL CONSTITUTION.
Amendment I [1791]

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II [1791]

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III [1791]

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV [1791]

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V [1791]

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI [1791]

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII [1791]

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Amendment VIII [1791]

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX [1791]

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.
Amendment X [1791]

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Amendment XI [1798]

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

Amendment XII [1804]

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII [1865]

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XIV [1868]

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV [1870]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI [1913]

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII [1913]

[1] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

[2] When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

[3] This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII [1919]

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX [1920]

[1] The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

[2] Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XX [1933]

Section 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If the President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

Amendment XXI [1933]

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.
Amendment XXII [1951]

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXIII [1961]

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the states, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a state, and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV [1964]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV [1967]

Section 1. In the case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session.
If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Amendment XXVI [1971]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXVII [1992]

No Law, varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives, shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.
Appendix C

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

On December 10, 1948, the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted and proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the full text of which appears in the following pages. Following this historic act, the Assembly called upon all Member countries to publicize the text of the Declaration and "to cause it to be disseminated, displayed, read and expounded principally in schools and other educational institutions, without distinction based on the political status of countries or territories."

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

Whereas it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

Now, Therefore THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY proclaims
THIS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS
as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

Article 1. All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

Article 2. Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.

Article 3.
Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Article 4.
No one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms.

Article 5.
No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 6.
Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 7.
All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.

Article 8.
Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.

Article 9.
No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.

Article 10.
Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him.

Article 11. (1) Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.

(2) No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offence was committed.

Article 12.
No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 13. (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State.

(2) Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

Article 14. (1) Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.

(2) This right may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from nonpolitical crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 15. (1) Everyone has the right to a nationality.

(2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.
Article 16. (1) Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.

(2) Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.

(3) The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

Article 17. (1) Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

(2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Article 18. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

Article 19. Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Article 20. (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.

(2) No one may be compelled to belong to an association.

Article 21. (1) Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.

(2) Everyone has the right to equal access to public service in his country.

(3) The will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government; this shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures.

Article 22. Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to realization, through national effort and international cooperation and in accordance with the organization and resources of each State, of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for his dignity and the free development of his personality.

Article 23. (1) Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment.

(2) Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.

(3) Everyone who works has the right to just and favourable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.

(4) Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

Article 24. Everyone has the right to rest and leisure, including reasonable limitation of working hours and periodic holidays with pay.

Article 25. (1) Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

(2) Motherhood and childhood are entitled to special care and assistance. All children, whether born in or out of wedlock, shall enjoy the same social protection.

Article 26. (1) Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory. Technical and professional education shall be made generally available and higher education shall be equally accessible to all on the basis of merit.

(2) Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.

(3) Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.

Article 27. (1) Everyone has the right freely to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits.

(2) Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author.

Article 28. Everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration can be fully realized.

Article 29. (1) Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible.

(2) In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.

(3) These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 30. Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.

Time Chart of the United States Supreme Court

The following table is designed to aid the user in identifying the composition of the Court at any given time in American history. Each listing is headed by the Chief Justice, whose name is italicized. Associate Justices are listed following the Chief Justice in order of seniority. In addition to dates of appointment, the table provides information on political-party affiliation. Following each Justice is a symbol representing his party affiliation at the time of appointment:

- F = Federalist
- DR = Democratic Republican
- R = Republican
- DR = Democrat
- I = Independent
- W = Whig

* Rutledge was a recess appointment whose confirmation was rejected by the Senate after the 1795 Term.

 Upon the death of Catron in 1865 and Wayne in 1867 their positions were abolished according to a congressional act of 1866. The Court's membership was reduced to eight until a new position was created by Congress in 1869. The new seat has generally been regarded as a re-creation of Wayne's seat.

 According to Professor Henry Abraham, "Many—and with some justice—consider Brandeis a Democrat; however, he was in fact a registered Republican when nominated." Freedom and the Court 455 (3d ed. 1977).
